The term "free and uninterrupted use," in a conveyance of a farm, providing that the grantee shall have the free and uninterrupted use and privilege of passing over other land of the grantor by a usual passageway, was considered, in view of evidence that such way had been used with gates and bars for 40 years, and up to the time of the grant, and that such gates and bars were necessary to the convenient use of the grantor's remaining land, to mean the free and uninterrupted use and privilege of passing and repassing over the ways as then existing, subject to gates and bars, and to convey a right to use the way without other or further impediment. Garland v. Furber, 47 N. H. 301, 303.

UNION.

"Union," as used in St. 1895, c. 462, § 3, entitled "An act to protect manufacturers from the use of counterfeit labels and stamps, authorizing suits to prevent fraudulent use and counterfeiting of labels by any person, association or union," includes a voluntary trade union. Tracy v. Banker, 49 N. E. 308, 170 Mass. 263, 39 L. E. A. 508.

UNION DEPOT COMPANY.

The term "union depot company," as used in the chapter relating to the listing of personal property for taxation, includes any person or persons, joint-stock association, or corporation, wherever organized or incorporated, when engaged in the business of operating a union depot or station for railroad purposes. Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, § 2780-17.

UNION ELASTIC WEBBING.

Union elastic webbing is that made of rubber, silk, and cotton, as distinguished from wool elastic webbing, made of rubber, wool, and cotton, and cotton elastic webbing made of rubber and cotton. Beard v. Nichols, 7 Sup. Ct. 548, 120 U. S. 260, 30 L. Ed. 652.

UNION JACK.

The usual signal by which an offer of pilot service is made in the daytime is a flag at the masthead. This, of course, will be the flag of the country in which the offer is made, or that modification or portion of it called the "Jack." In the United States it is a blue flag, charged with a star for every state in the Union, and called the "Union Jack." The Ullock (U. S.) 19 Fed. 207, 210.

UNION SHOP.

A union shop is one in which none but members of an association are engaged as workmen. People v. Fisher, 3 N. Y. Supp. 786, 788, 50 Hun, 552.

UNIPOLAR MACHINE.

A unipolar or homopolar electrical machine is one in which currents are generated continuously in the windings in one direction. It is a machine in which the lines of force are cut in one direction only, as distinguished from alternating current machines, in which the lines of force are cut in alternating opposite directions, and which require the use of commutators to straighten out the current. General Electric Co. v. Winsted Gas Co. (U. S.) 110 Fed. 963.

UNITARIANS.

Unitarians are a religious sect believing in the unity of God. In the Encyclopædia of Religious Knowledge, Unitarians are designated as a class of religionists who hold to the personal unity of God, in opposition to the doctrine of the Trinity. Unitarians profess to derive their views from Scripture, and to make it the arbiter in all religious questions. Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 9, 92, 16 Am. Rep. 82.

UNITE.

In Laws 1875, c. 606, § 26, subd. 3, authorizing any corporation formed thereunder to join or unite its railroad with another railroad before constructed at any point on its route, "unite" is used synonymously and interchangeably with "join" and "connect." Gallagher v. Keating, 58 N. Y. Supp. 366, 370, 27 Misc. Rep. 131.

The power to "unite" given by Act Ky. March 7, 1854, providing that a railroad company may unite its road with other roads connecting therewith, on such conditions as the companies may agree, does not include a consolidation of roads, but merely a mechanical union of roads running into the same town. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Commonwealth of Kentucky, 16 Sup. Ct. 714, 717, 161 U. S. 677, 40 L. Ed. 849.

UNITED STATES.

As a person, see "Person."

As corporation, see "Corporation."

The United States is the union of the separate states under a common Constitution.

Texas v. White, 74 U. S. (7 Wall.) 700, 721, 19 L. Ed. 227.

The United States is the union under one Constitution of the various states, each of which is a political community of free citizens occupying a territory of defined boundaries and organized under a government sanctioned and limited by a written Constitution, and established by the consent of the governed. Texas v. White, 74 U. S. (7 Wall.) 700, 721, 19 L. Ed. 227.

The term "United States" has a broader meaning in dealing with a foreign sovereignty than when used in the Constitution, and includes all territory subject to the jurisdiction of the federal government. Downes v. Bidwell, 21 Sup. Ct. 770, 777, 182 U. S. 244, 45 L. Ed. 1088.

In construing the constitutional provision authorizing Congress to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, and holding that Congress had authority to impose and direct taxes on the District of Columbia, Chief Justice Marshall said that "'United States' is the name given to our great republic, which is composed of states and territories. The District of Columbia, or the territory west of the Missouri, is not less within the United States than Maryland or Pennsylvania; and it is not less necessary, on the principles of our Constitution, that uniformity in the imposition of the imposts, duties, and excises should be observed in the one than in the other." Later in the case, however, he says, "If the general language of the Constitution should be confined to the states, still the sixteenth paragraph of the eighth section gives to Congress the power of exercising exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever within this district." Loughborough v. Blake, 18 U. S. (5 Wheat.) 317, 5 L. Ed. 98.

"In dealing with foreign sovereignties, the term 'United States' has a broader meaning than when used in the Constitution, and includes all territories subject to the jurisdiction of the federal government, wherever located. In its treaties and conventions with foreign nations, this government is a unity. This is so, not because the territories comprised a part of the government established by the people of the states in their Constitution, but because the federal government is the only authorized organ of the territories, as well as of the states, in their foreign relations. The term in Const. art. 1, § 8, requiring all duties, imposts, and excises to be uniform throughout the United States, does not include the Island of Porto Rico, which by the treaty of cession became territory appurtenant to the United States, but not a part of the United States, within the meaning of the section of the Constitution, though it is a part of the United States as to foreign affairs." Downes v. Bidwell, 21 Sup. Ct. 770, 772, 182 U. S. 244, 45 L. Ed. 1088 (Insular Case).

"We do not regard the government of the United States as a foreign government. It is true, it is a government independent of the state government, moving in a different sphere from that of the state government, and having a different class of powers, distinct, but not antagonistical, and operating upon, and within the circle of its powers supreme over, the same constituents." Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 229, 255.

The term "United States," within the meaning of the revenue laws, imposing duties on goods imported into the United States, does not include a portion of the territory of the United States which by conquest and military occupation is in the possession of a public enemy; and therefore goods imported into such territory, while in such possession, are not subject to duty. United States v. Rice, 17 U. S. (4 Wheat.) 246-253, 4 L. Ed. 562.

When the Constitution declares that the duties shall be uniform throughout the United States, we understand the states whose people united to form the Constitution, and such as have since been added to the Union upon an equality with them. Downes v. Bidwell, 21 Sup. Ct. 770, 783, 182 U. S. 244, 45 L. Ed. 1088.

In considering an indictment charging forgery of a receipt in July, 1777, with intent to defraud the United States, the court said: "The first exception was that, at the time of the offense charged, the United States were not a body corporate, known in law, but the court is of a different opinion. From the moment of their association, the United States became a body corporate, for there was no superior from whom that character could otherwise be derived." Respublica v. Sweers (Pa.) 1 Dall. 41, 44, 1 L. Ed. 29.

The words "United States," when used in a statute shall be construed to include the District of Columbia and the several territories. Ky. St. 1903, § 446; Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 4971; Code N. C. 1883, § 3765, subd. 11; Pub. St. R. I. 1882, p. 77, c. 24, § 7; Pub. St. N. H. 1901, p. 63, c. 2, § 4; Code W. Va. 1899, p. 133, c. 13, § 17; Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 50, subd. 15; Code Miss. 1892, § 1517; Rev. Code Del. 1893, c. 5, § 1, subd. 12; Horner's Rev. St. Ind. 1901, § 240, subd. 7; Code Va. 1887, § 5; Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 89, c. 8, § 5, subd. 21; Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 255, subd. 17; Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 6140; Pol. Code Mont. 1895, § 16, subd. 10; Civ. Code Ala. 1896, § 7; Pol. Code Cal. 1903, § 17, subd. 10; Shannon's Code Tenn. 1896, § 65; Rev. St. Me. 1883, p. 59, c. 1, § 6, subd. 16.

The words "United States," when used in a statute, may include the District of Columbia and the territories. Civ. Code Mont.

1895, § 4662, subd. 5; Pen. Code Mont. 1895, § 7, subd. 19; Code Civ. Proc. Mont. 1895, § 3463, subd. 6; Code Civ. Proc. Cal. 1903, § 17, subd. 7; Hurd's Rev. St. Ill. 1901, p. 1720, c. 131, § 1, subd. 14; Rev. St. Utah, 1898, § 2498; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 5152; Code Civ. Proc. S. D. 1903, § 8; Pen. Code Cal. 1903, § 7, subd. 19; Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 7342, subd. 15; Code Iowa 1897, § 48, subd. 15; Mills' Ann. St. Colo. 1891, § 4185, cl. 12.

The words "United States" embrace every state in the Union, all of the territories, and the District of Columbia. Sand. & H. Dig. Ark. 1893, § 7216.

The words "United States" shall be construed to include the several territories created or organized by Congress. Gen. St. N. J. 1895, p. 3195, § 36.

The term "United States," as used in an act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, shall be construed to mean the United States, and any waters, territory or other place held subject to the jurisdiction thereof. U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1903, p. 185.

UNITED STATES BANK NOTES.

An indictment charging the theft of $50 in "United States money, currency and bank notes," sufficiently describes the money taken, for there are no bank notes in circulation as money but those of national banks, which are sufficiently alleged. No other bank notes are known as "United States bank notes." Bailey v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 58 S. W. 425.

UNITED STATES BONDS.

As property, see "Property."

A certificate of deposit recited that the owner had deposited with the maker $535.75 in treasury notes to the credit of themselves, and payable to their order in United States 6 per cent. interest bearing bonds. Held, that the term "in United States bonds" was clearly understood to mean bonds of the United States to the nominal value of $535.75; the value of the bonds being measured by the dollar; and, without specific provision in the contract, it could not be held that the bonds were received at any other than their nominal value. Easton v. Hyde, 13 Minn. 90 (Gil. 83).

UNITED STATES COMMISSIONER.

A United States commissioner is a judicial officer, and exercises—it is true, within very narrow limits—the functions of a United States judge. In re Wong Fock (U. S.) 81 Fed. 558, 561.

UNITED STATES COURTS.

See "Courts of the United States."

UNITED STATES CURRENCY.

"United States currency" is a general term which may include gold, silver, treasury notes, or bank notes. Ex parte Prince, 9 South. 659, 660, 27 Fla. 196, 205, 26 Am. St. Rep. 67.

"United States currency" includes the gold and silver coin of the United States, the notes issued by the banks organized under the laws of the United States, the treasury notes commonly known as "greenbacks," and the certificates of deposit, generally called "gold and silver certificates," issued by the United States. State v. Oakley, 10 S. W. 17, 51 Ark. 112.

The term "United States currency" means the currency authorized by the United States government. State v. Gasting, 23 La. Ann. 609, 610.

UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

"United States gold coin," as used in an application to pay in United States gold coin, means money of a certain weight of standard gold, ascertained by a kind of count made legal tender by statute. Belford v. Woodward, 41 N. E. 1097, 1101, 158 Ill. 122, 29 L. R. A. 593.

UNITED STATES JUDGE.

The expression "a United States judge," as used in Act Cong. May 5, 1892, 27 Stat. 25, c. 60 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1319], which provides that a Chinese laborer within the limits of the United States, who shall neglect to comply with the provisions of the Chinese exclusion act, may be arrested and taken before a United States judge, is a general one, and refers to those judicial officers, such as justice, judge, or commissioner, previously and specifically enumerated in preceding sections of the act, and so includes a United States commissioner. In re Wong Fock (U. S.) 81 Fed. 558, 560.

UNITED STATES LANDS.

See "Lands of United States."

UNITED STATES MARINERS.

See "Mariners of the United States."

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

A United States marshal is a ministerial officer, whose duties in territories are similar in each judicial district to those of a sheriff in a county. Beebee v. United States, 11 N. W. 505, 507, 2 Dak. 292.

UNITED STATES NOTES.

"United States notes" are not private, but are public, obligations, provided for by acts of Congress. That the term "United States notes," in an indictment for counterfeiting, is sufficiently specific, and refers to a well-known and defined obligation of the government, is made clear by Rev. St. U. S. § 5413 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3662], reading: "The words 'obligation or other security of the United States' shall be held to mean all bonds, certificates of indebtedness, national currency coupons, United States notes," etc. United States v. Howell (U. S.) 64 Fed. 110, 113.

UNITED STATES OFFICER.

Strictly speaking, a person in the service of the government is not an officer of the United States unless he holds his place by virtue of the appointment of the President, or by one of the courts of justice, or by the head of the department authorized by law to make such appointment. United States v. Mouat, 8 Sup. Ct. 505, 506, 124 U. S. 303, 31 L. Ed. 463.

Act Cong. April 30, 1790 (1 Stat. 117) § 22, providing for the punishment of any person willfully resisting an "officer of the United States" in the execution of the process, should be construed to include deputies of a United States marshal authorized to serve process, for they are not merely agents or servants of the marshal. United States v. Tinklepaugh (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 193, 195.

An officer of the United States can only be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or by a court of law or the head of a department. A person in the service of the government, who does not derive his position from one of these sources, is not an "officer of the United States" in the sense of the Constitution. A clerk of a collector of customs is not an officer of the United States. United States v. Smith, 8 Sup. Ct. 595, 597, 124 U. S. 525, 31 L. Ed. 534.

Attorneys and counselors are not officers of the United States. They are not elected or appointed in the manner prescribed by the Constitution for the election and appointment of such officers. Ex parte Garland, 71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 333, 378, 18 L. Ed. 366.

A pension agent of the United States is not, in the legal sense, an "officer" of the federal government, and he is not disqualified from holding office in the state wherein he resides. Lindsey v. Attorney General, 33 Miss. 508, 529.

A retired officer of the army is an "officer of the United States," within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 5498 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3707], prohibiting every officer of the United States from acting as an agent or attorney in prosecuting any claim against the United States. In re Tyler (U. S.) 18 Ct. Cl. 25, 29.

A sailmaker at the Washington navy yard, appointed by warrant under the hand of the Secretary of the Navy and seal of the department, is an officer of the United States and exempt from militia duty. Sanford v. Boyd (U. S.) 21 Fed. Cas. 358.

A clerk appointed by the direction and the approbation of the Secretary of the Treasury for the fractional currency counter of the treasury department at Louisville is an "officer of the United States," within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States, and of the statutes of the United States in regard to officers charged with the safe-keeping of public money. United States v. Bloomgart (U. S.) 24 Fed. Cas. 1180.

The phrase "officers of the government of the United States," as used in Act Cong. May 18, 1792, exempting from military duty the officers of the government of the United States, is synonymous with the phrase "officers of the United States," and is not limited to officers of the government in high departments. Wise v. Withers, 7 U. S. (3 Cranch) 331, 336, 2 L. Ed. 457.

UNITED STATES PAPER CURRENCY.

United States paper currency money includes treasury notes, commonly called "greenbacks," silver certificates, and gold certificates. Rucker v. State (Tex.) 26 S. W. 65, 66.

The term "United States paper currency money," as used in an indictment to describe the property stolen, embraces that character of paper currency issued and allowed to be used as a medium and to circulate as money under the authority of the laws of the United States. Wilson v. State (Tex.) 72 S. W. 862, 864 (citing Kimbrough v. State, 28 Tex. App. 367, 13 S. W. 218).

UNITED STATES PROPERTY.

See "Property of United States."

UNITED STATES VESSELS.

See "Vessels of the United States."

UNITED STATES WATERS.

See "Waters of the United States."

UNIVERSAL

"Universal" is said by Webster to be that which pertains to all, without exception. Koen v. State, 53 N. W. 595, 596, 35 Neb. 676, 17 L. R. A. 821.

"Universal" is not equivalent to "general," which means extensive. Blair v. Howell, 23 N. W. 199, 200, 68 Iowa, 619.

UNIVERSAL AGENT.

A universal agent is one authorized to transact all the business of his principal of every kind. Baldwin v. Tucker, 65 S. W. 841, 842, 112 Ky. 282, 57 L. R. A. 451; Gibson v. Snow Hardware Co., 10 South. 304, 307, 94 Ala. 346; South Bend Toy Mfg. Co. v. Dakota Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 52 N. W. 866, 867, 3 S. D. 205 (citing Mechem on Agencies, § 6).

"Universal agents are such as may be appointed to do all the acts which the principal can personally do, and which he can lawfully delegate the power to another to do. Such a universal agency may potentially exist, but it must be of the rarest occurrence, and indeed it is difficult, says Mr. Justice Story, to conceive of the existence of such an agency, inasmuch as it would be to make such an agent the complete master, not merely dux facti, but dominus rerum, the complete disposer of all the rights and property of the principal." Such agents are distinguished from general agents. Wood v. McCain, 7 Ala. 800, 803, 42 Am. Dec. 612.

UNIVERSAL LEGACY.

See "Legacy under a Universal Title."

"A universal legacy is a testamentary disposition by which the testator gives to one or several persons the whole of the property which he leaves at his decease." Civ. Code 1900, La. art. 1606.

UNIVERSAL PARTNERSHIP.

Universal partnership is a contract by which the parties agree to make a common stock of all the property they respectively possess. They may extend it to all property, real or personal, or restrict it to personal only. They may, as in other partnerships, agree that the property itself shall be common stock, or that the fruits only shall be such. But property which may accrue to one of the parties after entering into the partnership, by donation, succession, or legacy, does not become common stock, and any stipulation to that effect, previous to the obtaining the property aforesaid, is void. Civ. Code 1900, La. art. 2829.

UNIVERSITY.

State university as municipal corporation, see "Municipal Corporation."

A "university" is, in common parlance and in legal acceptation, as the word imports, "a place where all kinds of literature are universally taught." Academy of Fine Arts v. Philadelphia County, 22 Pa. (10 Harris) 496, 498 (citing Jac. Law Dict.; Webst. Dict.).

A short but comprehensive definition of the word "university" is "an aggregation or union of colleges." It is an institution in which the education imparted is universal, embracing many branches, such as the arts, sciences, and all manner of learning, and possessing power to confer degrees which indicate proficiency in the branches taught. In the collegiate department, or "department of arts," as it has been called, the ordinary and scholastic education is imparted upon which the degrees of bachelor of arts and master of arts are conferred; in the medical department the degree doctor of medicine is conferred; and in the law department the degree of bachelor of laws. Commonwealth v. Banks, 48 Atl. 277, 278, 198 Pa. 397.

The term "universities," in Act April 16, 1837, exempting universities and colleges from taxation, includes the State University of Pennsylvania in all of its parts that may properly be embraced within the term "university," and therefore includes its medical department. City of Philadelphia v. Trustees of University of Pennsylvania, 44 Pa. (8 Wright) 360, 362.

UNJUST.

An affidavit reciting that a refusal of debtors to apply certain assets in payment of the demand of the creditors was "unjust" is a mere conclusion of law, and hence amounts to nothing. In re Prime (N. Y.) 1 Barb. 340, 352.

UNJUSTLY.

"Unjustly," as used in an allegation, in an action to recover realty, that the defendant had unjustly entered and holds the plaintiff out, means "without right" or "wrongfully," and is an allegation of a disseisin—a wrongful deprivation of the demandant's seisin. Roberts v. Niles, 49 Atl. 1043, 1044, 95 Me. 244.

The expressions "unjustly and unfairly attempted," "unfairly and secretly computed," and "artfully and purposely framed," used in a plea of justification in regard to the official act of a cashier, do not necessarily imply moral obliquity. Kerr v. Force (U. S.) 14 Fed. Cas. 386, 396.

Illegally distinguished.

"Unjustly" is that which is against the established law; that which is opposed to a law which is the test of right and wrong. "Unjustly" is not synonymous with "illegally," so as to render one of the words sufficient under Rev. St. 1895, art. 3241, requiring that the plaintiff in a distress warrant for rent shall give a bond conditioned to pay the defendant such damages as he may sustain in case such warrant has been illegally and unjustly sued out. McTeer v. Young (Tex.) 44 S. W. 194, 196.

Surreptitiously distinguished.

The word "surreptitiously," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 4920 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3395], requiring one who contests the validity of a patent on the ground of prior conception to show that the patentee has surreptitiously or unjustly obtained the patent, is not synonymous with the word "unjustly" as used in the statute, and therefore it is not necessary that actual fraud and theft of the idea by the patentee should be shown, for, though the word "unjustly" may include the idea of a thing done fraudulently and secretly, its ordinary meaning is contrary to justice or that which is right. Yates v. Huson (U. S.) 8 App. Cas. 93, 99.

UNKNOWN.

See "Contents Unknown"; "Value Unknown"; "Weight and Contents Unknown."

"Unknown," in Code Civ. Proc. § 2747, enacting that a legacy shall be paid to the State Treasurer when the person entitled to it is unknown, presupposes the existence of such a person. In re Lane's Estate, 20 N. Y. Supp. 78, 79, 2 Con. Sur. 263.

An assessment of property as belonging to an unknown owner is not an assessment against the owner thereof, but is rather an assessment on or against the property. Cary v. Holmes, 19 South. 723, 724, 109 Ala. 217.

An assessment on property for street work, made by the superintendent of streets of a municipality to unknown owners, amounts to an official certificate by the proper officer that the owner of the particular lot designated is unknown to him. Chambers v. Satterlee, 40 Cal. 497, 518.

UNLADEN.

"Unladen," as used in U. S. Rev. St. § 4347, permitting merchandise brought from a foreign port in a vessel belonging in whole or in part to a foreigner, and not unladen, to be transported therein from one port of the United States to another, meant a real physical unloading, and not a constructive or fictitious one. Laidlaw v. Abraham (U. S.) 43 Fed. 297, 299.

UNLAWFUL

That is not lawful which is (1) contrary to an express provision of law; (2) contrary to the policy of express law, though not expressly prohibited; or (3) otherwise contrary to good morals. Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 3920; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 1271; Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 2240.

When a transaction is voided by the statute without respect to the motive which induced it, but on considerations of policy only, it is unlawful, and not fraudulent. To style it "fraudulent," whether the fraud be legal or otherwise, may fix an unmerited stigma on the party to the transaction. A more just and appropriate appellation to apply to conveyances of the former class would be simply "unlawful," while the term "fraudulent" would still be applicable to the latter class of cases. Hagerman v. Buchanan, 17 Atl. 946, 947, 45 N. J. Eq. 292, 14 Am. St. Rep. 732.

The failure, in a count charging the construction of a boom in a negligent, unskillful, and unlawful manner, to use the word "wrongful," does not render the count defective, as the words "negligent" and "unlawful" fully supply its place. Pickens v. Coal River Boom & Timber Co., 41 S. E. 400, 401, 51 W. Va. 445, 90 Am. St. Rep. 819.

As illicit.

The term "unlawful," as used in Laws 1891, c. 2, § 1, prohibiting unlawful sexual intercourse, is used in the sense of illicit. State v. Whealey, 59 N. W. 211, 212, 5 S. D. 427.

As in violation of law.

"Unlawful," means in violation of or contrary to law. Tatum v. State, 66 Ala. 465, 467.

The word "unlawful," in criminal jurisprudence, means the violation of some prohibitory law. Johnson v. State, 63 N. E. 607, 609, 66 Ohio St. 59, 61 L. R. A. 277, 90 Am. St. Rep. 564.

An allegation in a complaint charging that intoxicating liquors were kept and deposited and intended for sale by the person named, in violation of a law within the state, is an allegation that such keeping and depositing were unlawful, making the complaint sufficient. State v. Erskine, 66 Me. 358, 359.

As unauthorized by law.

"Unlawful" means without authority of law. Pinder v. State, 8 South. 837, 840, 27 Fla. 370, 26 Am. St. Rep. 75.

That is unlawful which is not justified or warranted by law. Surles v. Sweeney, 4 Pac. 469, 470, 11 Or. 21.

"Unlawful" is defined by Webster as "not lawful; not legal; not permitted by law." Every act must be either lawful or unlawful. State v. Frazier, 39 Pac. 819, 821, 54 Kan. 719.

"Unlawful" does not necessarily mean contrary to law. "Un" is a preposition, and may mean simply not, and "unlawful" may mean not authorized by law. Congress has not only not authorized matter concerning a lottery business to be sent through the mails, but has prohibited and excluded it from the mails, so it is not only unlawful, but criminal, to carry on the lottery business by using United States mails for this purpose. MacDaniel v. United States (U. S.) 87 Fed. 321, 324, 326, 30 C. C. A. 670.

In People v. Chicago Gas Trust Co., 130 Ill. 268, 22 N. E. 798, 803, 8 L. R. A. 497, 17 Am. St. Rep. 319, it was said: "The word unlawful, as applied to corporations, is not used exclusively in the sense of malum in se, but malum prohibitum. It is also used to designate powers which corporations are not authorized to exercise, or contracts which they are not authorized to make, or acts which they are not authorized to do; in other words, such acts, powers, and contracts as are ultra vires." In Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co., 139 U. S. 24, 11 Sup. Ct. 478, 35 L. Ed. 55, it was said all contracts made by a corporation beyond the scope of powers granted are unlawful and void. National Home Building & Loan Ass'n v. Home Sav. Bank, 54 N. E. 619, 620, 181 Ill. 35, 64 L. R. A. 399, 72 Am. St. Rep. 245.

As unenforceable.

The courts sometimes call contracts in general restraint of trade "unlawful" or "illegal," but in every instance it will be found that these terms were used in the sense merely of "void" or "unenforceable" as between the parties; the law considering the disadvantage so imposed upon a contract a sufficient protection to the public. Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Hollis, 55 N. W. 1119, 1121, 54 Minn. 223, 21 L. R. A. 837, 40 Am. St. Rep. 319.

UNLAWFUL ACT.

The words "unlawful act," as used in the statutory definition of involuntary manslaughter, are not technical words. Therefore they are to have their plain and usual meaning. Webster defines the word "unlawful" as follows: "Not lawful; contrary to law; illegal; not permitted by law;" and the word "act" as follows: "That which is done or doing; the exercise of power to the effect of which power exerted is the cause; a performance; deed." The word "unlawful," as defined by Bouvier in his Law Dictionary, is: "That which is contrary to law." Another definition is: "Unlawful implies that an act is done or not done as the law allows or requires." Abb. Law Dict. "Lawful, unlawful, and illegal refer to that which in its substance is sanctioned or prohibited by law." And. Law Dict. "The reader should bear in mind that unlawful signifies contrary to law, and many things are contrary to law, while not subjecting the doer to a criminal prosecution." 2 Bish. Cr. Law, § 178. A lawful act done in an unlawful or negligent manner is in law an unlawful act. State v. Dorsey, 20 N. E. 777, 778, 118 Ind. 167, 10 Am. St.

Rep. 111 (citing Commonwealth v. Hunt, 45 Mass. (4 Metc.) 111, 38 Am. Dec. 346.

Rev. St. U. S. § 5512, providing punishment in case any person does an unlawful act to secure registration as a voter, is not limited to acts punishable as crimes or misdemeanors, or such that an individual could maintain a civil suit in consequence thereof, but includes all acts which by necessary inference are opposed to the policy of the law, or such as would defeat its purpose or the object had in view by the Legislature. United States v. O'Connor (U. S.) 31 Fed. 449, 451.

Within the meaning of an "unlawful act," as used in the chapter relating to homicide by negligence, are included (1) such acts as by the penal law are called "misdemeanors"; and, (2) such acts, not being penal offenses, as would give just occasion for a civil action. Pen. Code Tex. 1895, art. 694.

UNLAWFUL ARREST, RESTRAINT, ETC.

A policy of marine insurance insuring against "unlawful arrest, restraint, and detainment of all kings, princes," etc., means unlawful restraints and detainments of kings and princes as well as unlawful arrests. The qualification of unlawful must be annexed to them all; and hence the detainment of the vessel by force, lawfully blockading a port, was not a peril insured against. McCall v. Marine Ins. Co., 12 U. S. (8 Cranch) 59, 66, 3 L. Ed. 487.

UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY.

A meeting attended with circumstances calculated to excite alarm is an unlawful assembly. Regina v. Neale, 9 Car. & P. 431, 435.

Any meeting assembled under such circumstances as, according to the opinion of rational and firm men, are likely to produce danger to the tranquillity and peace of a neighborhood, is an unlawful assembly. Regina v. Vincent, 9 Car. & P. 91, 109.

An unlawful assembly is where three or more persons assemble with an intent to "commit violence upon person or property, to resist the execution of the laws, to disturb public order, or for the perpetration of acts inspiring public terror or alarm." People v. Judson (N. Y.) 11 Daly, 1, 83.

"The common-law offense of unlawful assembly is defined to be a disturbance of the peace by persons assembling together with an intention to do a thing which, if executed, would make them rioters, but neither executing it nor making a motion towards its execution." People v. Most, 27 N. E. 970, 972, 128 N. Y. 108, 26 Am. St. Rep. 458 (quoting 1 Russell on Crimes, 275).

Blackstone defines "unlawful assemblage" as, "When one or more persons assemble themselves together to do an unlawful act, as to pull down inclosures, to destroy a warren for the game therein, and fall, without doing it, or making any motion toward it." People v. Judson (N. Y.) 11 Daly, 1, 58.

Whenever two or more persons assemble together to do an unlawful act, and separate without doing or advancing toward it, or do a lawful act in a violent, boisterous, or tumultuous manner, such assembly is an unlawful assembly. Pen. Code Cal. 1903, § 407.

An unlawful assembly is the meeting of two or more persons with intent to aid each other by violence or by any other manner, either to commit an offense, or illegally to deprive any person of any right, or to disturb him in the enjoyment thereof. Pen. Code Tex. art. 279; Blackwell v. State, 30 Tex. App. 672, 673, 18 S. W. 676.

An "unlawful assembly," within Pen. Code, art. 289, providing that if the purpose of an unlawful assembly be to prevent any person from pursuing any labor, occupation, or employment, or to intimidate any person from following his daily avocation, the punishment shall be a fine not exceeding $500, consists in illegally depriving any person of any right, or disturbing him in the enjoyment of a right, or preventing him from pursuing any labor, occupation, or employment, or interfering in any manner with the labor or employment of another. McGehee v. State, 5 S. W. 222, 224, 23 Tex. App. 330.

Under Rev. St. § 4511, an "unlawful assembly" is defined as a meeting by three or more persons in a violent manner to do an unlawful act, or who shall make any attempt toward doing an unlawful act. A distinguished text writer, adopting the definition taken from the brief report of the English commissioners of 1879, says: "An unlawful assembly is an assembly of three or more persons, who, with intent to carry out any common purpose, assemble in such a manner, or so conduct themselves when assembled, as to cause persons in the neighborhood to fear, on reasonable grounds, that the persons so assembled will disturb the peace tumultuously." Aron v. City of Wausau, 74 N. W. 354, 355, 98 Wis. 592, 40 L. R. A. 733.

Pen. Code, § 451, provides that when three or more persons, being assembled, attempt or threaten any act tending toward a breach of the peace or an injury to person or property or any unlawful act, such assembly is unlawful, and the parties participating therein are guilty of a misdemeanor. At a meeting held to protest against the execution of the Chicago anarchists, defendant made a speech in which he glorified their deeds, sympathized with their fate, denounced and threatened with death the officers connected with their case, stated that those present had a more powerful weapon than the officers of the law possessed, and called on them to resist the authorities. This was sufficient to sustain a conviction of defendant under this statute. People v. Most, 7 N. Y. Cr. R. 376, 8 N. Y. Supp. 625.

To constitute an "unlawful assembly," within the meaning of Sanb. & B. Ann. St. § 938, providing that any three or more persons who shall assemble in a vile or tumultuous manner to do an unlawful act, or, being together, shall make any attempt or motion towards doing a lawful or unlawful act in a violent or unlawful manner, shall be deemed an unlawful assembly. The three or more persons must have a common purpose to do the act complained of. The complaint which alleges that plaintiff was injured by a fire cracker thrown by some one in crowd of 30 or more people engaged in exploding fireworks in the evening of July 4th does not state a cause of action under the statute. Aron v. City of Wausau, 98 Wis. 592, 597, 74 N. W. 354, 40 L. R. A. 733.

UNLAWFUL CALLING.

The words "unlawful calling," in Crim. Code, § 368, making it criminal to keep gambling houses, etc., or to engage in any unlawful calling whatever, includes the operating or carrying on of a lottery. In re Smith, 39 Pac. 707, 54 Kan. 702.

UNLAWFUL COHABITATION.

Clandestine acts of sexual intercourse, no matter how often repeated, do not constitute unlawful cohabitation, unless the parties openly and notoriously live together as paramour and concubine, habitually assuming and exercising toward each other the rights and privileges which belong to the matrimonial relation. No continuance of illicit intercourse makes out the crime so long as it is secret or attempted to be made so, but whenever secrecy is abandoned, and the concubinage is open, the offense is complete. The parties need not pass themselves off upon the community as husband and wife, but need only openly and notoriously consort and live together as if they were husband and wife—that is to say, as husbands and wives usually live. Kinard v. State, 57 Miss. 132, 134.

"Unlawful cohabitation," as used in Code 1880, § 2700, prohibiting unlawful cohabitation, etc., is not constituted by the acts of a teacher who, during a short period of time, commits a few acts of sexual intercourse with a pupil. Brown v. State (Miss.) 8 South. 257.

UNLAWFUL CONSPIRACY.

An "unlawful conspiracy" is defined to be a confederacy by two or more persons to accomplish some unlawful purpose, or a lawful purpose by some unlawful means. Blue v. Peters, 20 Pac. 442, 446, 40 Kan. 701 (quoting 2 Bish. Crim. Law, 173).

The word "unlawful," as used in the definition of a conspiracy as a combination of two or more persons to do an unlawful act, is not confined to criminal acts, but includes all willful, actionable violations of civil rights. Martens v. Reilly, 84 N. W. 840, 843, 109 Wis. 464.

It is a criminal and indictable offense for two or more to confederate and combine together by concerted means to do that which is unlawful or criminal, to the injury of the public or portions or classes of the community, or even to the rights of individuals. A court of equity will interfere by injunction to restrain a combination of persons from boycotting one's business by intimidating and coercing his customers to leave, and endeavoring by abusive and threatening language to drive away their employes. The persons engaging in such a boycotting are engaged in an unlawful conspiracy. Beck v. Railway Teamsters' Protective Union, 77 N. W. 13, 20, 118 Mich. 497, 42 L. R. A. 407, 74 Am. St. Rep. 421.

UNLAWFUL CONTRACT.

An unlawful contract is an agreement to do an act which the law forbids, or to omit an act which the law enjoins, and for that reason is nonenforceable. There is no provision, either by statute or common law, which enjoins on any person the duty to marry, nor can any one be punished for not marrying. To marry or not to marry is left to the free choice of all who are eligible to marry. Hence to omit to marry is not illegal, though the promise to marry is one which the law will not enforce. King v. King, 59 N. E. 111, 112, 63 Ohio St. 363, 52 L. R. A. 157.

UNLAWFUL DETAINER.

An unlawful detainer is where one who has lawfully entered into possession of lands or tenements, after the termination of his possessory interest, refuses, on demand in writing, to deliver the possession thereof to any one lawfully entitled thereto, his agent or attorney. McDevitt v. Lambert, 2 South. 438, 440, 80 Ala. 536.

The expression "unlawful detainer" includes a peaceable entry and a forcible turning out or frightening by threats. Sheehy v. Flaherty, 20 Pac. 687, 688, 8 Mont. 365.

Unlawful detainer is where the defendant enters by contract, either as tenant or as assignee of a tenant, or as personal representative of a tenant, or as subtenant, or by collusion with a tenant, and in either case willfully and without force, holds over the possession from the landlord, or the assignee of the remainder or reversion. Shannon's Code Tenn. 1896, § 5093.

Unlawful detainer by a tenant of real property is defined in Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, subd. 1, as when a tenant continues in possession in person or by subtenant of the property, or any part thereof, after the expiration of the term for which it is let, without the permission of the landlord. Silva v. Campbell, 24 Pac. 316, 317, 84 Cal. 420.

Ejectment distinguished.

The action of unlawful detainer and that of ejectment are not the same action or the same kind of action, either in substance or in form. The first is by a person who claims the possession not only of the real property, and founds his right to recover the possession solely upon a prior possession, constructive or actual, in himself or grantor, and against a person who cannot or has not the right to set up any right of possession as against the plaintiff, and no question of title or estate can be litigated in the case, while the second action is to recover an estate, legal or equitable, in the real property, with the title and the incidental right of possession; and the two cases must be brought in different forms, and presented to the courts by very dissimilar pleadings; and hence the pendency of an action of unlawful detainer will not cause an action of ejectment as to the same land to abate. Buettinger v. Hurley, 9 Pac. 197, 199, 84 Kan. 585.

Forcible entry and detainer compared.

When an entry upon lands is unlawful, whether forcible or not, and the subsequent conduct is forcible and tortious, the offense committed is a forcible entry and detainer; but wherever the original entry is lawful, and the subsequent holding forcible and tortious, then the offense is an unlawful detainer only. Pullen v. Boney, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 125, 129.

UNLAWFUL ENTRY.

An "unlawful entry," within Wood's Dig. p. 467, prohibiting an unlawful entry into the lands, tenements, and other possessions, is a peaceable entry, by fraud or without color of title. It is not every peaceable entry, when the right of entry does not, in fact, exist, that constitutes an unlawful entry, within the meaning of the statute. There must be some ingredient of fraud or willful wrong on the part of the party making the entry. Dickinson v. Maguire, 9 Cal. 46, 48.

To maintain an action for forcible entry and detainer for an unlawful entry, there must be some ingredient of fraud or willful wrong on the part of the party making the entry. Every unlawful entry on land is not necessarily a forcible entry within the meaning of the statute. Romero v. Gozales, 1 Pac. 171, 172, 3 N. M. 35.

"Unlawful," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1019, giving the action of forcible entry and detainer against those who make unlawful and forcible entry in lands or tenements, or who, having a lawful and peaceable entry, unlawfully and by force hold the same, should be construed in its ordinary sense, and is not of the same import as "force." An act may be unlawful, and no force, as the word is generally understood, be exerted. So, too, the exertion of force may or it may not be unlawful. Blaco v. Haller, 1 N. W. 978, 9 Neb. 149.

UNLAWFUL GAME.

Other unlawful gaming, see "Other."

Rev. St. Mass. c. 50, § 17, providing for the punishment of any person not licensed as an innholder, etc., who for hire, gain, or reward suffers persons from time to time to resort to a house, etc., by him used and occupied, for the purpose of playing any unlawful game, means that such person shall be liable for each offense. By "unlawful game," as used in this statute, is not meant a continuing offense, which may be repeated from day to day and in connection with different individuals, and the proprietor is liable for each and every offense. Commonwealth v. Stowell, 50 Mass. (9 Metc.) 572, 575.

The game of bowls and ninepins is an "unlawful game," within Rev. St. Mass. c. 50, § 17, which makes it penal for any unlicensed person for hire or reward to suffer persons to resort to any house or building used and occupied by him for the purpose of playing at billiards, cards, or dice or any other unlawful game. "The object of the statute was to suppress open gaming houses of common resort, and we think that the Legislature intended to include the game of bowls and ninepins in the terms 'unlawful game.'" Commonwealth v. Goding, 44 Mass. (3 Metc.) 130, 131.

It is not necessary that there should be gaming or betting in order to render the game of ninepins unlawful, under Rev. St. c. 50, § 17, forbidding unlawful games, including ninepins. Commonwealth v. Stowell, 50 Mass. (9 Metc.) 572, 573.

The words "unlawful games at cards," in an indictment for keeping a gambling house, which charges the keeping of a house where unlawful games at cards were played, is a sufficient specification of the kind of games permitted. Commonwealth v. Crupper, 33 Ky. (3 Dana) 466.

A statute which imposes a penalty upon any person who shall suffer faro or any other unlawful game or games, at which money or any other thing is won or lost, to be played in his house, cannot be restricted in its construction and operation to such games as have been specially prohibited or designated as unlawful, but applies to and includes all games at which money or property is lost and won, all such games being unlawful. Vicaro v. Commonwealth, 35 Ky. (5 Dana) 504, 505.

UNLAWFUL IMPRISONMENT.

An imprisonment is not unlawful, in the sense of the rule that habeas corpus is the proper remedy for any unlawful imprisonment, merely because the process or order under which the party is held has been irregularly issued or is erroneous. Ex parte McCullough, 35 Cal. 97, 100.

UNLAWFUL INJURY.

The phrase "unlawful injury," in a statute making it a misdemeanor to send any letter threatening to do an "unlawful injury" to the person or property of another, is held to mean an injury resulting from an act prohibited by the law of the state, whether common or statutory. People v. Loveless, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1114, 1115.

"Unlawful injury," as used in Pen. Code, § 553, declaring that fear, such as will constitute extortion, may be induced by a threat to do an unlawful injury to the personal property of the individual threatened, should be construed to include a threat, by one representing himself to have control of certain striking employes, that unless the employer paid him a certain amount the employes would not return to work, whereby the employer's business would continue to be suspended. People v. Barondess, 81 N. E. 240, 241, 133 N. Y. 649.

UNLAWFUL INTERCOURSE.

The words "unlawful intercourse" must be held in a criminal case to be equivalent to the words "adultery" and "fornication"; and it would add nothing to the charge in an indictment under U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3636, providing a punishment for the commission of adultery, if the words "sexual" or "carnal" were used in connection with the words "unlawful intercourse." United States v. Griego (N. M.) 72 Pac. 20, 21.

UNLAWFUL MEANS.

The expression "unlawful means," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 5511, which provides that it shall be an offense for any person, by force, threats, intimidation, bribery, or reward, or by any other unlawful means, to induce any officer of election, etc., to violate or refuse to comply with his duty, or any law regulating the same, means any fraudulent means, as well as the means expressed in the statute as unlawful. Any unlawful means used to induce an officer to make a false count of the votes cast at an election constitute an offense against the United States under this statute. The phrase "unlawful means" does not embrace arguments of counsel or statements made by parties in good faith, believing them to be true, and which will leave the mind of the officer free to exercise his unbiased judgment. United States v. Watson (U. S.) 17 Fed. 145, 149.

UNLAWFUL PURPOSE.

A building is "occupied or used for unlawful purposes," within the meaning of a policy of insurance by the owner containing a proviso that it should be void if occupied or used for unlawful purposes, where the tenant stored a number of barrels of intoxicating liquors within the building with intent to sell such liquors in it, and did in fact from time to time sell the same there by retail without license, in violation of Gen. St. c. 86, §§ 28-34, and did not sell or keep for sale on the premises any other property. Kelly v. Worcester Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 97 Mass. 284, 287.

UNLAWFULLY.

"Unlawfully" means contrary to law. Anderson v. Territory, 18 Pac. 21, 24, 4 N. M. 108.

The word "unlawfully" is held to be the exact equivalent of the phrase "contrary to the form of the statute"; so that the word "unlawfully" need not be used when the equivalent phrase is used. State v. Tibbetts, 29 Atl. 979, 86 Me. 189.

"Unlawfully" is defined by Webster to mean "in an unlawful manner; in violation of law and right; illegally." Whitman v. State, 22 N. W. 459, 460, 17 Neb. 224.

The word "unlawfully" always means without legal justification. Terrell v. State, 86 Tenn. (2 Pickle) 523, 531, 8 S. W. 212, 214.

The term "unlawfully" implies that the act is not done as the law allows or requires. State v. Lightfoot, 78 N. W. 41, 42, 107 Iowa, 344 (citing State v. Massey, 97 N. C. 465, 2 S. E. 445).

"Unlawfully detained," as used in a statute giving a right to maintain the action of replevin for goods unlawfully detained, implied merely a detention contrary to law, and would not extend the right of action to goods held under color of authority of law, as by levy of execution. Hilton v. Osgood, 49 Conn. 110, 112.

The adverb "unlawfully," used in an indictment charging defendant with unlawfully and feloniously, with intent to defraud, appropriating certain moneys belonging to the state, is equivalent to, synonymous with, and fully takes the place of the adverbial phrase "without authority of law," employed in Comp. Laws, § 6698, subd. 1, providing a punishment for such an offense. State v. Taylor, 64 N. W. 548, 552, 7 S. D. 533.

The word "unlawfully," as used in Cr. Code, § 3888, providing for the conviction and punishment of any person who unlawfully, maliciously, or negligently throws down or breaks any fence or inclosure of another, means that the act was not done by authority of law, or that the act was an act which the law prohibits. It is the converse of "lawful." Wheeler v. State, 19 South. 995, 111 Ala. 218.

The word "unlawfully," as used in an indictment, does not vitiate the indictment, though the word "unlawfully" is not used in the statute defining the offense. State v. Robbins, 66 Me. 324, 327.

The word "unlawfully" is not indispensable in an indictment against a railroad corporation for erecting a nuisance. The words "wrongfully" and "injuriously" are sufficient. State v. Vermont Cent. R. Co., 27 Vt. 103, 110.

The insertion of the word "unlawfully" in an indictment or complaint is necessary when the statute uses it in describing the offense, but not necessary when the statute omits the word; but the word "unlawfully" need not be used when the offense is one at common law. Still, it is wise always to employ the word in charging the elements of an offense, because it negatives all legal cause of excuse for the act committed. State v. Skolfield, 29 Atl. 922, 923, 86 Me. 149.

When the word "unlawfully" is not made a part of the statutory description of an offense, the use of the word "unlawfully" in a criminal pleading asserts only a conclusion of law, and, if the conclusion arises out of the facts set forth, its express averment is unnecessary; if not, its omission leaves the indictment insufficient. If the language of the indictment describes acts in themselves unlawful, it adds nothing to their unlawfulness to say they were unlawfully done. State v. Concord R. R., 59 N. H. 85, 86.

An indictment under Code, § 985, subsec. 6, prohibiting the wanton and willful burning of a stable, is not affected by the use therein of the words "unlawfully, maliciously, or feloniously" in addition to the words "wantonly and willfully," since the latter words might be regarded as surplusage. State v. Battle, 35 S. E. 624, 628, 126 N. C. 1036.

The word "unlawfully," as used in an indictment for assault, is a mere conclusion of the pleader, and is confined in its application to the charge that the accused did commit an assault and battery. State v. Smith, 74 Ind. 557, 559.

"Unlawfully," as used in Code, § 1062, making it a misdemeanor to unlawfully and willfully deface, damage, or injure any house, may be properly applied to the acts of one who forcibly enters a house legally in the possession of another, even though he have a better title thereto. "One does not unlawfully destroy, deface, or injure his own property ordinarily when he has the same in his possession and complete control, but it is otherwise when it is in the possession of and claimed by others." State v. Howell, 12 S. E. 569, 107 N. C. 835.

Where the only specification of an offense in an affidavit was that accused "unlawfully" used a certificate of citizenship, knowing that the certificate had been unlawfully issued, the word did not give any information as to the nature of the offense. Whether the use was unlawful or not is a conclusion of law, and to allege that the use was unlawful is not to allege a fact. In re Coleman (U. S.) 6 Fed. Cas. 49, 53.

The insertion of the word "unlawfully" in a complaint for the sale of intoxicating liquors does not dispense with the necessity of specifically alleging the elements required by the state to constitute the crime charged against the defendant. Commonwealth v. Byrnes, 126 Mass. 248, 249 (citing Commonwealth v. Hart, 65 Mass. [11 Cush.] 180; Same v. Tuttle, 66 Mass. [12 Cush.] 502).

The term "unlawful," used in the description of an offense, is unnecessary whenever the crime existed at common law and is manifestly illegal. It is not necessary for the indictment to charge that an offense was unlawfully done, if the statute describing the offense does not use the word "unlawful." State v. Murphy, 43 Ark. 178, 179.

Battle's Revisal, c. 32, § 116, provides that no person, after being forbidden to do so, shall enter on the premises of another without a license, and that if any person, after being forbidden, so enter, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that the omission of the words "unlawfully" or "willfully" in a justice's warrant charging defendant with a violation of the statute in entering on another's land after being forbidden is a fatal defect, the title of the act being to prevent willful trespasses to land. State v. Whitaker, 85 N. C. 568, 568.

Falsely compared.

The words "willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously," when used in an indictment for forgery, though not words of the same import, have a broader and more extensive signification than the word "falsely," and are more than its equivalent, so that the word "falsely" is not essential to the validity of the indictment. State v. McKiernan, 30 Pac. 831, 832, 17 Nev. 224.

Feloniously distinguished.

The use of the word "unlawfully" in an instruction relative to embezzlement will not supply the place of the word "feloniously" or "fraudulently," since, while defendant may have unlawfully converted the money to his own use, it does not necessarily follow that he did so with a felonious or fraudulent intent, and unless he did so with such intent he is not guilty of embezzlement, although the statute does not in express terms require that there should be a criminal intent. State v. Cunningham, 55 S. W. 282, 287, 154 Mo. 161.

"Feloniously" is a word of far broader and more criminal meaning than the word "unlawfully." An act cannot be feloniously and not unlawfully done, but it may be unlawfully done without being feloniously done. Weinzorpflin v. State (Ind.) 7 Blackf. 186, 195; Shinn v. State, 68 Ind. 423, 425.

In Territory v. Miera, 1 N. M. 387, Chief Justice Benedict says: "By using the word 'unlawfully' in Act 1897, c. 30, relating to felonious assault, the Legislature intended to discriminate between acts of violence which may be lawful and those which are not. The word 'feloniously' in an indictment cannot be used to supply the omission of the word 'unlawfully,' because the statute specially provides that assaults may be committed in defense of persons or property." Territory v. Armijo, 37 Pac. 1117, 1119, 7 N. M. 571.

The word "unlawfully" is synonymous with the word "illegally." State v. Haynorth, 35 Tenn. (3 Sneed) 64, 65.

Knowingly distinguished.

See, also, "Knowingly."

Where a statute provides that to constitute an offense the act must be done knowingly, an indictment charging the act as done unlawfully is insufficient, inasmuch as the word "unlawfully" neither comprehends nor is equivalent in meaning to the word "knowingly." Tynes v. State, 17 Tex. App. 123, 126.

Maliciously, wantonly, and willfully compared.

An act may be unlawful, and so involve legal responsibility, without being either willful or malicious, or it may be both unlawful and willful, without being malicious. The three terms are frequently found in statutes, and often all together. They constitute an ascending scale in culpability—a legal climax. Malicious imports an additional aggravation in guilt, and ill desert, in the law's regard, beyond the other two combined. State v. Alexander (S. C.) 14 Rich. Law, 247, 253.

The words "unlawfully," "willfully," and "maliciously," in a statute punishing malicious trespass, are not synonymous, and were not intended to express the same idea. They each have a different signification, and import different degrees of guilt. An act may be unlawful, and so involve legal responsibility, without being either willful or malicious, or it may be both unlawful and willful without being malicious. State v. Toney, 15 S. C. 409, 412.

The word "unlawfully" does not import wanton and malicious manner. State v. Harwell, 40 S. E. 48, 129 N. C. 550.

The use of the words "willfully and unlawfully" in an indictment is not sufficient to charge malice. State v. Lightfoot, 78 N. W. 41, 42, 107 Iowa, 344.

"Unlawfully," as used in Crim. Code Neb. § 17, providing for the punishment of any person who shall unlawfully assault or threaten another, is equivalent to "willfully and maliciously," as used in an information alleging that defendant did willfully and maliciously make an assault upon another. Hodgkins v. State, 54 N. W. 86, 36 Neb. 160.

"Unlawfully" is not synonymous with "willfully." "Unlawfully doing a thing is not synonymous with willfully doing it. A man may do many things willfully which are not unlawful, and he may do many things unlawfully which are not willfully done." State v. Hussey, 60 Me. 410, 411, 11 Am. Rep. 206; State v. Townsell, 50 Tenn. (3 Heisk.) 6, 7; Jones v. State, 9 Tex. App. 178, 179.

The term "unlawfully," as used in an indictment charging that an act was unlawfully done, does not mean that it was wantonly and willfully done. State v. Massey, 2 S. E. 445, 446, 97 N. C. 465.

An indictment charging that one did unlawfully and willfully resist an officer in serving process is not sufficient under Code, § 4899, declaring a punishment if one knowingly and willfully make such resistance; "knowingly" not being synonymous with "willfully," and its omission not being supplied. Seymour v. C. Aultman & Co., 80 N. W. 401, 109 Iowa, 297.

"Unlawfully," as used in an indictment charging that the defendant feloniously and unlawfully did set fire to, burn, and consume a certain barn, is not equivalent to the words "willfully and maliciously," as used in the statute on which the prosecution is based, which makes it criminal to willfully and maliciously burn, etc. State v. Gove, 34 N. H. 510, 516.

The words "unlawfully, maliciously, and feloniously," in an indictment for wounding less than mayhem, are not equivalent to "willfully and maliciously," employed in the statute relating to the offense, and the words "unlawfully and feloniously" will not supply the place of "willfully." State v. Robinson, 28 South. 1002, 1003, 104 La. 224.

The words "unlawfully and feloniously," as used in an indictment charging that the defendant unlawfully and feloniously did set fire to, burn, and consume a certain barn, are not equivalent to the words "willfully and maliciously," as used in the statute on which the prosecution is based, which makes it criminal to "willfully and maliciously" burn, etc. State v. Gove, 34 N. H. 510, 516.

Wrongfully distinguished.

The words "wrongfully" and "unlawfully" are not synonyms or equivalents of each other, nor convertible terms; so that, under a statute authorizing an action for personal property which has been wrongfully taken or unlawfully detained, it is held that an allegation that the property was wrongfully detained was not sufficient. Louisville, E. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Payne, 2 N. E. 582, 584, 103 Ind. 188; Hilton v. Osgood, 49 Conn. 110, 112.

UNLAWFULLY CARRYING.

The Texas statute prohibiting the carrying of a pistol refers only to a carrying for purposes other than transportation, and where the owner of a pistol merely carries it home from the place where it was purchased, or from a shop where it had been repaired, such action did not constitute an unlawful carrying. Pressler v. State, 19 Tex. App. 52, 53, 58 Am. Rep. 883.

UNLESS.

"Unless it appears," as used in Gen. St. c. 92, § 25, declaring that, when a testator omits to provide for any of his children, they shall take a share, unless otherwise provided for, or "unless it appears" that the omission was intentional, implies that the burden of proof is on those who would make such intention appear. Ramsdill v. Wentworth, 106 Mass. 320.

The words "unless other damage occur," as contained in a provision of a tornado insurance policy that the company shall not be liable for loss from hail or blowing down of chimneys, shingles, etc., unless other damage occurs, refer to damage occurring from the thing insured against, namely, windstorms, and are operative when the wind has damaged the building over and above the blowing down of chimneys, etc. Holmes v.

Phoenix Ins. Co. (U. S.) 98 Fed. 240, 241, 89 C. C. A. 45, 47 L. R. A. 308.

An oil lease, which required certain wells to be completed within a stated time, contained the following: "In case no well is completed within 30 days from this date, then this grant shall become null and void, unless the second party shall pay the first party $30.00 each and every month in advance while such completion is delayed." It was held that this clause beginning with "unless" gave the lessee the option by making such payment to continue the lease in force to the end of the term without completing the first well, or, upon failure to make such payment, allow the lease to become null and void at the end of 30 days after the date of the lease; that it did not constitute a promise or obligation to pay rental, and no action would lie for its breach. Van Etten v. Kelly, 64 N. E. 560, 562, 66 Ohio St. 605.

The primary meaning of "unless" is "unloosened from"; it has the force of "except"; so what follows in the sentence after the word "unless" is excepted or unloosened from what went before it. As used in Code, § 216, providing that the officer shall not be bound to keep the property levied upon unless the plaintiff, on demand, shall indemnify him, though negative in form, conveys an affirmative meaning, namely, that, if the claim is made as provided, it shall be valid against him. Manning v. Keenan, 73 N. Y. 45, 56, 57.

It is said in Manning v. Keenan, 73 N. Y. 45, 56, that the word "unless" has the force of the word "except"; its primary meaning is unloosened from; so what follows in the sentence after the word "unless" is excepted or unloosened from what went before it. Such a form of expression in a statute sometimes amounts to an affirmative enactment, and in fact, proprio vigore, confers all that is excepted from a negative or restrictive provision. Nor are instances lacking in enactments where it is manifest that by the expression of matter under the lead of the word "unless" it was meant to affirm the contrary of what was previously stated. As used in the constitutional provision that no county seat shall be removed unless a majority of the qualified electors of the county vote therefor, the lawmaking power is directed that it may not authorize by law the thing to be done upon a less vote than of a majority. Alexander v. People, 2 Pac. 894, 899, 7 Colo. 155.

The word "unless" means the same as "except," so that the words as used in a policy free from average, unless general, can never mean to leave the insurers liable to any particular average. Wilson v. Smith, 3 Burr. 1550, 1556.

"Unless" has the same force as "except," as used in Rev. Laws, pp. 395, 396, § 4, concerning promissory notes, providing that a plaintiff shall allow all just set-offs or discounts, not only against himself, but against the assignor of such note, before notice of such assignment shall have been given to the defendant, unless it shall be expressed in said note that the said sum therein mentioned shall be paid without defalcation or discount; and the meaning of the whole member is the same as if it read, "excepting from the operation of this provision such notes as are drawn payable without defalcation or discount." Youngs v. Little, 15 N. J. Law (3 Green) 1, 15.

"Unless," as used in Civ. Code, § 1395, providing that the kindred of the half blood inherit equally with those of the whole blood unless the inheritance came to the intestate by descent, devise, or gift of some one of his ancestors, in which case all those who are not of the blood of such ancestor must be excluded from such inheritance, is equivalent to "except," and is here used to introduce an exception to the right of the half blood. In re Pearson's Estate, 42 Pac. 980, 962, 110 Cal. 524; In re Smith's Estate, 63 Pac. 729, 730, 131 Cal. 433, 82 Am. St. Rep. 358.

Rev. St. c. 92, § 4, enacts that kindred of the half blood shall inherit equally with those of the whole blood in the same degree, unless the inheritance came to the intestate by descent, devise, or gift of some one of his ancestors, in which case all those who are not of the blood of such ancestor shall be excluded from such inheritance. Held, that the word "unless" did not establish a general rule of inheritance, but meant merely to provide for a particular exception to the right of children of the half blood in the previous clause, and the person who is next of kin of the full blood of the intestate takes the inheritance, though not of the blood of the ancestor from whom it came to such intestate. Cramer's Appeal, 43 Wis. 167, 178.

UNLIQUIDATED.

Not ascertained in amount; not determined; remaining unassessed or unsettled; as unliquidated damages. Black, Law Dict.

UNLIQUIDATED ACCOUNT.

"There is no element of an open or unliquidated account in the indebtedness of one tenant in common to his co-tenant for rents collected. It is more in the nature of an action for money had and received by one person to the use of another, or that of an implied trust rather than an express trust." Hairston v. Sumner, 17 South. 709, 106 Ala. 381.

UNLIQUIDATED CLAIM.

"An unliquidated claim is one which one of the parties to the contract cannot alone render certain." Ives v. Supervisors of Jefferson Co., 18 Wis. 166, 168.

The term "unliquidated claim" may be properly used to designate a claim in reference to which the holder, in order to obtain a settlement, must bear some further burden in order to have the amount so fixed that the debtor is bound thereby. This is always the case when a creditor's claim rests upon a quantum meruit. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Clark (U. S.) 92 Fed. 968, 975, 35 C. C. A. 120.

Rev. St. 1899, § 5854, provides that no costs shall be recovered in any action against a city of the third class on any unliquidated claim unless there has been presented to the council a statement in writing with full account of the items and verified as correct, reasonable, and just. Held, that the phrase "unliquidated claim," in the connection in which it is used in the statute, does not include actions ex delicto. Haggard v. City of Carthage, 67 S. W. 567, 168 Mo. 129.

Where a defendant rightfully received, but wrongfully retained, money belonging to the plaintiff, the claim therefor is neither uncertain nor unliquidated. It can be precisely ascertained by a mathematical calculation, and does not depend upon the evidence of witnesses. Therefore, under a statute providing that, if the plaintiff's cause of action be a claim for unliquidated or uncertain damages, the defendant shall not be permitted to set off any debt due him by the plaintiff, such a claim is subject to set-off. Jones v. Hunt, 12 S. W. 832, 833, 74 Tex. 657.

UNLIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

The term "unliquidated damages" applies to cases of tort and to cases upon a quantum meruit for goods sold and delivered or services rendered. The damages in such a case are an uncertain quantity, depending upon no fixed standard. While it is said a demand is unliquidated if one party alone cannot make it certain and when it cannot be made certain by mere calculation, yet the allowance of interest as damages is not dependent on this rigid test. Cox v. McLaughlin, 18 Pac. 100, 104, 76 Cal. 60, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164.

As the amount of damages liable for breach of a contract to sell a note at less than its face value is presumptively the difference between such face value and the agreed price, a claim based on such a breach is not one for unliquidated damages, for which an attachment can issue under the statute. Dirickson v. Showell, 28 Atl. 896, 897, 79 Md. 49.

UNLIQUIDATED DEBT.

An unliquidated debt is one which one of the parties alone can render certain as to what is due and how much is due. Clark v. Dutton, 69 Ill. 521, 523 (citing Bouvier).

UNLIQUIDATED DEMAND.

A demand is not liquidated, even though it appears that something is due, unless it appears how much is due; and when it is admitted that one of two specific sums is due, but there is a genuine dispute as to which is the proper amount, the demand is "unliquidated," within the meaning of that term, as applied to the subject of accord and satisfaction. Nassoly v. Tomlinson, 42 N. E. 715, 716, 148 N. Y. 326, 51 Am. St. Rep. 695.

UNLIVERY.

"Unlivery" is a term used in the maritime law to designate the delivery of the cargo at the place where it is to be properly delivered. The Two Catherine (U. S.) 24 Fed. Cas. 424, 429.

UNLOAD.

A contract for the carriage of cattle, which recited that plaintiff should "load and unload" the cattle at his own risk, meant unloading at the terminus of transportation; and hence, where the cattle were detained by a snowstorm, and could have been unloaded by constructing a platform, which the carrier declined to do, and they remained in the cars 24 hours and were injured, the carrier was liable, if the injury was attributable to the failure to construct the platform and unload the cattle. Penn v. Buffalo & E. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 204, 209, 10 Am. Rep. 355.

UNMANUFACTURED.

The term "raw or unmanufactured article not enumerated or provided for," in the McKinley tariff act, fixing a duty on such articles at 10 per cent., was construed not to include natural gas, which was held to be a "crude mineral," within the meaning of the latter term in the Free List. United States v. Buffalo Natural Gas Fuel Co., 78 Fed. 110, 112, 24 C. C. A. 4.

Staves for pipes, hogsheds, and other casks were not free from duty, under the reciprocity treaty of 1854 between the United States and Great Britain, by which timber and lumber of all kinds, round, hewed, or sawed, unmanufactured in whole or in part, were to be admitted free of duty. United States v. Hathaway, 71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 404, 408, 18 L. Ed. 395.

UNMARRIED.

The term "any unmarried woman," as used in the statute providing that such a woman may institute a bastardy proceeding, is broad enough to include idiots and lunatics. But it is evident from the language employed in the same connection that only rational beings were within the contemplation of the Legislature. She is to begin the prosecution only by making a complaint on oath, so that only those who understand the binding force of an oath and are capable of giving testimony are within the spirit and intent of the act. State v. Jehlik (Kan.) 71 Pac. 572, 573, 61 L. R. A. 265.

The word "unmarried," as used in Comp. St. 37, § 1, declaring that on complaint made before a justice of the peace by an unmarried woman who shall hereafter be delivered of a bastard child, or being pregnant with a child which, if born, may be a bastard, accusing on oath any person of being the father of said child, the justice shall issue his warrant, etc., does not refer to the mother's status at the time of making the complaint in bastardy, but refers only to the status at such time as will affect the question of the legitimacy of the child or the liability of the husband to support it. Parker v. Nothomb, 91 N. W. 395, 396, 65 Neb. 306.

As never having married.

"Unmarried" means not married; having no husband or wife; and as used in 2 Rev. St. p. 64, § 44, providing that a will executed by an unmarried woman shall be deemed revoked by her subsequent marriage, is a woman not in the state of marriage and does not apply to a woman who was divorced after the execution of the will, and subsequently married again. In re Burton's Will, 25 N. Y. Supp. 824, 826, 4 Misc. Rep. 512 (citing In re Kaufman, 131 N. Y. 620, 30 N. E. 242, 15 L. R. A. 292).

The ordinary meaning of the word "unmarried" is never having been married; so that a legacy to the unmarried daughters of the testator cannot be claimed by a daughter who was a widow at the death of the testator. Hall v. Robertson, 21 Eng. Law & Eq. 504; Maberly v. Strode, 3 Ves. 450, 454.

"Unmarried," as used in a will wherein the testator gave to a daughter, if she should survive her mother and be still unmarried, a certain unity, etc., means never having been married. In re Thistlethwayte's Estate, 31 Eng. Law & Eq. 547, 548.

"Unmarried," as used in a will devising realty to several devisees jointly, which on the death of either unmarried should go to the survivor or survivors of them, means without ever having been married. Frail v. Carstairs, 58 N. E. 401, 403, 187 Ill. 310.

Rev. St. c. 61, § 5, provides that a married woman should not be a competent witness, "except in cases where the wife would, if unmarried, be plaintiff or defendant." Held, that the words of the exception did not have reference to cases where the wife was subsequently divorced, or where her husband had died, but simply to cases where the proposed witness has never been married, where the controversy does not concern a right resulting from the marriage. Smith v. Long, 106 Ill. 485, 486.

"Unmarried" does not necessarily mean that the person was never married, and an examination to show a settlement by hiring service, stating that the pauper was "single and unmarried," but not stating that he had no child or children, was not sufficient. Regina v. Wyondham, 2 Adolph. & E. 541, 544.

The word "unmarried" originally and ordinarily means never having been married. But the term is a word of flexible meaning, and slight circumstances will be sufficient to give the word its other meaning of not having a husband or wife at the time in question. Peters v. Balke, 48 N. E. 1012, 1014, 170 Ill. 304; Muller v. Balke, 47 N. E. 355, 357, 166 Ill. 150; Frail v. Carstairs, 58 N. E. 401, 403, 187 Ill. 310.

"Unmarried," as used in Rev. St. c. 6, art. 3, tit. 1, providing that "a will executed by an unmarried woman shall be deemed revoked by her subsequent marriage," refers to a woman who is not in a state of marriage, and includes a widow. In re Kaufman's Will, 80 N. E. 242, 243, 180 N. Y. 620, 15 L. R. A. 292 (affirming 16 N. Y. Supp. 113, 61 Hun, 331).

The term "unmarried," in a will providing that, if at any time there should be but one unmarried daughter of testator, she should receive the whole income of certain property, was construed to include a widowed daughter. In reaching such conclusion the court said: "The appellants contend that the ordinary meaning of the word 'unmarried'—i. e., never having been married—should be given, and our attention has been called to the case of Dalrymple v. Hall, 16 Ch. Div. 717, wherein it was held, as stated in the headnote, that, in the absence of context showing a contrary intention, the word 'unmarried' must be considered according to its ordinary or primary meaning, as never having been married, and therefore a gift to the children of B. did not take effect, he being a widower. That case, however, is equal in authority for holding that, where the context does show a different intention, the word 'unmarried' should not be defined as never having been married." It was held in the case at bar that the will showed a clear intention on the part of testator that the term included widowed daughters as well as daughters who had never been married. In re Oakley, 74 N. Y. Supp. 206, 208, 67 App. Div. 493.

The word "unmarried," as used in a will whereby the testator bequeathed his residuary estate to his unmarried nieces, includes nieces who had been married, but who were widows at the time of the testator's death. In re Conway's Estate, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 332, 334.

UNMARRIED PERSON.

"Person" meaning human being, as including body and mind, a man, woman, or child, an individual, the use of the words "unmarried person" in an indictment does not show whether the unmarried person was man or woman; but as used in an indictment for seduction it will be held to mean an unmarried woman. State v. Olson, 77 N. W. 332, 333, 108 Iowa, 667.

UNMOLESTED.

In an instruction in relation to the acquisition of a right of way by prescription, the court charged that "if you conclude that this way has been traveled unmolested for 20 years in one place, then the public has acquired the right to use or travel it." The word "unmolested" is about tantamount to the idea of an adverse use, especially when used in connection with the words "continuously for 20 years." Earle v. Poat, 41 S. E. 525, 530, 63 S. C. 439.

UNNECESSARILY.

An act is "unnecessarily" done when done outside of the usual course of business pertaining to the subject. Purdy v. Lynch, 40 N. E. 232, 235, 145 N. Y. 462.

UNNECESSARY.

"Unnecessary" is equivalent to "needlessly." Beopple v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 58 S. W. 231, 234, 104 Tenn. 420.

UNNECESSARY DELAY.

A delay by a common carrier, in transporting freight, of 24 hours, at a station on the way, is an unnecessary delay, unless explained and excused by something which the law recognizes as sufficient. The excuse that the company needed its rolling stock for the purpose of carrying passengers is not a sufficient excuse. Ormsby v. Union Pac. R. Co. (U. S.) 4 Fed. 706, 707.

UNNECESSARY FORCE.

"Unnecessary force," as used when speaking of a course of conduct by one person toward another which would constitute a cause of civil action, is generally synonymous with wanton or malicious force. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ganta, 17 Pac. 54, 64, 38 Kan. 608, 5 Am. St. Rep. 780.

UNNECESSARY LOSS.

The term "unnecessary loss," in a contract whereby one party was to harvest defendant's grain in a thorough and farmerlike manner, without waste or unnecessary loss, cannot be construed to mean any loss which it would be possible to avoid by the greatest possible care and diligence and by the best possible appliances. The contract, in providing that one or more harvesters should be used, provided the test of due diligence; and if the condition of the grain made the use of more than one harvester necessary for its proper preservation, an obligation to use more than one arose. Turner v. Kearney, 116 Cal. 62, 66, 47 Pac. 866, 867.

UNNECESSARY NOISE.

"Unnecessary noise," as used in a complaint alleging that, while the plaintiff was detained by a train at a railroad crossing, another train came up suddenly behind the first train and to the crossing, and, by making a great and "unnecessary noise" from a concealed position, caused plaintiff's horse to run away and injure him, is equivalent to saying noise was needlessly made. Beopple v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 58 S. W. 231, 234, 104 Tenn. 420.

Quietly working within a closed church on the Sabbath day, on the benches therein, is not making an "unnecessary noise within the corporate limits * * * calculated to disturb the peace, quiet or good order of the city," within the municipal ordinance penalizing such offense, the work in question not being itself of such a character or causing such noise as would ordinarily disturb any citizen, the only disturbance occasioned arising from the fact that it was done on the Sabbath. Keck v. City of Gainesville, 25 S. E. 559, 98 Ga. 423; McCutcheon v. Same, Id.

UNNECESSARY PROLIXITY.

In construing the statute permitting all matters of defense to be given in evidence under the general issue on the defendant's filing a notice of all matters in avoidance and of any defense, "stating in general terms, and without unnecessary prolixity, and in a manner intelligible to a person of ordinary understanding, the true ground and substance of the defense relied upon," the court said: "The expression 'in general terms' (concisely; comprehensively) and the expression 'without unnecessary prolixity' (i. e., unnecessary minuteness of detail), is unmeaning, for that is equally a fault in a special plea, although not demurrable in either; and the expression 'intelligible to a person of ordinary understanding' evidently refers to the kind of language, and was doubtless intended to prevent the use of technical phrases. They all refer to the manner of stating the defense, and do not excuse an omission of substance." Merrill v. Everett, 38 Conn. 40, 48.

UNOBSTRUCTED.

"Unobstructed" means free from obstacles or impediments which check, hinder, or retard passage; and a patent specification calling for an ink reservoir "open and unobstructed" at the lower end is not infringed by the use of a penholder, in the bottom of the reservoir of which is screwed a perforated nozzle, through which the ink is conducted to the pen. Sackett v. Smith (U. S.) 42 Fed. 846, 852.

UNOCCUPIED.

As commonly used and understood, the word "occupation" is synonymous with "possession." According to Webster, occupancy is the act of taking or holding possession, and "occupy" means to take possession; to hold or keep for use; and a dwelling house will be deemed unoccupied, within an insurance policy providing that the same should be void if the premises became unoccupied, where the tenant commenced to move out, and had removed most of his furniture and all of his family from the house, leaving no one in it at the time the fire took place. Walt v. Agricultural Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 13 Hun, 371, 373.

"Unoccupied," as used in Act March 3, 1854, § 6, providing that every person shall be assessed in the township or ward where he resides when the assessment is made, for all lands then owned by him within the said township or ward, either occupied by him or wholly unoccupied, means untenanted. State v. Reinhardt, 31 N. J. Law (2 Vroom) 218, 219.

The word "unoccupied," as used in a fire policy providing that it shall become void if the house insured becomes unoccupied, means when no one lives therein. Herrman v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 81 N. Y. 184, 188, 37 Am. Rep. 488.

"Unoccupied," as contained in an insurance policy providing for the annulment of the same "if the premises shall become vacant and unoccupied," is not synonymous with "vacant," but is that status where no one has the actual use or possession of the thing or property in question. Herrman v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 44 N. Y. Super. Ct. (12 Jones & S.) 444, 453.

The words "unoccupied premises" mean vacant premises; that is, that there is no one in actual possession, exercising any acts of control over the premises, or any part of them. Hill v. Warrell, 87 Mich. 135, 138, 49 N. W. 479, 480.

Barn.

"Occupying" means using, but the occupation of a barn means a very different use than that of a house or an outbuilding. Fritz v. Home Ins. Co., 44 N. W. 139, 140, 78 Mich. 565.

Where insured was engaged in carrying on the farm contiguous to the insured buildings, and he and his servants took their meals in the house, and the barn was used for the usual purposes of a farm barn, for storing hay and farm tools, but cattle were not kept in it, the barn will be considered unoccupied within the meaning of a policy providing that buildings unoccupied are not covered by the policy unless insured as such. Johnson v. Norwalk Fire Ins. Co., 56 N. E. 569, 570, 175 Mass. 529; Ashworth v. Builders' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 112 Mass. 422, 424, 17 Am. Rep. 117.

Church.

The term "occupied," as applied to a building insured against fire, always implies the substantial and practical use of the building for the purpose for which it is intended, and as contemplated by the policy (Sonneborn v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 44 N. J. Law [15 Vroom] 220, 223, 43 Am. Rep. 365). As to a dwelling house, it being designed for occupancy by human beings, it is occupied when human beings actually reside in it, and unoccupied when no one lives or dwells in it (Hartshorne v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 50 N. J. Law [21 Vroom] 427, 430, 14 Atl. 615). The definition of "occupied" as applied to a dwelling will not, of course, cover a barn, a mill, a sawmill, a factory, music halls, theaters, or churches. If church buildings are kept for use for the purposes for which they are designed, and used as occasion presents and as the convenience of the congregation requires, and there is no intent shown to abandon them for the purposes of their use by the temporary period of nonuser, even though those periods may exceed the 10-day limit in a policy, such act is not per se a leaving of a church building vacant and unoccupied, within the forfeiture clause of a policy. Where services had been held in a church until there was no minister, and the building was in charge of trustees, the president of the board having the key, and acting, as he always had, as the sexton, visiting it frequently, caring for it, and going in it as often as five times a week, the furniture being in the church, as well as the organ used in worship, and there was no change in the use of the property, or determination to nonuse it as a church, but it remained ready to be opened as soon as any one could be secured to preach—one minister having been secured to preach on a certain Sunday, the church being opened, and the congregation gathered—the church is occupied, though the minister did not appear. Hampton v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 47 Atl. 433, 434, 65 N. J. Law, 265, 52 L. R. A. 344.

Dwelling.

The word "occupancy," as used in insurance policies in relation to dwelling houses, implies an actual use as a dwelling place. Home Ins. Co. of New York v. Boyd, 49 N. E. 285, 290, 19 Ind. App. 173; Bonenfant v. American Fire Ins. Co., 43 N. W. 682, 683, 76 Mich. 653; Cook v. Continental Ins. Co., 70 Mo. 610, 614, 35 Am. Rep. 438; Hoover v. Mercantile Town Mut. Ins. Co., 69 S. W. 42, 43, 93 Mo. App. 111; Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 33 Atl. 429, 430, 82 Md. 88, 30 L. R. A. 633, 51 Am. St. Rep. 457.

"Unoccupied," as used in an insurance policy providing that the insurance shall be void if the dwelling house remains unoccupied, means not used by human beings as their customary place of abode. Weidert v. State Ins. Co., 24 Pac. 242, 250, 19 Or. 261, 20 Am. St. Rep. 809; Herrman v. Adriatic Fire Ins. Co., 85 N. Y. 162, 39 Am. Rep. 644.

"Unoccupied," as used in an insurance policy on a dwelling, making the same void so long as it shall be unoccupied, means when no one lives or dwells in it. In such contracts the word is to be construed with reference to the nature and character of the building, the purpose for which it is designed, and the uses contemplated by the parties as expressed in the contract; and a dwelling house, being designed as the abode of mankind, is occupied when human beings habitually reside in it, and unoccupied when no one lives or dwells in it. Hartshorne v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 14 Atl. 615, 617, 50 N. J. Law (21 Vroom) 427; Sonneborn v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 44 N. J. Law (15 Vroom) 220, 223, 43 Am. Rep. 365.

The term "vacant or unoccupied," in a policy of fire insurance, providing that it shall become void if the building "herein described be or become vacant or unoccupied," etc., means that the house is without an occupant; that is, no one is living in it. Schuermann v. Dwellinghouse Ins. Co., 43 N. E. 1093, 1094, 161 Ill. 437, 52 Am. St. Rep. 377 (citing North American Fire Ins. Co. v. Zaenger, 63 Ill. 464; American Ins. Co. v. Padfield, 78 Ill. 167; Fitzgerald v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 64 Wis. 463, 25 N. W. 785; Alston v. Old North State Ins. Co., 80 N. C. 326); Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 33 Atl. 429, 430, 82 Md. 88, 30 L. R. A. 633, 51 Am. St. Rep. 457.

The word "occupancy," as used in a fire insurance policy relating to the occupancy of a house necessary to prevent the avoidance of the policy, is not to be understood in any technical sense. It is not that occupancy or possession which follows the legal title, and which the assured might be said to have by reason of owning and cultivating the farm on which the house stands. It means something more than this. As applied to the dwelling, it must be understood in the popular sense, as defined in the following cases: "For a dwelling house to be in a state of occupancy, there must be in it the presence of human beings, as at their customary place of abode, not absolutely and uninterruptedly continuous, but that must be the place of usual return and habitual stoppage." Herrman v. Adriatic Fire Ins. Co., 85 N. Y. 169, 39 Am. Rep. 644. "A dwelling house and barn are unoccupied, within the meaning of an insurance policy which provides that buildings unoccupied shall not be covered by the policy, where the house is only used by the insured and his servants for the purpose of taking their meals there when engaged in carrying on a contiguous farm, and the barn is only used for the purpose of storing hay and farming tools." Fitzgerald v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 25 N. W. 785, 786, 64 Wis. 463 (citing Ashworth v. Builders' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 112 Mass. 422, 17 Am. Rep. 117); Moore v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 6 Atl. 27, 31, 64 N. H. 140, 10 Am. St. Rep. 384.

The occupancy required by the terms of the policy includes the care and supervision involved in the use of the house as a dwelling, and hence, where insured moved out and took his furniture away, leaving the house without occupants, the policy was forfeited, notwithstanding he left some one to look after it. Bonenfant v. American Fire Ins. Co., 43 N. W. 682, 683, 76 Mich. 653; Cook v. Continental Ins. Co., 70 Mo. 610, 614, 35 Am. Rep. 438; Herrman v. Adriatic Fire Ins. Co., 85 N. Y. 162, 39 Am. Rep. 644.

The word "unoccupied," as applied to a dwelling house in a fire insurance policy, signifies not used as a residence; and consequently a designated tenement becomes unoccupied when it is no longer used for the accustomed and ordinary purposes of a dwelling or place of abode. Hence, no matter what other use it may be devoted to, so long as it ceases to be a place of actual abode—a place really occupied as a residence or habitation—it is vacant or unoccupied, according to the plain import of those words, and according to the sense in which they are manifestly employed in a contract of insurance to become void on the dwelling house becoming vacant and unoccupied. It is not a mere casual or occasional sleeping in a house that constitutes an occupancy of it. The element of a fixed abode is an essential ingredient of every concept of occupancy when applied to a dwelling house, and the term "unoccupied" is employed to express the directly opposite condition. Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 33 Atl. 429, 430, 82 Md. 88, 30 L. R. A. 633, 51 Am. St. Rep. 457.

The absence of one who resided in a house for six weeks, though he returned frequently and looked after the house and the property therein, makes the premises "unoccupied," within an insurance policy providing that the same should be void if the house should be left unoccupied without giving immediate notice to the company thereof. Paine v. Agricultural Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 5 Thomp. & C. 619, 621.

A dwelling house is unoccupied, within a policy providing that the same shall be void if the premises become vacant or unoccupied, and so remain, without notice to and consent of the insured, where the house remains vacant for three months, and is then let to a tenant, who up to the time of the loss has placed in the house only implements for cleaning it, but has not otherwise occupied it. Litch v. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co., 136 Mass. 491.

Ordinarily a dwelling house is unoccupied when no one is living in it and having it as a home—a place of residence. The rule that, in order to constitute occupancy of a dwelling house, some one must live in it, does not, of course, preclude the occupant from visiting or being temporarily absent, nor would such a rule preclude a tenant from moving out, and some one else moving in, giving a reasonable time for the one to get out and the other to get in. Where a tenant had moved his family out, and had moved everything but some trifles of no particular value, and had gone away without any expectancy of returning to the house for the purpose of living there, and there was no expectation that another tenant was to be put in such house, the house was unoccupied, within the meaning of an insurance policy conditioned that it should be void in case the building was unoccupied, unless consent for such inoccupancy had been indorsed on the policy. Snyder v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 42 N. W. 630, 631, 78 Iowa, 146.

Where premises insured for a number of years had been occupied as a summer residence by the insured, the winter months being spent in the city, and the residence being visited by the insured or his wife two or three times a week, when they frequently took their meals and entertained their friends there, and the assured had entertained a party of friends in the house two days before the fire, it was not unoccupied, within the condition of a policy prohibiting a cessation of occupancy for more than 30 days. Western Assur. Co. v. Mason, 5 Ill. App. (5 Bradw.) 141, 147.

To constitute occupancy of a building insured as a dwelling house, it is not essential that it be put to all the uses ordinarily made of a dwelling, or to some of those uses all the time, or that the whole of it be employed in that use; nor will the building be considered as unoccupied upon its ceasing to be used as a family residence, where the household goods remain ready for use, and it continued to be occupied by one or more members of the family, who have access to the entire building, for the purpose of caring for it, and who do care for it, and make some use of it as a place of abode. Moody v. Amazon Ins. Co., 38 N. E. 1011, 1013, 52 Ohio St. 12, 28 L. R. A. 313, 49 Am. St. Rep. 699.

The term "occupied," within the meaning of an insurance policy containing a condition that if the premises become vacant or unoccupied and so remain for more than 10 days, without notice to or consent of the company in writing, it should be void, means that the house must be habitually occupied; that is, somebody must have lived there and slept there habitually—not every night, but usually and ordinarily. A dwelling house on a farm, which is not occupied, except by the men working on the farm, during the time they are so employed, for cooking their meals and sleeping, is not occupied within the meaning of the policy. Fitzgerald v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 25 N. W. 785, 786, 64 Wis. 463.

Same—Partial removal of goods.

A condition in a fire policy, avoiding it in case the building becomes vacant and unoccupied, requires, in order to avoid the policy, not only that the building shall become unoccupied, but also that it shall be vacant; and therefore the policy is not avoided by the removal of the owner of the house for the season, if he leaves his furniture thereat. Herrman v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 81 N. Y. 184, 187, 37 Am. Rep. 488.

A building from which the tenant thereof partially moves, leaving in the building a portion of his furniture, is not vacant or unoccupied within the meaning of a policy of insurance providing that it should be void if the premises became vacant or unoccupied, etc. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Buckstaff, 56 N. W. 693, 696, 38 Neb. 146, 41 Am. St. Rep. 724.

A house which a tenant is notified to leave, and which he does leave some two days before a fire burning the same, with his landlord's knowledge and with his consent, leaving there some articles not required for housekeeping in his new quarters, is "vacant and unoccupied," within the meaning of a provision in an insurance policy, declaring the policy void if the premises become "vacant or unoccupied." Richards v. Continental Ins. Co. of New York, 47 N. W. 350, 83 Mich. 508, 21 Am. St. Rep. 611.

A building in which the late occupants have left a part of their furniture after they are sleeping and taking their meals in another house is vacant, though the key has not been surrendered to the landlord, within the meaning of an insurance policy providing that it shall be void if the premises become vacant or unoccupied. Corrigan v. Conn. Fire Ins. Co., 122 Mass. 298, 300.

When the occupant of a dwelling house moves out with his family, taking part of his furniture and nearly all his wearing apparel, and makes his place of abode elsewhere, such dwelling house, while thus deserted, must be regarded as unoccupied—that is, vacated—if the word be given its natural and ordinary signification. Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 33 Atl. 429, 430, 82 Md. 88, 30 L. R. A. 633, 51 Am. St. Rep. 457.

A house from which the occupants had been absent for several months on a visit, but the furniture of whom was left therein, and to which house the occupants' relatives went daily, was not "vacant or unoccupied," within the meaning of a policy of insurance providing that it should be void on the property being left vacant or unoccupied, etc. McMurray v. Capital Ins. Co., 64 N. W. 354, 355, 87 Iowa, 453.

It appears that an insured building may be unoccupied, within the meaning of a fire policy, without being vacant—as, for instance, a dwelling house from which the family has removed, leaving a portion of their goods in the building, will not be vacant, but is unoccupied. The fact that a tenant of insured and his servants had for two days before the fire, which occurred in the night, been cleaning the dwelling house preparatory to its occupation, did not constitute an occupation, within the meaning of the policy. Thomas v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. (Ky.) 53 S. W. 297, 298.

Where the insured left the house covered by the insurance policy, and went elsewhere to reside, taking part of her furniture with her, and leaving the rest, but left a man in charge, with instructions to sleep in the house at night, who quit the premises several days before the fire, and did not return, and no one was in the house when the fire occurred, the house was "unoccupied," within the insurance policy, providing that the same should be void if the premises became unoccupied. Cook v. Continental Ins. Co., 70 Mo. 610, 614, 35 Am. Rep. 438.

A dwelling house in which no one lives, but in which a former occupant left some trifling articles of furniture, of little value, is "vacant and unoccupied," within the meaning of a policy of fire insurance providing that it shall be void if the building herein described be or become "vacant or unoccupied," or not in use. Schuermann v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 43 N. E. 1093, 1094, 161 Ill. 437, 52 Am. St. Rep. 377 (citing Moore v. Phoenix Fire Ins. Co., 64 N. H. 140, 6 Atl. 27, 10 Am. St. Rep. 394).

Same—Repairs.

Premises which are being repaired will not be deemed occupied in a way rendering the insurance risk more hazardous than at the time of insuring, making repairs not being a way of occupying premises. Townsend v. N. W. Ins. Co., 18 N. Y. 168, 176.

An insurance policy provided that "if the premises should become vacant or unoccupied, and so remain, with the knowledge of the assured, without notice and consent of the company, in writing, this policy shall be void." The dwelling house insured was rented to a tenant, who left the premises, and the owner immediately prepared to occupy the house, and, to that end, had certain repairs made, and moved her furniture into the house, but had not commenced living in it when the house was burned. The court held that occupation of a dwelling house requires that there must be in it the presence of human beings at their customary place of abode, not absolutely uninterrupted and continuous, but that must be the place of usual return and habitual stoppage, and that the purpose of the owner to move in and occupy it, and the taking of all preliminary steps to the occupancy, was not sufficient, and hence that the insured was not liable for such loss. Barry v. Prescott Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 35 Hun, 601, 602, 606.

A house is vacant and unoccupied, within the meaning of a fire policy conditioned against the premises becoming vacant and unoccupied, if the tenant moves out on the 26th of March, and it is burned on March 31st, before a new tenant has moved in, though he intended to move April 1st, and made some repairs in the house prior to the fire. In so holding, the court cites Cook v. Continental Ins. Co., 70 Mo. 610, 35 Am. Rep. 438, in which the court said: "Occupation of a dwelling house is living in it." Paine v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 5 Thomp. & C. 619. A fair and reasonable construction of the language "vacant and unoccupied" is that it should be without an occupant; without any person living in it. American Ins. Co. v. Padfield, 78 Mo. 167, 169. Speaking of a dwelling house and barn, Oolt, J., in Ashworth v. Builders' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 112 Mass. 422, 17 Am. Rep. 117, observed that occupancy, as applied to such buildings, implies an actual use of the house as a dwelling place, and such use of the barn as is ordinarily incident to a barn belonging to an unoccupied house, or at least something more than the use of it for storage. Continental Ins. Co. v. Kyle, 24 N. E. 727, 729, 124 Ind. 132, 9 L. R. A. 81, 19 Am. St. Rep. 77.

A house vacated by the tenant, which is taken possession of the next day by the owner, intending to keep it himself, and who has papered, painted, and moved his furniture into the same, and keeps his employees in and about the house from 6 in the morning till 7 or 8 in the evening, preparing it for occupancy, and which is destroyed by fire the day before he expected to move into the same, is not "vacant or unoccupied," within the meaning of a policy declaring that the insurer shall not be liable for loss occurring where the insured property is vacant or unoccupied. Eddy v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 30 N. W. 808, 811, 70 Iowa, 472, 59 Am. Rep. 444.

Same—Temporary absence.

A mere temporary absence of the occupant of a building therefrom will not render void a policy of insurance which contains a provision that the policy shall become void in case the building becomes vacant. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. McLimans, 45 N. W. 171, 172, 28 Neb. 846; East Texas Fire Ins. v. Kempner, 34 S. W. 393, 398, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 533.

An insurance policy providing that, if the buildings become vacant or unoccupied, the policy will be void, will not be held to mean that there must be a continuous actual occupancy, so that the owner could not temporarily leave the premises. Home Fire Ins. Co. v. Peyson, 74 N. W. 960, 961, 54 Neb. 495.

In an action on an insurance policy, the evidence showed that the plaintiff and her husband and family occupied the premises of the dwelling house, and that a week or two before the fire they left the house to visit friends, leaving no one there, but during that time the husband came back and stayed in the house overnight on two occasions, and was there the night of the fire. All the furniture was left in the house, and plaintiff took with her a satchel containing a few clothes for herself and her boy. Held, that the house was not vacant or unoccupied, within the insurance policy, providing that the same should be void if the premises were unoccupied. Johnson v. New York Bowers Fire Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 39 Hun, 410, 411.

Where the insured had for some time before the fire slept in an adjoining house, which belonged to her daughter, but had never abandoned the premises—her furniture and wearing apparel being left in the house, and she returning and spending the day there—the house will not be deemed to have been unoccupied, within an insurance policy providing that, if the premises should become unoccupied without the consent of the company indorsed thereon, the policy should become void. Gibbs v. Continental Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 13 Hun, 611, 620.

In Herrman v. Insurance Co., 85 N. Y. 162, 39 Am. Rep. 644, the court, in construing a fire policy providing that the policy should be void if the house should become vacant or unoccupied, pointed out a distinction between the words "vacant" and "unoccupied," the latter condition being broken when the house was either empty or unused as an abode, while the former required a concurrence of the absence of the occupants, and a removal of the inanimate contents of the premises. It is said in Halpin v. Insurance Co., 120 N. Y. 73, 23 N. E. 988, 8 L. R. A. 79, in which a similar policy was being construed, that, while a dwelling house will not be regarded as being occupied unless it is the home or dwelling place of some person, yet temporary absence, leaving the property for a short period unoccupied, will not be regarded as a breach of the condition, while absence for a fixed, definite period, even with the intention to return and occupy the property, will violate the condition and render the policy void. The court, after citing the above cases, held that the absence of the insured from the property for nearly five months, during which time no one occupied the house, was in violation of a clause prohibiting the property from becoming vacant or unoccupied, and that such absence worked a forfeiture of the policy. Couch v. Farmers' Fire Ins. Co., 72 N. Y. Supp. 95, 98, 64 App. Div. 367.

A house is not unoccupied, within the meaning of a fire insurance policy conditioned that it should be void if the house should become vacant or unoccupied without assent of the company, when it has an inhabitant who intends to remain in it as his residence, but who has left it for a temporary purpose. Stupetzki v. Transatlantic Fire Ins. Co., 5 N. W. 401, 402, 43 Mich. 373, 38 Am. Rep. 195.

A dwelling house does not become unoccupied, within the meaning of a fire insurance policy providing that it should become void, unless consent in writing was indorsed on the policy by or in behalf of the insurer, if the building insured be or become vacant or unoccupied for the purpose indicated in the contract, where the owner of such dwelling, after a tenant has vacated, moves his furniture in and fills up the house, with an intention of making it his residence, but during that time does not actually occupy it at night, subsequently leaves it temporarily on business, and puts a party in possession until his return. Shackleton v. Sun Fire Office, 21 N. W. 343, 344, 55 Mich. 288, 54 Am. Rep. 379.

In holding that a fire policy containing a clause that it should become void if allowed to become vacant and unoccupied, without notice to the company, was avoided by the fact that it had remained vacant for 17 days before the fire, the court said that it was not a question as to how long the vacancy may have existed without the knowledge of the assured, but that he was bound to see that the house did not become vacant, or to give the required notice. "Of course, the terms of the contract must receive a reasonable construction. The parties did not intend that one tenant should not move out and another move in. Nor did they intend that the house should be deemed vacant if the occupant should close it and go off on a visit, and not occupy it for a reasonable time." Dennison v. Phenix Ins. Co., 3 N. W. 500, 502, 52 Iowa, 457.

"Occupancy" of a dwelling house, within the meaning of a fire insurance policy, implies an actual use of a house as a dwelling place, but it does not follow that the presence of the occupant in the building should be continuous and uninterrupted. The necessity of temporary absences on business, or for family convenience or pleasure, is recognized, and the insured is understood to contemplate an assent to them. Shackelton v. Sun Fire Office, 21 N. W. 343, 344, 55 Mich. 288, 54 Am. Rep. 379.

A dwelling house, to be in the state of occupancy, must have in it the presence of human beings as at their customary place of abode; not absolutely and uninterruptedly continuous, but that must be the place of usual return and habitual stoppage. Temporary absence, either on pleasure, or from accident or for business purposes, cannot make a dwelling vacant or unoccupied, within the meaning of an insurance policy providing that it shall be void when it is vacant or unoccupied. Morgan v. Illinois Ins. Co. (Mich.) 90 N. W. 40, 41.

Occupation of a dwelling house is living in it, not mere supervision over it. It is not necessary that some person should live in it at every moment during the life of an insurance policy thereon containing a provision invalidating the policy if the premises should be unoccupied, but there must not be a cessation of occupancy for any considerable portion of time. Johnson v. New York Bowery Fire Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 39 Hun, 410, 411; Paine v. Agricultural Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 5 Thomp. & C. 619, 621.

"Unoccupied," as used in a policy providing that it should not be valid if the house insured was permitted to remain vacant and unoccupied for more than 10 days, meant an absence intended to be permanent for that length of time; and hence the fact that the owner of the house, who lived in it alone, left it for two months, does not, as a matter of law, render it vacant and unoccupied, where the absence was not intended to be permanent, and during such absence the house was visited daily by a neighbor, with whom the keys had been left. Hill v. Ohio Ins. Co., 58 N. W. 359, 99 Mich. 359.

Elevator.

Where property insured was an elevator, and, though part of the time it was not actually used, and there was no steam or men working there, men were around the place all the time, and the insured kept his papers there, the elevator was occupied, and not vacant in the sense that would avoid the policy. Williams v. North German Ins. Co. (U. S.) 24 Fed. 625.

Factory or mill.

A building insured as a morocco factory, which is vacated, and its key given to the owner's renting agent, who visits it only occasionally, is unoccupied, within the meaning of a clause in the policy of insurance making it void if the building becomes vacant or unoccupied. Halpin v. Aetna Fire Ins. Co., 23 N. E. 988, 120 N. Y. 70; Same v. Phenix Ins. Co., 23 N. E. 482, 484, 118 N. Y. 165; Caraher v. Royal Ins. Co., 17 N. Y. Supp. 858, 864, 63 Hun, 82.

"Unoccupied," as used in a condition avoiding a policy of insurance on a mill in case the premises become unoccupied, refers to something more than a temporary suspension of work in the mill. They were not unoccupied, within the meaning of this clause, where the works had been stopped for five days, in the meantime being used for the storage and delivery of goods, requiring daily visits by one or two persons. Albion Leadworks v. Williamsburg City Fire Ins. Co. (U. S.) 2 Fed. 479, 488.

"Unoccupied," as used in a policy of insurance on a shop and the machinery therein, providing that, if the building insured remained unoccupied over 30 days without notice, the policy should be void, required a practical use of the building; and it was not sufficient to constitute an occupancy that the tools remained in the shop, and that a person went through almost every day to see that everything was in proper condition. Keith v. Quincy Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 92 Mass. (10 Allen) 228, 230.

"Unoccupied," as used in an insurance policy conditioned that the policy shall be forfeited if the property insured becomes vacant and unoccupied, except to set up new machinery or make repairs, does not apply to a temporary suspension of the principal work of a cotton factory—the watchman and others being still employed—whether such suspension was to set up machinery or repair, or not. American Fire Ins. Co. v. Brighton Cotton Mfg. Co., 17 N. E. 771, 775, 125 Ill. 131.

To render a sawmill "vacant and unoccupied," within an insurance policy invalidating same if the premises shall become vacant and unoccupied, there must be an entire abandonment of it by the owner. Whitney v. Black River Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 9 Hun, 37, 41.

A sawmill in which a gang of saws are rendered temporarily useless by the breaking of a journal, and the repairing of which is made difficult by the condition of the water, but the yard of which is occupied by logs which the owner intended to saw, is not "vacant and unoccupied," within the meaning of a policy providing that it shall become void on the premises becoming vacant and unoccupied. Whitney v. Black River Ins. Co., 72 N. Y. 117, 120, 28 Am. Rep. 116.

"Occupy," as used in a fire policy on a sawmill, requiring insured or others to occupy the mill, is synonymous with "operate." Ladd v. Aetna Ins. Co., 24 N. Y. Supp. 384, 386, 70 Hun, 490.

Lands.

Vacant and unoccupied land, within the statute of limitations, vesting title to "vacant and unoccupied land" in one who, having color of title thereto, pays taxes thereon for seven years, means land not in the actual possession of one; and hence the keeping of a wagon, when not in use, upon a city lot, in which the owner of the wagon has no claim or color of title, does not keep the lot from being vacant and unoccupied, within the meaning of the words as used in the statute. Walker v. Converse, 36 N. E. 202, 204, 148 Ill. 622.

The words "unoccupied lands of the United States," as used in the treaty of February 24, 1869, with the Bannock tribe of Indians, providing that they shall have the right to hunt upon the unoccupied lands of the United States so long as game may be found thereon, and so long as peace subsists among the whites and Indians on the borders of the hunting districts, cannot be construed alone, but must be construed with reference to the context in which they are found, and when so construed they refer only to the lands of the character embraced within what the treaty denominates as hunting districts. Ward v. Race Horse, 16 Sup. Ct. 1076, 1077, 163 U. S. 504, 41 L. Ed. 244.

Under a provision of the city charter that, where sewage assessments are made upon any unoccupied lot of a nonresident owner, it shall be made in his name, and entered in a list of nonresident owners, etc., it is held that a lot which was inclosed, but was uncultivated, and had no buildings upon it, and no one in actual possession, was unoccupied, within the meaning of the charter. Hill v. Warrell, 87 Mich. 135, 137, 49 N. W. 479, 480.

Tenement.

"Unoccupied," as used in a fire policy on a tenement building, which policy provided that the same should be void if the building should become unoccupied, meant not occupied by any one; and hence the fact that all of the apartments were vacant, save two, did not avoid the policy. Harrington v. Fitchburg Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 124 Mass. 126, 129.

Where an insurance policy covered 8 double tenement houses, separated from each other, and each of the 16 tenements was valued separately, and the policy provided that if the premises became unoccupied, and remained so for 20 days, without the company's consent, the policy should be void, the vacancy provided against applied to each of the tenements separately; and hence the fact that several of them were vacant without the permission of the company, in violation of the condition, did not work a forfeiture of the entire policy, so as to preclude a recovery for the destruction of such of the tenements as had not been unoccupied within the terms of the provision. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. v. Tilley, 14 S. E. 851, 852, 88 Va. 1024, 29 Am. St. Rep. 770.

The term "vacant or unoccupied," as used in a fire policy conditioned that it shall be void if the premises become vacant or unoccupied, has no definite signification, applicable to all circumstances. Under certain circumstances premises may be vacant or unoccupied, when, under other circumstances, premises in like situations may not be so. Thus, if one insures his dwelling house, described in the policy as occupied as his residence, and he moves out of it, leaving no person in the occupation thereof, it thereby becomes vacant or unoccupied. But if he insured it as a tenement house, or as occupied by a tenant, it may be fairly presumed that the parties to the contract of insurance contemplated that the tenant was liable to leave the premises, and that more or less time might elapse before the owner could procure another tenant to occupy them, and hence that the parties did not understand that the house should be considered vacant immediately on tenants leaving it. Hotchkiss v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 44 N. W. 1106, 1107, 76 Wis. 269, 20 Am. St. Rep. 69 (citing Lockwood v. Assurance Co., 47 Conn. 553, 561; Whitney v. Black River Ins. Co. [N. Y.] 9 Hun, 37, 39, 1 Wood, Ins. § 91, pp. 208, 210).

A policy provided that it should not cover unoccupied buildings, and, if the premises shall be vacated without the consent of the company indorsed thereon, the policy should cease. In an action to recover a loss under the policy, one of the defenses was that the policy was not in force at the time of the fire, by reason of the fact that the building was vacant and unoccupied. The trial court instructed that the word "unoccupied," as used in the policy, should be construed in its ordinary and popular sense, and, as applied to a saloon building, meant such want of occupancy as usually or ordinarily attends or is exercised over a saloon building while being operated as a saloon, and that if the jury believed that the saloon had been vacated late in the evening of the day preceding the fire, and that the plaintiff was then in the city, and so far away from the building that the time intervening between the hour of vacation and hour of the fire was not reasonably sufficient to permit the plaintiff to reoccupy it after the vacation and before the fire, then the saloon could not be considered to be vacated, within the terms of the policy. On appeal the court held that the words "vacant and unoccupied," in accordance with the instruction, should be construed in view of the uses and purposes for which the building is adapted; also, whether the parties contemplated that the premises were to be occupied by the assured or by a tenant, that the words, when used in a policy on a dwelling, were not to be construed the same as when used in a contract of insurance on a store, livery stable, or schoolhouse, since it could not be contended that a policy on a school building was not in force during the summer vacation, though there was no person in the building during the period, and therefore that the mere leaving of the building unoccupied during the night did not render it vacant and unoccupied, within the meaning of the policy. German Ins. Co. v. Davis, 59 N. W. 698, 700, 701, 40 Neb. 700.

Where the tenants of a store building abandon it a short time before the lease expires, but retain the key, by permission of the owner, and leave a few empty barrels and some old boxes and papers in the building, it was unoccupied, within the meaning of an insurance policy. Home Ins. Co. of New York v. Scales, 15 South. 134, 71 Miss. 975, 42 Am. St. Rep. 512.

Where a tenant has removed all his property from a store building, except a very small quantity, which he has permitted a third person to store there, it is vacant and unoccupied, within the provisions of a fire insurance policy making it void in case the property is vacant and unoccupied for a period of 10 days. Limburg v. German Fire Ins. Co., 57 N. W. 626, 627, 90 Iowa, 709, 23 L. R. A. 99, 48 Am. St. Rep. 468.

A building containing furniture and fixtures, and in which a person slept part of the time, and containing stove, chairs, and other furniture suitable for a saloon, and also a small stock of liquors in kegs and bottles, is not "vacant, unoccupied, or not in use," within a policy of insurance against fire, exempting the insurer from liability if the building should be vacant, etc., at the time of the fire. Stensgaard v. National Fire Ins. Co., 30 N. W. 468, 36 Minn. 181.

UNOFFICIAL TITLE.

Under the occupying claimant's act (Gen. St. 1878, c. 75, § 15), providing for two classes of occupants, to wit, first, those who, "under color of title and in good faith, have peacefully taken possession," etc., the first class may be defined as those who go into possession of land under color of what may be termed private or unofficial title. Pfefferle v. Wieland, 56 N. W. 824, 825, 55 Minn. 202, 209.

UNOPENED.

A statute providing that roads which had remained unopened for 10 years should be vacated, and the authority for opening it repealed, would not apply to a road which was located and established, and in which there was nothing to prevent the public from traveling over it; not being inclosed or shut up or obstructed. City of Topeka v. Russam, 2 Pac. 669, 676, 30 Kan. 550.

Rev. St. § 4668, providing that any county road that shall remain unopened for seven years after the order is made for opening it shall be declared vacated, should not be construed to apply to roads located substantially upon then existing traveled ways, since a way that was a traveled way at the time did not require a formal opening under the order of the commissioners. Heddleston v. Hendricks, 40 N. E. 408, 409, 52 Ohio St. 460.

"Unopened road," as used in Laws 1879, c. 150, § 1, providing that any county road, or part thereof, which has been authorized, which shall remain unopened for public use for the space of seven years at any one time, after the order made or the authority granted for opening the same, shall be vacated, cannot be construed to include a road which is in fact used as a public highway by the public. Wilson v. Janes, 29 Kan. 233, 248.

UNORGANIZED COUNTY.

By the term "unorganized county," in the act of February 24, 1879, authorizing the judge of the district court to designate the county where the indictment may be found, etc., is meant simply a county which has not become organized for local government under a statute providing how that may be done. The act contemplates no such thing as a county organized for judicial purposes, for, when a county becomes organized under a law, it is so for all known purposes of civil administration—judicial as well as others. Olive v. State, 7 N. W. 444, 447, 11 Neb. 1.

UNPAID.

See "Remaining Unpaid."
All unpaid taxes, see "All."

To say that a note is unpaid is equivalent to saying that it has not been paid, as the prefix "un" placed before the past participle indicates the absence of the condition or state expressed by the participle; hence an allegation that a note is still wholly owing and unpaid is equivalent to an allegation that the note is still wholly due, and has not been paid. Tomlinson v. Ayres, 49 Pac. 717, 718, 117 Cal. 568.

A bond conditioned for the payment of a sum of money in five equal annual installments provided that interest should be payable annually from date on the whole amount unpaid, at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum. Held, that the word "unpaid" imported that any amounts not paid when due according to the condition of the bond should continue to bear interest at the rate of 10 per cent., payable annually, until the bond was paid. Miller v. Hall, 18 S. O. 141, 146.

As owing.

"Unpaid," as used in an affidavit that an account filed as a set-off was "just, due, and unpaid," is equivalent to "justly due and owing," as used in How. St. § 7525, requiring the affidavit to set out that the account is "justly owing and due," for, if it is just, due, and unpaid, it must necessarily be justly owing and due. McGowan v. Lamb, 33 N. W. 881, 882, 66 Mich. 615.

As unaccrued.

"Unpaid," as used in a will giving the testator's wife the income of certain land during her life, or the interest on the proceeds in case she sold it after his death, and providing that at her death the principal and unpaid interest of the whole amount given her should vest in his children and their children, etc., will not be construed to mean unaccrued, but to have been used in its literal sense, so that the interest earned by the widow's fund, but not collected by the trustee or paid to her at the time of her death, vested in the testator's children. Nading v. Elliott, 36 N. E. 695, 700, 137 Ind. 261.

As undue.

The word "unpaid" is more commonly and properly applied to a debt due than to a debt undue, and may at least as well mean a debt due as undue. Therefore no power to confess a judgment for a debt undue is even implied by a power of attorney to confess judgment on a note for such amount as may appear to be unpaid thereon. Sloane v. Anderson, 15 N. W. 21, 22, 57 Wis. 123; Reid v. Southworth, 36 N. W. 866, 867, 71 Wis. 288.

UNPAID ASSESSMENTS.

"Unpaid assessments," as used in Act March 26, 1873, requiring the judges of the Supreme Court to appoint three commissioners to revise, alter, and adjust all unpaid assessments, is to be construed in its ordinary signification of unpaid individual assessments. Edwards v. Jersey City, 40 N. J. Law (11 Vroom) 176, 179.

UNPAID RENT.

"Unpaid rent," as used in laws giving a right of distress to any landlord if the tenant shall convey away, etc., leaving the rent, or any part thereof, unpaid, means the arrears of rent; that is, rent behind in payment, although due. Weiss v. Jahn, 37 N. J. Law (8 Vroom) 93, 96.

UNPAVED.

A municipal charter authorizing the lease of portions of the "unpaved" wharf applies to any portion not paved in a manner suitable for receiving and discharging passengers and freight, and includes a portion unused for that purpose, from which most of the macadam has been washed away. Belcher Sugar Refining Co. v. St. Louis Grain Elevator Co., 13 S. W. 822, 826, 101 Mo. 192, 8 L. R. A. 801.

UNPROFESSIONAL

"Unprofessional" is used in Laws 1883, c. 125, § 9, authorizing the state medical examining board to refuse certificates of practice to those guilty of unprofessional or dishonorable conduct, convertibly with dishonorable, since it might be deemed unprofessional for the members of one school of medical practice to consult professionally with a member of a different school; but such matters are not within the plain purpose of the act, which was the affording of protection to the people against ignorant, unqualified, and unworthy practitioners of this profession. State v. State Medical Examining Board, 20 N. W. 238, 241, 32 Minn. 324, 50 Am. Rep. 575.

"Unprofessional or dishonorable conduct," as ground for refusing a certificate to practice medicine, is: (1) The procuring, or aiding or abetting in procuring, a criminal abortion; (2) the obtaining of a fee on the assurance that a manifestly incurable disease can be permanently cured; (3) betrayal of a professional secret to the detriment of a patient; (4) causing the publication and circulation of advertisements of any medicine or means whereby the monthly periods of women can be regulated, or the menses can be established, if suppressed; (5) causing the publication and circulation of advertisements of any kind relative to diseases of the sexual organs, tending to injure the morals of the public. Cobbey's Ann. St. Neb. 1903, § 9428.

UNQUALIFIED.

Opinion or belief.

"Unqualified opinion," as used in Wood's Dig. 296, § 347, excluding a juror in a criminal case who has formed or expressed an unqualified opinion as to the prisoner's guilt, involves a belief in the facts as well as a conclusion from them. If a juror had read or heard a statement of the facts of a case this does not of itself disqualify him, for it does not follow that he has either formed or expressed an unqualified opinion. He may not have formed any opinion at all, certainly not an unqualified one. He may have received an impression, but this impression is not enough to disqualify him. A mere suspicion or inclination of the mind towards a conclusion is not enough. The state of mind must be more decided. He must have reached a conclusion like that upon which he would be willing to act in ordinary matters. People v. Reynolds, 16 Cal. 128, 133.

What constitutes "unqualified opinion or belief" sufficient to disqualify a juror is sometimes very difficult to determine. Perhaps as good an exposition of the technical meaning of this phrase is to be found in the opinion of Mr. Justice Baldwin in the case of the People v. Reynolds, 16 Cal. 128, 132, as could well be given. Among the causes of implied bias is the having formed or expressed an unqualified opinion or belief that the prisoner is guilty or is not guilty of the offense charged. Upon no one question of civil or criminal practice have the decisions of courts been more inharmonious than upon this question of qualification or disqualification of jurors arising from the formation or expression of opinion of the guilt or innocence of the accused. These terms were used to define the nature of the opinion or belief formed or expressed—to distinguish between a mere hypothetical opinion or a mere casual impression and a decided or fixed opinion. The language implies that, to exclude the juror, he must have a settled conviction of the guilt or innocence of the party, or has expressed such a conviction. It does not seem to be indispensable, under this section, that the juror has had the usual or any means or opportunities of arriving at a correct or intelligent opinion upon the subject if he has formed it or if he has expressed it. Minds are so differently constituted that some men form opinions and very obstinately adhere to them upon slender and insufficient grounds, while others are undecided when sufficient reason exists for forming them. If the juror has read or heard a statement of the facts of the case, this does not, of itself, disqualify him, for it does not follow that he has either formed or expressed an unqualified opinion. He may have received an impression, but this impression is not enough to disqualify him. A mere suspicion or inclination of the mind toward a conclusion is not enough; the state of the mind must be more decided. He must have reached a conclusion like that upon which he would be willing to act in ordinary matters. State v. Millain, 3 Nev. 409, 429.

"Unqualified opinion or belief," as used in a statute providing that any juror shall be disqualified who has formed or expressed an "unqualified opinion or belief that the defendant is guilty," means a fixed and certain belief, and is incompatible with reasonable doubt and uncertainty, and is not dependent on the existence or nonexistence of any extrinsic facts. It is a condition of the mind or a fixed conclusion which closes the mind against any testimony which may be presented in opposition to it, and resists the force of such testimony and perverts the judgment. The opinion or judgment must be something more than a vague impression formed from casual conversation with others or from reading abbreviated newspaper reports. It must be such an opinion on the merits as will be likely to bias or prevent a candid judgment from a full hearing of the evidence. People v. O'Loughlin, 1 Pac. 653, 654, 3 Utah, 133.

A juror, having formed and expressed an opinion as to defendant's guilt, is not subject to challenge as having formed an "unqualified opinion," if his information is derived from barroom talks, and he does not know the persons with whom he conversed, is not acquainted with the defendant, and does not entertain any deliberate or fixed opinion or belief as to his guilt or innocence. State v. Raymond, 11 Nev. 98, 107.

An "unqualified opinion," within the meaning of the statute making an unqualified opinion or belief a ground for challenge, is such a settled conviction in the mind of the juror, founded upon the knowledge of the facts of the case, as would raise a strong presumption of partiality; but a hypothetical opinion, founded on hearsay or information, and unaccompanied with malice or ill will, will not support a challenge for implied bias. There is a wide distinction between a fixed opinion formed after hearing what purports to be the facts and a mere impression formed upon rumor or hearsay evidence. Haugen v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 53 N. W. 769, 771, 3 S. D. 394.

The term "unqualified opinion," within the rule that a juror who has formed an unqualified opinion is subject to challenge, does not characterize an opinion of a juror based upon hearsay, and not upon statements made by any one claiming to have personal knowledge, if the juror still thinks he can render a true verdict. State v. Ormiston, 23 N. W. 370, 376, 66 Iowa, 143.

The forming and expressing of an unqualified opinion sufficient as a ground of challenge for cause to a juror is not shown by the mere fact that the juror heard some of the facts and formed a slight opinion, if he has forgotten the facts, and states that he thinks he can try the case fairly and without regard to his previous opinion. Collins v. Burns, 28 Pac. 145, 146, 16 Colo. 7.

An unqualified opinion, within the meaning of a statute providing that an unqualified opinion as to the defendant's guilt shall render a juror subject to challenge, means a fixed and settled conviction of the guilt or innocence of the defendant. People v. King, 27 Cal. 507, 512, 87 Am. Dec. 95.

In construing the statute providing that an unqualified opinion or belief in the prisoner's guilt shall render a juror subject to challenge, the court say the difference between an opinion and an unqualified opinion or belief is not very broad, and sometimes not recognized by a juror. It is very proper by other questions to ascertain whether in fact the opinion is an unqualified one or is dependent upon the truth of facts or rumors which the juror may have heard and whether it is merely an impression. In the case of People v. Reynolds, 16 Cal. 128, the court say the effect upon his mind must be more than an impression—it must amount to a conviction. People v. Symonds, 22 Cal. 848, 851.

The term "unqualified opinion" in the rule that a juror who has formed and expressed an unqualified opinion is subject to challenge does not include an opinion which the juror has formed and expressed, but is conditioned on the truth of reports which he has heard. State v. Ostrander, 18 Iowa, 435, 451.

The term "unqualified opinion," within the rule that a juror who has formed or expressed an unqualified opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant is subject to challenge, does not apply to a juror who states that he has not formed an unqualified opinion, but if what he has heard is proved at the trial he has an opinion, but that he has no prejudice or bias to prevent him from hearing the evidence and giving a verdict in accordance with the law and testimony. State v. Sater, 8 Iowa, 420, 424.

Where a juror testifies that he has a fixed opinion, which it would require evidence to remove, he has an "unqualified opinion," so as to be incompetent as a juror. People v. Johnston, 46 Cal. 78, 79.

A juror who, in answer to a question, said he had formed some opinion from what he had heard, but never expressed any, that he did not place explicit belief in what he had heard, and that his opinion was a conditional one, had not an "unqualified opinion," so as to render him incompetent as a juror. People v. Murphy, 45 Cal. 137, 142.

The term "unqualified opinion," within the rule that a person having formed or expressed an unqualified opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant is subject to challenge, applies to an opinion where it is unconditional that defendant is guilty or innocent; but if the opinion is with the condition that if what the juror has heard about the case is true, then the defendant is guilty or not guilty, the opinion is qualified. State v. George, 18 N. W. 298, 62 Iowa, 682.

In construing the requirement that the forming or expressing of an "unqualified opinion" subjects a juror to challenge for cause, the court say that it is argued by the Attorney General that there is a difference between expressing an unqualified opinion and the unqualified expression of an opinion; and so there is, if we resort to a verbal criticism or mere metaphysical disquisition. It was not the intention of the Legislature to leave the right of parties to rest upon so narrow and dangerous a foundation. Their obvious intention was to exclude from the jury box every one who had either formed an unqualified opinion, or, having formed an opinion, had expressed it without qualification. People v. Cottle, 6 Cal. 227, 228; People v. Edwards, 41 Cal. 640, 643; People v. Brotherton, 43 Cal. 530, 532.

Ownership.

The New York statutes used the term "power of alienation" in reference to the real estate, and "unqualified ownership" in reference to personal property, in prohibiting perpetuity, but the meaning of the terms is synonymous. Ladd v. Mills (U. S.) 20 Fed. 792, 793.

UNQUESTIONABLE.

"Unquestionable," as used in insurance policies providing that the insurance shall be unquestionable, meant indisputable, and amounts to an absolute guaranty that no objection shall be taken to defeat the policy on the death of the person whose life is insured. Simpson v. Life Ins. Co. of Virginia, 20 S. E. 517, 115 N. C. 393.

UNREASONABLE DELAY.

In determining what will constitute an "unreasonable delay" in applying for a mandamus regard should be had to circumstances which justify the delay, to the nature of the case, and the relief demanded, and to the question whether the rights of the defendant or of other persons have been prejudiced by such delay. Where a person was dismissed from the police force of a city without legal trial, a delay of over two years in applying for a mandamus to compel the board of councilmen to try him was unreasonable, there being no special circumstance to excuse or justify such delay. Taylor v. City of Bayonne, 30 Atl. 431, 57 N. J. Law, 376.

"Unreasonable delay," as offering proof of acceptance of a delivery of goods, and refusal to accept within a reasonable time, are substantially alike. Beyond a reasonable time is unreasonable delay. If the delay is not reasonable, it is unreasonable. Pratt v. Peck, 36 N. W. 410, 412, 70 Wis. 620.

Under Rev. St. U. S. § 4922 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 8396], providing that a patentee who has inadvertently claimed more than he is entitled to may maintain a suit for any distinguishable part of the patented invention which was bona fide his own, provided that no patentee shall be entitled to the benefit of this section, if he has unreasonably neglected or delayed to enter a disclaimer, a delay of over four years in filing a disclaimer of a claim which has been adjudged invalid by a judgment from which no appeal was taken is an unreasonable delay, and operates to invalidate the whole patent. Office Specialty Mfg. Co. v. Globe Co. (U. S.) 65 Fed. 599, 605 (citing Singer v. Walmsley [U. S.] 22 Fed. Cas. 207).

A common carrier must deliver goods without unreasonable delay, and if damages be sustained by reason of neglect to transport goods thus received in the ordinary time, unless excused by uncontrollable circumstances, the carrier must respond in damages. Having possessed himself of the goods to be transported, he must perform the duty within a reasonable time or be held liable for the loss which ensues. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McClellan, 54 Ill. 58, 70, 5 Am. Rep. 83.

As used in Gen. St. § 1707, providing that interest may be recovered on money withheld by an "unreasonable and vexatious delay," should be construed as meaning something more than delay in the payment of a sum due. Corson v. Neatheny, 11 Pac. 82, 84, 9 Colo. 212.

UNREASONABLE DISTRESS.

The phrase "unreasonable distress," as used in Rev. Code, p. 869, § 24, providing that any person taking an unreasonable distress shall answer in damages to the party injured, means such a distress as a reasonable and fairly intelligent man taking into consideration the mode of sale, if the goods should come to sale, would know to be materially more than enough to satisfy the rent and expenses, and such excess should be a substantial and not of a trifling character. If the distress is unreasonable in amount, and made without malice on the part of the defendant, plaintiff is entitled to recover such damages as he has sustained by reason of the taking of such unreasonable distress. Weber v. Vernon (Del.) 45 Atl. 537, 538, 2 Pennewill, 359.

UNREASONABLE RATE.

In Rev. St. 1895, arts. 4565, 4566, authorizing action against the railroad commission by a party dissatisfied with a rate made by it, in which such party must show that the rate is unreasonable and unjust to him, the same construction should be given to the phrase "unreasonable and unjust" that would have obtained in a suit to recover from the carrier excess of charges paid. At common law, in a proceeding of this kind, the term meant that the rate charged was more than a fair compensation for the services rendered, or that the difference in rates constituted an unjust discrimination against the complainant. Garton v. Bristol & E. Ry. Co., 101 E. C. L. 112, 153, sustains the position that the carrier had the right to discriminate between shippers as to the amount of charges, provided it did not amount to an unjust discrimination; and in Cowden v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co., 94 Cal. 470, 29 Pac. 873, 18 L. R. A. 221, 28 Am. St. Rep. 142, the court says that the obligation which the common law imposed on the carrier was to accept and carry all goods delivered on being paid a reasonable compensation for so doing, and, if the carrier refused to accept such goods, an action lay against him, and, if the customer paid on a protest a larger sum than was reasonable, he could recover back the surplus beyond what the carrier was entitled to receive. But the fact that the carrier charged others less, though it was evidence that the charge was unreasonable, was no more than evidence tending that way. There was nothing at common law to hinder a carrier from carrying for favored individuals at an unreasonably low rate, or even gratis. All that the law required was that he should not charge any more than was reasonable. Discrimination in rates is often necessary to uphold justice and promote the public good, and such discrimination is not unreasonable or unjust as to him who gets in service the equivalent of what he pays. Railroad Commission of Texas v. Weld & Neville, 73 S. W. 529, 531, 96 Tex. 394.

UNREASONABLE TIME.

In determining what is an unreasonable time, regard is to be had to the nature of the instrument, the usage of trade or business, if any, with respect to such instruments, and the facts of the particular case. Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, § 3178b; Ann. Codes & Sts. Or. 1901, § 4592; Code Supp. Va. 1898, § 2841a.

"Unreasonable lapse of time," as used in the chapter relating to the dissolution of marriage, and providing for the denial of the divorce where there is an unreasonable lapse of time before the commencement of the action, means such a delay in commencing the action as establishes the presumption that there has been connivance, collusion, or condonation of the offense, or full acquiescence in the same with intent to continue the marriage relation, notwithstanding the commission of the offense set up as a ground of divorce. Rev. Codes 1899, N. D. § 2753.

UNSAFE.

Feel unsafe and insecure, see "Feel—Felt."

Where, in an action for death caused by the condition of a road, there was a submission to the jury as to whether the highway was "defective and unsafe," the court said such expression is substantially equivalent to the expression "insufficiency or want of repair," as used in the statute authorizing a recovery for damages caused by the insufficiency or want of repair of any bridge or road. Carpenter v. Town of Rolling, 83 N. W. 953, 956, 107 Wis. 559.

An unsafe condition of a building which has been partially destroyed by fire, which will render the owner liable for damages caused by the falling of the building after a reasonable time is allowed him to repair, is such a condition that it would not be able to resist the elements under ordinary circumstances which might exist in that locality, or under such extraordinary circumstances as might happen in that locality, judging from past experience. Lauer v. Palms (Mich.) 89 N. W. 694, 695, 58 L. R. A. 67.

In Rev. St. 1878, § 4551, relating to receiving deposits by banks in insolvent condition, provides that when any officer knows, or has good reason to know, that such bank is unsafe or insolvent, and receives any deposit, he shall be punished, etc., the word "unsafe" is used interchangeably with "insolvent," and does not vary the meaning of the statute. In re Koetting, 62 N. W. 622, 623, 90 Wis. 166.

UNSAFE AND INSECURE.

"Unsafe and insecure" in a chattel mortgage providing that, if the mortgagee at any time feel unsafe or insecure, he may seize and sell the property, etc., does not mean an arbitrary discretion, but there must be a sense of insecurity or want of safety occasioned by some present or contemplated act, which tends to impair the security of the mortgage. Lichtenberger v. Johnson, 49 N. W. 336, 32 Neb. 185.

UNSATISFIED.

"Unsatisfied," as used in the return of an execution as being unsatisfied, is not equivalent to a return of "No property found," and hence such return is not sufficient to continue the judgment lien under

Comp. St. 1858, p. 567, authorizing a judgment creditor to enforce the same at any time within five years after the entry thereof, but providing that when no execution shall have been issued or levied, or returned "No property found," within five years from the time of the entry of the judgment, the lien thereof shall be determined, and the property of the judgment debtor discharged therefrom. Sherburne v. Rippe, 29 N. W. 322, 323, 35 Minn. 540.

In proceeding to authorize the grant of an order of examination after execution, the sheriff's return of "Unsatisfied" on the execution is proof that there is no known property liable to execution. Hinsdale v. Sinclair, 83 N. C. 338, 343.

UNSATISFIED ACCOUNTS.

"Unsatisfied accounts," within the meaning of a charge that another has stolen a file of unsatisfied accounts, cannot be construed to mean any writing which is made by the statute the subject of larceny. Blanchard v. Fisk, 2 N. H. 398, 400.

UNSEATED LANDS.

In reference to assessing realty, "unseated lands" are those on which there are no such improvements as indicate a personal responsibility for its taxes. Stoetzel v. Jackson, 105 Pa. 562, 567.

The term "unseated," when used to denote a condition of real property, would seem to mean that class of lands which are neither in the possession of, nor cultivated by, any person. In Kennedy v. Daily (Pa.) 6 Watts, 269, it was held that residence without cultivation, or cultivation without residence, or both, constitutes seated lands. McLeod v. Lloyd, 71 Pac. 795, 799, 43 Or. 260.

UNSEAWORTHY.

Where a plea in an action on a policy insuring a ship alleged that the ship became unseaworthy before the loss, further allegations that she was "greatly broken, damaged, and shattered and loosened" did not add to the allegation of unseaworthiness, the last words being applicable to any damage, however slight. Hollingworth v. Brodrick, 7 Adol. & E. 28, 31.

UNSETTLED.

Any unsettled person, see "Any."

Unsettled item.

, An item in an account annexed, which has been paid and a receipt given and accepted therefor, cannot be considered an

"unsettled item," within Rev. St. c. 81, § 87, relating to mutual accounts. Perry v. Chesley, 77 Me. 393, 395.

UNSETTLED MERCHANT.

An itinerant or unsettled merchant or trader, within the meaning of the act relating thereto, shall include every person, firm, or corporation who, either in person or by agent, sells, or offers to sell, any goods, wares, or merchandise then in the state without any manifest intention of permanently settling, locating, or residing at some one place in the state, and who is not permanently located and regularly taxed therein. Comp. Laws Nev. 1900, § 1243.

UNSETTLED WOMAN.

"Unsettled woman," as used in St. 1879, relating to the acquiring of a settlement by a married woman, and providing that a settlement thereunder shall be deemed to have been gained by any unsettled woman upon the completion of the term of residence therein mentioned, etc., means a woman who was unsettled at the time the statute went into effect. Worcester v. Great Barrington, 5 N. E. 491, 492, 140 Mass. 243.

Where an unmarried woman had derived a settlement through her father at the time of the passage of the act of 1879, she was not an "unsettled woman," within the retroactive provision of such act, which provides that "a settlement by five years' residence should be deemed to have been gained by any unsettled woman, although the whole or a part thereof accrues before the passage of this act." Middleborough v. Plympton, 4 N. E. 568, 569, 140 Mass. 825.

UNSKILLFULNESS.

As used in the proposition whether a loss by fire, remotely caused by the negligence, carelessness, or unskillfulness of the master and crew of a vessel, is a loss within the policy of insurance on the vessel, "unskillfulness" does not mean a general unskillfulness, such as would be a breach of the implied warranty of competent skill to navigate and conduct the vessel, but only unskillfulness in the particular circumstances remotely connected with the loss, in which sense it is equivalent to negligence or carelessness in the execution of duty, and not to incapacity. Waters v. Merchants' Louisville Ins. Co., 36 U. S. (11 Pet.) 213, 219, 9 L. Ed. 69.

In usual parlance, "misconduct means a transgression of some established and definite rule of action, where no discretion is left except what necessity may demand, and carelessness, negligence, and unskillfulness are transgressions of some established but indefinite rule of action, where some discretion is necessarily left to the actor. Misconduct is a violation of definite law; carelessness, an abuse of discretion under an indefinite law. Misconduct is a forbidden act; carelessness, a forbidden quality of an act, and is necessarily indefinite." Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Marsh, 41 Pa. (5 Wright) 386, 394.

UNSOLD.

The word "unsold," as used in a statute providing that all pieces or parts of land remaining unsold at a tax sale shall be stricken from the tax list, means "not sold to an actual purchaser," and no inference can be drawn from it that it was not intended that tracts not thus sold should be "bid in for the state," which is never referred to in any of the tax laws as a sale, nor the state called a "purchaser." Mulvey v. Tozer, 42 N. W. 387, 388, 40 Minn. 384.

In construing Act Cong. Sept. 28, 1850 (9 Stat. 519), granting to Illinois and other states all unsold swamp and overflowed lands belonging to the United States, the court holds that the term "unsold" in that act is not restricted in its application to land which had been transferred for a money consideration, but that land which had been properly located under a military land warrant was sold, within the meaning of the act. Culver v. Uthe, 10 Sup. Ct. 415, 416, 133 U. S. 655, 33 L. Ed. 776.

UNSOUND.

A disease of any sort, if easily removed, but which by neglect or maltreatment proves fatal, is not "unsoundness," within the meaning of the warranty of a negro. Gadsden v. Raysor (S. C.) 9 Rich. Law, 276, 281.

Horse or mule.

If a horse is purchased to be used in a given way, the word "sound" means that he is useful for that purpose, and "unsound" means that at the time he is affected with something which will have the effect of impeding that use. It is right to add to the definition of unsoundness that the disqualification for work may arise either from disease or accident. Kiddell v. Burnard, 9 Mees. & W. 668, 671.

What constitutes unsoundness in a horse is a question for the jury; and whether glanders is an aggravated form of distemper or a distinct disease, or whether distemper as well as glanders is an unsoundness, is a question of fact with which a court has nothing to do. Lindsay v. Davis, 30 Mo. 406, 412.

"Unsoundness," within the meaning of a warranty that a horse is sound, includes any disease, infirmity, or defect which renders the horse less fit for present use or convenience, and not openly and palpably visible, and which is discoverable only by persons of skill and judgment with regard to the qualities of horses. Therefore, if a horse is deprived of sight in one eye, or the eye is defective, and this is only discoverable by persons skilled in horses, it constitutes unsoundness, and is a breach of the warranty. Burton v. Young (Del.) 5 Har. 233.

"The meaning of the word 'unsoundness,' as applied to a horse, is any disease which either actually does diminish the actual use of the animal, so as to make him less capable of work of any description, or which in its ordinary progress will diminish the natural usefulness of the animal, or if the horse has, either through disease or accident, undergone any alteration of structure that either actually does at the time, or in its ordinary effect will, diminish the actual usefulness of the horse, it is unsound. Coates v. Stephens, 2 Moody & R. 157. And hence, where a mule's hind pasterns were so crooked over that it was lame and less capable of work of every description than it would have been had the joints been in their natural state, the mule was unsound." Kenner v. Harding, 85 Ill. 264, 265, 269, 28 Am. Rep. 615.

"Unsoundness," as applied to a horse, includes a horse which is a "cribber," inasmuch as a cribber will not retain his condition or be fit for constant work. Washburn v. Cuddihy, 74 Mass. (8 Gray) 430, 432 (citing Stephen's Adventures of a Gentleman in Search of a Horse [Am. Ed.] 243; Oliphant on Horses, 38, 39).

It is held that the fact that a mule is pretty far gone with the glanders is a breach of a warranty of soundness. Horton v. Green, 66 N. C. 596, 599.

The court cannot take judicial notice of the fact—if it be a fact—that corns are never so serious as to amount to unsoundness. The law gives a general definition of unsoundness, and leaves it to the trier of the facts to find whether the infirmity of corns in a particular case is within the legal definition of unsoundness. Whenever that defect materially diminishes the value of the horse and his ability to perform service, such a diminution of value and ability is an unsoundness, although it be temporary and curable. Alexander v. Dutton, 58 N. H. 282, 283.

Sidewalk.

The term "unsound," as applied to a wooden sidewalk in a city, means insufficiency and want of repair. The word sufficiently describes a condition proved, showing that both the stringers and the plank were rotten; and a notice that the walk was unsound sufficiently notified the city that the walk was defective. Van Frachen v. City of Ft. Howard, 60 N. W. 1062, 1063, 88 Wis. 570.

Vessel.

A marine policy provided that if, after a regular survey, the vessel should be condemned as being unsound, the underwriters should not be bound to pay their subscriptions. Held, that by the word "unsound," as there used, was meant unsoundness through decay, and not from accident, and therefore such clause was not a bar to a recovery if the survey showed unsoundness proceeding from the gnawing of rats. Garrigues v. Cox (Pa.) 1 Bin. 592, 595, 2 Am. Dec. 493.

UNSOUND MIND.

See "Mentally Unsound."

The words "unsound mind" are legal, and not medical, words. The origin of the term is credited to Lord Eldon. Francke v. His Wife, 29 La. Ann. 302, 303.

"Unsoundness of mind is the opposite of soundness. Lord Coke classifies persons of 'unsound mind' thus: (1) An idiot or fool natural; (2) he who was of good and perfect memory, but by the visitation of God has lost the same; (3) those who are sometimes of good and perfect memory, and sometimes non compotes mentis; and (4) he who is unsound by his own act, as a drunkard." In re Black's Estate (Cal.) 1 Myr. Prob. 24, 27.

Within the meaning of the term "unsoundness," the various phases of mental condition, as defined by the terms "insanity," "mental derangement," "unsoundness," and "monomania" are held to be within the range of inquiry in determining whether or not a person at the time of executing an alleged will was a person of unsound mind. These terms are of such variable significance that their value in any given case will depend entirely upon the relation that they bear to the particular person in connection with a particular act under inquiry. A testator who has sufficient mental power to collect in his mind, without prompting, the particulars or elements of the business to be transacted, and to hold them in his mind a sufficient length of time to perceive their obvious relations to each other and be able to form some rational judgment in relation to them, has sufficient mental power to make a will. Cheney v. Price, 37 N. Y. Supp. 117, 118, 90 Hun, 238.

An "unsound mind" sufficient to prevent the person possessing such mind from making a valid contract was said in some of the earlier cases, and a few of the comparatively recent ones, to mean a total deprivation of reason. Ex parte Barnsley, 3 Atk. 168; Stewart's Ex'r v. Lisenard (N. Y.) 26 Wend. 255. The more modern rule is that it is only necessary to show that the party executing the contract was of such a weak and feeble mind as to be incapable of comprehending its nature. The rule is sometimes stated in another form. To constitute such unsoundness of mind as to avoid a deed at law, the person executing such deed must be incapable of understanding and acting in the ordinary affairs of life. This statement of the rule is given in the opinion in the House of Lords in Bail v. Mannin, 1 Dow. & C. 380, and is quoted with apparent approval by the Supreme Court of the United States in Dexter v. Hall, 82 U. S. (15 Wall.) 9, 21 L. Ed. 73.

The rule is thus stated in Dennett v. Dennett, 44 N. H. 531, 84 Am. Dec. 97: "The question, then, in all cases where incapacity to contract from defect of mind is alleged, is not whether the person's mind is impaired, nor if he is affected by any form of insanity, but whether his powers of mind have been so far affected by his disease as to render him incapable of transacting business like that in question." In Converse's Ex'r v. Converse, 21 Vt. 168, 52 Am. Dec. 58, it is said that a person is of unsound mind if the mind is inert, the memory unable to recall, and the mind to retain in one view, all the facts on which the judgment is to be formed, for so long a time as may be required for their due consideration. In Re Barker, 2 Johns. Ch. 232, 233, it is said: "Every person is to be deemed of unsound mind who has lost his memory and understanding by old age, sickness, or other accident, so as to render him incapable of transacting his business and of managing his property. When it appears that a grantor has not strength of mind and reason to understand the nature and consequences of his act in making a deed, it may be avoided on the ground of insanity." Edwards v. Davenport (U. S.) 20 Fed. 756, 758.

Under 2 Rev. St. p. 52, § 1, providing that "the chancellor shall have the care and custody of all idiots, lunatics, persons of unsound mind, and persons who shall be incapable of conducting their own affairs in consequence of habitual drunkenness," persons of unsound mind are such as may not fall within the designation of idiots or lunatics, and the phrase "incapable of conducting their own affairs" applies to habitual drunkards only; hence a finding, in a proceeding de lunatico inquirendo, that the party was "so far weakened and impaired in the faculties of his mind as to be mentally incapable," etc., is insufficient. In re Mason (N. Y.) 3 Edw. Ch. 380, 381.

"Unsound mind," as used in a statute providing that persons of unsound mind shall be incompetent to testify, means persons whose minds are so defective that they cannot correctly relate facts, and do not understand or fully realize what they are saying or doing. If one has sufficient intelligence to understand the nature of an oath, and can correctly relate facts and circumstances, he should be permitted to testify. City of Guthrie v. Shaffer, 54 Pac. 698, 701, 7 Okl. 459.

A person may be of weak mind, and by reason thereof easily influenced or dominated by others, so that in the judgment of men he ought not to be allowed to manage his affairs, but he would not necessarily be of unsound mind. In re Clark, 67 N. E. 212, 213, 175 N. Y. 139.

The phrase "unsound mind," as used in the civil procedure act, includes idiots, non compos, lunatics, and distracted persons. Horner's Rev. St. Ind. 1901, § 1285.

In the construction of statutes, the words "unsound mind" shall be construed to include every one who is a lunatic, idiot, non compos, or deranged. Ky. St. 1903, § 450.

The term "unsound mind," when used in any statute in reference to persons, shall include idiots, lunatics, and persons non compos mentis. Code Miss. 1892, § 1518.

"Persons of unsound mind," within the meaning of the Civil Code, are idiots, lunatics, imbeciles, and habitual drunkards. Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 14.

The term "person of unsound mind," as employed in the chapter of the Code relating to guardians and wards, includes idiots, lunatics, or the insane. Civ. Code Ala. 1896, § 2271.

The words "person of unsound mind" include every person who is a lunatic, idiot, or deranged. Sand. & H. Dig. Ark. 1893, § 7217.

"Persons of unsound mind," within the meaning of the Civil Code, are idiots, lunatics, and imbeciles. Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 13.

As adjudged unsound.

The phrase "person of unsound mind," as used in 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 601, § 11, providing that every contract, sale, or conveyance of a person, while a person of unsound mind, shall be void, is not used in its ordinary sense, but means a person who has been duly found to be of unsound mind by the statutory proceedings therefor. Freed v. Brown, 55 Ind. 310, 318.

As every grade of mental incapacity.

The phrase "of unsound mind" covers every grade of mental derangement or incapacity, and no matter what its kind or degree, if it be adjudged that thereby the person of unsound mind is incapable of managing his estate, this will furnish occasion for the appointment of a guardian, and while under such control he will be incapable of making a contract. But where it appears that the person under guardianship was capable of rendering service for which his estate was entitled to compensation, his admissions relative thereto are admissible in evidence. Hart v. Miller, 64 N. E. 239, 245, 29 Ind. App. 222.

The words "unsound mind," as used in Rev. St. 1881, § 2545, authorizing a proceeding to adjudge a person of unsound mind and incapable of managing his own estate, include every species of insanity or mental unsoundness. McCammon v. Cunningham, 9 N. E. 455, 456, 108 Ind. 545.

"Unsound mind," as used in an instruction that a person who is of unsound mind is incapable of making a valid will, and, if there is unsoundness of mind, it is not necessary for the contestant to show that such unsoundness had anything to do with the manner of disposing of the property, are used in their broad and common sense, including every species of defectiveness and impairment of mind or memory, and not in the sense of idiot, non compos, lunatic, monomaniac, or distracted person. Durham v. Smith, 22 N. E. 333, 334, 120 Ind. 463.

The term "unsound mind" includes every species of insanity or unsoundness of mind. Burkhart v. Gladesb., 24 N. E. 118, 119, 123 Ind. 337.

As used in the Code of Civil Procedure, unless the context shows that another sense was intended, the words "of unsound mind" include every species of mental deficiency or derangement. Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, § 4947.

As incapable of controlling self.

"Unsound mind," as used in a return to an inquisition in the nature of a writ de lunatico inquirendo, that the party is of unsound mind, import such a deprivation of sense as renders the sufferer unfit for self-control as well as for the management of his affairs. In re Lindsley, 15 Atl. 1, 2, 44 N. J. Eq. 564, 6 Am. St. Rep. 913.

A return of an inquisition which states that an alleged lunatic is of unsound mind, so that he is not capable of the government of his property, necessarily implies that he is also incompetent to govern himself. In re James, 35 N. J. Eq. (8 Stew.) 58, 59.

As incapable of managing affairs.

For the purposes of the chapter relating to guardianship, the words "person of unsound mind" shall be construed to mean either an idiot, or lunatic, or a person of unsound mind, and incapable of managing his own affairs, as the case may be. Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 4896.

"A person is of unsound mind who has lost his memory and understanding by old age, sickness, or other accident, so as to render him incapable of transacting his business and of managing his property." Dennett v. Dennett, 44 N. H. 531, 537, 84 Am. Dec. 97; In re Barker (N. Y.) 2 Johns. Ch. 232, 233; Edwards v. Davenport (U. S.) 20 Fed. 756, 758.

The term "unsound mind," as used in a statute providing for the bringing of an action by a next friend of a person of unsound mind, embraces not only lunatics, but persons whose minds have become so impaired or infirm by age, disease, or other cause as to be unable to take care of their own interests. Howard v. Howard, 10 Ky. Law Rep. 478, 480, 9 S. W. 411, 87 Ky. 616, 1 L. R. A. 610.

"Unsound mind," as used in Code 1873, § 2272, authorizing the appointment of a guardian of the property and minor children of a person of unsound mind, "relates to the capacity of the person affected to transact business. A person may be so weak and infirm as to be easily influenced in such manner that the transaction had under the effect of such influence will be set aside, and yet not be so unsound of mind as to warrant the appointment of a guardian of his property. But unsoundness of mind which will justify such an appointment must be more than mere debility or impairment of memory. It must be such as to deprive the person affected of ability to manage his estate." Emerick v. Emerick, 49 N. W. 1017, 83 Iowa, 411, 18 L. R. A. 757.

As incapable of transacting business in hand.

The words "unsound mind," as used in Code 1873, § 3154, authorizing the vacation of a judgment after the term entered against a person of unsound mind, mean the opposite of "sound mind," as used in the Code in relation to wills. A person of unsound mind, as was said in Seerley v. Sater, 68 Iowa, 376, 27 N. W. 263, is one who is incapable of transacting the particular business in hand. He need not necessarily be an insane or distracted person, and may be capable of transacting some kinds of business, and yet be of unsound mind and incapable of transacting business of magnitude, or at least some degree of intricacy. He may be capable of understanding his rights as to some transactions, and not others. Garretson v. Hubbard, 81 N. W. 174, 110 Iowa, 7.

A person is of unsound mind when his mental powers have been so far impaired as to render him incapable of transacting business like that in question. Dennett v. Dennett, 44 N. H. 531, 537, 84 Am. Dec. 97; Edwards v. Davenport (U. S.) 20 Fed. 756, 758.

A person executing a contract is of unsound mind when his mind is so weak and feeble that he is incapable of comprehending its nature. Edwards v. Davenport (U. S.) 20 Fed. 756, 758; In re Barker (N. Y.) 2 Johns. Ch. 232, 233.

As incapable of understanding and acting in ordinary affairs.

To constitute unsoundness of mind to avoid a deed at law, the person executing it must be incapable of understanding and acting in the ordinary affairs of life. Edwards v. Davenport (U. S.) 20 Fed. 756, 758.

"Unsoundness of mind is where there is an essential privation of the reasoning faculties, or where a person is incapable of understanding and acting with discretion in the ordinary affairs of life. If in the case of any person there is an essential privation of his reasoning faculties, or if he is incapable of understanding and acting with discretion in the ordinary affairs of life, then he is a person of 'unsound mind,' within the meaning of Rev. St. 1881, § 2546, providing for the appointment of a guardian in case a person is found to be of unsound mind." Fiscus v. Turner, 24 N. E. 662, 663, 125 Ind. 46.

A slave not actually an idiot, who is so weak in understanding and possesses so dim a reason as to be unable to comprehend the ordinary labors of a slave and perform them with the expertness that is common with that uneducated class of persons, is deemed of unsound mind. Sloan v. Williford, 25 N. C. 307, 309.

As testamentary incapacity.

"Unsound mind," as used in Rev. St. 1894, § 2766, and Rev. St. 1881, § 2566, authorizing a contest on the simple allegation that the testator was of unsound mind, means testamentary incapacity. Blough v. Parry, 43 N. E. 560, 563, 144 Ind. 463.

As total deprivation of sense.

The words "unsound mind" are equivalent to non compos mentis, lunaticus, or insana mentis, and import a total deprivation of sense. Riggs v. American Tract Soc., 84 N. Y. 330, 336; Valentine v. Lunt, 3 N. Y. Supp. 906, 908, 51 Hun, 544.

The allegation, in a bill to set aside a deed, alleging that the maker was credulous, and so feeble in mind and body that he was unfit to transact business, does not show that he was of unsound mind, so as to prevent a running of the statute of limitations. Lord Hardwick says that being "non compos" and "of unsound mind" are certain terms of law, and import a total deprivation of sense. Weakness of mind does not carry this idea along with it, but courts of law understand what is meant by "non compos" or "insane," as they are words of determinate signification. Ex parte Barnsley, 3 Atk. 168, 171; Rugan v. Sabin (U. S.) 53 Fed. 415, 421, 8 C. C. A. 578.

The words "unsound mind" are sometimes used indiscriminately to signify lunacy, and also adventitious insanity, as distinguished from idiocy, but it is a certain term in the law and imports a total deprivation of sense. As used in Code Civ. Proc. § 590, as approved by the Act Feb. 15, 1877, providing that no proceeding for reversing, vacating, or modifying judgments or final orders shall be commenced unless within one year after the rendition of the judgment or making the final order complained of, or in case the person entitled to such proceedings be an infant, a person of unsound mind, or imprisoned within one year as aforesaid, exclusive of the time of such disability, etc., is used in the same sense with, and as equivalent to, "insane." Mere imbecility or weakness of mind would not constitute a person of "unsound mind," within the meaning of the words as above used. There must be a total want of understanding. Witte v. Gilbert, 7 N. W. 288, 10 Neb. 539.

In considering the mental capacity which was sufficient to enable a testator to make a will, the court said: "Non compos mentis," or, since the proceedings have been in English, "of unsound mind," which means the same thing, are legal terms of a determinate signification, understood by courts of law, importing, not weakness of understanding, but a total deprivation of reason." Stewart's Ex'r v. Lispernard (N. Y.) 26 Wend. 255, 300.

The words "of unsound mind" have a determinate and technical import, and do not, when used in a legal sense, mean imbecility of mind, merely, but are synonymous with "non compos mentis," and import necessarily a total deprivation of reason, comprehending idiocy, lunacy, and adventitious madness, either temporary or permanent, remediable or irremediable. Jenkins v. Jenkins' Heirs, 32 Ky. (2 Dana) 102, 103, 26 Am. Dec. 437.

Aphasia.

A person is not necessarily of unsound mind because he is affected with aphasia, which is an inability to select and use proper words to express ideas, which may exist while the mental faculties of judgment, memory, and understanding remain unimpaired. In re Comfort, 53 Atl. 133, 135, 63 N. J. Eq. 377.

Delusions.

In holding that an instruction that insanity or unsoundness of mind is that mental condition which exists when common sense and reason are destroyed or greatly impaired, and delusion exists, was erroneous, the court say: "If insanity or unsoundness of mind is that condition of mind which exists when common sense and reason are greatly impaired and delusion exists, then, when delusion exists, the mind is unsound, insane, and destroyed. If the true test of the absence or presence of insanity is the absence or presence of delusion, then insanity and delusion become the same thing, and insanity or delusion are no more than different terms used to designate the same condition of the mind. Tried by such a metaphysical or psychological test, Emanuel Swedenborg, John Wesley, Martin Luther, Joan of Arc, Joseph Addison, the author of Rasselas, Napoleon Bonaparte, and hundreds more of the greatest and soundest minded which have existed on earth, must be declared insane, for each of these stoutly maintained what men of the present day would declare delusion. Indeed, delusion is so common that, if the whole human family were tried by an infallible standard, there would be very few who could maintain an absolute sanity, and it is not improbable that the very few would be among the most asinine specimens of humanity." Denson v. Beazley, 34 Tex. 191, 199.

"Unsound mind" sufficient to warrant the setting aside of a gift of property does not necessarily mean that the grantor was an idiot or imbecile at the time of the gift. It is sufficient to show that he was laboring under a delusion out of which he could not be reasoned, which led him to make the gift, and which so took possession of his mind that he could not act upon the subject sensibly. Riggs v. American Tract Soc., 95 N. Y. 503, 511.

Habitual drunkenness.

In 2 Rev. St. p. 52, § 1, providing that the chancellor shall have the care and custody of all idiots, lunatics, persons of unsound mind, and persons who shall be incapable of conducting their affairs in consequence of habitual drunkenness, the Legislature did not use the words "habitual drunkard" as synonymous with person of unsound mind. They evidently intended to include more than those who were of unsound mind. They intended to include another class of persons. Hence the fact that the chancellor has taken charge of a person because of habitual drunkenness is not evidence that the party so taken charge of is of unsound mind, so as to incapacitate him from making a legal will. Lewis v. Jones (N. Y.) 50 Barb. 645, 671.

Habitual drunkards are persons of unsound mind. Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 14.

Idiocy or lunacy distinguished.

It will be presumed that the use of the words "person of unsound mind," in a statute providing for the appointment of a guardian of an idiot, lunatic, or person of unsound mind, has reference to a class differing somewhat from either of the other designated classes. "While an idiot or lunatic is a person of unsound mind, a person may be of unsound mind, and not an idiot or lunatic. When we come to undertake to define precisely what is unsoundness of mind, within the meaning of the statute, we meet with great difficulty. Weakness is not necessarily unsoundness, but there may be weakness, short of idiocy, either congenital or superinduced by disease or old age, that amounts to unsoundness; and it is within the observation of every one that in extreme old age the mental powers oftentimes nearly fade out. When this is so, we have a clear case of unsoundness of mind as distinguishable from idiocy or lunacy. The weakness which does not amount to unsoundness shades off into that which does, yet the statute may be applied to each given case, and practically the difficulty is not a very great one. The object to be accomplished by the statute is easily comprehended. The mental weakness of old age may or may not open the door to delusion. Where it does, the judgment is ordinarily to be presumed less to be trusted than when it does not. But whether delusions are present or absent, if from such mental weakness that the judgment necessarily required in the management of the defendant's ordinary affairs cannot properly be trusted, and the just protection of his property demands the legal substitution of another's judgment, such substitution should be made." Smith v. Hickenbottom, 11 N. W. 664, 667, 57 Iowa, 733.

"Unsoundness of mind," as contradistinguished from "lunacy" and "idiocy," is mental deficiency, either arising from an obstacle to the development of the faculties supervening in infancy, or from disease, as epilepsy, or from the decay of old age, or from grief, or disappointment, or intemperance, or any other cause. Thompson v. Thompson (U. S.) 21 Barb. 107, 123.

The words "unsound mind" are synonymous with "insane." Nicewander v. Nicewander, 37 N. E. 698, 700, 151 Ill. 156.

Monomania.

A "person of unsound mind," within the meaning of Rev. St. 1881, § 2556, providing that persons of unsound mind may not execute a will, does not necessarily include a monomaniac, though section 2544 defines a person of unsound mind as an idiot, non compos, lunatic, monomaniac, or distracted person. A monomaniac, therefore, is not necessarily incapacitated from executing a will. Young v. Miller, 44 N. E. 757, 759, 145 Ind. 652.

Non compos mentis synonymous.

The words "of unsound mind" are synonymous with "non compos mentis." Jenkins v. Jenkins' Heirs, 32 Ky. (2 Dana) 102, 103, 26 Am. Dec. 487.

"Unsound mind," as used in 2 Rev. St. p. 56, § 1, providing that all persons except those of "unsound mind," married women, infants, etc., may devise their real estate by their last will and testament, etc., should be construed as synonymous with "non compos mentis." Blanchard v. Nestle (N. Y.) 8 Denio, 37, 41.

UNSUITABLE.

See "Evidently Unsuitable"; "Suitable."

UNSURPASSED.

"Unsurpassed and unsurpassable," as used in the advertisement of an article as perfect of its kind, or as unsurpassed and unsurpassable, is not such a representation, either of its quality, condition, or character, as will support a warranty. League Cycle Co. v. Abrahams, 58 N. Y. Supp. 306, 308, 27 Misc. Rep. 548.

UNSURVEYED.

"Unsurveyed," within the meaning of "cession of the unsurveyed and unsold lands in the Virginia military district to the state of Ohio," by Act Cong. Feb. 18, 1871, should be construed to include lands covered by entries and surveys which were made prior to January 1, 1852, where the survey became void, and all rights under them extinguished, because of the survey not being returned to the proper department until after January 1, 1852, according as provided by statute. Board of Trustees v. Cuppett, 40 N. E. 792, 52 Ohio St. 567.

A complaint charged that the plaintiff, as treasurer of a corporation, acting under the direction of its directors, expended $800 in its behalf over and above his receipts from its funds, and that the corporation was indebted to him. Held, that the phrase "under and by the direction of the board of directors" simply meant that the expenditures were made at the request of the company. Simmons v. Sisson, 26 N. Y. 264, 275.

UNTENANTABLE.

A leased building facing on an avenue becomes "untenantable," within the provision of the lease that "the above letting is subject, however, to any widening * * * of the avenue, and shall cease * * * in case the premises should become untenable by reason of such alteration," as soon as the ownership of the part of the building within the lines of the avenue as widened passes out of the landlord in such a manner that it may be destroyed at any moment; as where it is sold under notice from the commissioner of highways that the purchaser must remove it within 30 days. Payne v. Schollhamer, 63 N. Y. Supp. 229, 230, 30 Misc. Rep. 755.

UNTIL

"Until" is a restrictive word; a word of limitation. State v. Perkins, 40 S. W. 650, 652, 139 Mo. 106.

The word "until" is a word of limitation, used ordinarily to restrict what immediately precedes it to what immediately follows it. Its office is to point out some point of time, or the happening of some event, when what precedes it shall cease to exist or have any further force or effect. Maginn v. Lancaster, 73 S. W. 368, 372, 100 Mo. App. 116.

The word "until," as used in Laws 1880, c. 30, § 7, declaring that the aldermen from certain wards shall hold office from a certain date until a certain other date, is in the sense of "to," denoting the running of the term from one point of time to another. People v. Orissey, 91 N. Y. 616, 631.

As excluding last day.

In contracts and like documents, "until" is to be construed as exclusive of the date mentioned unless it was the manifest intent of the parties to include it. Croco v. Hille, 72 Pac. 208, 66 Kan. 512 (citing Webst. Dict.).

The use of the word "until" generally signifies an intention to exclude the day to which it refers, unless a contrary intention appears from the context of the law or instrument in which the word is used. The word "until" is exclusive in its meaning. As used in Tax Law, § 35, providing that a copy of the assessment roll shall be left at a specified place, where it may be seen and examined until the third Tuesday of August, it excludes the latter day. People v. Hornbeck, 61 N. Y. Supp. 978, 30 Misc. Rep. 212.

The word "until," whether found in a contract or in a statute, is the same, and in either case must depend upon the intention of those using it, as manifested by the context, and considered with reference to the subject to which it relates. As used in a statute providing that a term of the probate court shall commence on the first Monday of each calendar month, and continue until the third Monday thereof, it excludes the day to which it refers. Ryan v. State Bank, 7 N. W. 276, 278, 10 Neb. 524.

The word "until" may, in a contract or a law, have an exclusive or inclusive meaning, depending upon the subject, transaction, or connection about or in which it is used. As used in a law providing that the Governor shall receive bids for certain property from all persons until the 1st of July, etc., it has an exclusive meaning, so that the time within which bids might be received expired with the 30th of June. Webster v. French, 12 Ill. (2 Peck) 302, 303.

An act continuing the charter of a corporation until the 1st day of January does not include such day. People v. Walker, 17 N. Y. 502, 503.

In a contract for delivery of certain property until the 1st day of January, the word "until" was exclusive in its meaning. Newby v. Rogers, 40 Ind. 9, 16.

Rev. Laws, § 1450, allowing a tender of damages and costs to be made in certain cases at any time "until three days before" the commencement of the term to which the action was returnable, means to exclude from the period in which the tender may be made the three days next preceding the day on which the term commences; neither the day on which the tender is made nor the first day of the term can be counted as one of the three days. Wiley v. Laraway, 25 Atl. 435, 436, 64 Vt. 566.

The word "until," in a contract providing that merchants shall have 30 days to load a vessel, counting from the day of readiness until the day of dispatch, operates to exclude the day of dispatch. Merritt v. Ona (U. S.) 44 Fed. 369, 370, 11 L. R. A. 724.

An order extending the time to file a bill of exceptions until a day named does not include that day. Eshelman v. Snyder, 82 Ind. 498, 499; Hartman v. Ringgenberg, 21 N. E. 464, 119 Ind. 72; Corbin v. Ketcham, 87 Ind. 138, 139; Erb v. Moak, 78 Ind. 569.

As including last day.

The usual understanding of the word "until," used with reference to a future day, includes the day named. In re Croft's Estate (Pa.) 14 Wkly. Notes Cas. 437.

"Until" may either, in a contract or a law, have an inclusive or exclusive meaning, according to the subject to which it is applied, the nature of the transaction which it specifies, and the connection in which it is used; and this rule extends to the correlatives of the word. Ordinarily, the word, like "from" and "between," excludes the day to which it relates. It has been decided that "till" includes the day to which it is prefixed. Bunce v. Reed (N. Y.) 16 Barb. 347, 352 (citing Dakins v. Wagner, 3 Dowl. 535); Hahn v. Dierkes, 37 Mo. 574; Penn Placer Min. Co. v. Schreiner, 14 Mont. 121, 35 Pac. 878; Gottlieb v. Fred W. Wolf Co., 75 Md. 126, 23 Atl. 198; Board of Glynn County Com'rs v. Dart, 67 Ga. 765; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Turner, 81 Ky. 489; Newport News

& M. V. R. Co. v. Thomas, 96 Ky. 613, 29 S. W. 437. And as used in an order allowing an appellant until a certain day within which to prepare or present for allowance a bill of exceptions it will be held to include such day. Conway v. Smith Mercantile Co., 44 Pac. 940, 6 Wyo. 327, 49 L. R. A. 201; St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Gracy, 29 S. W. 579, 580, 126 Mo. 472 (citing State v. Mosley, 116 Mo. 545, 22 S. W. 804).

"Until," as used in a stipulation reciting that a certain party shall have until a certain day to accept a proposition, includes that day, if the offer be still open. Houghwout v. Boisaubin, 18 N. J. Eq. (3 C. E. Green) 315, 318.

In the absence of anything qualifying its meaning, the word "until" might perhaps be regarded as inclusive in its signification, but its import may be ambiguous, in which case its meaning will be determined from the whole text or instrument in which it is used. Rex v. Stevens, 5 East, 250. The word, as used in a stipulation that a party may have until March 6th to answer, includes such designated date, so that an answer on March 7th is too late. Barker v. Keith, 11 Minn. 65, 67 (Gil. 37, 40).

"Until," as used in Laws 1859, c. 302, § 8, providing that certain books shall be kept open for examination and correction until the 1st day of May in each year, is used in the sense of "up to," and includes such 1st day of May. Clarke v. City of New York, 19 N. E. 436, 111 N. Y. 621.

As used in an act giving the movant for a new trial until a certain day, time, or term to prepare and file the motion and approved brief of evidence, "until" includes said day, term, or time, and, if proper action be taken at that time, it is in season. Rogers v. Cherokee Iron & Ry. Co., 70 Ga. 717.

"Until," as used in extension of time to make and serve a case made until a certain day, includes the day named. Consolidated Kansas City Smelting & Refining Co. v. Peterson, 55 Pac. 673, 8 Kan. App. 316.

An assignment executed on the 31st of October, of all rents due and coming due until October 1, 1874, included the rents falling due on October 1st. Kendall v. Kingsley, 120 Mass. 94, 95.

Until his successor shall be appointed and qualified.

The words "until his successor shall be appointed and qualified," as used in Const. art. 2, § 13, providing that the term of a certain officer shall be two years, and "until his successor shall be appointed and qualified," mean, according to their plain import, an extension of the definite term of office, and that no vacancy exists in the office while an incumbent lawfully appointed holds by virtue of such extension of his term. The object of employing such language in the limitation of the term of office, is to prevent a vacancy occurring before a successor is duly appointed and qualified. Smoot v. Somerville, 59 Md. 84, 95.

Const. 1885, art. 16, § 14, providing that all state, county, and municipal officers shall continue in office after the expiration of their official terms until their successors shall be elected and qualified, is not a limitation on the power of the Governor to fill vacancies, but was intended to prevent a hiatus or interregnum occurring between the day of the termination of the office and the day of the successor's entry upon his duties. State v. Murphy, 13 South. 705, 708, 32 Fla. 138.

Until the further order of court.

Where the plaintiff at the commencement of an action applied for injunction, and the judge issued an order to show cause why an injunction should not issue, and in such order restrained the defendant until the further order of the court, such term had no other meaning than in the meantime, or until the decision upon the order to show cause. Curtiss v. Bachman, 110 Cal. 433, 438, 42 Pac. 910, 912, 52 Am. St. Rep. 111.

Rev. St. § 5024, provides that on the filing of a petition in involuntary bankruptcy, if it appears that sufficient grounds exist therefor, the court shall direct the entry of an order requiring the debtor to appear and show cause at a court of bankruptcy to be holden at a time to be specified in the order, not less than five days from the service thereof. why the prayer in the petition should not be granted, and that the court may also, by injunction, restrain the debtor and any other person in the meantime from making any transfer or disposition of any part of the debtor's property and from any interference therewith. An injunction was issued in pursuance to such section, restraining the debtor from any interference with the property until the further order of the court. Held, that the clause "until the further order of the court" did not extend the injunction beyond the time in which the time for the hearing of the petition could be fixed. In re Irving (U. S.) 13 Fed. Cas. 108.

Until the next regular election.

The phrase "until the next regular election," as used in the Constitution (article 3, § 11), providing for appointments to fill vacancies in judicial offices, means until the next regular election held at the time fixed by law for the filling of the particular class of judicial offices to which the appointment was made. McIntyre v. Illiff, 68 Pac. 633, 634, 64 Kan. 747.

Where Act March 27, 1874, incorporating a certain town, provided that a tax lien on real estate should remain a lien thereon until paid, it cannot be said that no period of time is provided. "Until the tax is paid" is a period of time. Skinner v. Christie, 29 Atl. 772, 777, 52 N. J. Eq. 720.

The words "until paid," as used in a note in which the maker agrees to pay a certain sum "on or before a specified day, with interest at the rate of three per cent. until paid," do not extend the contract beyond the specified date, any more than the words "per annum" or "per month"; and therefore the holder can collect the statutory interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum after the note has become due and remains unpaid. Collier v. Field, 1 Mont. 612, 625, 626.

UNTRIED.

See "Remaining Untried."

UNTRUE.

In one sense, that only is true which is conformable to the actual state of things. In that sense a statement is "untrue" which does not express things exactly as they are, but in another and broader sense the word "true" is often used as a synonym of "honest," "sincere," "not fraudulent." Answers by an applicant for life insurance which are honest, sincere, and not fraudulent are not untrue, within the meaning of the application, declaring the contract null and void if the answers of the insured to the questions propounded to him are in any respect untrue. Globe Mut. Life Ins. Ass'n v. Wagner, 58 N. E. 970, 971, 188 Ill. 133, 52 L. R. A. 649, 80 Am. St. Rep. 169 (citing Moulor v. American Life Ins. Co., 111 U. S. 335, 4 Sup. Ct. 466, 28 L. Ed. 447); Clapp v. Massachusetts Ben. Ass'n, 16 N. E. 433, 436, 146 Mass. 519.

Though in one sense it may be said that that only is true which is conformable to the actual state of things, and that that which does not embrace things exactly as they are is untrue, yet the word "true" is often used as a synonym for "honest," "sincere," "not fraudulent." As applied to a stipulation making an insurance policy void in case any of the warranties prove to be "untrue," it should not be held to require absolute verity; but a warranty should not be considered untrue unless it appears that the warrantor knew or had reason to believe, at the time the warranties were made, that they were not founded on fact. Weil v. New York Life Ins. Co., 17 South. 853, 857, 47 La. Ann. 1405.

In construing a life policy providing that if the declaration, or any part of it, made by the assured, shall be found in any respect untrue, the policy shall be vitiated, the court said: "What is to be understood by untrue answers or any suppression of facts? Can they have reference to any disease with which the insured was alleged to have been inflicted, of which he knew nothing and of which he could not have informed himself of by the exercise of any diligence? Are they intended as absolute warranties of the fact that he never since childhood or during life had been afflicted with diseases of which he nor the most skillful physician could have had any knowledge whatever? The case of Moulou v. American Life Ins. Co., 111 U. S. 335, 4 Sup. Ct. 466, 28 L. Ed. 447, is a strong and direct authority for the position that the word 'untrue,' in the above connection, in its broadest sense means knowingly or designedly untrue or recklessly so; that it is the opposite of sincere, honest, not fraudulent." Alabama Gold Life Ins. Co. v. Johnston, 80 Ala. 467, 473, 474.

A policy provided that it should be void if the proposal for the insurance and answers therein made were false or fraudulent. In the proposal, which was made a part of the policy, the words "untrue or fraudulent" were used. There is no doubt that the words "false or fraudulent" written in the policy are used in the same sense. Effect should be given to both the words "false" and "fraudulent." If they both mean statements made intentionally and knowingly to deceive, then it was not necessary to use both, as nothing is added to the sense by the use of both. The word "false" is sometimes used in the sense of "fraudulent," and sometimes in the sense of "untrue." The words were inserted for abundant caution. They were intended to cover statements untrue, as well as such as were colorably true, but fraudulent in fact. Foot v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 61 N. Y. 571, 576, 577.

UNUSUAL

"Unusual" is defined by Webster to be "not usual, not common, rare; as an unusual season; a person of unusual grace or erudition." Thus the killing of a human being by means of a shot or shots from a revolver is not, as the history of criminal trials shows, an unusual manner of effecting death. Territory v. Pridemore, 18 Pac. 96, 98, 4 N. M. (Johns.) 137.

The words "unusual and extraordinary," as in common use, very often are exaggerations of speech, and in many cases, if properly inquired into and explained, would be found not to be synonymous with "unnatural and unexpected"; and in an action for a fire started by sparks from an engine it is error to instruct that if the wind causing the escape of sparks from defendant's engine was unusual and extraordinary, and if, but for the unusual and extraordinary character of the wind, the sparks would not have escaped and communicated the fire to plain-tiff's premises, the defendant is not liable, without explaining the meaning of the words, so as to present to the jury the question whether the wind could reasonably have been expected at that season in that section of the country. Blue v. Aberdeen & W. E. R. Co., 21 S. E. 299, 300, 116 N. C. 955.

UNUSUAL COVERING.

"Unusual covering," as used in Tariff Act June 10, 1890, § 19, does not include wooden cases with cardboard partitions, in which opal glass bottles were packed and imported, being usual packages for such bottles. United States v. Richards (U. S.) 66 Fed. 730.

UNUSUAL FLOOD OF RAIN.

An "unusual flood of rain" does not indicate a greater or more severe rain than has theretofore occurred, but rather such a rain as does not usually or but rarely occur. City of Denver v. Rhodes, 13 Pac. 729, 734, 9 Colo. 554.

UNUSUAL MEANS.

"Unusual means," as used in Rev. St. § 4362, defining manslaughter in the fourth degree as the involuntary killing of another by any weapon, or by any "means neither cruel nor unusual, in the heat of passion, in any cases other than such as are declared to be justified or excusable homicide, does not mean such a weapon or means which is most likely to take life or commonly used to take life, and does not include a pistol, which is a usual weapon for accomplishing such purpose. Schlect v. State, 44 N. W. 509, 510, 75 Wis. 486.

UNUSUAL NUMBER.

Where two persons went to a mill, taking with them a workman, and entered such mill, there was not an entry of an "unusual number," which of itself tends to excite terror. Pike v. Witt, 104 Mass. 595, 597.

UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT.

See, also, "Cruel and Unusual Punishment."

"Unusual," as used in Declaration of Rights, art. 26, providing that no magistrate or court of law shall inflict cruel or unusual punishment, must be construed with the word "cruel," and cannot be taken so broadly as to prohibit every humane improvement not previously known in Massachusetts. The inflicting of the punishment of death by causing to pass through the body of the convict a current of electricity of sufficient intensity to cause death, the application of such current to be continued until such convict is dead, is not a cruel or unusual punishment. In re "Unusual," as used in Const. art. 1, § 16, prohibiting the infliction of unusual punishment, means a class of punishments which never existed in the state, or that class which the public sentiment must be regarded as having condemned. Hobbs v. State, 32 N. E. 1019, 1021, 133 Ind. 404, 18 L. R. A. 774 (citing Cooley, Const. Lim.).

Storti, 60 N. E. 210, 211, 178 Mass. 549, 52 L. R. A. 520.

The term "cruel and unusual punishment," in the constitutional provision prohibiting such punishment, does not include the imposition of a fine of $50 and a sentence for three months at hard labor in the house of correction for selling intoxicating liquors contrary to law. Pervear v. Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 72 U. S. (5 Wall.) 475, 480, 18 L. Ed. 608.

The term "cruel and unusual punishment," in the constitutional provision prohibiting cruel and unusual punishment, does not characterize imprisonment at hard labor, though such punishment may be severe. State v. Hogan, 58 N. E. 572, 575, 63 Ohio St. 202, 52 L. R. A. 863, 81 Am. St. Rep. 626.

The term "cruel and unusual punishment," within the meaning of a constitutional provision prohibiting such punishment, does not include a penitentiary sentence of two years for selling a paper devoted mainly to scandals, etc. State v. Van Wye, 37 S. W. 938, 939, 136 Mo. 227, 58 Am. St. Rep. 627.

UNUSUAL USE.

"Unusual use of a road," as used in Ky. St. § 4325, providing for the punishment of any corporation which shall fail, after notice, to repair any damage that is done by the unusual use of a road, does not include the tearing down and keeping down unreasonably long a bridge constituting a part of a highway over a railroad track, such operation not being a use of the road, usual or unusual. Commonwealth v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 47 S. W. 258, 259, 104 Ky. 366.

UNUSUALLY.

When a thing is said to be "unusually small," it is meant that it is small compared with the class to which it belongs, and the comparison involved is essentially different from that which can be made between merely two things of the class. Robinson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 32 N. W. 193, 194, 71 Iowa, 102.

UNUSED.

In Act March 4, 1880 (P. L. p. 111) § 1, providing that whenever any road which has been laid out according to law, or any portion of such road, shall have been unused for public travel for a period of not less than five years, the road or such portion shall be vacated, "unused" signifies abandonment by the public. In that sense the proviso does not apply, and it could not have been intended to apply, to a case where the public was asserting in the courts its right to the highway, and seeking to remove, by the aid of the law, obstructions which interfered with its actual use. Mercer County v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 45 N. J. Law (16 Vroom) 82, 83.

UNWHOLESOME MILK.

In construing a pure food act prohibiting the sale of adulterated, impure, or unwholesome milk, the court holds that "impure or unwholesome milk" means milk from cows fed on distillery waste, or any substance in a state of putrefaction, or from sick or diseased cows. Commonwealth v. Hough, 1 Pa. Dist. R. 51, 53.

UNWORTHY.

They are called "unworthy," in matters of succession, who, by the failure of some duty toward a person, have not deserved to inherit from him, and are in consequence deprived of his succession. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 964.

UNWRITTEN LAW.

Unwritten law is the law not promulgated and recorded, but which is nevertheless observed and administered in the courts of the country. It has no certain repository, but is collected from the reports of the decisions of the courts and the treatises of learned men. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. 1903, § 1899; Ann. Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 736.

UNWROUGHT METAL.

Ferrochrome is not dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, Schedule C, par. 187, 30 Stat. 166 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1645], as metal unwrought. Dana v. United States (U. S.) 116 Fed. 933.

UP.

The term "up the bank with its meanders," when used to designate a boundary in a deed of land on the north side of the stream, which boundary commences at a tree at the south side of the stream, thence to the south bank of said river, thence up the same with its meanders 492 poles, is to be construed as fixing the boundary on the south side of the river, and including the river, if nonnavigable, as a part of the land conveyed. Camden v. Creel, 4 W. Va. 365, 367.

The use of the words, "up the west bank," in a deed describing one call of the land conveyed as being up the west bank, operates to fix the boundary as the margin of the stream, and to preclude the deed from carrying the land to the center of the stream, though it is not navigable. Murphy v. Cope-land, 1 N. W. 691, 692, 51 Iowa, 515.

A call in a deed for a certain distance "up the creek" ordinarily means to run with the creek; that is, according to the meanders or thread of the stream. Buckley's Lessee v. Blackwell's Heirs, 10 Ohio, 508, 510.

"Up the same," as used in a deed providing that the boundary shall continue to a certain creek, and thence up the same to the corner of a certain lot, cannot be satisfied by running a straight line to the corner of the lot but implied that the line is to follow the creek according to its windings and turnings, and that it must be in the middle or center of it. Jackson v. Louw (N. Y.) 12 Johns. 252, 255.

"Up," as used in a call in a grant from a pond or river west up the river to a stake, is equivalent to "with the river" on the line most pursued as the course of the stream. Rogers v. Mabe, 15 N. C. 180, 194.

"Up the branch," as used in a deed describing a boundary as a line running, from a fixed monument on the edge of a branch, up the branch by a single course to another fixed monument on the branch, should be construed to follow the straight line called for from monument to monument, and not to follow the windings of the branch. Wharton v. Brick, 8 Atl. 529, 530, 49 N. J. Law, 289.

Up a creek or river means the middle of the main channel thereof. Rev. St. Ariz. 1901, par. 930; Pol. Code Cal. 1903, § 3906; Pol. Code Mont. 1895, § 4103.

UP TO.

Where the time for filing a bill of exceptions was extended "up to" June 28th, a plea filed on that day is in time, the court remarking that the word "to," which is evidently the controlling word in this connection, is sometimes a word of inclusion. State v. Fletcher, 68 S. W. 429, 430, 166 Mo. 582.

UPCAST.

The term "upcast" is used to designate the compartment of the air shaft of a coal mine which is used to carry the noxious air up from the mine. Coal Run Coal Co. v. Jones, 19 Ill. App. (19 Bradw.) 365, 368.

UPHOLD.

A covenant in a lease to repair, uphold, and support, or to well and sufficiently repair, or to keep in repair and leave as found, or to repair and keep in repair, or to keep in good repair, natural wear and tear excepted, or to make all necessary repairs, or to deliver up in tenantable repair, or to deliver up the premises in as good a condition as they now are, all impose upon the covenantor the duty of rebuilding or restoring premises destroyed or injured by the elements. Armstrong v. Maybee, 48 Pac. 737, 738, 17 Wash. 24, 61 Am. St. Rep. 898.

UPON.

See "On—Upon."

Upon the express condition, see "Express Condition."

UPPER.

In the absence of special circumstances modifying or changing its meaning, the word "upper," when used to describe a part of a survey of land made and platted upon a map, naturally suggests the north part of such survey, as surveys and maps are made with reference to the points of a compass. Lunn v. Scarborough, 24 S. W. 846, 847, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 15.

"Upper," as used in Rev. St. § 2573, making it the duty of the owner of any tenement house of more than two stories high to provide a convenient exit from the upper story, implies a story above the ground floor. Rose v. King, 30 N. E. 267, 268, 49 Ohio St. 213, 15 L. R. A. 160.

UPSET BID.

"Upset bid" has been used to designate a bid made after a judicial sale, and before a former bid has been confirmed, for the purpose of upsetting a sale to such former bidder. Yost v. Porter, 80 Va. 855, 858.

UPSETTING.

Among metal workers, "upsetting" is the term employed to describe a process of shortening and thickening. Thus, a bolt is headed by upsetting; the end portion being made shorter without removal of any portion of the metal, which therefore spreads out laterally. If a plain metal ring is reduced in diameter by upsetting, the ring will become thicker, there being apparently an intermolecular rearrangement of the particles of the metal. Jackson v. Birmingham Brass Co. (U. S.) 79 Fed. 801, 803, 25 C. C. A. 196.

URBAN RESIDENCE HOMESTEAD.

An urban residence homestead consists of the mansion house, the home of the family, the place where they reside, together with all the lot or lots used in connection therewith, contributing to its enjoyment, comfort, and convenience. Ford v. Fosgard (Tex.) 25 S. W. 445, 447.

URBAN SERVITUDES.

The principal kinds of urban servitudes are the following: The right of support; that of drip; that of drain or of preventing the drain; that of view or of lights, or of preventing the view or lights from being obstructed; that of raising buildings or walls or of preventing them from being raised; that of passage; and that of drawing water. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 711.

URGENT NECESSITY.

The "immediate and urgent necessity," under which the payment of an illegal tax must be made in order to entitle the payer to recover, means something less than an actual or threatened seizure of goods. Payment to avoid the levy of a warrant already issued and in the hands of the collector, and just as sure to be levied, if the money is not paid, as night to follow day, is just as much a payment to preserve one's goods as though the levy had actually been threatened or made. Rumford Chemical Works v. Ray, 34 Atl. 814, 815, 19 R. I. 456.

US.

A warrant of attorney given by two persons, authorizing the attorney to appear in an action brought "against us," and confess judgment "against us," contemplates a joint judgment entered against both, and therefore does not authorize the confession and entry of a judgment against one, though the other be dead at the time judgment is entered. Hunt v. Chamberlin, 8 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 336, 14 Am. Dec. 427.

Where the words "against us" are used in an agreement that "any excess of certain collaterals deposited to secure the payment of a note shall be applicable to any other note or claim held against us, J. R. & S. J. Blocker," and signed by said J. R. & S. J. Blocker, which is a firm name, the collaterals cannot be held to secure a note executed by one of the partners as principal, and the other partner and other parties as sureties. San Antonio Nat. Bank v. Blocker, 13 S. W. 961, 963, 77 Tex. 73.

A deed of assignment conveying all the wares, merchandise, and stock and trade belonging to a partnership, including "all property of all kinds now owned by us," included all the property of either partner, whether owned in his separate right or as a partner; and it cannot be limited to the wares, merchandise, and stock and trade belonging to the copartnership, but includes the individual property of the partners. Coffin v. Douglass, 61 Tex. 406, 409.

"Where testatrix had devised all her estate to her husband in fee, and later, being about to travel abroad in company with her husband, made a will beginning with the words, 'In case of anything happening us, I would wish,' etc., and devising her estate to her sister, the phrase meant, not the death of her husband before herself, nor the death of both by the same accident, but the death of both while upon their travels." Cowley v. Knapp, 42 N. J. Law (13 Vroom) 297, 302.

USAGE.

See "Common Usage."

All laws or usages, see "All."

Usage is a reasonable and lawful public custom concerning transactions of the same nature as those which are to be affected thereby, existing at the place where the obligation is to be performed, and either known to the parties, or so well established, general, and uniform that they must be presumed to have acted with reference thereto. Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 2801; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 5128; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 2462; Code Civ. Proc. Mont. 1895, § 3463; Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 4664.

Usage is the law by which the significance or import of words is fixed and settled, and the shades of difference in their meaning is marked and defined. Russell v. Colyar, 51 Tenn. (4 Heisk.) 154, 158.

"Usage" is simply a mode of dealing in a particular locality, or among persons in a particular business or trade, and it derives its binding force from the supposed or established knowledge of the persons engaged in the particular traffic at the place or in the trade to which it relates. Milroy v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 67 N. W. 276, 278, 98 Iowa, 188; Woldert v. Arledge, 23 S. W. 1052, 1053, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 692.

Usage is the legal evidence of a custom, which is an unwritten law, established by long usage and the consent of our ancestors from time immemorial. Minis v. Nelson (U. S.) 43 Fed. 777, 779.

The office of a custom or usage in trade is to ascertain or explain the meaning and intention of the parties to a contract, whether written or in parol, which could not have been done without the aid of this extrinsic evidence. It does not go beyond this, and is used as a mode of interpretation on the theory that the parties knew of its existence and contracted with reference to it. Barnard v. Kellogg, 77 U. S. (10 Wall.) 383, 388, 19 L. Ed. 987.

A "usage," which is also called a "custom," though the latter word has also another signification, is a long and uniform practice applied to habits, modes, and courses of dealing. It relates to modes of action, and does not comprehend the mere adoption of certain peculiar doctrines or rules of law. This will be made apparent by an examination of the cases on the subject. For example, the usage referred to in Snowden v. Warder (Pa.) 3 Rawle, 101, was merely to adopt as a rule of law that which was contrary to law. The same remark applies to all the Pennsylvania cases and to all the New York cases and to those of Massachusetts. In all cases where usages are sustained they do in fact operate to give effect to contracts different from that which the common law would have done, and they operate in contravention of the rules of the common law. In many instances a usage has been rejected or sustained on the ground that it was or was not reasonable, and the question whether it was contradictory to a principle of law or to the terms or legal operation of the contract was not adverted to. Dickinson v. Gay, 89 Mass. (7 Allen) 29, 35, 83 Am. Dec. 656.

Usage is some proof of what is considered a reasonable or proper use of that which is a common right, because it affords evidence of the tacit consent of all parties interested to the general convenience of such use. Gould v. Boston Dock Co., 79 Mass. (13 Gray) 452; Dumont v. Kellogg, 29 Mich. 420, 425, 18 Am. Rep. 102.

"Usage" rests on long and uniform practice, and to be binding, must be known, certain, uniform, and reasonable, and not contrary to law. 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 615; Collings v. Hope (U. S.) 6 Fed. Cas. 111; Municipal Inv. Co. v. Industrial & General Trust Co. (U. S.) 89 Fed. 254, 256; Woldert v. Arledge, 23 S. W. 1052, 1053, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 692.

Usage of trade is a course of dealing; a mode of conducting transactions of a particular kind. Haskins v. Warren, 115 Mass. 514, 535.

By the phrase "usage of trade" the law means usage fixed in the commercial law; a usage recognized by it in what is known as "trade." State v. Chilton, 39 S. E. 612, 614, 49 W. Va. 453.

"Usage" among commercial and business men in a locality need not be so ancient that the "memory of man runneth not to the contrary," nor need it contain the other elements of a common-law custom. Lane v. Union Nat. Bank of Massillon, 29 N. E. 613, 615, 3 Ind. App. 299; Morningstar v. Cunningham, 11 N. E. 593, 595, 110 Ind. 328, 59 Am. Rep. 211.

"The usage of merchants constitutes the law of merchants. It is a rule of their own making, and binds when no other law is applicable. The influence of usage is universal. It attaches to nations and to individuals. It creates obligations. It interprets laws. In all governments and in every community there are laws of usage and custom. Where a public officer has compensation fixed by a statute, though usage cannot alter the law, yet it is evidence of the construction given to the law and is binding on past transactions. Public officers may, by usage, be entitled to compensation for services beyond the line of their regular duty, and usage will regulate the amount of their compensation. General custom is a general law, and forms the law of contracts. It controls even the principles of law. The ancient, established, uniform, and known custom of persons engaged in any trade makes a law for that trade, though it is not applicable to other trades. It is their way of doing business. It is the rule to which all who enter that trade are understood to consent. It makes, supplies, and construes their contracts. Known and settled usages ought to be respected by courts and juries, unless such usages are against the laws or policies of the country." Wilcocks v. Phillips (U. S.) 29 Fed. Cas. 1198, 1203.

The true office of a usage of trade is to interpret the otherwise indeterminate intentions of parties, and to ascertain the nature of their contracts arising, not from express stipulation, but from mere implications and presumptions and actions of doubtful and equivocal character, and to fix and explain the meaning of words and expressions of doubtful and various senses. But, though usage is admissible to explain what is doubtful, it is not admissible to contradict what is plain. Proof of the usage is admissible in the absence of express stipulations, or where the meaning of the parties is uncertain upon the language used, and where the usage of trade to which it was made may afford explanation and supply deficiencies in the instrument. Technical, local, or doubtful words may be thus explained. So, where stipulations in the contract refer to matters outside the instrument, parol proof of extraneous facts is admissible to interpret their meaning. As a general rule, however, there must be ambiguity or uncertainty upon the face of a written instrument arising out of the terms used by the parties, and when such evidence is admissible it must be limited in its effect to the clearing up of the obscurity. It is not admissible to add or ingraft upon the contract new stipulations or to contradict those which are plain. McCarthy v. McArthur, 63 S. W. 56, 57, 69 Ark. 313 (citing Oelricks v. Ford, 64 U. S. [23 How.] 49, 63, 16 L. Ed. 534; First Nat. Bank v. Burkhardt, 100 U. S. 686, 692, 25 L. Ed. 766).

A usage of trade of which all dealers in that line of trade are bound to take notice must be known, must be uniform, must be certain. Woldert v. Arledge, 23 S. W. 1052, 1053, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 692.

A usage of so doubtful an authority as to be known only to a few, and where merchants engaged in the trade differ as to the existence of it, can never be regarded. Collings v. Hope (U. S.) 6 Fed. Cas. 111.

"The truest test of a commercial usage is its having existed a sufficient length of time to have become generally known, and to warrant a presumption that contracts are made in reference to it." Smith v. Wright (N. Y.) 1 Caines, 43, 45, 2 Am. Dec. 162.

"The usage or custom of a particular port in a particular trade is not such a custom as the law contemplates to limit or control or qualify the language of contracts of insurance. It must be some known general usage or custom in the trade, applicable and applied to all parts of the states where it exists, and from its character and extent so notorious that all such contracts of insurance in that trade must be presumed to be entered into by the parties with reference to it as a part of the policy. If the usage or custom be not so notorious, if it be partial or local in its existence or adoption, if it be a mere matter of profit and personal opinion of a few persons engaged therein, it would be most dangerous to allow it to control the solemn contracts of the parties who are not or cannot be presumed to know it, or to adopt it as a rule to govern their own rights and interests. Rogers v. Mechanics' Ins. Co. (U. S.) 20 Fed. Cas. 1118, 1120.

The usages adopted by individuals concerned in any course of business—for instance, in the negotiation of promissory notes by which loans are obtained and renewed at banks—become, as to those parties, rules by which their contracts are to be construed, and in any circumstance not ascertained by express stipulation, and expressly as to privileges dependent on legal implication and construction, and understood to be reserved for the particular benefit of the individual. What is known among the parties to be usual in their course of business is to be taken as consented to, and to have the same effect as if inserted in their contract. Lincoln & Kennebeck Bank v. Page, 9 Mass. 155, 156, 6 Am. Dec. 52.

Where a usage in a particular trade or business is known, uniform, reasonable, and not contrary to law or opposed to public policy, evidence of such usage may be considered in ascertaining the otherwise uncertain meaning of a contract, unless proof of such usage contradicts the express terms of the contract. This is so, even though the usage be that of a particular person, provided it be known to the parties concerned, or providing it has been so long continued or has become so generally known and notorious in the place or neighborhood as to justify the presumption that it must have been known to the parties. Parties who are engaged in a particular trade or business, or accustomed to deal with those engaged in a particular business, may be presumed to have knowledge of the uniform course of such business. Its usages may therefore, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, reasonably be supposed to have entered into and formed a part of their contracts and understandings in relation to such business as ordinary incidents thereto. Proof of a usage that abbreviations used in a contract had a definite and settled meaning in the business world, in the neighborhood where the notes were payable, was proper, and the proof was not required to be coextensive with the state. Lane v. Union Nat. Bank of Massillon, 29 N. E. 613, 615, 3 Ind. App. 299.

In order for a "usage" to constitute a defense to a master of a ship for transshipping or changing the vehicle or conveyance of goods shipped for the voyage on freight, the course of the trade must be uniform and general. It should be so well settled that persons engaged in the trade must be considered as contracting with reference to the usage. Trott v. Wood (U. S.) 24 Fed. Cas. 218.

Where there is no contract, proof of usage will not make one, and usage can only be admitted, either to interpret the meaning of the language employed by the parties, or where the meaning is equivocal or obscure. Municipal Inv. Co. v. Industrial & General Trust Co. (U. S.) 89 Fed. 254, 256.

A usage, to be binding in the naval service, must be uniform, and applicable to all officers of the same grade under similar circumstances. United States v. Buchanan (U. S.) 24 Fed. Cas. 1282.

Custom distinguished.

A "usage," in its most extensive meaning, includes both custom and prescription; but in its narrower signification the term refers to a general habit, mode, or course of procedure. A usage differs from a custom, in that it does not require that the usage should be immemorial to establish it; but the usage must be known, certain, uniform, reasonable, and not contrary to law. Lowry v. Read (Pa.) 3 Brewst. 452, 456.

There is a clear distinction between usage, however general, and custom. Usage is local practice, and must be proved. Custom is general practice, judicially noticed without proof. Usage is the fact. Custom is the law. There may be usage without custom, but there can be no custom without usage to accompany or precede it. Usage consists of a repetition of acts. Custom arises out of this repetition. Usage is inductive, based on consent of persons in a locality. Custom is deductive, making established local usage a law. Power v. Bowdle, 54 N. W. 404, 410, 3 N. D. 107, 21 L. R. A. 328, 44 Am. St. Rep. 511 (citing Whart. Ev. § 965; And. Law Dict. "Custom and Usage").

A custom is something which has by its universality and antiquity acquired the force and effect of law in a particular place or country in respect to the subject-matter to which it relates, and is ordinarily taken notice of without proof, and is distinguishable from a usage of trade; for when a usage in a particular trade or business is known, uniform, reasonable, and not contrary to law or opposed to public policy, evidence of such usage may be considered in ascertaining the otherwise uncertain meaning of a contract, unless the proof of such usage contradicts the express terms of the agreement. This is so, even though the usage be that of a particular person, provided it be known to the parties concerned, or provided it has been so long continued or has become so generally known and notorious in the place or neighborhood as to justify the presumption that it must have been known to the parties. Parties who have engaged in a particular trade or business, or persons accustomed to deal with those engaged in a particular business, may be presumed to have knowledge of the uniform course of such business. Its usages may, therefore, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, reasonably be supposed to have entered into and formed part of their contracts and understandings in relation to such business, as ordinary incidents thereto. Morningstar v. Cunningham, 11 N. E. 593, 595, 110 Ind. 328, 59 Am. Rep. 211.

"Custom" and "usage" may be treated as synonymous. Thayer v. Smoky Hollow Coal Co., 96 N. W. 718, 719, 121 Iowa, 121.

USAGE AND ACQUIESCENCE.

The phrase "usage and acquiescence," as used in Gen. Laws, c. 142, § 3, providing that the division of partition fences may be established by usage and acquiescence for 20 years, may have the same meaning as the phrase "any right and privilege claimed and enjoyed for 20 years by one party and acquiesced in by the other." Both expressions may signify a right claimed and enjoyed under and in performance of an agreement, express or implied, as well as a right claimed and enjoyed adversely without an agreement. This is the natural and ordinary meaning of the words. Gibson v. Heyward, 30 Atl. 407, 408, 67 N. H. 265.

USAGE AND PRACTICE OF WAR.

"Usage and practice of war," as used in a statute requiring the Governor of the state, in revoking the commission of an Adjutant General, to proceed according to the usage and practice of war, does not mean the rules and articles of war. Mauran v. Smith, 8 R. I. 192, 222, 5 Am. Rep. 564.

USE.

See "Statute of Uses"; "Superstitious Use."

A use is a right in one person to have the use or profits or beneficial interest in land, and another person to have the right; that is, to be the legal or formal possessor or tenant of it. Cuyler v. Bradt (N. Y.) 2 Caines, Cas. 326, 332.

A "use" is where the legal estate of lands was in a certain person, and the trust was also reposed in him, with some other person who took and enjoyed the profits; in other words, a use was a mere confidence in a friend that the feoffee to whom the lands were given should permit the feoffor and his heirs, and such other person as he might designate, to receive the profits of the land. Ware v. Richardson, 3 Md. 505, 547, 56 Am. Dec. 762.

A use is where the legal estate of lands is in a certain person, and a trust is also reposed in him, and all persons claiming in privity under him concerning those lands, that some other person shall take the profits, and be so seised or possessed of that legal estate to make and execute estates according to the direction of the person or persons for whose benefit the trust was created. Nease v. Capehart, 8 W. Va. 95, 105 (citing Gilbert, Uses & Trusts, pp. 1, 2, 59, 270).

A use, before the statute, was a purely equitable interest, and might be raised after a limitation in fee, or it might be created in futuro without any preceding limitation in fee, or the order of priority might be changed by shifting uses or by powers, or a power of revocation might be reserved to the grantor or a stranger to recall and change the uses. Ricker v. Brown, 67 N. E. 353, 354, 183 Mass. 424 (citing 4 Kent, Comm. 293).

"A use is said to be neither jus in re nor ad rem; neither right, title, nor interest in law, but a species of property unknown to the common law, and owing its existence to the equitable jurisdiction of chancery, resting upon confidence in the person and privity of estate; a thing collateral to the land, and only annexed to a particular estate in it, not to the mere possession; so that, when the estate to which the use is annexed is destroyed, the use itself is destroyed, as by disseisin or the entry of tenant by curtesy or in dower. It was rather a hold upon the conscience of the feoffee to uses than a lien upon or interest in the land, and the principle upon which it was founded was that the feoffee was bound in conscience to follow the direction of the feoffor. A thing so subtle, and cognizable only in courts of equity, which act upon the conscience, differs essentially from an incorporeal hereditament, which is of legal cognizance." McCartee v. Orphan Asylum Soc. (N. Y.) 9 Cow. 437, 511, 518, 18 Am. Dec. 516.

Prior to St. 27 Hen. VIII, c. 10, the words "use" and "trust" were regarded as convertible terms. And although, even in that statute, the word "trust" is mentioned as well as the word "use"—for it classes "trusts," "uses," and "confidences" in one category, and undertakes to apply the same remedy to all by uniting the legal with the equitable interest, and thus creating a new legal estate (see 1 Sand. Uses & Trusts, 70-84)—still the distinction between the two terms is practical, substantial, and important. And because in none of our reported cases this distinction is clearly presented, we propose briefly to illustrate it at this time. The elementary writers call our attention to three things as essential to the effectual operation of the statute of uses, namely, a person seised to a use, a cestui que use, and a use in esse (1 Cruise, Dig. 349; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 113), and, when these three things concur, the use is said to be executed (Bac. Law Tracts, 351; 1 Sand. 97, 98; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 119); that is, "the statute comes in and actually transfers the seisin and possession from the feoffee to use to the cestui que use, to all intents and purposes, without any actual entry being necessary to give him the seisin. It is not merely a title, but an actual estate, which is thus created in the cestui que use, as effectually as if it had been done by a conveyance with livery of seisin at common law." When, therefore, the three elements referred to existed, the use was said to become executed, and full effect was given to the statute, and thereupon only one interest or estate remained. But a trust, technically speaking, was and is practically different. A trust may, and perhaps ordinarily does, exist only where the use is incapable of being thus executed; and so the legal estate is necessarily left as at common law. Hutchins v. Heywood, 50 N. H. 491, 495.

If the beneficial interest which one person has in land, which in the eye of the common law belongs to another, is a permanent enjoyment of the benefits or profits of the land, it is a use; if the interest is for a temporary purpose, it is a trust. Hutchins v. Heywood, 50 N. H. 491, 495.

In Act Jan. 31, 1799, providing that the widow shall be endowed of all the lands, tenements, and other real estate whereof her husband or any other to his use was seised of an estate or inheritance at any time during the coverture, the phrase "or any other to his use" should be construed strictly as meaning merely a use, and that it did not embrace a trust. Montgomery v. Bruere, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 260, 265.

The word "use," in a statute providing that a widow shall be endowed of all tenements and other real estate whereof her husband or any other to his use was seised of an estate of inheritance at any time during coverture to which she has not relinquished or released her right of dower by deed, refers to land so held for the husband by another under such circumstances as entitles the husband or his heirs to a conveyance of the legal estate and the actual seisin and possession of the land. The statute cannot be construed to give the widow a dower interest of a purely equitable estate in lands, of which lands her husband never had and never could have seisin in law or in deed. Yeo v. Mercereau, 18 N. J. Law (3 Har.) 387, 393.

In civil law.

Use is the right given to any one to make a gratuitous use of a thing belonging to another, or to exact such a portion of the fruit it produces as is necessary for his personal wants and those of his family. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 626.

A use is defined by Eschriche as the right which a person has to use or enjoy the property of another according to his interests. It is one of the three personal servitudes, which are "use," "usufruct," and "habitation." It is established by contract, by last will, and by prescription, etc. Mulford v. Le Franc, 26 Cal. 88, 102.

"Use" is distinguished from "usufruct" in this: That, while usufruct carries the right to enjoy all the fruits and revenues which the property subjected to it can produce, use consists in taking only from the fruits of the property the portion which the user can consume—such as is necessary for his person or regulated by the title. The surplus belongs to the owner of the property. Dom. Civil Law, tit. 11, § 11, art. 1. Use is a limited usufruct for the needs of the user, and it is veritable usufruct except as to extent of enjoyment. They are bought and established and lost in the same way. The user must, like the usufructuary, give security, make statements and inventories. He is subject to the costs of cultivation, to those of keeping in repair, to the payment of contributions. There is a difference between the two rights only as to their extent. The usufructuary has the right to enjoy all sorts of fruits, while the user can require only such as are necessary for himself and family. Strausse v. Sheriff, 9 South. 102, 103, 43 La. Ann. 501 (citing Demolombe, c. 10, p. 713, No. 752; 7 Laurent, p. 118, No. 1023; Civ. Code, tit. 3, c. 1, §§ 1-5).

USE-USED.

Domestic use, see "Domestic."

Otherwise use, see "Otherwise."

"Use," as one kind of unwritten law, is defined to be "that which has arisen from those things which a man uses and does, and is of long continuance and without interruption." Strother v. Lucas, 37 U. S. (12 Pet.) 410, 445, 9 L. Ed. 1137.

The word "used" imports a certain degree of permanence. Commonwealth v. Patterson, 138 Mass. 498, 500.

"Use" is defined as "to employ for any purpose." Such use may be temporary or permanent. Brown v. McKee (N. Y.) 2 City Ct. R. 320, 335.

Though the word "used" may sometimes mean employed for a particular purpose on a single occasion, or on two separate occasions, a single sale does not constitute a use of a building. State v. Stanley, 24 Atl. 983, 984, 84 Me. 555.

A by-law of the city of London forbidding any nonfreeman to show or put to sale wares within the city or to "use any art" within the same signifies to use as a master or principal. Clark v. Denton, 1 Barn. & Adol. 92, 101.

The Constitution of 1777 provided that trial by jury, in all cases in which it has been heretofore "used," shall remain inviolate forever. It was held that as the unwritten common law of England was largely made up of customs which had existed for a period where the memory of man was not to the contrary, and this law was enforced in the colonies, and no statute specified the cases in which parties were entitled to a trial by jury, the word "used" must therefore of necessity have referred to the customs then existing. Malone v. St. Peter & St. Paul's Church, 64 N. E. 961, 962, 172 N. Y. 269.

As benefit or profit.

In a deed conveying land to the board of trustees of the County Seminary of R. county and their successors in office, forever, to have and to hold the premises, with all the appurtenances, to the only proper use, benefit, and behoof of said board of trustees for the use of said seminary, forever, "use" is synonymous with "benefit," one of its definitions being the benefit or profit of lands and tenements, and does not create a condition subsequent that the premises are only to be used as a site for a seminary edifice; a condition being a qualification or restriction annexed to a conveyance of lands, whereby it is provided that in case a particular event does or does not happen, or in case the grantor or grantees do or omit to do a particular act, an estate shall commence, be enlarged, or be defeated. Heaston v. Randolph County Com'rs, 20 Ind. 398, 402.

In an instruction in a prosecution for larceny regarding defendant's having received money for the "use and benefit" of another, the addition of the words "and benefit" did not change the evident meaning of the instruction, and did not give a different meaning than that conveyed by the statute, which used only the word "use." State v. Brooks, 52 N. W. 240, 242, 85 Iowa, 366.

Where by a will a person is given the "use" of a thing, the word "use" does not mean that such person is given the thing itself, but means that the user is to enjoy, hold, occupy, or have in some manner the benefit thereof. Brunson v. Martin, 52 N. E. 599, 601, 152 Ind. 111.

A use is where a man has anything to the use of another, upon confidence that the other shall take the profits. He who has the profits has the use. Allen v. McGee, 62 N. E. 1002, 1008, 158 Ind. 465.

"The use of a thing is not the thing itself, or any part thereof, but is that which the thing will produce. If a house or other building, or any other form of real estate, it is the rent that can be obtained for it. If it is money, it is the interest it will earn." Spooner v. Phillips, 24 Atl. 524, 525, 62 Conn. 62, 16 L. R. A. 461.

As controlled.

A petition in an action against a railroad for personal injuries, stating that the defendant "used and operated" a turntable in connection with its railroad, etc., is equivalent to a charge that the defendant controlled such turntable. Nagel v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 75 Mo. 653, 660, 42 Am. Rep. 418.

As employ.

The word "use" means to make use of; to convert to one's own service; to avail one's self of; to employ; to put to a purpose, as to use a plow, to use a chair, to use a book, to use time, or to use flour for food; to accustom; to habituate, etc. State v. Davis (Del.) 33 Atl. 439, 440, 9 Houst. 558; State v. Lawrence County (S. D.) 92 N. W. 16, 17.

The word "use" is synonymous with employment. Hightower v. State, 72 Ga. 482, 484.

"Use" means to "put to use, to employ, or to derive service from." Astor v. Merritt, 4 Sup. Ct. 413, 419, 111 U. S. 202, 28 L. Ed. 401.

"Used," in Act June 29, 1888, c. 496, § 4, 25 Stat. 209 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3536], providing that any boat or vessel used or employed in violating any provisions of the act should be liable, etc., means to make use of, or to put to a purpose. Practically the words "used" and "employed" are synonymous. Every boat or vessel put to the purpose of violating the provisions of the statute is liable to the penalties, and to be put to such or any purpose necessarily requires antecedent determination on the part of her master or owners, or of some one with sufficient authority, that she shall perform such purpose. A vessel can only be used or employed by or with the consent of the person who has the legal right to use and employ. United States v. The Anjer Head (U. S.) 46 Fed. 684.

In Act Cong. March 3, 1851, 9 Stat. 635, declaring that no owner of a ship shall be liable to answer for damage by fire, unless caused by design or neglect, and providing by section 7 that the act shall not apply to the owner of any vessel used in rivers or inland navigation, the word "used" means "employed," and refers to vessels solely employed in rivers or inland navigation. Moore v. American Transp. Co., 65 U. S. (24 How.) 1, 37, 16 L. Ed. 674.

In Civ. Prac. Act, § 197, providing the manner in which the statement on motion for a new trial shall be prepared, and declaring that the statement "thus used" shall constitute the papers to be used on appeal, the words "thus used" mean employed as the record of the proceedings on which the motion is grounded; and, whenever a statement is prepared and settled, it is "used," within the meaning of that word in the statute. The act imposes no obligation on the trial court to use such statement on the hearing of said motion. State v. Central Pac. R. Co., 30 Pac. 887, 889, 17 Nev. 259.

As expended.

The word "use" has been variously defined as to employ for the accomplishment of a purpose; to turn to account; to make use of; to treat; to convert to one's service; to avail one's self of; to employ; to put to a purpose; to employ for the attainment of some purpose or end. As used in Const. art. 7, § 13, par. 1, providing that the proceeds of a sale of certain railroads held by the state and any other property owned by the state shall be applied to the payment of a bonded debt of the state, and "shall not be used for any other purpose whatever so long as the state has any existing bonded debt," means that the fund shall not be laid out, paid out, or expended in the discharge of any other claim for which the state is liable. Park v. Candler, 39 S. E. 89, 90, 113 Ga. 647.

As intentional use.

A fire policy provided that friction matches and camphine should not be used in the building insured. Held, that the word "use" did not embrace a casual use of camphine and friction matches by a workman employed in the building, contrary to the orders of the assured; the use of camphine and friction matches contemplated in such clause being a use by the authority of the assured, either express or implied. Farmers' & Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. Simmons, 30 Pa. (6 Casey) 299, 303.

Act June 29, 1888, c. 496, 25 Stat. 209 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3533], prohibiting the dumping of mud from scows in the North river within prescribed limits, and declaring that any boat or vessel used or employed in violating any provision of the act shall be liable to penalties imposed, means a boat or vessel used in violating the act to the knowledge and intent of her officers, and does not include a tug which was proceeding in good faith to the prescribed dumping ground when the scows in tow were dumped by the scowmen within the prescribed limits against the express orders of the captain and officers of the tug. The Emperor (U. S.) 49 Fed. 751, 753.

As interest.

In a contract for the reconveyance of property sold on the payment of the exact amount of the consideration for the original conveyance and $300 a month for the use thereof, "use" should be construed to mean "interest." Hickox v. Lowe, 10 Cal. 197, 207.

Mortgage or sale not authorized.

The phrase "use and apply" the property bequeathed in trust to the support of testator's son, if it meant merely to sell the property and use the money received to support the son, or if it was intended that the trustee should receive the rents and profits and apply them only to the son's support, did not give a right to mortgage the estate. Potter v. Hodgman, 80 N. Y. Supp. 1056, 1057, 81 App. Div. 233.

Where land was devised to the widow for her use and benefit for life, a mortgage thereon by her to pay for valuable improvements for her benefit was an equitable incumbrance on the estate of the remainderman, notwithstanding the will gave her no power to mortgage. In re Jenks, 43 Atl. 871, 21 R. I. 390.

A testator, in devising to C. the use of $1,000 and certain lots, with the further provision that C. may "invest or use all this property as he may in his discretion think best," authorized a sale of the property by the devisee. Crawford v. Wearn, 20 S. E. 724, 725, 115 N. C. 540.

A general authority in a stock note to "use, transfer, or hypothecate" the pledged property does not authorize a sale by the pledgee before maturity of the note. Ogden v. Lathrop, 3 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Sweeny) 643, 651.

A provision in a chattel mortgage that the mortgagor might retain and "use" the mortgaged property did not amount to consent to sell the property. Estes v. First Nat. Bank, 63 Pac. 788, 792, 15 Colo. App. 526.

One to whom property is bequeathed for her "use" during life is not clothed with the power of disposition; for the word "use" confines the estate to the hands of the first taker, since one having a right to "use" cannot possess absolute power of alienation. Goudie v. Johnston, 10 N. E. 206, 297, 109 Ind. 427.

As occupied.

"Used," in a fire policy stating the purposes in which the insured property is "used," is to be construed as synonymous with "occupied." Smith v. Mechanics' & Traders' Fire Ins. Co., 32 N. Y. 399, 402.

Title conveyed.

"Use," as used in a will giving a husband the use of all property of testator, will not convey or pass the title to him. In re Metcalf's Estate, 27 N. Y. Supp. 879, 880, 6 Misc. Rep. 524.

A conveyance of the use of land, forever, is equivalent to a conveyance of the land. Farrar v. Cooper, 34 Me. 394, 397.

A devise of the use and services of slaves is equivalent to a devise of the slaves themselves. Pournell v. Harris, 29 Ga. 736, 742.

Where a testator devised land to certain of his sons without words of inheritance, and then devised to another son the use of a certain tract of land, the word "use" should be construed to vest an estate in fee, rather than a life estate. Hance v. West, 32 N. J. Law (3 Vroom) 233, 235.

The word "use," in a will bequeathing to testator's wife the "use" of all testator's real and personal property, creates a life estate in the wife. Schwartz v. Gehring, 7 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 426, 4 Cir. Dec. 662.

A "use," a "trust," and a "confidence" is one and the same thing, and if an estate is conveyed to one person for the use of or upon a trust for another, and nothing more is said, the statute immediately transfers the legal estate to the usee, and no trust is created, though express words of trust are used. Teller v. Hill, 72 Pac. 811, 812, 18 Colo. App. 509 (citing Perry, Trusts [5th Ed.] 298).

As transferred.

A bona fide holder of a postdated check, who was told at the time he bought it from the payee that it had been given on an agreement that the payee should not use it until the day of its date, is not bound to understand by the word "use" that the check was not to be transferred before that date. Bill v. Stewart, 31 N. E. 388, 156 Mass. 508.

As value.

"Use and benefit," as used in an information alleging the stealing of certain property with the fraudulent intention on the part of defendant to deprive the owner of the "use and benefit" of the same, is not equivalent to "value," as used in the statute, which requires the property to be taken with intent to deprive the owner of the "value" of the same, and hence the information was defective. Jones v. State, 12 Tex. App. 424, 425.

Use a highway.

A grant to a railway company of the right to use an existing highway is not to be construed as a power to destroy the highway as such. This is the rule of construction, unless the language of the statute is such as to unmistakably show an intention to grant such power. Palatka & I. R. R. Co. v. State, 3 South. 158, 162, 23 Fla. 546, 11 Am. St. Rep. 395.

Use for life.

The words "use for life," as used in a statute giving a surviving spouse the "use of the realty for life," are sufficient to create a life estate, on the ground that a gift or devise of the rents, profits, and income of land passes the land itself. Thompson v. Thompson, 18 South. 247, 249, 107 Ala. 163.

Use for sexual intercourse.

The word "use" in a statute providing a punishment for whoever uses a female under the age of consent for the purpose of sexual intercourse does not have reference to the one who immediately uses her. It may be a male or it may be a female. State v. Davis (Del.) 33 Atl. 439, 440, 9 Houst. 558.

Use liquor or opium.

"Use," within the meaning of a question in an application for life policy whether the applicant uses malt or spirituous beverages, is to be construed as referring to a customary and habitual use, and not to a single act or occasional use. Chambers v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 67 N. W. 367, 369, 64 Minn. 495, 58 Am. St. Rep. 549; Van Valken- burgh v. American Popular Life Ins. Co., 70 N. Y. 605, 606.

A statement by an applicant for a life policy that he has "never used liquor" should be construed to mean that he has never used liquor for a beverage, and not that he has never taken liquor for medical purposes. Higbee v. Guardian Mut. Life Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 66 Barb. 462, 472.

An application for a life policy in which the applicant states that he has "never used opium" should be construed to mean that he has not used opium when not required for medical purposes, and not to mean that he has never taken the drug for medical purposes. Higbee v. Guardian Mut. Life Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 66 Barb. 462, 472.

Use liquor to excess.

The common term or phrase "uses liquor to excess," when applied to a person, is ordinarily understood to mean the same as saying that he gets intoxicated or drunk, and saying that such a person did so at particular times would generally be understood as meaning that these times occur as often as he finds an opportunity to do so. State v. Pratt, 34 Vt. 323, 324.

Use obscene language.

Code, § 4372, making it a misdemeanor to "use obscene language in the presence of a female," means the use by speech, unless one or both of the parties, by reason of some deficiency or infirmity, would not ordinarily or habitually communicate in that way, and does not include the use of written words, though the word "language" is broad enough to include words written, as well as words spoken. Stevenson v. State, 16 S. E. 95, 90 Ga. 456.

Use of the county.

The expression "for the use of the county" has the same meaning as "for the public use of the county," as used in Laws 1860, c. 15, § 2, authorizing a county to purchase and hold real and personal estate for the use of the county. Shepard v. Murray County, 24 N. W. 291, 292, 33 Minn. 519; James v. Wilder, 25 Minn. 305, 311.

Use of gristmill.

The phrase "water for the use of said gristmill," in a deed conveying land with a gristmill thereon, together with a water right for the use of said mill in a spring not situated on the land conveyed, clearly and unequivocally means that the water shall be used as a power in operating the mill. Such is the common and well-accepted meaning of the language employed in making the grant, and therefore the grantee has no right to use the water of the spring for other purposes. Woodring v. Hollenbach, 51 Atl. 318, 319, 202 Pa. 65.

Use of the inhabitants of parish.

"Use," as contained in St. 11 Geo. III, directing that commissioners set out and allot a certain portion of the common lands for the getting of stone, gravel, and other materials for the repairs of the highway and other roads, to be set out under the act and "for the use of the inhabitants" within the parish, did not authorize the inhabitants to take such materials for their private purposes, but only for the repairs of the roads. Rylatt v. Marflett, 14 Mees. & W. *233.

Use of invention.

A sale of a patented article imported from abroad is a "use" of the invention, within the letters patent, prohibiting any one to "make, use, or put in practice" such invention. Walton v. Lavater, 8 O. B. 162, 185.

Use of land.

In Lateral Railroad Act Feb. 17, 1871 (P. L. 56), requiring the assessment of damages to the owner of land taken, and requiring that the uses and purposes to which the land is put shall be considered, the phrase "uses and purposes" means and was intended to cover both the owner's present and future needs; the immediate uses of the land, and his future designs, plans, or purposes relative to its use. Hays v. Briggs (Pa.) 3 Pittsb. R. 504, 517.

To cultivate and have the use of lands amounts to a receipt of the rents and profits thereof, and therefore a person cultivating and having the use of land may be charged in a proper case with the receipt of the rents and profits. Thompson v. Bostick (S. C.) McMul. Eq. 75, 76.

A reservation of the "use and occupancy" of the land during the lifetime of the grantors, followed by an agreement by the grantee to "use, occupy, and enjoy the right reserved, and to pay therefor all taxes, together with a stipulated rent," as construed in accordance with the practical construction shown by the continuous occupancy of the grantee, who had, however, ceased to pay the rent, means that the use and occupancy were to be made available to the grantors through the use by the grantee, who was to make, during the grantors' lives, a stipulated payment which they called "rent," but which was really a charge on the land, the failure to pay which would forfeit neither the estate nor the right of possession. Hardwick v. Laderoot, 39 Mich. 419.

"Use and occupy," as used in a devise of certain lands to a trustee, in trust to permit testator's son-in-law to use and occupy the same for and during the term of his natural life, "is equivalent to a disposition thereof in trust for him or to his use." Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Moran, 14 N. W. 805, 30 Minn. 165.

Where a wife was given for life the use of a farm, and occupied it and enjoyed its products, she was entitled to the use of it, but not to cultivate it at the expense of the children. Crane v. Van Duyne, 9 N. J. Eq. (1 Stockt.) 259, 260.

A devise of the income, rents, and use of the real estate is equivalent to a devise of the real estate for the time fixed in the will. In re France's Estate, 75 Pa. (25 P. F. Smith) 220, 224.

"Use and occupy," as contained in a deed reserving to the grantors the right to use and occupy the premises for five years, are equivalent to the right to the "use and occupancy," and import a general right in the grantors to use and occupy, either by themselves or others. Cooney v. Hayes, 40 Vt. 478, 483, 94 Am. Dec. 425.

In a will giving to testator's wife the use and improvement of one-third of all his real estate, "use" is not to be taken in its strict legal and technical meaning, but its more general and popular acceptation, and refers to a temporary occupancy of the land, rather than to an estate in it coupled with the power of alienation. The word "use" is not ordinarily selected to convey a permanent interest in land, nor is such its natural import or meaning. Fay v. Fay, 55 Mass. (1 Cush.) 93, 104.

Use of money.

A will giving to testator's wife the use of his moneys during her natural life implies the possession of the moneys and putting them to the use of the legatee as she may have occasion, though the word "use" as employed in the will is ambiguous, and may mean the interest only, as well as implying the possession of the moneys and the putting them to the use of the legatee as she might have occasion. Patterson v. Stewart, 38 Mich. 402, 403.

Use of party wall.

In Code, § 2994, relating to party walls, and authorizing the owner to recover one-half of the value of so much of the wall as used by the other party, the word "use" has reference to the habitual or permanent employment of the means to the accomplishment of a purpose, and this purpose is the utilization of the standing wall as a part of its permanent structure, so that the use of only a footing course does not constitute the use of a party wall. Monroe Lodge, No. 8, I. O. O. F., v. Albia State Bank, 84 N. W. 682, 683, 112 Iowa, 487 (citing Beggs v. Duling, 102 Iowa, 13, 70 N. W. 732).

As used in McClain's Code, § 3195, relating to party walls, and providing that, if a person refuses to contribute to the building of such wall, he shall yet retain the right of making it a wall in common by paying to the person one-half of the appraised value at the time of using it, the word "use" has reference to the habitual or permanent employment of the means to the accomplishment of a purpose, which is the utilization of the standing wall as a part of some permanent structure, so that temporary utilization is not sufficient to charge the adjoining owner. Beggs v. Duling, 70 N. W. 732, 734, 102 Iowa, 13.

Use of plank road.

Where a deed grants all the grantor's right, title, and interest to land for the use of a plank road, only an easement passes. Robinson v. Missisquoi R. Co., 59 Vt. 423, 10 Atl. 522 (cited in Uhl v. Ohio River R. Co., 41 S. E. 340, 343, 51 W. Va. 106).

Use a port.

A warranty in a policy of insurance not to use ports in certain countries ordinarily means to enter them, and the warranty is not broken until such a port is entered; but where a voyage is taken for the sole purpose of landing at a prohibited port, and the vessel is lost before reaching the port, the warranty will be considered broken when the vessel started on the voyage. Snow v. Columbian Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 48 Barb. 469, 477.

"Use a port," as used in a guaranty in a policy of insurance not to use a port in certain countries, means to go into the port harbor or haven for pleasure, commerce, or territory, and to derive a benefit or advantage from its protection. Wheeler v. New York Mut. Ins. Co., 35 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Jones & S.) 247, 252. It does not embrace a going near, sailing past, or going in the direction of it. Snow v. Columbian Ins. Co., 48 N. Y. 624, 627, 8 Am. Rep. 573.

Use of railroad.

"Use," in the charter of a transportation company, did not necessarily imply the use by running trains, but was satisfied by the road being kept in repair and used for earning tolls, under a lease to another road. Black v. Delaware & R. Canal Co., 22 N. J. Eq. (7 C. E. Green) 130, 411.

Code Iowa, § 1307, making the company liable for injuries caused by the negligence or mismanagement of fellow employees "when such wrongs are in any manner connected with the use and operation of any railway" about which they shall be employed, includes the use of a hand car by a section crew to return home after repairing the track. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Artery, 11 Sup. Ct. 129, 137 U. S. 507, 34 L. Ed. 747.

Laws 1839, c. 218, providing that it should be lawful for any railroad corporation to "contract" with any other railroad corporation "for the use" of their respective roads, cannot be construed to include a lease of a portion of a road, by which the lessee was to have and to hold the property, and containing a proviso that, in case any portion of the road should be used as a railway by it or under it, the lessee might terminate the lease on notice. Troy & B. R. Co. v. Boston, H. T. & W. Ry. Co., 86 N. Y. 107, 117.

Code 1873, § 1307, declaring that railroad companies shall be liable for injuries to employees caused by or directly connected with the "use and operation of the railway," is not limited to the actual running of trains on the railway, but includes the running of a single engine without cars attached, and also the propelling of a hand car, which, by reason of a collision with a flat car used by a section hand, caused plaintiff's injury. Larson v. Illinois Cent. Ry. Co., 58 N. W. 1076, 1077, 91 Iowa, 81.

An employé of a railroad company, who has duties consisting in wiping off the engines and opening and shutting the doors of a roundhouse, in which the engines are run, is not engaged in work connected with the "use and operation" of a railway, within the use of that phrase in the statute exempting persons engaged in occupations connected with the "use and operation" of railways from the rule of fellow servants. Malone v. Burlington, C. R. & N. Ry. Co., 21 N. W. 756, 757, 65 Iowa, 417, 54 Am. Rep. 11 (affirming Same v. Burlington, C. R. & N. Ry. Co., 61 Iowa, 328, 16 N. W. 203, 47 Am. Rep. 813).

Use of timber.

A grant of the "use of the timber" on the grantor's lands should be construed to confer only an incorporeal right to the use of the timber, and not to a conveyance of the title to the timber itself or the soil on which it grew. Clark v. Way (S. C.) 11 Rich. Law, 621, 625.

Use tracks.

Where a statute providing that any street surface railroad company may "use the tracks" of another street surface railroad company upon certain conditions, permission to use the tracks implies use for the purpose of operating its cars thereon, and no other. Colonial City Traction Co. v. Kingston City R. Co., 47 N. E. 810, 811, 153 N. Y. 540.

Use a weapon.

One who has reached for his pistol and partially drawn it from his pocket, with a remark, "By G——! I have got you now," is using the weapon, within Pen. Code, art. 571, providing that when a homicide takes place to prevent murder, if the "weapon used" by the party attempting or committing murder is such as would have been calculated to produce death, it is to be presumed that the person so using it designed to kill and murder. Ward v. State, 18 S. W. 793, 794, 30 Tex. App. 687.

It is the "use" of a dangerous weapon, within the meaning of the statute providing for the punishment of those who rob the United States mail by putting in jeopardy the life of the person having charge thereof by the use of dangerous weapons, to point a pistol at another, accompanied with words which denote intent to injure, or without words, if the pistol is so held as to plainly designate such intent in case of resistance or refusal to consent to the objects intended to be effected by its production and display. It need not be pointed at the person having the mail in charge, if it was intended to be used in case of resistance or refusal to surrender the mail, or if he saw the pistol or had cause to believe it was to be so used. United States v. Wilson (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 699, 708.

Used as an aqueduct.

The words "used as an aqueduct for the conveyance of water," in a statute making it criminal for any person to cut, injure, or destroy any leaden or other pipe used as an aqueduct for the conveyance of water, has reference to the use of the pipes at the time of the injury, and not to their general nature, or to the purpose for which they were originally intended, or the use to which they are put. To constitute an offense, an injury to the pipes must be while they form a part of the aqueduct. State v. Jones, 33 Vt. 443, 444.

Used as a dwelling house.

The phrase "used as a dwelling house," in a fire policy on a building stated to be used as a dwelling house, are words of description, and not of warranty. Heffron v. Kittanning Ins. Co., 20 Atl. 693, 703, 182 Pa. 580.

Used as a homestead.

Gen. St. c. 68, § 1, exempting from execution the dwelling house, etc., used or kept by a householder or head of family as a homestead, means "either actually occupied and used as a homestead, or else susceptible of such occupancy, and kept for the present right and purpose of so occupying and using such homestead." Bugbee v. Bemis, 50 Vt. 216, 219.

"Use" is the act of employing anything or the state of being so employed or applied, and hence, as used in homestead exemption statutes of Oklahoma, requiring that the same shall be used for the home of the family, requires occupancy of the homestead as an essential element of the homestead right. Ball v. Houston, 66 Pac. 358, 359, 11 Okl. 233.

Const. art. 16, § 52, providing that, on the death of the husband or wife, the homestead shall not be partitioned among the heirs of the deceased during the lifetime of the survivor, or so long as the survivor may elect to "use or occupy" the same as a homestead, does not mean that the survivor must reside on the homestead. When left, either from necessity or convenience, by the family, no matter for how long a time, so long as it contributes to the support of the family, it remains the homestead until title is acquired to another home, which is used and occupied as such. Foreman v. Meroney, 62 Tex. 723, 727.

Under the statute exempting from attachment premises of the debtor "actually used or kept as a homestead," where defendant deeded his interest in the premises to another, gathered materials to build another house, filed his petition to have a homestead set out from another part of the premises, and lived for several years in different towns, his actions were inconsistent with the keeping or using of the premises for a homestead. Whiteman v. Field, 53 Vt. 554, 556.

Under Gen. St. c. 68, § 1, providing that the homestead, consisting of land not exceeding $500 in value and used or kept as such homestead, shall be exempt, etc., where one owns two farms in different towns, making his home on one and residing there with his family, it is a homestead, although he intends to sell it and move onto the other in future. Goodall v. Boardman, 53 Vt. 92, 101.

Used as public highways.

1 Rev. St. p. 521, § 100, providing that all roads "used as public highways" for 20 years or more shall be deemed public highways, means that the user must be like that of highways generally. The road must not only be traveled on, but it must be kept in repair or taken in charge and adopted by the public authorities. The mere fact that a portion of the public traveled over a road for 20 years cannot make it a highway. The user, however, need not be adverse and under such circumstances as would be required to give an individual a right of way by prescription. Hence, where owners of land opened and fenced a strip of it, which was used by the public generally for travel for more than 20 years, and where it was mentioned in various deeds and maps as a road, does not show a user sufficient to constitute the strip a highway within the meaning of the statute, where the owners at the time of the opening and repeatedly thereafter declared that the road was a private way, and claimed the right to close it at any time; the road never having been adopted as a highway by the public authorities. Speir v. Town of New Utrecht, 24 N. E. 692, 694, 121 N. Y. 420.

Used by the debtor.

In the statute exempting from execution two horses, etc., "used by the debtor in obtaining the support of his family," the words "used by the debtor in obtaining the support of his family" are general, and restricted to no particular mode of use. They are answered when the team is hired to others for a compensation, which compensation goes into the general fund to support the family, as well as where the debtor himself goes with the team as its driver and adds the earnings of his labor to that of the team. Washburn v. Goodheart, 88 Ill. 229, 231.

Used for agricultural purposes.

Rev. St. § 2983, providing that certain property "used for agricultural purposes" should be exempt from execution as a homestead, etc., should be construed to include a parcel of land, though the owner did nothing with it, except to keep and feed his horse there. Binzel v. Grogan, 29 N. W. 895, 897, 67 Wis. 147.

Used for charitable or religious purposes.

A parsonage, belonging to a church society and used as the residence of the minister, is not within Const. art. 9, § 3, providing that churches and church property used for religious purposes shall be exempt from taxation, though some part of such parsonage is used for religious worship. Ramsey County v. Church of Good Shepherd, 47 N. W. 783, 784, 45 Minn. 229, 11 L. R. A. 175.

Property used partially for charitable purposes and partly for a store is not used for charitable purposes, within the meaning of the constitutional exemption. State v. Lawrence County (S. D.) 92 N. W. 16, 17.

Const. art. 207, providing that charitable institutions are exempt from taxation on "property owned and used" for their corporate purposes, should not be construed to include the property of such institutions, when leased or used for corporate income. State ex rel. Bertel v. Board of Assessors, 34 La. Ann. 574, 575.

The phrase "used exclusively for purposes of public worship," in a statute exempting from taxation property used exclusively for the purposes of public worship, may be properly used to characterize a Jewish synagogue, although the janitor lives with his family on the top floor, paying no rent and receiving a salary for his services. Shaarai Berocho v. City of New York, 18 N. Y. Supp. 792, 793, 60 N. Y. Super. Ct. 479.

Used for educational purposes.

Property owned by one person and used by another for a school purpose is not "used and set apart" for educational purposes within the meaning of such terms as used in Rev. St. 1881, § 6276, cl. 5, exempting from taxation every building "used and set apart" for educational purposes. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Kent, 50 N. E. 562, 563, 151 Ind. 349.

Const. art. 207, exempting from taxation buildings and property used for college or other school purposes, means property actually used for such purposes. Property held by private persons with the possible intention of using it for school purposes at some future time, but with nothing to fix the purpose or prevent the owner from abandoning it at will, is not used for such purposes within the statute. Enaut v. McGuire, 36 La. Ann. 804, 805, 51 Am. Rep. 14.

"Used," as found in the charter of a corporation organized for educational purposes providing that all real estate, not exceeding 100 acres, in land belonging to the corporation, should be exempt from taxation so long as the same should be used and the avails thereof expended solely for the purpose of education and instruction, applies to the land itself; and the land belonging to the corporation was intended to be exempt from taxation only so long as it was used for the purpose for which it was created. City of Hartford v. Hartford Theological Seminary, 34 Atl. 483, 485, 66 Conn. 475.

Under an exemption from taxation in an academy's charter as to "all lands, tenements, and personal estate that shall be given to the trustees for the use of the academy," a building used partly as a dormitory and students' boarding house and partly as a public house is not exempt. The phrase "for the use of" is not to be taken in the same sense as "for the benefit of." It is used in a more limited and restricted sense. The sole intent of the Legislature was to grant to the plaintiffs (trustees of the academy) exemption from taxation on such property, and such only, as was used by them directly in carrying on their enterprise—to their schoolhouses and lands, devoted immediately and exclusively to the purposes of their grant. Trustees of Phillips Exeter Academy v. Exeter, 58 N. H. 306, 307, 308, 42 Am. Rep. 589.

Const. 1870, art. 9, § 3, provides that property used for schools shall be exempt from taxation, including the real estate on which they are located, not leased or otherwise used for profit. The Monticello Female Seminary was originally located upon a tract of 8 acres of land, upon which were erected the buildings of the institution. Afterwards the corporation acquired three other tracts of land, of 40 acres, 20 acres, and 14¼ acres. All these tracts are within the common inclosure of the seminary grounds, with dividing fences within that common inclosure. These several tracts are used, a portion for walks and lawns for the exercise and benefit of the scholars, a part for gardening to supply the institution with vegetables, a part for an orchard to supply necessary fruit for the institution, a part for raising feed for stock, for pasturage, and for woodland, and all for the exclusive use of the institution and not "otherwise used with a view to profit." Held, that the lands are exempt from taxation, under the statute of exemption relating to property of institutions of learning. Monticello Female Seminary v. People, 106 Ill. 398, 399, 46 Am. Rep. 702.

The clause in Act March 5, 1864, exempting the property of the Colorado Seminary used exclusively for seminary purposes, precludes the exemption from applying to land owned by the seminary for the purpose of sale, though the proceeds are to be devoted to carrying out the purposes of the institution; but the statute only exempts the property which is in actual use, as the seminary buildings, campus, etc. The thought that ownership was intended to be the test is expressly negated. The clause, "while used exclusively for such purposes," denotes an intention to make something else besides ownership the criterion. If this be not so, then the clause in question is meaningless. The word "used" embodies a different thought from the word "owned." The phrase "used exclusively" is clearly a limitation upon the general ownership. It is employed in contradistinction to "ownership." It designates a specific part or portion of the property owned. County Com'rs v. Colorado Seminary, 21 Pac. 490, 491, 12 Colo. 497.

Used for farm or team work.

The words "used for team work," within the meaning of the statute exempting two horses kept and used for team work, is not to be construed as requiring the horses to be kept and used exclusively for team work, but an occasional use for such purposes is sufficient. Webster v. Orne, 45 Vt. 40, 42.

The phrase "kept and used for team work," in a statute exempting horses kept and used for team work, was held not to include a colt about two years old, which a boy who worked out kept at his father's place, although the colt was nearly two years old, and had been used to draw wood a short distance and for certain other work, and though it was intended to use the colt for team work. Sullivan v. Davis, 50 Vt. 648.

Acts 1866, No. 39, providing for the exemption from execution of horses "kept and used for team work," etc., should be construed to include a colt, though it be not in actual use at the time of the attachment, where the owner keeps it with the honest intention and purpose of using it within a reasonable time for team work, to enable him with the aid of the animal to procure a livelihood. Rowell v. Powell, 53 Vt. 302, 304.

Laws 1871, c. 30, exempts from attachment and execution beasts of the plow, when required for farming or teaming or other actual use. Held, that the word "use" does not mean a use of pleasure or trade or amusement, but means use in husbandry or some lawful and useful industry. Somers v. Emerson, 58 N. H. 48, 49.

Used for navigation.

The word "used," in Act 1825, declaring that "no person shall erect any milldam or other obstruction across any stream used for the purpose of navigation by boats, flats, or rafts of lumber or timber," etc., refers to the use of it which would give it a public character at the time the obstruction was made. State v. Cullum (S. C.) 2 Speers, 581, 584.

Used for railroad purposes.

P. L. p. 142, providing that all property of any railway company "used for railroad purposes" shall be assessed by a city board of assessors, applies to the authorized right of way of a railroad duly acquired, over which a railway has been constructed and in good faith operated, though it may not for the time being be wholly occupied by tracks or other railroad appliances. United New Jersey R. & Canal Co. v. City of New Jersey, 26 Atl. 185, 55 N. J. Law, 129.

Used for sale of intoxicating liquors.

An indictment for keeping a building used for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors is supported by proof that the defendant occupied the whole building and used part of it for the purpose alleged. Commonwealth v. Shattuck, 80 Mass. (14 Gray) 23.

The word "used," in Rev. St. c. 17, § 1, declaring that all places "used" as houses for the illegal sale or keeping of intoxicating liquors are common nuisances, implies habitual action, so that the sale of intoxicants on two different occasions in a dwelling house does not, as a matter of law, constitute it a common nuisance. State v. Stanley, 84 Me. 555, 561, 24 Atl. 983.

A building cannot be said to be "used" for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, within the meaning of Pub. St. c. 101, § 6, making a building so used a nuisance, on the strength of a single casual sale, made without premeditation in the course of a lawful business. The word "used" imports a certain degree of permanence. Commonwealth v. Patterson, 138 Mass. 498, 500.

"Used for," in Rev. St. c. 17, § 1, declaring that all places used for the illegal sale or keeping of intoxicating liquors are common nuisances, is not synonymous with "resorted to," as used in an indictment charging a person with keeping and maintaining a building occupied by himself as a saloon and shop, and resorted to for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquor. Neither word has any technical meaning attached to it. Both must therefore be construed in their ordinary signification. The building may be used by the occupant or keeper. It is resorted to by other persons. If used for sale, it must be understood that sales are made by the keeper or under his authority. If resorted to for that purpose, sales may or may not be made, and if made, are supposed to be made by the persons so resorting. State v. Dodge, 6 Atl. 875, 78 Me. 439.

Used for the transportation of freight.

The phrase "used for the transportation of freight and passengers," in a statute authorizing a canal company to charge tolls upon all boats, vessels, steamboats, and other craft used for the transportation of freight and passengers, modifies the designated vessels, as well as the words "other craft," and therefore the statute does not apply to tugs, while towing freight or passenger vessels through the canal or on their return trip. Sturgeon Bay & L. M. Ship Canal & Harbor Co. v. Leatham, 45 N. E. 422, 423, 164 Ill. 289.

Used in the business.

"Personal property used in the business," within the meaning of Act June 20, 1868, § 19, declaring if any false entry be made on a distiller's book, etc., with intent to defraud, the distillery and all personal property used in the business, etc., shall be forfeited to the United States, does not include distilled spirits found on the premises in which the business of distilling is carried on. United States v. 4,800 Gallons of Spirits (U. S.) 25 Fed. Cas. 1192.

Pub. St. c. 76, § 6, forbidding any person to assume or continue to use in his business the name of a person formerly connected with him in partnership, or the name of any other person, without written consent, means to use as part or all of the partnership name, so as to indicate that the person named is a member of the firm, and does not prohibit a person from describing himself as "successor to" another. Martin v. Bowker, 40 N. E. 766, 163 Mass. 461.

Used in the erection and construction of road work.

Board, groceries, tobacco, money, or other supplies furnished to the employees of a subcontractor employed to build a railroad are not used in the erection and construction of the road, and therefore the amount thereof does not constitute a mechanic's lien; but the railroad company is liable to the foreman of the subcontractor for the services while in the employ of the subcontractor. Ferguson v. Despo, 8 Ind. App. 523, 34 N. E. 575.

Used on the premises.

"Used," as employed in Code 1873, § 2017, declaring that a landlord shall have a lien for his rent on all crops grown on the premises and on any other personal property of the tenant which has been used on the premises and not exempt from execution, means that the landlord shall have a lien upon all work animals, tools, and machinery with which the premises have been cultivated, and all property to the maintenance or improvement of which the use of the premises has contributed; and hence the lien attaches to cattle used for the purpose of feeding and improving them in the ordinary ways, and where the premises are leased for the purpose of keeping cattle for sale and the cattle are so kept. Thompson v. Anderson, 53 N. W. 418, 419, 86 Iowa, 703.

The term "used," in Code, § 1270, providing that a landlord shall have a lien for his rent upon all crops grown upon the demised premises and upon any other personal property of the tenant which has been used on the premises during the term and is not exempt from execution, etc., is not employed in the limited sense to designate a use similar to that of agricultural implements. It was employed in a larger sense and as avoiding other terms, which would either too much widen or restrict the application of the lien. The use intended is only that which is incident to the nature and purposes of the occupation of the premises—the object of the tenancy. In this sense the cloths and goods of merchant tailors are used for the purposes of sale and for making up garments for customers, and the landlord has a lien thereon by virtue of the statute. Grant v. Whitwell, 9 Iowa, 152, 155.

USE AND OCCUPATION.

Change in use and occupation, see "Change."

The words "use and occupation" properly state the nature of the enjoyment of property by a tenant for life. Faxon v. Faxon, 55 N. E. 316, 317, 174 Mass. 509.

"Use and occupation," as used in a will by which testator gives to his son certain property for "his own use and occupancy" during the period of his life, gives a fee, there being no devise of the remainder; the testator meaning to give the use and occupation forever, which is equivalent to a devise in fee. Armstrong v. Michener, 28 Atl. 447, 448, 160 Pa. 21.

The term "use and occupation," as used in an agreement of partnership wherein a life tenant put into the business the use and occupation of a mill for a certain time against the time and experience of the other partner, means that the holder of the legal title is the landlord and the grantee of the use a mere tenant, with or without a specific agreement as to a rent charge. Hart v. Hart, 94 N. W. 890, 894, 117 Wis. 639 (citing Depere Co. v. Reynen, 65 Wis. 271, 22 N. W. 761).

Profits of a business is quite another insurance risk, and not at all covered by the phrase "use and occupancy." Tanenbaum v. Freundlich, 81 N. Y. Supp. 292, 39 Misc. Rep. 819; Michael v. Prussian Nat. Ins. Co., 171 N. Y. 25, 63 N. E. 810. Insurance on use and occupancy evidently relates to the business use which the property is capable of in its existing condition. Tanenbaum v. Simon, 81 N. Y. Supp. 655, 658, 40 Misc. Rep. 174.

"Insurance of use and occupation" is a modern development, and the Court of Appeals, in Michael v. Prussian Nat. Ins. Co., 171 N. Y. 25, 63 N. E. 810, has defined the phrase to relate to the business use which the property is capable of in its existing condition. If it is destroyed by fire, and its use becomes impossible, then during the period required for its reinstatement as property capable of use and occupation the owner is to be compensated according to the terms of the policy. Tanenbaum v. Freundlich, 81 N. Y. Supp. 292, 294, 39 Misc. Rep. 819.

In a policy insuring the "use and occupancy" of a grain elevator, and providing for indemnity as long as the owner is prevented from handling grain by reason of fire, insures the business use which the property is capable of in its existing condition, and not the loss of earnings and profits of business. "Use and occupancy," as terms of insurance, may assume within their general scope the expectation of profits and earnings derivable from property; but the terms appear to have a broader significance as to the subject of insurance, and to apply to the status of the property, and to its continued availability to the owner for any purpose he may be able to devote it to." Michael v. Prussian Nat. Ins. Co., 63 N. E. 810, 171 N. Y. 25.

USE AND OCCUPATION (Action of).

The action for "use and occupation" and the action of ejectment are not the same. In re Polsgrove, 5 Pa. (5 Barr) 500, 501, 502.

The action for mesne profits differs from an action for use and occupation in this: that the latter is founded upon a promise, express or implied, while the former springs from a trespass, an entry vi et armis upon premises, and a tortious holding. The action to recover mesne profits is an action where trespass quare clausum fregit cannot be maintained without proof of the trespass. It is founded on the action of ejectment most generally, and follows a recovery in that action. Thompson v. Bower (N. Y.) 60 Barb. 463, 478.

Where plaintiff asserts the ownership of an interest in land, an easement in the possession of which he has been disturbed, the action is of a possessory character, and not one for the use, rents, and profits of real estate. Miller v. Richards, 38 N. E. 854, 855, 139 Ind. 263.

USEFUL.

See "New and Useful Improvement."

"Useful," in the patent law, is well recognized to be used in contradistinction to frivolous improvements and invention, or such as are injurious to the public. Whitney v. Emmett (U. S.) 29 Fed. Cas. 1074, 1077.

"Useful," as used in Act Feb. 21, 1793, c. 11, providing that when any person shall allege that he has invented any new and useful art, machine, etc., he may, on pursuing the directions of the act, obtain a patent, means, not an invention in all cases superior to the modes now in use for the same purpose, but useful, in contradistinction to frivolous and mischievous inventions. Lowell v. Lewis (U. S.) 15 Fed. Cas. 1018, 1019. In the case of Lowell v. Lewis, Mr. Justice Story says that the word "useful" is only incorporated in the act relating to patents in contradistinction to "mischievous." Kneass v. Schuykill Bank (U. S.) 14 Fed. Cas. 746, 748. In the patent laws "useful" is used in contradistinction to "mischievous." The invention should be of some benefit. Cox v. Griggs (U. S.) 6 Fed. Cas. 678, 680.

"Useful," as used in Rev. St. § 4929 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3398], authorizing the issuance of a patent to any person who has invented and produced any new, useful, and original shape of any article of manufacture, does not require that the shape of the article, in order to be patentable, shall add some new utility to the article, but is used merely to exclude such thing as might have a vicious or corrupting tendency. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Triumph Electric Co. (U. S.) 97 Fed. 99, 102, 38 C. C. A. 65.

In an action to recover on a promissory note given for a patent right, the defense being want of consideration, the jury were instructed "that, to warrant a patent, the invention must be useful; that the general application of the term 'useful' is capable of any beneficial use, and in contradistinction to 'pernicious' or 'injurious'; that in the statute respecting patents the meaning may be a little more restricted; and that, if an invention be merely frivolous or worthless, it is not, within the meaning of the law, 'useful.' But if under any circumstances the machine in question could be applied to any beneficial purpose, as for the purpose of preparing hemp for bale rope, or where water power is cheap and labor high, it might be deemed a useful invention." The instruction was held correct. Dickinson v. Hall, 31 Mass. (14 Pick.) 217, 219, 220, 25 Am. Dec. 390.

USEFUL ANIMAL.

Chickens are within the terms of Code, § 2482, punishing any cruelty to "any useful beast, fowl, or animal." State v. Neal, 27 S. E. 81, 84, 120 N. C. 613, 58 Am. St. Rep. 810.

USEFUL APPARATUS.

The term "new and useful apparatus," within the meaning of the patent law, authorizing the issuing of patents for such apparatus, does not include the mere permanent attachment of advertising material to balloons. Gould v. Commissioner of Patents (D. C.) 1 McArthur, 410, 413.

USEFUL ART.

A polite or liberal art is that in which the mind and imagination are chiefly concerned, as poetry, music, painting, as distinguished from a "useful or mechanical art," which is one in which the hands and body are more concerned than the brain. City of New Orleans v. Robira, 8 South. 402, 403, 42 La. Ann. 1098, 11 L. R. A. 141.

The term "useful art," in the patent law, includes a process. New Process Fermentation Co. v. Koch (U. S.) 21 Fed. 580, 582; Corning v. Burden, 56 U. S. (15 How.) 252, 267 (citing McKay v. Jackman [U. S.] 12 Fed. 618).

Under the constitutional provision under which our patent laws are framed, relating to the promotion of "useful arts," an art, as such, may be the subject of a patent. French v. Rogers (U. S.) 9 Fed. Cas. 790, 794.

USEFUL DESIGN.

The term "useful," in relation to designs, means adaptation to producing pleasant emotions. There must be originality and beauty. Mere mechanical skill is not sufficient. Rowe v. Blodgett & Clapp Co. (U. S.) 103 Fed. 873, 874 (citing Northrup v. Adams [U. S.] 18 Fed. Cas. 374, and approved in Smith v. Whitman Saddle Co., 148 U. S. 679, 13 Sup. Ct. 768, 37 L. Ed. 606).

USEFUL HOUSE OF ENTERTAINMENT.

Code 1849, pp. 443, 444, cc. 38, 96, authorizes the granting of a license to keep a house of entertainment, if the court be of the opinion that the applicant is sober and of good character, and will probably keep a house orderly, useful, and such as the law requires. It was contended on the application for a license that the location or probable utility of the house was not material; but the court held that this would treat the word "useful" as of no importance, and compel the court to disregard a matter about which the law says they must be satisfied before they have authority to grant a license. The probable utility of the house must depend, not only on the character and conduct of the person who is to keep it, but also on the convenience of the place proposed, the number of houses already established at or near such place, and on a variety of other considerations readily suggested; and the court, in forming an opinion as to whether the applicant will keep a useful house, must consider and weigh all such considerations. Ex parte Yeager (Va.) 11 Grat. 655, 656.

USEFUL INVENTION.

A "useful invention," within the meaning of the acts of Congress relating to patents, is one that may be applied to some practical and salutary use named in the patent; but it is not necessary that it should be of such general utility as to supersede all other inventions used to accomplish the same purpose. Rowe v. Blanchard, 18 Wis. 441, 442, 86 Am. Dec. 783.

"Useful invention," as used in the patent law (1 Stat. 318), providing that patents shall issue only for useful inventions, will not include an invention of an ornamental mode of putting up thread, which gives it no additional value, but merely makes it sell more readily at retail and for a larger price. Langdon v. De Groot (U. S.) 14 Fed. Cas. 1099, 1100.

A useful invention," within the meaning of the patent law, means an invention which may be applied to a beneficial use in society, in contradistinction to an invention injurious to the moral health or good order of society. Bedford v. Hunt (U. S.) 3 Fed. Cas. 37; Fair v. Shelton, 38 S. E. 290, 291, 128 N. C. 105.

As used in the patent act of 1793, "useful invention" means such a one as may be applied to some beneficial use in society, in contradistinction to an invention which is injurious to the morals or health or the good of society. It is not necessary that the invention be of such general utility as to supersede all other inventions in practice to accomplish the same purpose. Bedford v. Hunt (U. S.) 3 Fed. Cas. 37.

USEFUL TRADE.

"Useful trade," as used in a will providing that the interest from a certain sum should be applied to the education of certain boys so that they might be severally fitted and accomplished in some useful trade, does not mean one of the learned professions. The distinction between a profession and a trade is well understood, and they are seldom, if ever confounded with each other in ordinary language. If the testatrix had contemplated what in the common intercourse of society is denoted a profession, she would scarcely have used a term which is generally received as denoting one of the mechanical arts. Dandridge v. Washington, U. S. (2 Pet.) 370, 374, 7 L. Ed. 454.

USEFULNESS.

"Usefulness," as used in statutes requiring that railroad companies shall restore highways which they cross to their former state, so as not to impair their usefulness, implies capabilities for use, and appertains to the future as well as the present. Chesapeake, O. & S. W. Ry. Co. v. Dyer County, 11 S. W. 943, 944, 87 Tenn. 712 (citing Mills, Em. Dom. § 198).

The "usefulness" required of an article, to be useful within the meaning of the patent law, is that it must be a practicable method of doing the thing designed. In ascertaining its usefulness, it is not important that it should be more valuable than other modes of accomplishing the same result. Roberts v. Ward (U. S.) 20 Fed. Cas. 936.

USELESS.

"Useless," as used in Gen. Laws, c. 19, § 86, providing for the discontinuance of highways which are useless, is not sustained by a finding of commissioners that certain highways are not necessary. In re Coe, 44 N. Y. Supp. 910, 912, 19 Misc. Rep. 549.

A machine cannot be pronounced useless or impracticable, so as to render it insusceptible to patents, because improvements may be made which will obviate or prevent embarrassments to its most perfect operation. For example, where a mowing machine would mow as patented upon level prairies or other smooth ground, or upon ground containing only slight elevations and depressions, without the addition of a curved toe which was subsequently added, it could not be called a useless or impracticable machine. Wheeler v. Clipper Mower Co. (U. S.) 29 Fed. Cas. 881, 890.

USER.

See "Adverse User"; "Nonuser."

USES.

In the certificate of an acknowledgment stating that the grantor sealed and executed the instrument for the uses and purposes therein specified, the word "uses" is not of similar import or substantially the same as the word "consideration," which is required in such certificates by Gantt's Dig. § 1846, and hence the acknowledgment is insufficient. Martin v. O'Bannon, 35 Ark. 62, 67.

USUAL.

"Usual" is defined to mean frequent, ordinary, customary, general, often, or regular. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Hause, 71 Ill. App. 147, 152, 153 (citing Webst. Dict.); Chicago & A. R. Co. v. House, 50 N. E. 151, 153, 172 Ill. 601.

"Usual" means according to usage. Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 2802; Code Civ. Proc. Mont. 1895, § 3463, subd. 11; Id. § 4665; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 5129; Civ. Code S. C. 1903, § 2463.

Where plaintiff offered to show that he had carried out his contract according to the "usual and customary" methods of the Philadelphia coal trade, the offer was not insufficient to admit evidence of such custom, because it did not propose to prove the usage "based on a custom," since the phrase "usual and customary" imports more than actual or exceptional, causes and indicates a fixed and established usage. Carter v. Philadelphia Coal Co., 77 Pa. (27 P. F. Smith) 286, 290.

USUAL AND ORDINARY CARE.

The words "usual and ordinary care" mean nothing more or less than, if there be a great danger and hazard in the business, there should be a corresponding degree of skill and attention required by law. Memphis St. Ry. Co. v. Kartright, 75 S. W. 719, 721, 110 Tenn. 277 (citing Cook v. Wilmington City Electric Co. [Del.] 32 Atl. 643, 9 Houst. 306).

USUAL BUSINESS HOURS.

"The usual business hours" of a railway station agent, during which it is his duty to keep the station open for the delivery of goods, are the hours within which the community generally did business with him, and does not mean the time during which the railroad company demanded his services. Derosia v. Winona & St. P. R. Co., 18 Minn. 133, 154 (Gil. 119, 138).

USUAL CHANNEL.

A warranty by the assured in a towage policy, reciting that the steam tug with her tow should not go out of the "usual and regular channel," cannot be interpreted as a warranty that the tug should never through any fault or error of navigation get out of the proper depth of water. What is meant by the clause is that in going from place to place the vessel should go by way of the "usual and regular channel," and should not intentionally take any unusual channel or any route out of the usual course, but should pursue the ordinary and accustomed route. Egbert v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (U. S.) 71 Fed. 739, 742.

USUAL COMMISSION.

"Usual commission," as used in a will, directing that the acting executor should receive compensation for his services in addition to the usual commission allowed to executors, and that he should share in such usual commission with his coexecutors, means a commission of 5 per cent., and not a commission which a court should adjudge to be sufficient to fairly compensate the executors for their responsibility and labor involved and the care and skill required in the proper execution of the trust. In re Lilly's Estate, 37 Atl. 557, 558, 181 Pa. 478.

USUAL COURSE AND CUSTOM.

Rev. St. c. 138, § 7, subdiv. 4, declares that, where a known farm or single lot has been partly improved, the portion of such farm or lot that may have been left not cleared or not included according to "the usual course and custom of the adjoining country," shall be deemed to have been occupied for the same length of time as the part improved or cultivated. Held, that "the usual course and custom of the adjoining country" means a local custom. Pepper v. O'Dowd, 39 Wis. 538, 549.

USUAL COURSE OF BUSINESS.

See "Course of Business."

Rev. St. 1838, p. 472, exempting from distress property deposited with a tavern keeper in the "usual course of business," means a deposit of goods with the tavern keeper by a guest for safe-keeping. Harris v. Boggs (U. S.) 5 Blackf. 489, 490.

A sale in the usual course of business means according to the customs and usages of commercial transactions. Kellogg v. Curtis, 69 Me. 212, 214, 31 Am. Rep. 273.

"Usual course of business," as used with reference to transfers of negotiable paper, means according to the usages and customs of commercial transactions, and is not confined to persons engaged habitually in banking or purchasing notes. One who in good faith purchases a negotiable note before maturity for value, or who takes it in payment of an antecedent debt, is not out of the usual course of business. Tescher v. Merea, 21 N. E. 316, 317, 118 Ind. 586.

"In determining whether a given transaction is made in the ordinary and usual course of business of a party, the question is, not whether such transactions are usual in the general conduct of business throughout the community, but whether they are according to the usual course of business of the particular person whose conveyance is subject to investigation." Rison v. Knapp (U. S.) 20 Fed. Cas. 835, 837.

The obtaining of a note in exchange for property seems quite as much in the usual course of business as the getting of it for cash. In Kimbro v. Lytle, 18 Tenn. (10 Yerg.) 423, 31 Am. Dec. 585, a note is said to be taken in the usual course of business where the holder has given for the note his money, goods, or credits at the time of receiving it, or has on account of it incurred some loss or liability. This is quoted with approval in Merchants' Bank v. McClelland, 9 Colo. 608, 13 Pac. 723. Cunningham v. Holmes (Neb.) 92 N. W. 1023, 1025.

USUAL COVENANTS.

"Usual covenants," as used in a contract for a conveyance of real estate by deed with usual covenants, means covenants of seisin, of right to convey, against incumbrances, to quiet enjoyment, and of warranty. Wilson v. Wood, 17 N. J. Eq. (2 C. E. Green) 216, 218, 88 Am. Dec. 231.

A deed with the usual covenants for title is the same as a warranty deed with full covenants. Drake v. Barton, 18 Minn. 462, 467 (Gil. 414, 421).

USUAL HIGH-WATER MARK.

The "usual high-water mark" of tide waters means the limit reached by the neap tides—that is, those tides which happen, between the full and change of the moon, twice in every 24 hours—and not the limit which the monthly spring tides reach, tides which occur only at the full and change of the moon, though the limit of the monthly spring tides is in one sense the "usual high-water mark," for as often as those tides occur to that limit the flow extends. Teschmacher v. Thompson, 18 Cal. 11, 21, 79 Am. Dec. 151.

USUAL INTEREST.

As used in a convention to pay the "usual interest," the phrase should be construed to mean legal interest; there being no uniform usage. Segur v. His Creditors (La.) 1 Mart. (O. S.) 74, 75.

USUAL MEDICAL ATTENDANT.

In an action on a life insurance policy, where the insured in his application had given the name of his usual medical attendant as Dr. Purdy, it appeared that the insured was a single man, who prior to the insurance had lived in his father's family, and Dr. Purdy had been the family physician for many years. Four years before another physician had attended him during a short illness, and on two occasions in the two years preceding the application still another physician had prescribed for him. The court said: "To constitute a medical attendance, it is not requisite that a physician should attend a patient at his home. An attendance at his own office is sufficient. Of these three physicians the usual medical attendant certainly was not the physician who had attended him during the one brief illness; and as between the one who attended him on two occasions, visiting him in all not over half a dozen times, and the family physician in his father's family, upon whom he called yearly for many years for medical advice or treatment, the latter could properly be called the usual medical attendant; but, whether this be so or not, it was at least a question for the jury, and there was no error in submitting it to them." Cushman v. United States Life Ins. Co., 70 N. Y. 72, 78.

USUAL METHOD.

The fact that the usual, customary, and ordinary method of handling a locomotive was being pursued at the time a fire was set by it does not necessarily show that the prudent and careful way was being pursued, especially if the wind was blowing hard at the time, and the land adjacent to the roadway was covered with very combustible material. It might well be contended that more than ordinary care and caution was required. Solum v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 65 N. W. 443, 444, 63 Minn. 233.

USUAL OCCUPATION.

A by-law of a benefit society provided for benefits to one disabled from following his usual or some other occupation. It was contended that "some other" meant any occupation, but the court held otherwise, on the ground that "usual" did not necessarily mean entire, or only that a member might have two occupations, one usual and one occasional, to which last the words "some other" referred. Neill v. Order of United Friends, 44 N. E. 145, 146, 149 N. Y. 430, 62 Am. St. Rep. 738.

USUAL PLACE OF ABODE.

Dwelling house as, see "Dwelling—Dwelling House."

"The house of his usual abode," within the meaning of Gen. St. 1894, § 5199, subd. 4, authorizing substituted service on defendant by leaving notice, etc., at the house of his usual abode, "is not an equivalent of domicile in all particulars, for one's place of abode or home, once acquired, does not necessarily continue until another one is obtained. A tramp may have a domicile, but no house of his usual abode. The term means a person's customary dwelling place or residence. In the case of a married man, the house of his usual abode is prima facie the house wherein his wife and family reside." Missouri, K. & T. Trust Co. v. Norris, 63 N. W. 634, 635, 61 Minn. 256.

One who owned real estate and carried on business in Massachusetts until the year

1841, when he removed to another state, where he continued to reside, will in 1843 be deemed to have a last and usual place of abode in Massachusetts. Tilden v. Johnson, 60 Mass. (6 Cush.) 354, 359.

Dig. 1836, p. 278, § 8, directing the summons in forcible entry and detainer to be served by leaving a copy at the defendant's "usual place of abode," does not necessarily mean the dwelling house of the party. A return reciting that a copy was left at the dwelling house of the defendant does not say that it was left at his usual place of abode. Ser v. Bobst, 8 Mo. 506, 507.

Gen. St. p. 514, § 2, authorizes substituted service of a summons by leaving a copy at defendant's "usual place of abode." Held, that where defendant was confined in a county jail, and during such confinement the house where he had last resided was sold by the trustee of his insolvent estate, the jail, though his residence therein was compulsory, and not voluntary, was his usual place of abode within the statute. Appeal of Dunn, 35 Conn. 82, 84.

"Usual place of abode," as used in Prac. Act, § 49, providing that the service of summons shall be made on the defendant in person or by leaving it at his dwelling house or "usual place of abode," is a much more restricted term than residence, and means the place where the defendant is actually living at the time when service is made. Mygatt v. Coe, 44 Atl. 198, 199, 63 N. J. Law, 510.

Code Va. 1860, authorizing substituted service of summons by posting notice on the front door of defendant's "usual place of abode," must be construed to mean defendant's present place of abode; and hence, where notice was posted on a house seven months after defendant and his family had left it, while they were residing at the Federal line, was not posted at defendant's place of abode. Earle v. McVeigh, 91 U. S. 503, 23 L. Ed. 398.

"Usual place of abode," as used in Code 1860, c. 167, § 1, providing that a summons may be served on a defendant at his "usual place of abode" by delivering a copy, means his usual place of abode eo instante. It would be absurd to hold that a boarding house or place where a person stopped temporarily when visiting a city or country on matters of business or socially should be considered his usual place of abode when his visit or stay had ended and he was absent. Capehart v. Cunningham, 12 W. Va. 750, 755.

"Usual place of abode," as used in Act 1736-37 (P. L. 145; 1 Brev. Dig. 221, § 29), authorizing service by leaving a copy at defendant's usual place of abode, should be construed to mean the abode of defendant at the time of service of the writ. Johnson v. Gadsden (S. C.) 1 Nott & McC. 89, 90.

"Usual place of abode," as used in Rev. St. § 3489, authorizing substituted service of summons by leaving a copy at defendant's usual place of abode, must be construed to require the summons to be left at defendant's present usual place of abode; and hence a return that summons was left at defendant's last usual place of abode did not show service, since such return could be true and yet the defendant reside in another county or jurisdiction. Madison County Bank v. Suman's Adm'r, 79 Mo. 527, 530.

"Usual place of abode," as used in Gould's Dig. c. 28, § 10, authorizing service of summons by leaving the same with a white person at defendant's usual place of abode, is synonymous with "residence," and hence a return by an officer that he left the summons at defendant's "residence" with a white person was sufficient. Du Val v. Johnson, 39 Ark. 182, 192.

A person's "usual place of abode" in a particular county is not necessarily his usual place of abode in the state, and the return of summons, stating that the same had been served constructively at the usual place of abode of the defendant in a certain named county, is insufficient under Comp. Laws Or. 1887, § 55, providing that, if a defendant cannot be found, service of summons may be made by delivering a copy of the same "to some person of the family * * * at the dwelling house or usual place of abode of the defendant." Swift v. Meyers (U. S.) 37 Fed. 37, 40.

Bankr. Act 1841, declared that the word "person," as used therein, should include corporations, and another section provided that service of process issued under the act should be made on the debtor personally or by leaving the order at his last or "usual place of abode." Held that, since the abode of a corporation can only be that place where its business is principally transacted, the phrase "usual place of abode" should be construed as to corporations to mean their principal place of business. In re California Pac. R. Co. (U. S.) 4 Fed. Cas. 1060, 1065.

The usual place of abode of a party, at the front door of which notice of suit may be posted in the absence of a party and of his family, does not include a house seven months after it has been vacated by defendant's family, and while they are residing within the Confederate lines; and therefore the posting of such notice is insufficient to give jurisdiction. Earle v. McVeigh, 91 U. S. 503, 23 L. Ed. 398.

A proof of service of summons on a person at his last and usual place of abode in C. county is equivalent to "usual place of abode," as required by Rev. St. § 2636. It means that the service was made at the person's last and usual place of abode, and that such place of abode was then in C. county. The words "last and" are mere surplusage. The last and usual place of abode of a person is necessarily his present usual place of abode. Healey v. Butler, 27 N. W. 822, 823, 66 Wis. 9.

An officer returned that he made service of a summons by delivering a copy at the dwelling house or usual place of abode of the defendant and leaving the same with a free white person, etc. It appeared that the defendant was a bankrupt and had fled to Canada prior to the service with his family, and at the time of the alleged service and since that time had not resided at the place where the summons was left. Held that, though the defendant fled from the jurisdiction of the court and might be hiding just outside the same, and came within the state for the purpose of making the motion to set aside a judgment entered on such service, the summons was not properly served, since the rule authorizing service at the usual place of abode does not permit service by leaving a copy at "the last place of abode" of the defendant. Hyslop v. Hoppock (U. S.) 12 Fed. Cas. 1139, 1140.

In the construction of statutes the terms "usual place of residence" and "usual place of abode," when applied to the service of any process or notice, shall be construed to mean the place usually occupied by a person. If such person have no family, or do not have his family with him, his office or place of business, or, if he have no place of business, the room or place where he usually sleeps, shall be construed to be such place of residence or abode. Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 7342.

USUAL PLACE OF BUSINESS.

St. 1870, c. 2, § 1, requires all persons using scales and measures and weights for selling goods to have the same sealed in the city or town in which they reside or have their usual place of business. Held, that the word "place," in the term "usual place of business," should be construed to mean the city or town in which a tradesman's shop was located; and hence the fact that the most of his customers lived in another town, and he weighed and measured his provisions from his market wagon as he delivered them, and that his weights and measures were sealed in that town, were not a compliance with the statutes. Palmer v. Kelleher, 111 Mass. 320, 321.

USUAL PLACE OF RESIDENCE.

As used in a statute requiring service of process by leaving a copy at defendant's "usual place of residence," the term means the place of abode at the time of service. The fact that defendant's wife remained in another place did not make that place the defendant's "usual place of residence." Seymour v. Street, 5 Neb. 85, 88.

As used in a statute authorizing service on a defendant by delivering a copy of the summons at the "usual place of residence" of the defendant, the term means the place of abode at the time of service. Blodgett v. Utley, 4 Neb. 25, 30.

The words "usual place of residence" mean the place of abode. The fact that a person's family remained in one state, while he went into another state and there established himself in business, with no intention of returning to the former state, would not necessarily make such former state his usual place of residence. Forbes v. Thomas, 35 N. W. 411, 418, 22 Neb. 541.

In the construction of statutes, the terms "usual place of residence" and "usual place of abode," when applied to the service of any process or notice, shall be construed to mean the place usually occupied by a person. If such person have no family, or do not have his family with him, his office or place of business, or, if he have no place of business, the room or place where he usually sleeps, shall be construed to be such place of residence or abode. Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 7342.

USUAL PROJECTIONS.

"Usual projections," as used in a deed providing that the front wall of plaintiff's house should be set back 22 feet from M. street, provided that steps, windows, porches, and other usual projections appurtenant thereto are to be allowed in said reserved space, would not permit the plaintiff to finish his house in an octagon shape, so that the whole of the front wall from the foundations to the roof encroached on and occupied a portion of the space reserved. Linzee v. Mixer, 101 Mass. 512, 528.

USUAL RATES.

"Usual rates," as used in the customs law, providing for the charge of commissions at usual rates, has received a judicial construction, and what the usual rate may be is a question of fact, and not what the importer may have paid as commissions. Hutton v. Schell (U. S.) 12 Fed. Cas. 1095.

USUAL RESIDENCE.

"Usual residence" means customary common residence. Graham v. Commonwealth, 51 Pa. (1 P. F. Smith) 255, 258, 88 Am. Dec. 581 (citing Webst. Dict.).

USUAL RISK OF LIGHTERAGE.

The phrase "usual risk of lighterage," in a marine policy insuring against usual risk of lighterage, was construed to include a loss by drowning of cattle which became frightened on a lighter while in the process of being unloaded from a vessel and ran overboard and were drowned. Anthony v. Aetna Ins. Co. (U. S.) 1 Fed. Cas. 1046, 1048.

USUAL RULES AND REGULATIONS.

"Usual rules and regulations," used in a contract for advertising which was to be subject to the usual rules and regulations, relates only to the character of the advertisements, type, and mode of insertion, and the like, and not to the prices to be obtained for such advertising. Clegg v. New York Newspaper Union, 4 N. Y. Supp. 280, 281, 51 Hun, 232.

USUAL STOPPING PLACE.

A statute providing that passengers refusing to pay their fare may be expelled from the train at a "usual stopping place" means the usual stopping places for the discharge of passengers, and does not include a water tank, though trains usually stop there to take on wood and water. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Flagg, 43 Ill. 364, 367, 92 Am. Dec. 133.

The words "any usual stopping place," in Pasch. Dig. art. 4892, providing that, "if any passenger shall refuse to pay his fare or toll, it shall be lawful for the conductor of the train and the servants of the corporation to put him out of the cars at any usual stopping place which the conductor may select," mean either a regular station, or any other place which the company expressly, by public notice or otherwise, had designated as a proper place for passengers to get on or off its trains, and where they would, in consequence thereof, have the right to demand the exercise of this privilege. A place at which a train is stopped for wood or water only is not a usual stopping place, within the meaning of such section. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Casey, 52 Tex. 112, 122.

USUALLY.

"Usually," as contained in an instruction in an action against a railroad company for refusing to put a passenger off at her destination, making the company liable if the passenger had a right to believe that the train on which she was riding "usually stopped" at her destination, means habitually or customarily. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Ludlam (U. S.) 57 Fed. 481, 483, 6 C. C. A. 454.

As used in Act Feb. 12, 1818, authorizing certain persons to construct a dam across a river, and requiring them, as long as they make use of the same for the purpose for which it is granted, to maintain, uphold, and support the said dam, lock, etc., and at all times keep them in good and sufficient repair, and fit, safe, and convenient for the passage of boats and craft "usually navigating" said river freely, without toll or expense of any kind or nature whatsoever, is synonymous with boats "customarily navigating" or "accustomed to navigate" the river; and hence a count in an action against the owners of such dam and lock, alleging that the plaintiffs were the joint owners of boats and craft for the navigating of said river, and accustomed to navigate the same, etc., brings them within the class of boats designated in the statute. Farwell v. Smith, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 133, 134.

"Usually rated," as used in Highway Act 5 & 6 Wm. IV, c. 50, § 27, directing the surveyor to rate all property then liable to be rated to the poor, provided that the same rate shall also extend to such woods, mines, etc., as had theretofore been usually rated to the highways, refer not to legal ratability, but to rating in point of fact, and to the practice of rating in the particular parish, not in the country generally. Reg. v. Rose, 6 Adol. & El. (N. S.) 152, 155.

USUCAPTION.

Title by prescription must not be founded with "usucaption," which simply by the lapse of a short time cures defects in titles otherwise good. Pavey v. Vance, 46 N. E. 898, 900, 56 Ohio St. 162.

USUFRUCT.

See "Perfect Usufruct"; "Imperfect Usufruct."

"Usufruct" is the right of enjoying a thing, the property of which is vested in another, and to draw from the same all the profits, utility, and advantages which it may produce, provided it be without altering the substance of the thing. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 533.

"Usufruct," as used in the Spanish law, is "the right to use and enjoy the property of others; that is, to appropriate its fruits without impairing the substance." Mulford v. Le Franc, 26 Cal. 88, 102; Heintzen v. Binniger, 21 Pac. 377, 79 Cal. 5; Cartwright v. Cartwright, 18 Tex. 626, 628.

"Usufruct" is distinguished from "use" in this: that while usufruct carries the right to enjoy all the fruits and revenues which the property subjected to it can produce, use consists in taking only from the fruits of the property the portion which the user can consume, such as is necessary for his person or regulated by the title. The surplus belongs to the owner of the property. Dom. Civ. Law, tit. 11, § 11, art. 1. Use is a limited usufruct for the needs of the user, and

It is a veritable usufruct, except as to the extent of enjoyment. They are bought, and established and lost in the same way. The user must, like the usufructuary, give security and make statements and inventories. He is subject to the costs of cultivation, to those of keeping in repair, to the payment of contributions. There is a difference between the two rights only as to their extent. The usufructuary has the right to enjoy all sorts of fruits, while the user can require only such as are necessary for himself and family. Demolombe, c. 10, p. 713, No. 752; Laurent, p. 118, No. 1023; Civ. Code, tit. 3, c. 1, §§ 1, 5. Strausse v. Sheriff, 9 South. 102, 103, 43 La. Ann. 501.

USUFRUCTUARY.

A "usufructuary" is one who has the usufruct or right of enjoying anything in which he has no property. He has all the right to all the fruits produced by the subject of the usufruct, whether they be natural (that is, produced spontaneously by the earth or animals, as timber, fruits, wool, milk, and the young of cattle), or industrial (that is, produced by cultivation, as crops of grain), or civil (such as rents for the hire of houses, freights, or revenues from annuities and from other effects or rights). But notwithstanding these enlarged rights of a usufructuary owner to the produce or fruits of the subject of usufruct, yet there is one exception, to wit, the child born of a slave of whom one has the usufruct shall belong to the master of the slave, and not to the usufructuary. Cartwright v. Cartwright, 18 Tex. 626, 628.

USURER.

A usurer is one who lends money at a rate of interest greater than that established by law. Newton v. Wilson, 81 Ark. 484, 485.

USURIOUS.

"A usurious contract is one which stipulates for the payment of more than lawful interest for the use of money or forbearance of a debt." Parham v. Pulliam, 45 Tenn. (5 Cold.) 497, 501 (quoting 3 Pars. Cont. tit. "Usury").

Tyler on Usury states the requisites of a usurious contract thus: "There must be, first, a loan expressed or implied; second, an understanding between the parties that the money lent shall or may be returned; third, that for such loan a greater rate of interest than is allowed by law shall be paid or agreed to be paid, as the case may be; and, fourth, a corrupt intent to take more than the legal rate for the use of the sum loaned. Unless these four things concur in every transaction, it is safe to affirm that no case of usury can be declared, and this may be regarded as a rule universally recognized in all of the states." Balfour v. Davis, 12 Pac. 89, 92, 14 Or. 47 (citing Tyler, Usury, 110).

It is the essence of a usurious transaction that there shall be an unlawful and corrupt intention on the part of the lender to take illegal interest. Green v. Grant (Mich.) 96 N. W. 583, 585.

The "usurious transaction" from which limitations run against an action to recover twice the amount of usurious interest paid to a national bank occurs only when the principal and legal interest have been paid or judgment recovered for such amount. First Nat. Bank v. Denson, 22 South. 518, 115 Ala. 650.

A transaction is usurious when we find a loan, either express or implied, and an understanding between the parties that the loan shall or may be returned with a greater rate of interest than is allowed by law. Where money is loaned, and interest is calculated at the highest lawful rate for the full period of the loan, and the aggregate of the principal and interest thus calculated is divided into as many notes as the period embraces months, one of such notes maturing each month, the transaction is a usurious transaction. Union Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v. Dottenheim, 84 S. E. 217, 221, 107 Ga. 606.

Rev. St. U. S. § 5198 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3493], relating to usury, and providing that a person who has paid usurious interest may recover back in an action twice the amount of the interest thus paid, provided such action is commenced within two years from the time the "usurious transaction" occurred, means the actual payment of interest in excess of the legal rate. First Nat. Bank v. Smith, 54 N. W. 254, 256, 36 Neb. 190.

USURIOUSLY.

The word "usuriously," in an indictment for usury, expresses a criminal intent as clearly as would the word "corruptly," used in the statute providing a punishment for usury. Crawford v. State, 2 Ind. (2 Cart.) 112, 113.

USURP.

Under a statute (Mansf. Dig. c. 151, § 6466) which provides that, whenever a person usurps an office or franchise to which he is not entitled by law, action or proceedings at law may be instituted against him, either by the state or the party entitled to the franchise, it is held that the term "usurp" is not used merely with reference to an intrusion into office without color of title, but that a defective title is no greater protection than no title at all, and that one exercising a public office without an absolute right to hold it is to be regarded as having usurped the office, within the meaning of the statute. Wheat v. Smith, 7 S. W. 161, 163, 50 Ark. 266.

USURPER.

A mere usurper of an office is one who intrudes himself into an office which is vacant and ousts the incumbent, without any color of title whatever, and his acts are void in every respect. Hamlin v. Kassafer, 15 Pac. 778, 781, 15 Or. 456, 3 Am. St. Rep. 176; People v. White (N. Y.) 24 Wend. 520, 529; Hooper v. Goodwin, 48 Me. 80 (citing Tucker v. Aiken, 7 N. H. 113); McCraw v. Williams (Va.) 33 Grat. 510, 513; Norfleet v. Staton, 73 N. C. 546, 550, 21 Am. Rep. 479.

A "usurper" is one who takes possession of an office without any authority. His acts are utterly void, unless he continues to act for so long a time or under such circumstances as to afford presumption of his right to act, and then his acts are valid as to the public and third persons, though he has no defense in a direct proceeding against himself. But when, without color of authority, a person simply assumes to act, and to exercise the authority of an office, and the public know the fact, or reasonably ought to know it, his acts are absolutely void for all purposes. Van Amringe v. Taylor, 108 N. C. 196, 201, 12 S. E. 1005, 12 L. R. A. 202, 23 Am. St. Rep. 51.

A "usurper" is one who undertakes to perform official acts without any color of right. A person holding an office under the apparent authority of a statute which is unconstitutional acts under a color of right, and is not a usurper. People v. Petrea, 1 N. Y. Cr. R. 198, 213.

USURY.

See "Plea of Usury."

"Usury," in its original and primitive meaning, "is a premium or reward for the use of money or other commodity or things." The Jews were forbidden to lend upon usury to one of their own kindred or nation, though it was lawful so to lend to a stranger. "Thou shalt not lend upon usury to thy brother; usury of money, usury of victuals, usury of anything that is lent on usury. Unto a stranger thou mayest lend on usury, but unto thy brother thou shalt not lend on usury, that the Lord may bless thee in all thou settest thy hand to." Deut. xxiii, 19, 20. To lend money upon usury was always forbidden by the Jewish laws. The royal minstrel of Israel, when chanting the virtues of those who might be permitted to abide in the tabernacle of the Everlasting God, gave a high rank to him that putteth not out his money to usury. Psalm xxv. On the propagation of the Christian religion the same moral and religious feeling accompanied its spread, and usury was held criminal by the canon law. The Jews became the exclusive usurers, and were for that reason held in detestation by all Christendom. Usury was forbidden by the common law of England. Henry v. Bank of Salina (N. Y.) 5 Hill, 523, 528.

The definition of "usury," as given by Grotius, is: "If the compensation allowed by law does not exceed the proportion of the hazard run, or the want felt by the loan, its allowance is neither repugnant to the revealed nor the natural law; but, if it exceeds these bounds, it is then oppressive usury, and, though the municipal laws may give it impunity, they can never make it just." State v. Multnomah County, 10 Pac. 635, 639, 13 Or. 287 (citing 2 Bl. Comm. 455, 456).

"Usury" was an offense at common law, and the usurer was not only punished by the censures of the church in his lifetime, but was denied a Christian burial; and by the laws of Alfred the Great and Edward the Confessor, if, after death, even, a man was found to have been a usurer, his goods were forfeited to the Crown and his lands to the lord of the fee. Gray v. Bennett, 44 Mass. (3 Metc.) 522, 527.

"Usury" is the taking or contracting for exorbitant interest for the forbearance of the principal. Fowler v. Word (S. C.) Harp. 372.

"Usury" is malum prohibitum, not malum in se. Hamilton v. Prouty, 7 N. W. 659, 661, 50 Wis. 592, 36 Am. Rep. 866.

There is a class of cases which hold in effect that if property is sold by one person to another, and the seller demands one price for cash and a larger price for sale on time, this is not "usury." Martin v. Reese (Tenn.) 57 S. W. 419, 424.

As interest greater than allowed by law.

"Usury is the taking of more interest for the use of money, or forbearance of a debt, than the law allows." Parkham v. Pulliam, 45 Tenn. (5 Cold.) 497, 501; Brundage v. Burke, 40 Pac. 343, 11 Wash. 679 (citing Dunham v. Gould [N. Y.] 16 Johns. 367, 8 Am. Dec. 323); Reed v. Coale, 4 Ind. 283, 288; Schermerhorn v. Talman, 14 N. Y. (4 Kern.) 93, 118; Woodruff v. Hurson (N. Y.) 32 Barb. 557, 559; Trask v. Hazazer, 4 N. Y. Supp. 635, 638; Van Schalck v. Edwards (N. Y.) 2 Johns. Cas. 355, 364; Wilkie v. Roosevelt (N. Y.) 3 Johns. Cas. 206, 2 Am. Dec. 149; Merrills v. Law (N. Y.) 9 Cow. 65, 66; Rosenstein v. Fox, 44 N. E. 1027, 1029, 150

N. Y. 354; Harmon v. Lehman, Durr & Co., 5 South. 203, 85 Ala. 379, 2 L. R. A. 589; Woolsey v. Jones, 4 South. 190, 192, 84 Ala. 88; Dunkle v. Renick, 6 Ohio St. 527, 534; Gray v. Bennett, 44 Mass. (3 Metc.) 522, 527; Lee v. Peckham, 17 Wis. 383, 386; Kreibohm v. Yancey, 55 S. W. 260, 266, 154 Mo. 67.

"Usury consists in the contracting for, receiving, or reserving of a greater rate of interest on the principal sum than is allowed by law." United States Mortgage Co. v. Sperry (U. S.) 28 Fed. 727, 730.

"Usury" is the charging of unlawful interest. Unless there is a law which limits the rate of interest to be charged, there can be no usury. Newton v. Wilson, 31 Ark. 484, 485; Woodruff v. Hurson (N. Y.) 32 Barb. 557, 559.

"Usury" may be defined to be the taking of more for the use of money than is authorized by law, or the extortion of a sum beyond what is legal. That is the definition of Mr. Tyler, the leading text-writer on this subject. It is otherwise defined as the illegal profit which is required by the lender of a sum of money from the borrower for its use. New England Mortg. Sec. Co. v. Gay (U. S.) 83 Fed. 636, 640.

"Usury" is the reserving and taking, or contracting to reserve and take, either directly or by indirection, a greater sum for the use of money than the lawful interest. Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 2877.

Persons incorporated under Rev. St. 1866, c. 25, for the transaction of lawful business, have no authority as a corporation to charge and receive interest on loans made by them to exceed the maximum rate of interest allowed by law; and all loans by such corporation for interest in excess of the legal rates are affected with the vice of usury. Lincoln Bldg. & Sav. Ass'n v. Graham, 7 Neb. 173, 178.

If a loan be in fact the consideration for the amount of compensation taken, if that amount be in part the consideration for the forbearance, and if it be authorized or sanctioned by the principal, if the whole amount taken and reserved exceed the lawful rate, it is usury, whether it is taken for the benefit of the principal or of the agent. Stein v. Swensen, 49 N. W. 55, 57, 46 Minn. 360, 24 Am. St. Rep. 234.

Agreement necessary.

To constitute "usury" there must be a corrupt agreement to receive more than the law allows by way of interest. Varick v. Crane, 4 N. J. Law (3 H. W. Green) 128, 130.

To constitute "usury" there must be a contract between the lender and borrower by which the lender receives or reserves a greater rate of interest than the maximum allowed by law. Leonard v. Cox, 10 Neb. 541, 7 N. W. 289.

There can be no usury without a contract. To constitute "usury" it must be shown that additional interest was paid or reserved in pursuance of a mutual agreement. Egbert v. Peters, 35 Minn. 312, 313, 29 N. W. 134; Rosenstein v. Fox, 44 N. E. 1027, 1029, 150 N. Y. 354 (citing Morton v. Thurber, 85 N. Y. 551, 556).

To constitute the offense, there must be an agreement that he who has the use of the money shall pay the owner of it more than the lawful interest; that is, more than the law demands to be paid for money. It is entirely immaterial in what manner or form, or under what pretense, usury is exacted and paid. The contract will not be held good merely because on its face and by its words it is free from taint, if it be substantially usurious. Lee v. Peckham, 17 Wis. 383, 386.

Where by the contract between lender and borrower the lender receives a greater rate of interest than the maximum allowed by law, such contract is affected with the vice of usury, and it makes no difference whether the usurious interest is expressed in terms in the instrument against him for the payment of the debt, or whether it is taken as a bonus or procured by some agreement, shift, or device at the time of the contract. Richards v. Kountze, 4 Neb. 200, 205; Lincoln Bldg. & Sav. Ass'n v. Graham, 7 Neb. 173, 178.

To render a contract usurious the contract itself must be tainted with the offense. If the original contract does not provide for a higher rate of interest than the law authorizes, an agreement to pay interest on overdue interest will not render the original contract usurious. Hager v. Blake, 16 Neb. 12, 19 N. W. 780.

Compound interest.

Compound interest is not usury. Otis v. Lindsey, 10 Me. (1 Fairf.) 315, 316.

An agreement to pay interest on interest which has become due does not constitute usury. Camp v. Bates, 11 Conn. 487, 495; Hager v. Blake, 19 N. W. 780, 16 Neb. 12.

Comp. St. 1887, c. 44, § 1, provides that any rate of interest which may be agreed upon, not exceeding $10 per year upon $100, shall be valid upon any loan or forbearance of money. Where the interest provided for in a promissory note is the maximum rate allowed by law, and is represented by coupons providing that the interest shall be allowed thereon after maturity at the maximum rate, no interest will be allowed on such coupons. Mathews v. Toogood, 41 N. W. 130, 25 Neb. 99.

Contract in excess of amount loaned.

Where a note and mortgage were given for the sum of $445.15, and only $380 received by the testator, the defense of usury was established. Cattle v. Haddox, 16 N. W. 841, 14 Neb. 527.

The test of usury in a contract is whether it would, if performed, result in securing a greater rate of profit on the subject-matter than is allowed by law. The form of the agreement is immaterial, since any shift or device by which illegal interest is arranged to be received or paid is usurious. The true construction of statutes regulating interest on a loan or forbearance of money, goods, or things in action is that no greater rate of compensation than that prescribed shall be taken upon any loan or forbearance of money, directly or indirectly, by way of loan of property or in any other manner, no matter how disguised. Where a party executed and delivered 12 notes, each for a certain sum for money borrowed at the time, but only received the amount of 9 of the notes, which were secured by chattel mortgage, the transaction was usurious. Kreibohm v. Yancey, 55 S. W. 260, 266, 154 Mo. 67.

Intent.

To constitute usury there must be a usurious or corrupt intent. Nourse v. Prime (N. Y.) 7 Johns. Ch. 69, 77; Woodruff v. Hurson (N. Y.) 32 Barb. 557, 559; Rosenstein v. Fox, 44 N. E. 1027, 1029, 150 N. Y. 354.

Usury is a matter of intention, and to avoid a contract on that ground it must appear that the writer knew the facts and acted with a view of evading the law. Fay v. Lovejoy, 20 Wis. 407.

To constitute usury there must be a corrupt and willful intent to violate the statute fixing the legal rate of interest; and where on a loan it was stipulated that the borrower, in addition to legal interest, should pay all taxes and assessments which might be imposed by the state or the municipality on the principal or interest of the debt, though the contract might be regarded as in itself usurious, yet as doubts had been entertained as to its being so, and it was in evidence that the parties had taken the advice of counsel before entering into the contract, and had therefore manifestly acted without a corrupt and willful intent to violate the statute, but under a mistake of law, it was held that the lender was entitled to be relieved against the consequences of the stipulation. Mortimer's Ex'rs v. Pritchard (S. C.) Bailey, Eq. 505, 507.

"It is well settled that the intention to take usury must have been in the full contemplation of the parties; not of one party, but of both parties, to the transaction." In Condit v. Baldwin, 21 N. Y. 219, 221, 78 Am. Dec. 137, it was held that "it is the essence of a usurious transaction that there shall be an unlawful and corrupt intent on the part of the lender to take illegal interest, and so we must find before we can pronounce the transaction to be usurious." A mere trifling overcharge of interest in a building and loan mortgage by calculating the interest for five days longer than the correct time is not usurious, where the parties do not intend to charge usury. Mutual Ben. Loan & Building Co. v. Lynch, 67 N. Y. Supp. 6, 9, 54 App. Div. 559.

In construing the usury laws, the uniform construction in England has been, and it is equally applicable here, that to constitute usury, within the prohibitions of the law, there must be an intention knowingly to contract for and to take usurious interest; for if neither party intend it, and act bona fide and innocently, the law will not infer a corrupt agreement. Where, indeed, the contract, upon its very face, imports usury, as by an express reservation of more than legal interest, the intent is apparent. There is no room for presumption. Where the contract on its face is for legal interest only, there it must be proved that there was some corrupt agreement or device or shift to cover usury, and that it was in the full contemplation of the parties. United States Bank v. Waggener, 34 U. S. (9 Pet.) 878, 399, 9 L. Ed. 163.

In Garvin v. Linton, 62 Ark. 370, 35 S. W. 430, 37 S. W. 569, the court says: "Many authorities hold that it is not enough that the borrower intended to make a usurious agreement, but the intention to take the usury must have been in full contemplation of the parties; not of one party, but of both, to the transaction." After reviewing the authorities on both sides, he states the conclusion of the court to be: "According to these decisions there need not be, under our statute, a mutual agreement to give and receive unlawful interest to constitute usury. If it be actually reserved, taken, or secured, or agreed to be taken or reserved, the contract is void for usury." Brown v. Grundy (U. S.) 111 Fed. 15, 17.

Interest in advance.

It is not "usury" for a lender, charging the highest legal rate of interest, to collect and receive the first year's interest in advance. Willett v. Maxwell, 48 N. E. 473, 169 Ill. 540.

Loan or forbearance.

As an absolute, essential element to constitute "usury," there must be a loan or forbearance by which the borrower obtains the use of money from the lender and agrees to repay it, together with more than 10 per cent. interest. Wagoner v. Landon, 95 N. W. 496, 497, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 38.

It is a cardinal principle in the doctrine of usury that to constitute usury there must be a loan or a good consideration for the forbearance of the loan in contemplation of the parties. It must be an original contract. Richards v. Kountze, 4 Neb. 200, 205.

"To constitute a usurious contract, a loan, either express or implied, is necessary." Dunkle v. Renick, 6 Ohio St. 527, 534.

To constitute "usury," there must either be a loan and a taking of usurious interest, or the taking of more than legal interest for the forbearance of a debt or sum of money due. Hogg v. Ruffner, 66 U. S. (1 Black) 115, 118, 17 L. Ed. 38.

If a loan be necessary to constitute a usurious contract, it is not necessary to the creation of a loan that the money should be paid on the one hand and received on the other, for the circumstances of a man's money remaining in another's hand in consequence of an agreement for that purpose will constitute a loan. Van Schaick v. Edwards (N. Y.) 2 Johns. Cas. 355, 364.

It is not necessary that the money should be actually advanced to constitute the offense of usury, but any pretense or contrivance whatever to gain more than legal interest, where it is the intent of the parties to contract for a loan, will make the contract usurious. Wilkie v. Roosevelt (N. Y.) 8 Johns. Cas. 206, 2 Am. Dec. 149.

Money paid above the legal rate for the forbearance of an existing debt is usurious, as well as money thus paid at the time of the loss or the creation of the debt. Under this definition an allowance by a debtor of an exorbitant claim for damages to the debtor's property, or the purchase by the debtor of the property at an exorbitant price as consideration for an extension of credit, constitutes usury. The law in such an instance will look to the intent of the transaction, and will not be governed by the sham and pretense. Hathaway v. Hagan, 8 Atl. 678, 680, 59 Vt. 75.

Two things are necessary to constitute "usury": First, a loan; secondly, the taking of more interest than the law allows. Scott v. Lloyd, 34 U. S. (9 Pet.) 418, 9 L. Ed. 178. Wherever these two facts are shown to exist, the law pronounces the intent with which they were done to be corrupt. Reed v. Coale, 4 Ind. 283, 288.

Matured claim.

Where the original consideration of a loan is forbearance, and wholly free from the taint of usury, it will not be invalidated by a subsequent agreement to pay usurious rates after the debt has matured. Dell v. Oppenheimer, 4 N. W. 51, 9 Neb. 454.

Sharing in profits.

An agreement to accept a share of the profits of an enterprise in lieu of interest, though the expected compensation would exceed the statutory rate, is not usury. Trask v. Hazzer, 4 N. Y. Supp. 635, 638.

Taking necessary.

There must be not only a corrupt agreement, but an actual taking under such agreement, or there is no usury. Clark v. Badgley, 8 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 233, 234.

Under the act of 1837, making the actual taking of usury an indictable offense, but not a mere agreement for a usurious premium to be paid at a future time, the crime is not consummated until the usury is actually received by the usurer, either directly or indirectly. Henry v. Bank of Salina (N. Y.) 5 Hill, 523, 528.

UTENSIL.

See "Farming Tools and Utensils."

The word "utensil" is derived from the Latin verb "utor," and signifies an instrument; that which is used; particularly an instrument or vessel used in a kitchen, or in domestic or farming business. Elliott v. Posten, 57 N. C. 433, 434; In re McManus' Estate, 25 Pac. 413, 87 Cal. 292, 10 L. R. A. 567, 22 Am. St. Rep. 250; In re Slade's Estate, 55 Pac. 158, 159, 122 Cal. 434; In re Klemp's Estate, 50 Pac. 1062, 119 Cal. 41, 39 L. R. A. 340, 63 Am. St. Rep. 69.

UTILITY.

"Utility," within the meaning of the United States patent law, exists if a combination is new and the machine capable of being beneficially used for the purpose for which it was designed. Strobridge v. Lindsay (U. S.) 2 Fed. 692, 695; Seymour v. Osborne, 78 U. S. (11 Wall.) 516, 549, 20 L. Ed. 83.

Utility means the state or quality of being useful; usefulness; production of good; advantageousness; profitableness; benefit; service; profit; avail. In a labor lien act it covers all the things to which definition applies. Randolph v. Builders' & Painters' Supply Co., 17 South. 721, 723, 106 Ala. 501.

The intent indicated by the Legislature as to the word "utility" must be controlled and limited in its meaning by the various objects of utility specified in the section. For instance, a porch is authorized. Now, it is not contended that the owners of lots are confined particularly to erections called "porches." Any other erection of a similar nature and used for similar purposes would fall within the meaning of the word "utility." At all events, the erection must bear a nearer relation to a porch than the flight of steps described in the special verdict. The objects of utility authorized by the law are such, and such only, as may contribute to the convenience, comfort, or health of owners of lots, provided they do not annoy the public or mar the beauty of the city. People v. Carpenter, 1 Mich. (Manning) 273, 283.

UTMOST CARE.

The term "utmost" conveys a stronger and more significant meaning than the word "extreme," so that its use in the place of "extreme" in defining the care which a railroad company must exercise in relation to its passengers is erroneous. East Tennessee, V. & G. Ry. Co. v. Miller, 22 S. E. 660, 661, 95 Ga. 738.

"Utmost care" means all the care and diligence possible in the nature of the case. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. George (Tex.) 60 S. W. 313, 314.

The utmost care which it is said that a carrier is bound to exercise for the safety of passengers cannot always be defined, as it must be judged "by the nature of the work to be done, the instruments to be used, the hazard and danger to life and limb from the character of the service to be performed by the carrier. Its meaning in each specific instance must be determined in view of the peculiar circumstances of the case." Carter v. Kansas City Cable Ry. Co. (U. S.) 42 Fed. 37, 38.

The phrase "utmost degree of care and prudence" is held to be a sufficiently accurate expression of the duty of a common carrier to exercise care for the safety of its passengers; the court remarking, in comparing this phrase with the expression "as far as human foresight and care can reasonably go," very commonly used and approved, says the meaning, whether of one formula or another, is that the carrier is legally bound to exercise the greatest, highest, utmost skill and foresight that human experience and observation and the known laws of nature suggest as conducive to the passenger's safety, and capable of being put into practice, or such active, solicitous care, skill, and foresight as intelligent, suitably trained, and very cautious persons would be expected to exercise for their own personal protection in the same business and surroundings and with the same instrumentalities required and employed. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Kuhn, 64 S. W. 202, 207, 107 Tenn. 106.

"The utmost prudence and care," as used in a statement of the rule that the law imposes on the carrier of passengers for hire the utmost prudence and care for the safety of the passengers, means that they must exercise the prudence, skill, and care of a prudent person engaged in the same pursuit; but it does not mean that they must, at their peril, adopt every precaution which might by possibility prevent accident or injury, for that would be impractical, and would impose obligations about things that could not be foreseen, and could not, therefore, be guarded against. Kennon v. Gilmer, 5 Pac. 847, 854, 5 Mont. 257, 51 Am. Rep. 45.

In a charge that a steamboat company was required to use the utmost care in the use of all reasonable and proper means, with regard to the equipment and machinery of the steamboat, to prevent the escape of cinders and sparks, the use of the word "utmost," if intended to convey the idea that more than reasonable care, under all the circumstances, would be used, was error. But this court has said that this language may mean no more than saying that the defendant should have used reasonable care. Whether "utmost care" means "reasonable care" depends upon the nature of the subject-matter referred to. If the subject-matter spoken of was the care necessary to be used in carrying fire about a powdermill, there certainly could be no error in saying that the utmost care should be used, as nothing less than that would be reasonable care. So there might be circumstances attending the running of a steamboat in a narrow river, when the shores are covered with combustible materials, in a very dry time, when the wind was blowing from the steamer directly upon such combustible matter, and which would be very likely to ignite if sparks were permitted to escape from the smokestack of the boat. In such case the utmost care to prevent the escape of such sparks would probably be no more than reasonable care. Atkinson v. Goodrich Transp. Co., 31 N. W. 164, 166, 69 Wis. 5.

The "utmost care and diligence" which a carrier of passengers is required to exercise in providing against those injuries which can be avoided by human foresight does not "mean the utmost care and diligence which men are capable of exercising, but means the utmost care consistent with the nature of the carrier's undertaking and with a due regard for all the other matters which ought to be considered in conducting the business. Among these are the speed which is desirable, the price which passengers can afford to pay, the necessary cost of different devices and provisions for safety, and the relative risk of injury from different possible causes of it. The degree of care to be used is the highest; that is, in reference to each particular, it is the highest which can be exercised in that particular with a reasonable regard to the nature of the undertaking and the requirements of the business in all other particulars." Dodge v. Boston & B. S. S. Co., 19 N. E. 373, 377, 148 Mass. 207, 2 L. R. A. 83, 12 Am. St. Rep. 541.

The term "utmost care and diligence" means all the care and diligence possible in the nature of the case, and is equivalent to

"against which human care and foresight could not guard," as used in an instruction in an action for injuries from derailment of a car, that if the jury should find that the injury in question was the result of an accident or act against which human care and foresight could not guard, and was not the result of negligence in any degree on the part of defendants, then plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Worthington, 21 Md. 275, 288, 83 Am. Dec. 578.

The words "utmost care" are substantially synonymous with "highest degree of care," and therefore, in an action by a passenger for injuries owing to the alleged negligence of the carrier, an instruction that the carrier was required to exercise the highest degree of care in transporting passengers sufficiently declares the law as stated in Civ. Code, § 2100, providing that a carrier of passengers must use the utmost care and diligence for their safe carriage. Osgood v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 70 Pac. 169, 170, 137 Cal. 280, 92 Am. St. Rep. 171.

"Utmost care" means the greatest care, and falls short of the expression "possible care" in this: that it is understood to apply to the surroundings as matters then stood or could be foreseen. International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Welch, 24 S. W. 390, 391, 86 Tex. 203, 40 Am. St. Rep. 829. A carrier of passengers, though not an insurer, is bound to exercise such a high degree of prudence as would be exercised by a cautious and prudent man under the same circumstances, and use the utmost care in providing for their safety. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Brown, 40 S. W. 608, 614, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 93.

The term "utmost care" is defined to mean all the care and diligence possible in the nature of the case. A carrier is bound to use the utmost care, as so defined, to provide for the safety of passengers. Dillingham v. Wood, 27 S. W. 1074, 1075, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 71.

In holding that the use of the words "the utmost care and diligence" was properly used to characterize the care and diligence required of a street railway company toward its passengers, the court say that the expression is used to measure the care and diligence which a prudent man would exert in that business under like circumstances. Heucke v. Milwaukee City Ry. Co., 34 N. W. 243, 245, 69 Wis. 401.

UTTER.

"To utter and publish a forged instrument is to declare and assert directly or indirectly by words or actions that it is good." Hull v. Mallory, 14 N. W. 374, 56 Wis. 355 (quoting Whart. Am. Cr. Law, 339); State v. Calkins, 34 N. W. 777, 778, 73 Iowa, 128;

People v. Brigham, 2 Mich. 550, 554; People v. Caton, 25 Mich. 388, 392; State v. Horner, 48 Mo. 520, 522; People v. Rathbun (N. Y.) 21 Wend. 509, 521; Lindsey v. State, 38 Ohio St. 507, 511; Commonwealth v. Searle (Pa.) 2 Bin. 332, 339, 4 Am. Dec. 446; Elsley v. State, 2 S. W. 337, 338, 47 Ark. 572; United States v. Mitchell (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 1276.

"Uttering and publishing," as used with relation to forgery, means any disposal or negotiation of a forged instrument to another person. People v. Rathbun (N. Y.) 21 Wend. 509, 526.

"Utter," as used in relation to forgery, is a declaration that a forged instrument is good, or an offer to pass it as good. To merely show it without an offer to pass it, or depositing it for safe-keeping, is not an uttering; there must be an intention to pass it as good. United States v. Mitchell (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 1276.

Simply showing a forged instrument, without an offer to pass it, is not uttering. The fact that a check payable to the order of a party was not indorsed does not prevent the uttering of the same, where the check, and not the indorsement, is alleged to be forged, and in such case an attempt to pass it is sufficient to constitute the offense. Smith v. State, 20 Neb. 284, 287, 29 N. W. 923, 925, 57 Am. Rep. 832.

To constitute an uttering and publishing of a forged instrument there must be a representation of its genuineness; but such representation need not be made by express words. It may be indirectly made, and be evidenced by the action and conduct of the party. 3 Greenl. Ev. § 110; Commonwealth v. Searle (Pa.) 2 Bin. 339, 4 Am. Dec. 446. Where the holder of forged notes, without expressly stating that they were signed by the one whose name was written thereon as maker, offered to sell them for value and actually effected a sale, the purchaser supposing that they were genuine, and such holder knew the purchase was being made in that belief, he by such conduct induced that belief and intended to induce it, and by so offering them for sale and selling them he represented them to be genuine. State v. Calkins, 34 N. W. 777, 778, 73 Iowa, 128.

The uttering of false, forged, or counterfeited paper with intent to defraud the United States is in contemplation of law the disposing of it by way of trade; the selling or vending of it. United States v. Fout (U. S.) 123 Fed. 625, 628.

The words "utter and publish," as used in Acts 1736, p. 7, punishing forgery, are not satisfied by the words "did dispose and put away," the words in the act being more general and comprehensive. State v. Petty (S. C.) Harp. 59.

Intent and knowledge.

To constitute the offense of uttering and publishing a forged writing it is necessary that there be an intent to defraud, and that there should be a knowledge of the falsity of the document. Elsey v. State, 2 S. W. 337-339, 47 Ark. 572.

The deceitful and fraudulent intent is the essence of the offense of uttering a forged instrument. State v. Redstrake, 39 N. J. Law (40 Vroom) 365, 368, 369.

To constitute a felonious uttering of a counterfeit note, it must not only be put away as true, but it must be innocently taken. People v. Rathbun (N. Y.) 21 Wend. 509, 521.

The crime of uttering a forged writing includes the uttering of a writing not genuine, but purporting to be genuine, even though there was no intent to defraud when the writing was fabricated. Ex parte Finley, 5 Pac. 222, 66 Cal. 262.

Delivery and receipt.

The offense of uttering a forged instrument is not complete until the paper comes into the hands of some one other than the accused. Lindsey v. State, 38 Ohio St. 507, 511; Jessup v. State, 68 S. W. 988, 989, 44 Tex. Cr. R. 83.

The word "uttering," used of notes, includes any delivery of a note to another for value with intent that it shall be put into circulation as money. United States v. Nelson (U. S.) 27 Fed. Cas. 80, 82.

To constitute an uttering it is not necessary that the forged instrument should have been actually received as genuine by the party upon whom the attempt to defraud is made. A receipt may be uttered by the mere exhibition of it to one with whom the party is claiming credit for it, though he refuses to part with the possession. People v. Caton, 25 Mich. 388, 392; Elsey v. State, 2 S. W. 337, 338, 47 Ark. 572; Smith v. State, 29 N. W. 923, 925, 20 Neb. 284, 57 Am. Rep. 832.

If a person offers another a thing—as, for instance, a forged instrument or a piece of counterfeit coin which he intends to pass as good—that is an uttering, whether the thing offered be accepted or not; and it is said that the offer need not go so far as to be in law a tender. State v. Horner, 48 Mo. 520, 522.

Forgery distinguished.

See "Forgery."

Pass distinguished.

In illustrating the difference between the words "uttered and published" and the word "passed," Chief Justice Tilghman says: "To utter and publish is to declare or assert directly or indirectly, by words or actions, that a note is good. To offer it in payment would be an uttering or publishing; but it is not passed until it is received by the person to whom it is offered." To the same effect is the opinion of Mr. Justice Baldwin in the case of United States v. Mitchell (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 1276. The learned judge, in his charge to the jury in that case, remarked as follows: "The passing or delivering a paper is putting it off or giving it in payment or exchange; uttering it is a declaration that the note or order is good. To merely show it, without an offer to pass it, or depositing it for safe-keeping, is not an uttering; there must be an intent to pass it as good." People v. Brigham, 2 Mich. 550, 553; Commonwealth v. Searle (Pa.) 2 Bin. 332, 339, 4 Am. Dec. 446.

Bringing action on.

The bringing of a suit upon a forged paper for the purpose of recovering the money purporting to be due by such paper is in law an uttering of the same as true. Chahoon v. Commonwealth (Va.) 20 Grat. 733, 795; Elsey v. State, 2 S. W. 337-339, 47 Ark. 572.

Mailing.

If a forged instrument be sent by mail for the purpose of being used at the point to which it is addressed, the crime is not consummated until it is received by the person to whom it is to be delivered. Lindsey v. State, 38 Ohio St. 507, 511; State v. Hudson, 32 Pac. 413, 414, 18 Mont. 112; Jessup v. State, 68 S. W. 988, 989, 44 Tex. Cr. R. 83. Contra, see United States v. Plympton (U. S.) 27 Fed. Cas. 578.

Recording.

The word "utter," used in reference to the uttering of a forgery, was held to be satisfied by putting a forged mortgage on record, or by collecting money upon it and indorsing the payments thereon, whether the instrument was produced at the time of the payment or not. Perkins v. People, 27 Mich. 386, 389.

Causing a forged deed to be recorded in the office of the county clerk as genuine and true is an "uttering and publishing," within the meaning of those terms as used in the statute imposing a penalty for having uttered and published a forged instrument. Paige v. People (N. Y.) 3 Abb. Dec. 439, 446; Elsey v. State, 2 S. W. 337-339, 47 Ark. 572.

Publish synonymous.

The word "utter," as employed in Gen. St. c. 29, art. 9, § 5, providing for the punishment of any person who shall knowingly utter or publish any forged or counterfeited instrument, is used in the same meaning as "published." Johnson v. Commonwealth, 90 Ky. 488, 14 S. W. 492.

UTTERER OF COUNTERFEIT.

See "Common Utterer of Counterfeit Coin."

UTTERLY DESERT.

"Utterly deserted," as used in St. 1838, c. 126, enacting that a divorce from the bond of matrimony may be decreed in favor of either party whom the other shall have willfully and utterly deserted for the term of five years consecutively, does not include an instance where a husband so abuses his wife that she has justifiable cause to leave him, and does leave him for such cause, and does not return, nor offer to return, to him, and he for five consecutive years next after her departure wholly neglects to provide for her maintenance, and does not seek to live with her. Pidge v. Pidge, 44 Mass. (3 Metc.) 257, 258.

"Utter desertion," as used in a statute making utter desertion a ground for divorce, means an abandonment of all marital obligations. Stewart v. Stewart, 7 Atl. 473, 474, 78 Me. 548, 57 Am. Rep. 822.

UTTERLY LOST.

"Utterly lost," in marine policies, is intended to distinguish a loss where the vessel is technically lost, as in the case of an abandonment, and requires that the ship shall be in fact a total loss; and she cannot be totally lost merely because it may cost more than she is worth to repair her. Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania v. Duval (Pa.) 8 Serg. & R. 138; Delaware Mut. Safety Ins. Co. v. Gossler, 96 U. S. 645, 656, 24 L. Ed. 863.

UTTERLY VOID.

"Utterly void," as used in Rev. St. 1833, declaring conveyances by debtors in fraud of creditors utterly void, does not mean that they are mere nullities, void to all intents and purposes, but simply voidable. Fox v. Willis, 1 Mich. (Man.) 821, 825.

V

V. L. O. L.

Letters are habitually used as an abbreviation for words. For instance, the letters "U. S." are universally understood to stand for the United States, and "Ky." for Kentucky; and in the same way in a bail bond the letters "V. L. O. L." describe the offense of violating local option law, and sufficiently describe the same. Allen v. Commonwealth, 73 S. W. 1027, 1028, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 2257.

V.—VS.

Where names of persons are separated by the abbreviation "v." or "vs.," the name or names preceding such abbreviation and the name or names following it are as certainly designated plaintiff or plaintiffs and defendant or defendants, respectively, as if these words were written in their appropriate places. City of Lead v. Klatt, 75 N. W. 896, 11 S. D. 109.

It was argued in support of a demurrer to a plea in abatement that the plea was not wholly in the English language; that "vs." stands for "versus," and that "versus" is not an English word; that the plea should have been entitled "Smith against Butler." But "vs." and "versus" have been too long used in legal practice, and their meaning is too well understood, to be open to the objection stated. They have, in fact, become ingrafted upon the English language, at least so far as they are used in this country in legal proceedings. Their meaning is well understood, and their use quite as appropriate as the word "against" could be. Smith v. Butler, 25 N. H. (5 Fost.) 521, 522.

VACANCY—VACANT—VACATE.

Vacancy is the state of being empty or unfilled. State v. Askew, 2 S. W. 349, 351, 48 Ark. 82.

The word "vacant" primarily signifies "deprived of contents; empty; not filled; as a vacant room. A thing is vacant when there is nothing in it." Norman v. Missouri Town Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 74 Mo. App. 456, 459 (quoting Webst. Dict.).

VACANCY — VACANT — VACATE (Of Building).

The words "vacant and unoccupied," in a policy of insurance, should be construed in view of the uses and purposes to which the building is adapted. Their meaning when used in a policy on a dwelling is not the same as when used in a contract of insurance on a store, a livery stable, or a school building. It will hardly be contended that a policy on a school building is not in force during that period. Each case must be determined on its own particular facts. German Ins. Co. v. Davis, 59 N. W. 698, 700, 40 Neb. 700.

A building containing furniture and fixtures, and in which a person slept part of the time, and containing stove, chairs, and other furniture suitable for a saloon, and also a small stock of liquors in kegs and bottles, is not "vacant, unoccupied, or not in use," within a policy of insurance against fire, exempting the insurer from liability if the building should be vacant, etc., at the time of the fire. Stensgaard v. National Fire Ins. Co., 30 N. W. 468, 36 Minn. 181.

A condition of a contract of fire insurance, that the policy should be void if the building should be occupied or used so as to increase the risk or become vacant or unoccupied for a period of more than 10 days, or the risk be increased by any means whatever, intends such a desertion of the premises and removal from them as would materially increase the risk. Moore v. Phoenix Fire Ins. Co., 6 Atl. 27, 30, 64 N. H. 140, 10 Am. St. Rep. 384.

A building in which the late occupants have left a part of their furniture after they are sleeping and taking their meals in another house is "vacant," though the key has not been surrendered to the landlord, within the meaning of an insurance policy providing that it shall be void if the premises become vacant or unoccupied. Corrigan v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 122 Mass. 298, 300.

A policy of insurance on dwelling houses and a house to let which stood close by provided that if the premises should become vacant or unoccupied the policy should cease. The insurance was for several terms, but the consideration paid was a gross sum. The buildings were destroyed when the dwelling house alone was occupied. It is held that the contract was indivisible, and that the premises were not "vacant," within the policy, so as to discharge the company from liability for loss of the other house. McQueeney v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 52 Ark. 257, 12 S. W. 498, 5 L. R. A. 744, 20 Am. St. Rep. 179.

Same—Change of tenants.

Where a policy on a tenement house provided that if it should be vacant or unoccupied without notice to or consent of the company in writing the policy should be void, the term "vacant" in the clause should not be strictly construed, but should be construed in conformity with the character of the property insured, and therefore where a tenant kept possession after the expiration of his tenancy until a Friday evening, and the new tenant took possession the next morning, but was unable to entirely move into the house on that day, and on Tuesday, before the incoming tenant had succeeded in moving into the property, it was destroyed by fire, the house was not "vacant and unoccupied," within the condition of the policy. Home Ins. Co. of New York v. Mendenhall, 45 N. E. 1078, 1081, 164 Ill. 458, 36 L. R. A. 374.

"Vacant or unoccupied," as used in an insurance policy conditioned against the premises becoming vacant or unoccupied, includes an instance where a tenant moves out, after which one who had previously engaged the house made some repairs and kept two or three planes in the house and put hay in the stable, and buried some potatoes on the premises, intending to move in on a certain date, before which a fire burning such house occurred. Continental Ins. Co. of New York City v. Kyle, 24 N. E. 727, 729, 124 Ind. 132, 9 L. R. A. 81, 19 Am. St. Rep. 77.

A dwelling does not become "vacant," within the meaning of a fire insurance policy providing that it should be void unless consent in writing was indorsed thereon by him, or on behalf of the insurer, if the building insured be or become vacant or unoccupied for the purpose indicated in the contract, where the owner of such dwelling, after a tenant has vacated the premises, moves his furniture into and cleans up the house with an intention of making it his residence, and during that time does not actually occupy it at night, subsequently leaves it temporarily on business, and puts a party in possession until his return. Shackelton v. Sun Fire Office, 21 N. W. 343, 344, 55 Mich. 288, 54 Am. Rep. 379.

A house vacated by the tenant, which is taken possession of the next day by the owner, intending to keep it himself, and who has papered, painted, and moved his furniture into the same, and keeps his employes in and about the house from 6 in the morning till 7 or 8 in the evening preparing it for occupancy, and which is destroyed by fire the day before he expected to move into the same, is not "vacant or unoccupied," within the meaning of a policy declaring that the insurer shall not be liable for loss occurring where the insured property is vacant or unoccupied. Eddy v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 30 N. W. 808, 811, 70 Iowa, 472, 59 Am. Rep. 444.

if the premises become vacant or unoccupied, has no definite signification applicable to all circumstances. Under certain circumstances premises may be vacant or unoccupied, and when, under other circumstances, premises in like situations may not be so. Thus, if one insures his dwelling house described in the policy as occupied as his residence, and he moves out of it, leaving no person in the occupation thereof, it thereby becomes vacant or unoccupied. But if he insured it as a tenement house, or as occupied by a tenant, it may be fairly presumed that the parties to the contract of insurance contemplated that the tenant was liable to leave the premises, and that more or less time might elapse before the owner could procure another tenant to occupy them, and hence that the parties did not understand that the house should be considered vacant immediately on tenants leaving it. Hotchkiss v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 44 N. W. 1106, 1107, 76 Wis. 269, 20 Am. St. Rep. 69 (citing Lockwood v. Middlesex Mut. Assur. Co., 47 Conn. 553, 561; Whitney v. Black River Ins. Co. [N. Y.] 9 Hun, 39; 1 Wood, Ins. § 91, pp. 208, 210).

A house which a tenant is notified to leave, and which he does leave some two days before a fire burning the same, with his landlord's knowledge and with his consent, leaving there some articles not required for housekeeping in his new quarters, is "vacant and unoccupied," within the meaning of a provision in an insurance policy declaring the policy void if the premises become vacant or unoccupied. Richards v. Continental Ins. Co. of New York, 47 N. W. 350, 83 Mich. 508, 21 Am. St. Rep. 611.

A building from which the tenant thereof partially moves, leaving in the building a portion of his furniture, is not "vacant or unoccupied," within the meaning of a policy of insurance, providing that it should be void if the premises became vacant or unoccupied, etc. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Buckstaff, 58 N. W. 695, 696, 38 Neb. 146, 41 Am. St. Rep. 724.

An insured house from which the tenant moved, and to which the owner went on the day after such moving, and in which he stayed that day, and into which he then made preparations to move, having placed a man in charge of the house, is not "vacated," within the meaning of an insurance policy providing that it should be void if the premises insured be vacated. Doud v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 21 Atl. 505, 506, 141 Pa. 47, 23 Am. St. Rep. 263.

In an action on a fire policy the defense was that at the time the building was destroyed it was vacant, contrary to the condition of the policy. The structure was a two-story frame building, occupied at the issuance of the policy by a tenant as a combination restaurant and residence. On the day before the burning the tenant began to move his furniture from the building into another with intent to change his residence. The goods were hauled by a party who had only one conveyance, and, when night approached, the moving was not complete, and a substantial portion of the tenant's furniture was left in the building, the intention being to finish the hauling the next morning. The tenant's family lodged that night in their new abode, but retained the keys and possession of the building until they should have time the next day to remove the remainder of the goods. About 1 o'clock the following morning, the building and contents were entirely destroyed by fire. Held, that the building was not "vacant," within the meaning of the word as used in the policy. Norman v. Missouri Town Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 74 Mo. App. 456, 459.

Same—As empty.

The word "vacant," as used in a fire policy providing that it shall be void if the house insured become vacant, means empty, and a house filled with furniture cannot be said to be vacant. Herrman v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 81 N. Y. 184, 188, 37 Am. Rep. 488.

A condition in a fire policy, avoiding it in case the building became vacant and unoccupied, requires, in order to avoid the policy, not only that the building shall become unoccupied, but also that it shall be vacant; and therefore the policy is not avoided by the removal of the owner of the house for the season, if he leaves his furniture thereat. Herrman v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 81 N. Y. 184, 187, 37 Am. Rep. 488.

A vacant house is literally an empty house. One or more persons may live in a house, and in either case it is occupied; they may have much or little furniture, and in neither event is it vacant. Woodruff v. Imperial Fire Ins. Co. of London, 83 N. Y. 133, 143.

Same—Occupancy by caretaker.

A fire policy describing the property as a house, and providing that the policy should be void if the house "shall be or become vacant or unoccupied," constitutes an undertaking by the insured that the house should not be without an occupant during the time covered by the policy; but it was not necessary that it should be occupied in the same manner or form in which it was occupied at the time of the insurance, so long as it was occupied by one person who had access to the entire building for the purpose of caring for it. Imperial Fire Ins. Co. v. Kiernan, 83 Ky. 468.

Same—Temporary absence.

A mere temporary absence of the occupant of a building therefrom will not render void a policy of insurance which contains a provision that the policy shall become void in case the building becomes vacant. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. McLimans, 45 N. W. 171, 172, 28 Neb. 846; Johnson v. Norwalk Fire Ins. Co., 56 N. E. 509, 175 Mass. 529.

A policy providing that it should not be valid if the house insured was permitted to remain vacant and unoccupied for more than 10 days meant an absence intended to be permanent for that length of time; and hence the fact that the owner of the house, who lived in it alone, left it for two months, does not, as a matter of law, render it vacant and unoccupied, where the absence was not intended to be permanent, and during such absence the house was visited daily by a neighbor, with whom the keys had been left. Hill v. Ohio Ins. Co., 58 N. W. 359, 99 Mich. 466.

The fact that the owner of a house, who lived alone in it, left it for two months, does not, as a matter of law, make it "vacant or unoccupied," within the meaning of a condition contained in an insurance policy, voiding the insurance, should the premises become vacant or unoccupied, where the absence was not intended to become permanent, and the house was visited daily by a neighbor in whose care the house had been left. Hill v. Ohio Ins. Co., 58 N. W. 359, 99 Mich. 466.

A house from which the occupants had been absent for several months on a visit, but whose furniture was left therein, and to which the occupants' relatives went daily, was not "vacant or unoccupied," within the meaning of a policy of insurance providing that it should be void on the property being left vacant or unoccupied, etc. McMurray v. Capital Ins. Co., 54 N. W. 354, 355, 87 Iowa, 453.

A dwelling house, to be in the state of occupancy, must have in it the presence of human beings as at their customary place of abode; not absolutely and uninterruptedly continuous, but that must be the place of usual return and habitual stoppage. Temporary absence, either on pleasure or from accident or for business purposes, cannot make a dwelling "vacant or unoccupied," within the meaning of an insurance policy providing that it shall be void when it is vacant or unoccupied. Morgan v. Illinois Ins. Co., 90 N. W. 40, 41, 130 Mich. 427.

A dwelling house does not become "vacant or unoccupied," in the usual acceptance of such term, when the tenant leaves it in the ordinary course of things, for a few hours. A furnished abode would not, according to usage, be called a "vacant or unoccupied" house on account of the temporary absence of the tenant. East Texas Fire Ins.

Co. v. Kempner, 34 S. W. 393, 398, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 533.

"Vacated," as used in a policy of insurance providing that if the dwelling house insured should become vacated by the removal of the owner or occupant the policy should be void, etc., means a permanent removal—an entire abandonment of the house as a place of residence. Cummins v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 67 N. Y. 260, 263, 23 Am. Rep. 111.

A tenant of a dwelling house placed all her furniture in one room, and went for a visit of six weeks, with the intention of occupying the house on her return. The furniture was placed in such room so that the others might be repaired during her absence. She left the key with her friend, with directions to visit the house daily and see that the doors were closed, etc. Held, that the house was not "vacant," within the meaning of a condition in a fire policy avoiding it if the property became vacant. Huber v. Manchester Fire Assur. Co., 36 N. Y. Supp. 873, 876, 92 Hun, 223.

When the occupant of a dwelling house moves out with his family, taking part of his furniture and all the wearing apparel of his family, and makes his place of abode in another town, although he may have an intention of returning in eight or ten months, such dwelling house, while thus deserted, must be regarded as "vacated," within the meaning of an insurance policy, providing that the same shall be void if the premises insured become "vacated" by the removal of the occupant, etc. Sleeper v. New Hampshire Fire Ins. Co., 56 N. H. 401, 408.

Within a policy of insurance on a dwelling house, containing the condition that if the same should become vacant or unoccupied, and so remain, the policy was to be void, means a house which has ceased to be used as a dwelling. A house which is furnished could not be called "vacant," because of the temporary absence of the tenant. Lasselie v. Hoboken Fire Ins. Co., 43 N. J. Law (14 Vroom) 468, 470.

A fire policy provided that if the insured premises were vacated, and no one placed in charge, the insured should bear the risk for that time. The policy further stipulated that temporary absence, like on a visit, should not create vacant property. Farm property being threatened with destruction from a forest fire, the tenant in possession of the property first plowed furrows round the buildings insured, then placed his goods in a wagon, and took them to a spring, and left his wife in charge, and returned to fight the fire with the assistance of neighbors. After a time his wife became ill, so, leaving the neighbors to continue the fight, he drove her to town, several miles distant, and returned as quickly as possible. It was held that no vacation had occurred, within the terms of the policy. Raymond v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 114 Mich. 386, 390, 72 N. W. 254.

Same—As uninhabited.

An insurance policy providing that if the premises become "vacant, unoccupied, or uninhabited" the policy shall be void, means that if the house ceases to be used as a place of human habitation or for living purposes the policy shall be void. Home Ins. Co. v. Boyd, 49 N. E. 285, 237, 19 Ind. App. 173.

"Vacant" is the equivalent of "unoccupied," as used in a by-law of a mutual insurance company, providing it will not be liable for any loss on any dwelling house which has been vacant for 30 days previous to the loss, with the signification of "uninhabited." Doblantry v. Blue Mounds Fire & Lightning Ins. Co., 53 N. W. 448, 449, 83 Wis. 181.

A house is "vacant and unoccupied," within the meaning of a fire policy conditioned against the premises becoming vacant and unoccupied, if the tenant moves out on the 26th of March, and it is burned on March 31st, before a new tenant has moved in, though he intended to move April 1st, and made some repairs in the house prior to the fire. In so holding, the court cites Cook v. Continental Ins. Co., 70 Mo. 610, 35 Am. Rep. 438, in which the court said: "Occupation of a dwelling house is living in it." Paine v. Agricultural Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 5 Thomp. & C. 619. A fair and reasonable construction of the language "vacant and unoccupied" is that it should be without an occupant—without any person living in it. American Ins. Co. v. Padfield, 78 Ill. 169. Speaking of a dwelling house and barn, Colt, J., in Ashworth v. Builders' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 112 Mass. 422, 17 Am. Rep. 117, observed that "occupancy," as applied to such buildings, implies an actual use of the house as a dwelling place, and such use of the barn as is ordinarily incident to a barn belonging to an unoccupied house, or at least something more than the use of it for storage. Continental Ins. Co. v. Kyle, 24 N. E. 727, 124 Ind. 132, 9 L. R. A. 81, 19 Am. St. Rep. 77.

A policy of fire insurance on a dwelling house which should become void on its becoming vacant and unoccupied means that the house is without an occupant—without some person living in it. When the occupant of a dwelling house moves out with his family, taking part of his furniture and nearly all his wearing apparel, and makes his place of abode elsewhere, such dwelling house, while thus deserted, must be regarded as "unoccupied"—that is, vacated—if the word be given its natural and ordinary signification. Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 33 Atl. 429, 430, 82 Md. 88, 80 L. R. A. 633, 51 Am. St. Rep. 457.

Same—As unoccupied.

An insurance policy providing that the same shall be void if the house insured shall become "vacant and unoccupied" means that it should be without an occupant—without any person living in it. American Ins. Co. v. Padfield, 78 Ill. 167, 169.

The term "vacant or unoccupied," in a policy of fire insurance providing that it shall become void if the building herein described be or become vacant or unoccupied, etc., means that the house is without an occupant—that is, no one is living in it. Schuermann v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 43 N. E. 1093, 1094, 161 Ill. 437, 52 Am. St. Rep. 377 (citing North American Fire Ins. Co. v. Zaenger, 63 Ill. 464; Fitzgerald v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 64 Wis. 463, 25 N. W. 785; Alston v. Old North State Ins. Co., 80 N. C. 326).

"Vacant" and "unoccupied" are not synonymous, though sometimes so used. Vacancy, correctly speaking, can only occur when the building is empty, contains substantially nothing; while occupancy, when speaking of residences, refers more particularly to human habitation, the pedis possessio or actual living in the dwelling. 1 May, Ins. (3d Ed.) § 249a; Ostrander, Fire Ins. (2d Ed.) § 144. "The last-named author thus illustrates the difference between vacant and unoccupied: 'The distinction,' he says, 'is perhaps more clearly marked in the case of a dwelling house from which the family has removed, leaving a portion of their household goods in the building. It will not be vacant, but occupancy is at an end when it is no longer the place of abode of any living person.' In Herrman v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 81 N. Y. 184, 37 Am. Rep. 488, Judge Earl says: 'A dwelling house is unoccupied when no one lives there, but it is not necessarily vacant. A house filled with furniture throughout cannot be said to be vacant, the primary and ordinary meaning of which is empty.' So in this case, though the dwelling in question was, at the time the fire occurred, unoccupied, it was not vacant. It is true that all the household goods of the tenant were not within the building, but there was a substantial portion remaining, and the tenant had the actual use of the house to shelter and protect his goods; they were 'under lock and key,' and held there for removal the succeeding day. Removal was in fieri; not complete. If the tenant had taken his family to a neighbor's house, leaving his household goods packed and ready for moving the next day, could it with any show of reason be said that the building was vacant? Surely not. Neither could it be said to be vacant if the tenant had taken away a portion, and left a portion for removal the following day. The house would not in either event be vacant, though unoccupied. See Cook v. Con- tinental Ins. Co., 70 Mo. 610, 35 Am. Rep. 438; Wheeler v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 53 Mo. App. 446, and cases there cited. * * * As to these and like conditions inserted in policies of insurance, the courts will not enlarge the meaning of words used so as to save the insurers from their obligation, but will hold them rather to the strict terms of their contracts. And if words of doubtful meaning are inserted in the contract of insurance, then that construction will be adopted which is most favorable to the policy holder." Norman v. Missouri Town Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 74 Mo. App. 456, 459.

In Herrman v. Adriatic Fire Ins. Co., 85 N. Y. 162, 39 Am. Rep. 644, the court, in construing a fire policy providing that the policy should be void if the house should become vacant or unoccupied, pointed out a distinction between the words "vacant" and "unoccupied"; the latter condition being broken when the house was either empty or unused as an abode, while the former required a concurrence of the absence of the occupants and a removal of the inanimate contents of the premises. Couch v. Farmers' Fire Ins. Co., 72 N. Y. Supp. 95-97, 64 App. Div. 367.

Same—As untenanted.

The term "vacant house" is used to designate an untenanted house. State v. Askew, 2 S. W. 349, 351, 48 Ark. 82.

Factory or mill.

To render a sawmill "vacant and unoccupied," within an insurance policy invalidating the same if the premises shall become vacant and unoccupied, there must be an entire abandonment of it by the owner. Whitney v. Black River Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 9 Hun, 37, 41.

A sawmill in which a gang of saws are rendered temporarily useless by the breaking of a journal, and the repairing of which is made difficult by the condition of the water, but the yard of which is occupied by logs which the owner intended to saw, is not "vacant and unoccupied," within the meaning of a policy providing that it shall become void on the premises becoming vacant and unoccupied. Whitney v. Black River Ins. Co., 72 N. Y. 117, 120, 28 Am. Rep. 116.

In construing a provision of an insurance policy providing that "if the premises hereby insured shall become vacant or unoccupied, or if the property insured, being a mill or manufactory, shall cease to be operated, and so remain for more than 15 days without notice to the company and consent indorsed thereon, the policy shall be void," the court said: "We think that the meaning of that clause is that the policy is to be void if the premises become vacant or unoccupied, and so remain for a period of more than 15 days without notice, etc. If the property be a mill or manufactory, the ceasing to be operated is equivalent to a vacancy." Miaghan v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 24 Hun, 58, 61.

An insurance policy conditioned that the policy shall be forfeited if the property insured becomes vacant and unoccupied, except to set up new machinery or make repairs, does not apply to a temporary suspension of the principal work of a cotton factory, the watchman and others being still employed, whether such suspension was to set up machinery or repair, or not. American Fire Ins. Co. v. Brighton Cotton Mfg. Co., 17 N. E. 771, 775, 125 Ill. 131.

Where premises were in charge of the usual superintendent of the insured, and the night and day watchman were on duty all the time the machinery lay still, and employes were at the factory from the day the work was suspended until the building was burned, in no sense were the premises "vacant and unoccupied." Brighton Mfg. Co. v. Reading Fire Ins. Co. (C. C.) 33 Fed. 232, 234.

House and barn.

The word "vacant," as used in a fire policy on a house and barn, conditioned to be void if the premises insured became vacant, means the vacancy of both house and barn. Worley v. State Ins. Co. of Des Moines, 59 N. W. 16, 17, 91 Iowa, 150, 51 Am. St. Rep. 334, 23 Ins. Law J. 580, 581.

Store.

Where a tenant has removed all his property from a store building except a very small quantity, which he has permitted a third person to store there, it is "vacant and unoccupied," within the provisions of a fire insurance policy making it void in case the property is vacant and unoccupied for a period of 10 days. Limburg v. German Fire Ins. Co., 57 N. W. 626, 627, 90 Iowa, 709, 23 L. R. A. 99, 48 Am. St. Rep. 468.

A policy provided that it should not cover unoccupied buildings, and, if the premises should be vacated without the consent of the company indorsed thereon, the policy should cease. In an action to recover a loss under the policy, one of the defenses was that the policy was not in force at the time of the fire by reason of the fact that the building was vacant and unoccupied. The trial court instructed that the word "unoccupied," as used in the policy should be construed in its ordinary and popular sense, and, as applied to a saloon building, meant such want of occupancy as usually or ordinarily attends or is exercised over a saloon building while being operated as a saloon; and that if the jury believed that the saloon had been vacated late in the evening of the day preceding the fire, and that the plaintiff was then in the city, and so far away from the building that the time intervening between the hour of vacation and the hour of the fire was not reasonably sufficient to permit the plaintiff to reoccupy it after the vacation and before the fire, then the saloon could not be considered to be vacated, within the terms of the policy. On appeal the court held that the words "vacant and unoccupied," in accordance with the instruction, should be construed in view of the uses and purposes for which the building is adapted; also whether the parties contemplated that the premises were to be occupied by the assured or by a tenant; that the words, when used in a policy on a dwelling, were not to be construed the same as when used in a contract of insurance on a store, livery stable, or schoolhouse, since it could not be contended that a policy on a school building was not in force during the summer vacation, though there was no person in the building during the period; and therefore that the mere leaving of the building unoccupied during the night did not render it "vacant and unoccupied," within the meaning of the policy. German Ins. Co. v. Davis, 59 N. W. 698, 700, 701, 40 Neb. 700.

VACANCY—VACANT—VACATE (Of office).

The word "vacancy," as applied to an office, has no technical meaning. People v. Edwards, 28 Pac. 831, 832, 93 Cal. 153.

The word "vacant," as applied to an office without an incumbent, means empty, unoccupied. There is no technical nor peculiar meaning to the word. An existing office without an incumbent is vacant. State ex rel. Sanders v. Blakenmore, 15 S. W. 960, 961, 104 Mo. 340; State ex rel. Van Buskirk v. Boecker, 56 Mo. 17, 21 (citing Stocking v. State, 7 Ind. 328); People v. Osborne, 4 Pac. 1074, 1078, 7 Colo. 605.

"Vacant" means empty, unoccupied, as applied to an office without an incumbent. An existing office, without an incumbent, is vacant. State ex rel. Sanders v. Blakenmore, 104 Mo. 340, 345, 15 S. W. 960.

An office presently filled cannot become or be vacant without a removal, either voluntary or involuntary. State v. McClinton, 5 Nev. 329, 334.

"Vacancy," as applied to an office, has no technical meaning. An office is not vacant so long as it is supplied in the manner provided by the Constitution or law with an incumbent who is legally qualified to exercise the powers and perform the duties which pertain to it; and, conversely, it is vacant, in the eye of the law, whenever it is unoccupied by a legally qualified incumbent, who has a lawful right to continue therein until the happening of some future event. Collins v. State, 8 Ind. 344, 350; Akers v. State, Id. 484; State v. Bemenderfer, 96 Ind. 374, 375; Gosman v. State, 6 N. E. 349, 351, 106 Ind. 203; People v. Tilton, 37 Cal. 614, 617; Commonwealth v. Hanley, 9 Pa. (9 Barr) 513, 516; Johnston v. Wilson, 2 N. H. 202, 204, 9 Am. Dec. 50; People v. Henderson, 35 Pac. 517, 522, 4 Wyo. 535, 22 L. R. A. 751; Pruitt v. Squires, 88 Pac. 643, 644, 64 Kan. 855.

"Vacancy" in an office means that the office is empty; that is, without an incumbent who has a right to exercise its functions and take its fees or emoluments. State v. Ware, 10 Pac. 885, 888, 13 Or. 380; Smith v. McConnell, 22 S. E. 721, 722, 44 S. C. 491 (citing Ex parte Meredith [Va.] 33 Grat. 119, 36 Am. Rep. 771); In re Lewensohn (U. S.), 98 Fed. 578, 579; State v. Maloney, 20 S. W. 419, 422, 92 Tenn. (8 Pickle) 62.

The sense in which the term "vacancy," as applied to an office, is used in all legislative enactments, in which a different meaning or intention is not in direct terms declared, is defined by the Legislature of California to refer to such terms of office as have been entered upon by an incumbent, who for some cause during his term has ceased to occupy the office, or to terms of office the incumbent of which has been legally designated by election or appointment and fails to enter upon its incumbency. People v. Parker, 37 Cal. 639, 650.

Where an officer continues in office after his term has expired, pending the issuance of a commission to his successor, there is no "vacancy," within the statutory provision that regimental field officers of the National Guard, except when elected to fill a vacancy, are commissioned for three years from the date of election, and until their successors are commissioned. Baxter v. Latimer, 116 Mich. 356, 362, 74 N. W. 728.

The word "vacancy," as applied to an office, means a place or post unfilled; an office that is not occupied. Under Gen. St. 1865, c. 18, § 131, providing that if there shall be a vacancy in the office of county attorney for any county it shall be the duty of the judge or justice of the peace, before whom any cause shall be pending, to appoint a competent person to represent the state, and fix his compensation, which shall be taxed as costs in the cause, the absence of the county attorney from the county, although for an indefinite time, does not create a vacancy in his office. Kouns v. Draper, 43 Mo. 225, 227.

The term "vacancy" implies an empty space; a place unfilled; and, when applied to an office, it means the state of being destitute of an incumbent, or a want of the proper officer to officiate in such office. But in neither case has it any reference whatever to any former time, or any former condition of the place or office. If a place is empty now, there is a vacancy, and it matters not whether it has once been filled, or whether it has always been empty; and so of an office. Opinion of Justices, 45 N. H. 590, 592.

To "vacate an office" is defined, among other things, to mean to quit possession of or to put an end to it. Hutch. Code provides that in all cases where a sheriff or other officer shall sell land by virtue of legal process, and shall have died, removed from the state, or otherwise vacated his office without having executed a deed, the court shall direct his successor to do so. Held, that the statute applies to cases where the sheriff holds after the end of his official term, and then goes out of office without having made a deed. Thornton v. Boyd, 25 Miss. (3 Cushman.) 598, 607.

Under the act of 1878 providing for election of supreme and circuit judges in distinct classes, the election was postponed until the next general election, and by favor of an emergency clause the act took effect from and after its approval by the Governor. In the meantime the offices created by the act were filled by appointment by the Governor, as provided by the act. That portion of the act authorizing the Governor to appoint the judges during the interim was not in conflict with Const. art. 5, § 16, authorizing the Governor to fill a vacancy in the office of judge of any court, by appointment, which shall expire when a successor shall have been elected and qualified, for the offices came into legal existence when the act took effect, and ipso facto became vacant at their creation. Olue v. Greenwood, 10 Or. 230, 238.

A "vacancy," within Pub. St. c. 10, § 27, directing the town clerk to issue his warrant for an election to fill a vacancy occurring by reason of failure to elect a Senator or Representative, means a vacancy where there is no incumbent to continue to hold the office. State v. Perry, 18 R. I. 276, 280, 27 Atl. 606, 607.

A "vacancy in office," within the meaning of Const. § 78, providing that in the case of a vacancy in office for any cause, and no mode is provided by the Constitution or law for filling such vacancy, the Governor shall have power to fill the vacancy by appointment, can never exist when an incumbent of the office is lawfully there, and is in the actual discharge of official duty. The vacancies contemplated by the Constitution relate only to such actual vacancies as may arise from death, resignation, and the like. State v. Boucher, 56 N. W. 142, 145, 3 N. D. 389, 21 L. R. A. 539.

another office, his former office shall become vacant, does not mean corporeally vacant, but that the office has no occupant who holds by a good title in law, and mere words in a statute cannot alone make an office unoccupied which in fact is occupied. Oliver v. City of Jersey City, 44 Atl. 709, 711, 63 N. J. Law, 634, 48 L. R. A. 412, 76 Am. St. Rep. 228.

The term "vacancy in office," as used in the article relating to vacancies, means such as exists when there is an unexpired part of the term of office without a lawful incumbent therein, or when the person elected or appointed to an office fails to qualify according to law, and when there has been no election to fill the office at the time appointed by law. It applies whether a vacancy is occasioned by death, resignation, removal from the state, county, or district, or otherwise. Ky. St. 1903, § 1521; Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 18; Hopkins v. Swift, 18 Ky. Law Rep. 526, 529, 37 S. W. 155, 100 Ky. 14.

Creation of office.

The verb "to vacate," in its English form, has acquired an active sense through a long period of transition, by popular usage and in consequence of its early adoption as a technical and legal term. "To leave empty," "to cease from occupying," "to annul," "to make void," undoubtedly express the different meanings in which, as a verb, the word has come to be employed. But it does not follow that its derivatives have acquired exclusively equivalent meanings in popular or legislative or legal usage. In its original Latin form the word was invariably used to define the state and condition of some existing thing at some particular point of time. It had no transitive power whatever. It meant "to be empty, void, or vacant; to be void of, free from, or without; to lack or want a thing." And many of the derivatives from the English verb retain the exact meaning of the original Latin word. To be "vacant," in its primary sense, is "to be deprived of contents; empty; not filled." The first definition of "vacancy" is "the quality of being vacant; emptiness." Usage has warranted the employment of these words in an enlarged and broader sense, but the primary and strictly grammatical meaning which they still retain is identical with their exclusive original significance. The result is that the word "vacancy" aptly and fitly describes the condition of an office when it is first created and has been filled by no incumbent. Walsh v. Commonwealth, 89 Pa. 419, 424, 33 Am. Rep. 771, 7 Wkly. Notes Cas. 22, 23.

It has been held that a "vacancy" may exist when an office is created and no one has been appointed to fill it; and it has been said an existing office without an incumbent is vacant, whether it be a new or an old one. People v. Opel, 58 N. E. 996, 999, 188 Ill. 194

(citing Mechem, Pub. Off. §§ 127, 132); In re Collins, 40 N. Y. Supp. 517, 519, 16 Misc. Rep. 598; Commonwealth v. Dickert, 45 Atl. 1058, 1061, 195 Pa. 234; People v. Rucker, 5 Colo. 455, 463; State ex rel. Henderson v. Boone County Court, 50 Mo. 817, 324, 11 Am. Rep. 415; State ex rel. Van Buskirk v. Boecker, 56 Mo. 17, 21; State v. Condon, 65 S. W. 871, 875, 108 Tenn. 82; State v. Scott, 15 S. E. 405, 407, 38 W. Va. 704.

A vacant office is an office without an incumbent, and it can make no difference whether the office be new or an old one. An old office is vacated by death, resignation, or removal. An office newly created becomes ipso facto vacant in its creation. State ex rel. Brown v. McMillan, 18 S. W. 784, 786, 108 Mo. 153. Thus, there is a "vacancy," within the meaning of Const. art. 7, § 50, providing that all vacancies occurring in certain judicial offices shall be filled by special election, by the fact of the creation of an additional judgeship. State v. Askew, 2 S. W. 349, 351, 48 Ark. 82.

Where a new county was created by the Legislature out of territory taken from two adjoining counties, the office of sheriff and other county offices in such new county were vacant, and could be filled either by appointment by the Legislature or by the Governor. The court said: "There is no technical nor peculiar meaning to the word 'vacant,' as used in the Constitution. It means empty, unoccupied, as applied to an office without an incumbent. There is no basis for the distinction urged that it applies only to the office vacated by death, resignation, or otherwise. An existing office without an incumbent is vacant whether it be a new one or an old one. A new house is as vacant as one inhabited for years, but abandoned yesterday. We must take the words in their usual sense." State v. Irwin, 5 Nev. 111, 130.

The Constitution declared that there should be a district attorney and a district judge in each senatorial district, to be appointed by the Governor by and with the consent of the Senate. It also authorized the Governor to fill vacancies in office occurring when the Legislature was not in session, the appointees to hold until the next meeting of the Legislature. The Legislature provided for organizing a court under this provision, but the act did not take effect until after the Legislature had adjourned, when the Governor appointed a judge and district attorney. In considering the validity of this appointment the court said: "It is very clear that in the case under discussion there was in fact a vacancy existing. There was an office. Nothing was wanted but men to fill the office. If this was not a 'vacancy,' the word is wrongly defined by the law quoted by lexicographers. Webster defines it to be, 'The state of being vacant; emptiness.'

Bouvier, 'A place which is empty.' Gormley v. Taylor, 44 Ga. 76, 81, 82.

"Vacancy," as used in Const. art. 3, § 8, providing that when any officer, the right of whose appointment is vested in the General Assembly, or in the Governor and Senate, shall, during the recess, die, or his office by any means become vacant, the Governor shall have power to fill such vacancy, is contradistinguished from "filled" or "occupied," and does not imply an original vacancy, but a vacancy caused by any means. People v. Forquer, 1 Ill. (Breese) 104, 115.

De facto incumbent.

"Vacancy," as used in a statute authorizing special meetings to fill any vacancy in the certain offices of a society, does not apply to an instance where there is a de facto, though not a de jure, incumbent. Harrison v. Simonds, 44 Conn. 318, 319.

Death of officer-elect.

Where a sheriff-elect died before qualifying or receiving a certificate of election, but after the expiration of the term of the sheriff in office, though the sheriff-elect was never in office, his death creates a "vacancy," within the meaning of Const. art. 5, § 23, providing that vacancies in the office of sheriff shall be filled by the commissioner's court. Maddox v. York, 54 S. W. 24, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 622.

The word "vacancy," in Pub. St. c. 10, § 27, providing, "Whenever any person elected Senator or Representative shall, at any time between his election and the expiration of his term, refuse to serve, * * * or whenever, in case of a failure to elect at the annual meeting, * * * the office shall become or be vacant, the town clerk shall forthwith issue his warrant for an election to fill such vacancy, unless a special election for that purpose shall be ordered by the house in which the vacancy occurs," is used in part with reference to the incoming House, in the sense of a vacancy in the members-elect, and not simply with reference to an actual vacancy in the representation of the town, for there can be no vacancy in the representation so long as the old member is present to act before the qualification of his successor. A vacancy in the office of Senator or Representative, within the meaning of such section, occurs on the death of a member-elect before the meeting of the House to which he was chosen. In re North Smithfield Election, 18 R. I. 817, 821, 27 Atl. 597, 598.

Expiration of term.

"Vacant," as used in Rev. St. 1858, § 248, declaring that whenever the office of any justice of the peace shall become vacant by resignation, removal, or otherwise, the justice to whom the books and papers of such former justice shall be delivered shall proceed to try actions, etc., includes the case of one who ceases to be justice by reason of the expiration of his term. Stamm v. Dixon, 5 N. W. 858, 861, 49 Wia. 328.

Under an act providing that members of the board of commissioners of a reform school shall be appointed by the Governor, by and with the advice of the Senate, and hold their offices for three years from the day of their appointment and until their successors are appointed and qualified, unless vacancies occur from death, resignation, or removal for cause, the office does not become vacant at the expiration of three years, and the Governor has no authority to appoint a successor except by and with the advice of the Senate. The appointment of a successor during the recess of the Senate does not create a vacancy in the office which the appointee may fill. State v. Howe, 25 Ohio St. 588, 595, 18 Am. Rep. 321.

The word "vacancy," in a statute providing that the commissioners of a county shall appoint some suitable person, resident of the county, to fill any vacancy occurring in the office of the county auditor, characterizes the existing condition on the expiration of the term of office of a county auditor, when his successor, by reason of a change of the law, has been elected, but his term fixed to commence in the future; and this is true although the statutes provide that any person holding an office of public trust shall continue therein until his successor is elected or appointed and qualified, unless it is otherwise provided in the Constitution and laws. State v. Brewster, 9 N. E. 849, 851, 44 Ohio St. 589.

Under Code, § 879, one who held an office under appointment by the Governor by and with the advice of the Senate was authorized to continue to discharge the duties until his successor had qualified, and such office does not become vacant, so as to authorize the Governor to appoint a successor when the Legislature is not in session. Such a vacancy could only be caused by the resignation or death of the incumbent or some other event by which the duties of the office were no longer discharged at all, in which case, and in order to prevent a failure of the public service, the Governor might appoint during the recess of the Senate. People v. Bisell, 49 Cal. 407, 409, 412.

Failure to elect.

"Vacancies," as used in Const. U. S. art. 1, § 2, which provides that, when vacancies happen in the representation from any state, the executive authority thereof shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies, includes a vacancy which happens by reason of a failure to elect a Representative, as well as a vacancy which occurs after the Representative has been elected. In re Representative Vacancy, 9 Atl. 222, 223, 15 R. L. 621.

An office cannot be said to be vacant while any person is authorized to act. In case of the failure by a town to elect officers at the annual town meeting, there is no vacancy because the officers of the preceding year hold the offices until others are chosen or appointed in their places and have qualified. People v. Van Horne (N. Y.) 18 Wend. 515, 518.

Although it has been held in special instances that the term "vacancy" relates only to cases where officers have been elected, and not to those where there has been a failure to elect, yet that construction cannot apply where the Legislature specifically defines a failure to elect as one cause of a vacancy. People v. Crissey, 91 N. Y. 616, 634.

A vacancy in office exists when there has been no election to fill the office at the time appointed by law. Elliott v. Burke, 68 S. W. 445, 447, 113 Ky. 479.

Failure to file bonds.

In construing a statute providing that, if any officer required by law to give bond fails to file the same in the proper office within the time fixed, he vacates his office, the court said: "It seems to us more reasonable to construe this section to mean that the failure of the sheriff to file his bond in the office of the judge of probate within 15 days after his election did not per se vacate his office, but created a cause of forfeiture or vacancy only, that might be enforced by the statute in a proper judicial proceeding instituted for that purpose. In such a proceeding it would be a good defense to show that the failure to file his bond within the time prescribed was not the fault of the petitioner; that he had tendered the judge of probate a good and sufficient bond within the time, and requested him to approve it; and that he neglected or refused without any sufficient legal excuse therefor." Ex parte Candee, 48 Ala. 386, 397, 398.

Failure to qualify.

A "vacancy," within the meaning of a statute in reference to an appointment to fill a vacancy in the office of mayor, exists when the successor of mayor in office is elected, but fails to qualify, and therefore the office may be filled by appointment. Vaughan v. Johnson, 77 Va. 300, 305; Johnson v. Mann, Id. 265, 268, 280.

The Constitution of California clearly defines the sense of the phrase "vacancy in the office of Governor," as used therein, by specifically enumerating the instances which devolve the duties of the executive on the Lieutenant Governor. All the instances mentioned are such as can only occur after the term of the Governor has commenced to run.

It is only after the installation of the particular incumbent that any one of these contingencies could happen. The manner of electing a comptroller and the term of his office are the same as are prescribed for the Governor, and each holds his office until his successor has qualified. The term of the office is fixed at two years certain with a contingent extension. When this contingency happens, this extension is as much a part of the entire term as any portion of the two years, and, where the successor-elect fails to qualify, the incumbent of the office continues to hold until the next election, and no vacancy occurs. People v. Whitman, 10 Cal. 38, 44, 45.

"Vacant," as used in Gen. St. 1878, c. 9, § 2, providing that an office shall be vacant upon failure of the incumbent to qualify, etc., applies to the particular term to which the event causing a vacancy relates. Scott County v. Ring, 13 N. W. 181, 184, 29 Minn. 398.

As applied to term.

Const. art. 4, § 8, declares that sheriffs, etc., shall be chosen by the electors of the respective counties once in every three years, and as often as vacancies shall happen. Held, that "vacancies," as so used, applies only to the office, and is not applicable to the term of office. People v. Green (N. Y.) 2 Wend. 266, 273.

"Vacancy," as applied to an office, applies not to the incumbent, but to the term, or to the office, or both, depending generally upon the context of the statute. People v. Le Fevre, 40 Pac. 882, 886, 21 Colo. 218.

"Vacancy" in an office means the want of an incumbent at the time. It has no reference to duration of time, and the appointment of a person to fill a vacancy pro tempore does not invest him with a full term, unless the law so expressly provides. Vacancy in an office is one thing, and term is another. An office may be vacant and filled many times during a term. State v. Johns, 3 Or. 533, 537.

"Vacancy," as used in reference to an office, relates not only to the office which is to be filled, but to the term for which the appointment is to be made. Monash v. Rhodes, 53 Pac. 236, 237, 11 Colo. App. 404.

The "vacancy" meant by Const. art. 8, § 7, declaring that, if any person elected or appointed to any county office shall fail to give bond and qualify within 60 days after his election, the said office shall become vacant, means that the office is without such an occupant as precludes the filling of it in any mode which the Constitution may provide or may recognize as lawful; that notwithstanding the incumbent of the former term may, and it is contemplated that he shall, continue in office or perform the official duties of the said office after the expiration of his official term, and until his successor is duly qualified, still the office is vacant as to the new term in the sense that any office is vacant which is not occupied by a person chosen to fill it for such term. State v. Murphy, 18 South. 705, 712, 32 Fla. 138.

VACANT LAND.

The ordinary meaning of the word "vacant" in its general use is to be empty or unfilled. When applied to an office, it means the condition when it is first created, and not filled by any incumbent, or after the death or removal of an incumbent before his successor is appointed. Vacant lands are such as are absolutely free, unclaimed, and unoccupied. In the case of Marshall v. Bompart, 18 Mo. 84, 87, it was said that the word, when applied to lands, means those which have not been appropriated by individuals. Lands are not vacant when they are occupied by others engaged in exploring for oil under oil placer claims, though such claims may not appear of record in the land office. Cosmos Exploration Co. v. Gray Eagle Oil Co., 112 Fed. 4, 13, 50 C. C. A. 79, 61 L. R. A. 230.

"Vacant and unoccupied land," as used in the statute of limitations, vesting title to vacant and unoccupied land in one, who, having color of title thereto, pays taxes thereon for seven years, means lands not in the actual possession of one; and hence the keeping of a wagon, when not in use, upon a city lot, in which the owner of the wagon has no claim or color of title, does not keep the lot from being "vacant and unoccupied," within the meaning of the words as used in the statute. Walker v. Converse, 36 N. E. 202, 204, 148 Ill. 622.

Within the meaning of a city charter extending the limits of the city, and providing that land within the territory annexed which was used exclusively for farming purposes or was vacant and unoccupied should not be taxed for city purposes beyond a certain specified rate, where a tract of land within such annexed territory was by the owner caused to be platted as lots and streets, he holding the lots for sale at a price greatly in excess of the land for farming purposes, but cultivating and using the most of the land until purchasers could be obtained, the remainder thereof being uninclosed and not used for any purpose, such cultivated land was used exclusively for farming purposes, and the other was vacant and unoccupied, and not subject to taxation at full rates. Gillette v. City of Hartford, 31 Conn. 351, 359.

The term "vacant lands," as used in Acts Tenn. 1847, c. 20, providing for the granting by the state of vacant lands, does not apply to the bed of the Mississippi river, which may, years after the passage of the act, become dry land by a sudden change in the course of the river, by cutting a new channel; such land not being "vacant land," within the meaning of the policy of the land law of the state. In Goodwin v. Thompson, 83 Tenn. (15 Lea) 209, 54 Am. Rep. 410, it was held that the title to the soil under the waters of streams navigable in a legal sense could not be acquired by individuals under the general land law of the state. Stockley v. Cissna (U. S.) 119 Fed. 812, 834, 56 C. C. A. 324.

Vacant land of a state, subject to grant to settlers in the usual way, through the land office, does not include the beds of the channel of the tidal navigable streams, the title to which is in the state. State v. Pacific Guano Co., 22 S. C. 50, 75.

As ungranted.

In reference to an application for a grant of land under the Georgia headright laws, an opinion of a surveyor that the premises in question were "vacant" means that they were ungranted. Pritchett v. Ballard, 29 S. E. 210, 102 Ga. 20.

Lands recently purchased by the state from a corporation, to which they had been originally granted by the state, are not "vacant lands," within the acts for granting lands; and a grant taken out for such lands vests no title in the grantee. State v. Arledge (S. C.) 2 Bailey, 401, 402, 23 Am. Dec. 145.

"Vacant lands," as used in the statute (Battle's Revision, c. 41, § 1), which provides that lands, in order to be the subject of entry under the statute, must be such as belong to the state and such as are vacant and unappropriated, does not include lands which have been granted by the state to individual citizens, but which the state subsequently acquires title to, but puts to no particular use, or which, having used, it abandons. State v. Bevers, 86 N. C. 588, 590.

As unoccupied.

The term "vacant lands" is used to designate unoccupied lands. State v. Askew, 2 S. W. 349, 351, 48 Ark. 82.

VACANT SUCCESSION.

A succession is called "vacant" when no one claims it, or when all the heirs are unknown, or when all the known heirs to it have renounced it. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 1095; Simmons v. Saul, 11 Sup. Ct. 369, 372, 138 U. S. 439, 34 L. Ed. 1054.

VACATION.

Of court.

The periods between the end of one term of court and the beginning of the next are called "vacations." Von Schmidt v. Widber, 34 Pac. 109, 110, 99 Cal. 511.

The term "vacation" was defined at the common law as all the time between the end of one term and the beginning of another. 6 Jacob's Law Dict. 323. But the term as used in section 66 of the practice act, authorizing judgments by confession in vacation, was construed to include a period of 32 days, during which a circuit court had adjourned over; but it was said that the term is not to be understood as embracing all the time the court is not actually in session, or as embracing the time of an adjournment from day to day. Burrill says: "In practice, intermission of judicial proceedings; the recess of courts; the time during which courts are not held." Wharton defines the word "vacation": "Intermission of judicial proceedings, or any other stated employment; recess of courts or senates." Conkling v. Ridgely, 1 N. E. 261, 263, 112 Ill. 36, 40, 54 Am. Rep. 204.

The word "vacation," as used in Code, § 3389, 3394, providing that, if an order for injunction is made in vacation, the judge must indorse the order on the petition, means such time as the court is not actually in session, though it ordinarily means the time between terms. Thompson v. Benepe, 24 N. W. 601, 602, 67 Iowa, 80.

The term "vacation," in Gen. St. c. 152, § 2, providing that a certain recognizance may be taken before the superior court in any county in term time or before the clerk of the court in vacation, is used in contradistinction to term time, indicating an intention to use it in its legal sense. The English legal year was divided into four terms of different lengths, separated by the vacations, which were the seasons of the great festivities or fasts which were deemed necessary on account of the avocations of rural business; and in this country the courts have their terms and vacations. Bronson v. Schulten, 104 U. S. 410, 415, 26 L. Ed. 997. The legal definition of the word "vacation" is that period of time between the end of one term and the beginning of another. Brayman v. Whitcomb, 134 Mass. 525, 526 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

Courts of highest resort have not been in accord as to when it was "vacation," within the meaning of statutes authorizing the court in term, and the judges in vacation, to grant certain orders. By some, vacation is held to be only that period of time between the end of one term and the beginning of another. Brayman v. Whitcomb, 134 Mass. 525. In Iowa it means such time as the court is not actually in session. In Illinois it means an adjournment for a considerable period of time. Rhodes-Burford Furniture Co. v. Mattox, 40 N. E. 545, 13 Ind. App. 221.

The Revised Statutes provide that whenever any act is authorized to be done by or any power given to a court or judge thereof in vacation, or whenever any act is authorized to be done by or any power given to a clerk of any court in vacation, the words "in vacation" shall be construed to include any adjournment of court for more than one day. Another section provides that, if a warrant be issued in term, it shall be made returnable forthwith, but, if issued in vacation, it shall be made returnable to the next term thereafter; and if a defendant be arrested during the term he shall be brought into court, but if he be arrested in vacation of the court the officer shall bail him, etc. In construing these statutes in the case of an arrest made on an information filed January 4th, the court having adjourned the term on December 23d to January 11th, it was held that the court was not in vacation at the time the information was filed, but that it was filed during term. State v. Derkum, 27 Mo. App. 628, 630, 631.

"Vacation" has been held to mean the period between the day on which a term of court is adjourned to the next court in course, or until the day of the beginning of another term, and not the mere interval when, for any reason, the court is not in session, and is adjourned over for more than a day. Warner v. Donahue, 72 S. W. 492, 494, 99 Mo. App. 37 (citing State v. Derkum, 27 Mo. App. 628). See, also, Brayman v. Whitcomb, 134 Mass. 525, 526; Hadley v. Bernero, 71 S. W. 451, 452, 97 Mo. App. 314.

Although it may be difficult to say generally, with sufficient completeness to cover all cases, what is "vacation" in chancery, as that term is used in V. S. 4527, providing that on violation of an injunction the court of chancery or in vacation a chancellor can punish the person guilty thereof, it is clear that when the county court finally adjourns, and the chancellor neither directs the continuance of the stated term of the court of chancery nor adjourns the term nor closes a special term, and nothing more appears, it is "vacation," within the meaning of the statute during all the time between the stated terms of the county court. In re Murphy, 50 Atl. 817, 73 Vt. 115.

Of highway.

The temporary turning out of a main road to avoid an obstruction or a mudhole will not operate as a vacation of the part of the highway occupied by the obstruction. Davis v. Nicholson, 81 Ind. 183, 186.

Of school.

"Vacation" is defined as the intermission of the regular studies and exercises of an educational institution between terms; and an intermission of two days in a term or school is not a "vacation," as used in a contract of employment of school teachers, providing that they shall not be paid for vacation, though the word be erroneously used by the board in authorizing the intermission. Board of Education of City of Emporia v. State, 52 Pac. 466, 467, 7 Kan. App. 620.

VACCINATION.

See "General Vaccination"; "Successful Vaccination."

Vaccination and quarantine, while both are preventive measures adopted to prevent the contracting of the disease of smallpox, are essentially different, in that to quarantine persons means to keep them, when suspected of having contracted or been exposed to the disease, out of a community, or to confine them in a given place therein, and to prevent intercourse between them and the people generally of such community, while persons who are merely vaccinated are allowed to go when and where they please and mingle freely with the other members of the community; and authority to county officials to levy taxes for the purpose of quarantine does not authorize such officials to incur indebtedness and levy taxes for the purchase of vaccine points to prevent the spread of smallpox in the county. Daniel v. Putnam County, 38 S. E. 980, 981, 113 Ga. 570, 54 L. R. A. 292.

VACCINE VIRUS.

Vaccine virus is the morbid principle of cowpox, which acts as a preventive of smallpox, and is, of course, a different article from antitoxine. In the Century Dictionary, the secondary definition of the word "vaccine," when used as a noun, is the modified virus of any specific disease introduced into the body in inoculation with a view to prevent or mitigate a threatened attack of that disease or to confer immunity against subsequent attacks. None of the other standard dictionaries—Webster, Worcester, Funk & Wagnalls—give any such definition of the phrase Koechl v. United States (U. S.) 84 Fed. 448, 28 C. C. A. 458.

The preparation known as "anthrax vaccine" or "black leg," which is used for the prevention of anthrax or black leg, a disease of cattle, is included within Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 692, 30 Stat. 202 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1689], relating to "vaccine virus," and is thereby taken out of the provision in section 1, Schedule A, par. 68, 30 Stat. 154 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1631], for "medicinal preparations not specially provided for." Pasteur Vaccine Co. v. United States (U. S.) 123 Fed. 846.

VADIUM.

A vadium is that sort of bailment in which goods or chattels are delivered to another as a pawn, to be a security to him for money borrowed of him by the bailor. "Vadium" is the Latin term therefor, and the relation is expressed in English by the word "pawn." Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909, 913.

VADIUM VIVUM.

A "vadium vivum" is defined by Kent to be when the creditor takes the estate to hold and enjoy it without any limited time of redemption, and until he repays himself out of the rents and profits. In that case the land survives the debt, and, when the debt is discharged, the land, by right of reverter, returns to the original owner. The holding of the land in pledge is like the holding of any other pledge until the debt is repaid; the owner of the pledge cannot recover it from the creditor. Thus where a mortgagee had been in possession of the mortgage, he could not be deprived of such possession without the payment of the mortgage debt, though the note which had been given had been outlawed. Spect v. Spect, 26 Pac. 203, 204, 88 Cal. 437, 13 L. R. A. 137, 22 Am. St. Rep. 314.

A vivum vadium, or Welsh mortgage, was a species of security by which the borrower of a sum of money made over his estate to the lender until he had received that sum out of the issues and profits of his land, and it was so called because neither the money nor the land was lost, and were not left in dead pledge. There was a living pledge, for the profits earned were constantly paying off the debt. But the distinguishing characteristics of such an instrument were that there was no proviso that the conveyance was to be void on payment of the debt, and there was no covenant, express or implied, for such payment. O'Neill v. Gray (N. Y.) 39 Hun, 566, 568.

The common law recognizes two kinds of landed securities, respectively, known as "vivum vadium" and "mortuum vadium." Vivum vadium consisted of a feoffment to the creditor and his heirs until out of the rents and profits he had satisfied himself his debt. The creditor took actual possession of the estate, and received the rents and applied them from time to time in liquidation of the debt. When it was satisfied, the debtor might re-enter and maintain ejectment, and it was said to have been collected vivum vadium, because neither debt nor estate was lost. Courtwright v. Cady, 21 N. Y. 343, 344.

VAGABOND.

"Vagabond" ordinarily means a vagrant or homeless wanderer without means of honest livelihood, but as used by a testator after making a devise to his son, in providing that in case such son should not make good use of the devise, "but becomes a drunkard and a vagabond, then the devise shall remain in trust," meant an idle, worthless, improvident fellow, who is so utterly without moral sense or self-respect that he will neither provide for his family nor take proper care of himself. Forsyth v. Forsyth, 19 Atl. 119, 122, 46 N. J. Eq. 400.

"Vagabonds," as used in an indictment charging the unlawful keeping of a house for the purpose of public prostitution and as a common resort for prostitutes and vagabonds, is not equivalent to "vagrants," as used in Pen. Code, art. 339, declaring a disorderly house to be one kept for the purpose of public prostitution or as a common resort for prostitutes and vagrants. Johnson v. State, 13 S. W. 1005, 1006, 28 Tex. App. 562.

VAGRANCY—VAGRANT.

As an offense, see "Offense."

"Vagrancy," when not defined by statute, must be considered such vagabondage as fairly comes within the common-law meaning of the word. There must be something more than a mere going about from place to place in a neighborhood or township without visible means of support; and the mere fact of sleeping in a barn one night is not sufficient, with the going about, to constitute vagrancy. "Vagrant" is defined by Bouvier to be, in the common meaning of the statutes punishing vagrancy, "a person who refuses to work and goes about begging." A person may be going about the community without any visible means of support, and yet be guilty of no offense. He may be seeking work with an honest intent to gain thereby a livelihood. In re Jordan, 50 N. W. 1087, 90 Mich. 3.

"Vagrancy" is distinguished expressly from disorderly conduct generally and from breaches of the peace, and a city council cannot enlarge its meaning or extend it to causes of vagabondage not fairly within the common-law meaning of the term, which was possibly designed to protect the public from expense quite as much as from disorder. In re May, 1 N. W. 1021, 1022, 41 Mich. 299.

The term "vagrant" does not include a lewd woman who is a minor and is supported by her parents. Taylor v. State, 59 Ala. 19.

By force of statute common prostitutes and professional gamblers are vagrants. Pen. Code, art. 385. Such persons are not, however, necessarily vagabonds; and consequently an indictment which charged the keeping of a house for the purpose of public prostitution and as a common resort for prostitutes and vagabonds should have been quashed to the extent of striking out the word "vagabonds," the indictment being drawn under a statute declaring a disorderly house to be one kept for the purpose of public prostitution or a common resort for prostitutes and vagrants." Johnson v. State, 13 S. W. 1005, 1006, 28 Tex. App. 562.

A child who has been committed "as a disorderly child, who deserts his home without sufficient cause, keeps company with dissolute and vicious persons, against the lawful command of his father, and is bad, ungovernable, and disorderly beyond his father's control," is not a "vagrant," within the meaning of Laws 1897, c. 508, authorizing boys to be received in a training school who shall be arrested or committed as vagrants. In re Braffett, 57 N. Y. Supp. 890, 27 Misc. Rep. 329.

The act of June 13, 1836, divided vagrants into five classes: (1) All persons unlawfully returning into any district whence they have been legally removed without bringing a certificate from the city or district to which they belong; (2) all persons having no means of support, who live idly and refuse to work for the usual wages given to other laborers; (3) all persons who shall refuse to perform the work allotted to them by the overseers of the poor; (4) all persons going about begging or gathering alms; and (5) all persons coming from some place without the commonwealth, who shall be found residing therein, following no occupation, having no means of subsistence, and giving no reasonable account of themselves or their business. "Vagrants," as thus classified, do not include all persons who come under the term "disorderly," as used by the Legislature. "Disorderly" means lawless; contrary to law; violating, or disposed to violate, the law and good order; inclined to break loose from restraint; unruly; in a manner violating law and good order; contrary to rules or established institutions. It includes all those who violate the peace and good order of society either as vagrants, disorderly, or for a breach of the public peace, or who should be bound for their good behavior. In re Aldermen and Justices of the Peace (Pa.) 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. 458, 464.

In Pennsylvania the act of 1876, popularly known as the "Tramp Act," thus defines and describes "vagrants": "(1) All persons who shall unlawfully return into any district whence they have been legally removed, without bringing a certificate from the proper authorities of the city or district to which they belong, stating that they have a settlement therein; (2) all persons who shall refuse the work which shall be allotted to them by the overseers of the poor, as provided by the act of June 13, 1836, etc.; (3) all persons going about from door to door, or placing themselves in streets, highways, or other roads, to beg or gather alms, and all persons wandering abroad and begging who have no fixed residence in the township, ward, or borough in which the vagrant is arrested; (4) all persons who shall come from any place without this commonwealth to any place within it, and shall be found loitering or residing therein, and shall follow no labor, trade, occupation, or business, and have no visible means of subsistence, and can give no reasonable account of themselves or their business in such place. Commonwealth v. King (Pa.) 2 Kulp, 386, 388.

Ordinance No. 2364 of the city of St. Louis declares: "All able-bodied persons who, not having visible means to maintain themselves, live idly, without employment; or are found loitering or rambling about, or wandering about and lodging in groceries, tippling houses, beer houses, outhouses, sheds, or stables, or in the open air, and not giving a good account of themselves; or wandering about and begging; or going about from door to door begging; or placing themselves in the streets or in other thoroughfares, or in public places, to beg or receive alms; all keepers or exhibitors of any gambling table or device; all persons who, for the purpose of gaming, travel about on steamboats, or go from place to place; and all persons upon whom shall be found any instrument or thing used for the commission of burglary, or for picking locks or pockets, and who cannot give a good account of their possession of the same—shall be deemed vagrants." Roberts v. State, 14 Mo. 138, 145, 55 Am. Dec. 97.

Under Rev. Ord. St. Louis, § 1062, defining a "vagrant" as one who shall be found trespassing on the private premises of others, and not giving a good account of himself, one cannot be fined as a vagrant because found trespassing on the private premises of another, if able to give a good account of himself. City of St. Louis v. Babcock, 156 Mo. 148, 150, 56 S. W. 732.

The vagrancy of a husband, which is a ground for a divorce, is a vagrancy as defined in the Criminal Code, describing a vagrant as every able-bodied man who shall neglect or refuse to provide for the support of his family. In a divorce case based on the ground of the husband's vagrancy, the evidence must be such as would support a conviction for vagrancy in a criminal prosecution. Dwyer v. Dwyer, 26 Mo. App. 647, 651.

Every person without visible means of living, who has the physical ability to work, and who does not for the space of 10 days seek employment, nor labor when employment is offered him; every healthy beggar who solicits alms as a business; every person who roams about from place to place without any lawful business; every idle or dissolute person, or associate of known thieves, who wanders about the streets at late or unusual hours of the night, or who lodges in any barn, shed, shop, outhouse, or place other than such as is kept for lodging purposes, without the permission of the owner or party entitled to the possession thereof; every lewd and dissolute person; and every common drunkard—is a vagrant. Pen. Code Idaho 1901, § 4852.

Any person who may be found loitering around houses of ill-fame, gambling houses, or places where liquors are sold or drank, without any visible means of support, or shall be the keeper or inmate of any house of ill-fame, gambling house, or engaged in any unlawful calling whatever, or any able-bodied married man who shall neglect or refuse to provide for the support of his family, shall be deemed a "vagrant." Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 2281.

All persons not having visible means of support and maintenance, who live without employment, and all persons wandering abroad and living in taverns, beer houses, market places, sheds, barns, or in open air, and not giving good account of themselves, and all persons wandering about and begging, or who go from door to door, or from place to place, or occupy public places for the purposes of begging and receiving alms, and all prostitutes, and all keepers, occupants, lessees, tenants, and pimps of houses used for prostitution or gambling, shall be deemed and are hereby declared to be vagrants. Cobbey's Ann. St. Neb. 1903, § 2339.

The following persons are vagrants: (1) A person who, not having visible means to maintain himself, lives without employment; (2) a person who, being an habitual drunkard, abandons, neglects, or refuses to aid in the support of his family; (3) a person who has contracted an infectious or other disease in the practice of drunkenness or debauchery, requiring charitable aid to restore him to health; (4) a common prostitute who has no lawful employment whereby to maintain herself; (5) a person wandering abroad and begging, or who goes about from door to door, or places himself in the streets, highway, passages, or other public places, to beg or receive alms; (6) a person wandering abroad and lodging in taverns, groceries, alehouses, watch or station houses, outhouses, market places, sheds, stables, barns, or uninhabited buildings, or in the open air, and not giving a good account of himself; (7) a person who, having his face painted, discolored, covered, or concealed, or being otherwise disguised, in a manner calculated to prevent his being identified, appears in a road or public highway, or in a field, lot, wood, or inclosure; (8) any child between the age of five and fourteen, having sufficient bodily health and mental capacity to attend the public school, found wandering in the streets or lanes of any city or incorporated village, a truant, without any lawful occupation; (9) every male person who lives wholly or in part on the earnings of prostitution, or who in any public place solicits for immoral purposes. A male person who lives with or is habitually in the company of a prostitute, and has no visible means of support, shall be deemed to be living on the earnings of prostitution. Cr. Code N. Y. 1903, § 887.

Any person who may be able to labor and who has no apparent means of subsistence, and neglects to apply himself to some honest occupation for the support of himself and his family, or if any person shall be found spending his time in dissipation or gaming, or sauntering about without employment, or endeavoring to maintain himself or his family by any undue or unlawful means, such person shall be a vagrant. Code N. C. 1883, § 3834.

The following persons are "vagrants" within the meaning of a provision punishing vagrancy: (1) An idle person who lives without any means of support and makes no exertion to obtain a livelihood by honest employment; (2) any person who strolls idly about the streets of towns or cities, having no local habitation and no honest business or employment; (3) a person who strolls about to tell fortunes or to exhibit tricks not licensed by law; (4) a common prostitute; (5) a professional gambler; (6) any person who goes about to beg alms who is not afflicted or disabled by a physical malady or misfortune; (7) a habitual drunkard who abandons, neglects, or refuses to aid in the support of his family. Pen. Code Tex. 1895, art. 413.

The following persons shall be deemed vagrants: (1) All persons who shall unlawfully return into any county or corporation whence they have been legally removed; (2) all persons who, not having the wherewith to maintain themselves and their families, live idly and without employment, and refuse to work for the usual and common wages given to other laborers in the like work in the place where they then are; (3) all persons who shall refuse to do the work which shall be allotted to them by the overseers of the poor; (4) all persons going about from door to door, or placing themselves in streets, highways, or other roads, to beg alms, and all other persons wandering abroad and begging, unless disabled or incapable of labor; (5) all persons who shall come from any place without this commonwealth to any place within it, and shall be found loitering and residing therein, and shall follow no labor, trade, occupation, or business, and have no visible means of subsistence, and can give no reasonable account of themselves, or their business in such place. Code Va. 1887, § 884.

Any person able to support himself in any respectable calling, who shall be found within the limits of this state without any visible means of support, and living an immoral or worthless life, shall be deemed a vagrant. Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 5126.

VAGUE ENTRY.

Entry may be either vague or special. The first is so entirely defective in its description of locality as to furnish no rational ground of belief that one place more than another was intended. Phillip's Lessee v. Robertson, 2 Tenn. (2 Overt.) 399, 415.

VAGUENESS.

Vagueness in pleading, it is well settled, is not frivolousness; it is to be corrected by amendment and not visited by judgment. Kelly v. Barnett (N. Y.) 16 How. Prac. 185, 187.

VALE.

The Spanish word "vale" means a general obligation, rather than a promissory note. Govin v. De Miranda, 35 N. E. 623, 140 N. Y. 662.

VALID.

The term "valid" means in law having legal strength, force, and effect, or incapable of being rightfully overthrown or set aside. Emerson v. Knapp, 75 Mo. App. 92, 97.

"Valid" means having force; of binding force; legally sufficient or efficacious; authorized by law. Hence, in Comp. St. Neb. 1896, c. 6, § 1, providing that no assignment for the benefit of creditors shall be valid, unless the same be made in conformity to the terms of the act, means that such assignment shall be void. Sager v. Summers, 68 N. W. 614, 615, 49 Neb. 459.

VALID AND EXISTING INSURANCE.

The agent of certain insurance companies in which plaintiff had insurance told him that they desired to cancel such insurance. He replied that the policies were transferred as security to certain of his creditors, and that the unearned premiums should be sent to them, which was done. One of the creditors refused the premium when received, on the ground that the fire had already occurred. On the same day on which the agent attempted to return the premium to plaintiff, plaintiff took out other insurance in the defendant company. Held that, the former policies not having been canceled at the time the policy in the defendant company was taken out, they constituted a "valid and existing insurance," within the prohibitory condition of defendant's policy. East Texas Fire Ins. Co. v. Flippin, 23 S. W. 550, 551, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 576.

VALID AND SUFFICIENT DEED.

The phrase "valid and sufficient deed," in an agreement for the sale of land, means an operative conveyance to transfer a good and sufficient title, but, in an order directing the officer of the court to convey, it means no more than a deed in form and terms sufficient to make the title obtained by it as valid to the purchaser as it was in the power of the officer to make it. Easton v. Pickersgill, 55 N. Y. 310, 318.

VALID CLAIM.

A statement in a bill in equity that a claim upon which defendant had obtained judgment against complainant was not valid was sufficient to charge that the claim was not of such a character that it could be supported either in law or equity. Herbert v. Herbert, 20 Atl. 290, 291, 47 N. J. Eq. 11.

VALID CONSIDERATION.

See, also, "Valuable Consideration"; "Value."

A consideration is valid if any benefit accrues to him who makes the promise, or any injury to him who receives the promise. Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 3657.

VALID DISTRIBUTION.

A "valid distribution," as the term is used in Rev. St. 1875, p. 372, § 5, providing that an agreement for distribution of an estate by the parties interested shall be a valid distribution of the estate, means that act which ascertains the individual shares of the distributees in and to specific property. Appeal of Mathews, 45 Atl. 170, 171, 72 Conn. 555.

VALID EXCUSE.

A provision in a mutual benefit certificate that the members might be relieved from the effect of forfeiture for the nonpayment of assessments on good or valid excuse to the officers of the association, it is held not to vest in the officers the exclusive right to determine the validity of the excuse. The word "valid," says the court, as here used, is equivalent to "good," "sufficient," or "satisfactory." Dennis v. Massachusetts Ben. Ass'n, 24 N. E. 843, 845, 120 N. Y. 496, 9 L. R. A. 189, 17 Am. St. Rep. 660.

VALID JUDGMENT.

A valid judgment is a record of a court having jurisdiction, which binds both parties. It is a sentence of the law, pronounced by the court, upon the matter contained in the record. Middlesex Bank v. Butman, 29 Me. (16 Shep.) 19, 28.

VALID LAND CERTIFICATE.

A "valid land certificate," within Rev. St. art. 3921, providing that all surveys properly made by virtue of valid land certificates shall be deemed valid, is a certificate having such strength or force under the law as will entitle its owner, through it, to appropriate a part of the unappropriated public domain. Adams v. Houston & T. C. Ry. Co., 7 S. W. 729, 741, 70 Tex. 252.

VALID LOCATION.

A "valid location," within the meaning of the United States mining laws, is a location which is distinctly marked on the ground, so that its boundaries can be readily traced. Any marking on the ground claimed by stakes and mounds, and written notices whereby the boundaries of the claim located can be readily traced, is sufficient. North Noonday Min. Co. v. Orient Min. Co. (U. S.) 1 Fed. 522, 532.

A "valid location," as the term is used when applied to a mining claim, is the purchase of a privilege. It is the grant of such an easement or property in the claim located as carries with it the right to acquire full title upon complying with the law. In order to keep this grant alive, the locator and his grantee must at all times be capable and qualified to receive the full title from the government. Tibbitts v. Ah Tong, 2 Pac. 759, 763, 4 Mont. 536.

To constitute a valid location of a lode mining claim there must be: "(1) A discovery, within the limits of the claim located, of a vein or crevice of quartz or ore, with at least one well-defined wall on a lead, lode, or ledge of rock in place containing gold, silver, or other valuable mineral deposits; (2) the location must be distinctly marked on the ground, so that its boundaries may be readily traced; (3) a declaratory statement in writing under oath describing such discovery and location, with a description of the claim located." Upton v. Larkin, 17 Pac. 728, 732, 7 Mont. 449.

VALID MORTGAGE.

The term "valid mortgage" means a mortgage which is "a lien upon specific property, with the ordinary incidents of such lien, one of which is prior as to that particular property over all other debts of the mortgagor which have not, prior to that time, ripened into a lien." King v. Fraser, 23 S. O. 543, 548.

"Valid mortgage," as used in an affidavit alleging that a mortgage was a valid mortgage, has reference simply to the title. Du Flon v. Powers (N. Y.) 14 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 391, 395.

VALID SALE.

A valid sale means one having the quality of legal sufficiency and complete obligation. Sharpleigh v. Surdam (U. S.) 21 Fed. Cas. 1173, 1178.

VALIDATION.

In regard to a proceeding to validate a proposed issue of bonds, "validation" means to irrevocably bind the taxpayer to the payment of such bonds. Smith v. City of Dublin, 39 S. E. 327, 330, 113 Ga. 833.

VALIDITY.

"Validity" has a well-understood technical, as well as a popular, acceptation, and must receive such meaning in the courts if its use in the statute does not suggest a different one. In the general nomenclature of the law, no word is so frequently used to signify legal sufficiency in contradistinction to mere regularity as this one. We say a deed is regular, but invalid for want of power in the attorney or officer. When a lawyer says he concedes the regularity of a sale, but objects to its validity, it is known the conditions are questioned upon which the power to make it depended. Elementary books, in treating of questions of both business and official agency, employ it as a commendous word, as always including every incident of complete legality. "Regularity," on the other hand, never does so. An official sale, an order, judgment, or decree may be regular. The whole practice in reference to its entry may be correct, but still invalid for reasons going behind the regularity of its forms. But when we say a judgment, decree, or sale is valid, it fully excludes the idea that it is void for any reason. Sharpleigh v. Surdam (U. S.) 21 Fed. Cas. 1173, 1178.

In the authorities which declare that the obligation, interpretation, nature, and validity of a contract made in one place, which is to be performed in another, are to be determined by the law of the place of performance, the term "validity" refers to the conditions of the contract, and the extent and nature of its obligation, as to which the agreement will be upheld or defeated, according to the sanction or the prohibition of the law of the place where the parties have located the transaction. Campbell v. Cramp-ton (U. S.) 2 Fed. 417, 423.

The terms "validity" and "inconsistency" "involve entirely distinct ideas. Whether a former law is inconsistent with the provisions of the latter act is one question; whether the provisions of the latter act are valid or invalid is another and different question." Meshmeier v. State, 11 Ind. 482, 489.

"Validity," as applied to treaties, admits of two descriptions—what is necessary and voluntary. By "necessary validity" is meant that which results from the treaties having been made by persons authorized by and for purposes consistent with the Constitution. To this kind of validity all such questions as these relate; that is: Has the treaty been made and ratified by the President with the advice and consent of three-fourths of the Senators present? Is it temporary, and has it expired? Is it perpetual? Has it been dissolved by mutual agreement? Has it been violated and declared to be void by the nation, or by those to whom the nation has committed that power? Does it contain articles repugnant to the Constitution? Are those articles void? Do they vitiate the whole treaty, etc.? By "voluntary validity" is meant that validity which the treaty, become voidable by reason of violations, afterwards continues to retain by the silent volition and acquiescence of the nation. It is called "voluntary" because it entirely depends on the will of the nation, either to continue to let it operate, or to annul and extinguish it. To this head such questions as these relate; that is: Has the treaty been so violated as justly to become voidable by the nation? Is it advisable immediately to declare it void? Would such a measure probably produce a war? Would it be more prudent first to remonstrate and demand reparation, or to direct reprisals. Are we in condition for war? Ought we at this juncture to risk it, or shall we postpone that risk until we can be better prepared for it? Shall we at this moment take any measures, or would it be more prudent to remain silent for the present, and let the treaty go on and continue to operate as if nothing had happened, etc.? Jones v. Walker (U. S.) 13 Fed. Cas. 1059, 1062.

VALUABLE.

(1) Having value or worth; possessing qualities which are useful and esteemed; precious; costly; as, a valuable horse; valuable land; a valuable cargo. (2) Worthy; estimable; deserving esteem; as, a valuable friend; a valuable companion. Webst. Dict.

VALUABLE CONSIDERATION.

See, also, "Consideration"; "Valid Consideration"; "Value."

A valuable consideration, in the sense of the law, may consist either of some right, interest, profit, or benefit accruing to the one party, or some forbearance, detriment, loss, or responsibility given, suffered, or undertaken by the other. Appeal of Clark, 19 Atl. 332, 333, 57 Conn. 565; Tillinghast v. Banks, 14 Ga. 649, 652; Hamer v. Sidway, 27 N. E. 256, 257, 124 N. Y. 538, 12 L. R. A. 463, 21 Am. St. Rep. 693; Babcock v. Chase, 36 N. Y. Supp. 879, 880, 92 Hun, 264; Corcoran v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 45 N. Y. Supp. 861, 863, 20 Misc. Rep. 197; Hamer v. Sidway, 38 N. Y. St. Rep. 888, 890; Hammond v. Shepard (N. Y.) 40 How. Prac. 452, 453; Devezac v. Seller (Ky.) 14 S. W. 590, 591; Akers v. Phillips (Ky.) 58 S. W. 790, 791; Stovall v. McCutchen, 54 S. W. 969, 107 Ky. 577, 47 L. R. A. 287, 92 Am. St. Rep. 373; Donahoe v. Rich, 28 N. E. 1001, 1003, 2 Ind. App. 540; Jaqua v. Montgomery, 33 Ind. 36, 45, 5 Am. Rep. 168; Bridges v. Stephens, 34 S. W. 555, 559, 132 Mo. 524; Cox v. Sloan, 57 S. W. 1052, 1065, 158 Mo. 411; Winter v. Kansas City Cable Ry. Co., 61 S. W. 606, 611, 160 Mo. 159; Mullanphy v. Riley, 10 Mo. 489, 490, 493; Homan v. Steele, 26 N. W. 472, 474, 18 Neb. 652; Armstrong v. Buel, 59 N. W. 515, 517, 40 Neb. 803; Irwin v. Lombard University, 46 N. E. 63, 65, 56 Ohio St. 9, 36 L. R. A. 239, 60 Am. St. Rep. 727.

"A valuable consideration is one that is either a benefit to the party promising, or some trouble or prejudice to the party to whom the promise is made. Any damage or suspension or forbearance of a right will be sufficient to sustain the promise." That is, a benefit or advantage accruing to the party who makes the promise, or some inconvenience or injury sustained by the party to whom the promise is made, is sufficient to support a contract. Homan v. Steele, 26 N. W. 472, 474, 18 Neb. 652.

"A valuable consideration is such as money, marriage, or the like, which the law esteems an equivalent for the grant, and is therefore founded in motives of justice." Potter v. Gracie, 58 Ala. 303, 307, 29 Am. Rep. 748 (quoting 2 Bl. Comm. 296, 297); Groves v. Groves, 62 N. E. 1044, 1045, 65 Ohio St. 442; Ten Eyck v. Whitbeck, 31 N. E. 994, 996, 135 N. Y. 40, 31 Am. St. Rep. 809.

"A valuable consideration is such as money or the like." Clark v. Troy, 20 Cal. 219, 220, 224.

A "valuable consideration," as defined in the books, means money or any other thing that bears a known value. As much may be inferred from the word "consideration" as from the word "value." Jackson v. Alexander (N. Y.) 3 Johns. 484, 489, 3 Am. Dec. 517.

A "valuable consideration" means, and necessarily requires, under every form and kind of purchase, something of actual value, capable, in the estimation of the law, of pecuniary measurement; parting with money or money's worth, or an actual change of the purchaser's legal position for the worse. The Elmbank (U. S.) 72 Fed. 610, 617 (citing 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 747).

To constitute a valuable consideration, as against existing creditors, the consideration recited, if relied on, must be such as will evidence an obligation on the part of the creditor that the grantee could have enforced against him or his estate. Stockslager v. Mechanics' Loan & Savings Institute, 39 Atl. 742, 744, 87 Md. 232 (citing Grover & Baker Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliff, 63 Md. 496).

A valuable consideration is a thing of value parted with, or a new obligation assumed, at the time of obtaining a thing, which is a substantial compensation for that which is obtained thereby. It is also called simply "value." Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 2803; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 5130; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 2464; Porter v. Andrus, 88 N. W. 567, 569, 10 N. D. 558.

The phrase "valuable and adequate consideration," used in Act Cong. June 30, 1864, c. 173, § 132, declaring that if any person shall by deed of gift or other assurance of title made without valuable and adequate consideration, and purporting to vest the estate, either immediately or in the future, convey any real estate, such disposition shall be taken to confer upon the grantee the succession, means either money paid or some present legal interest or estate parted with or charged, or services rendered, to the value of the property received. United States v. Banks (U. S.) 17 Fed. 322, 323.

The term "valuable consideration," as applied to the consideration expressed in a deed, differs in its meaning from the term as used in the recording act of New York with reference to purchasers for a valuable consideration, and as used by the courts of equity. In the latter cases it means substantial value; and a nominal sum, though actually paid, or an antecedent debt or a promise on the part of the grantee from which he can be relieved, do not constitute valuable considerations. Turner v. Howard, 42 N. Y. Supp. 335, 338, 10 App. Div. 555.

Rev. St. U. S. §§ 1781, 1782 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1212], make it a criminal offense for any member of Congress to receive or agree to receive any money, property, or other valuable consideration for procuring or aiding to procure any contract from the government, etc. Section 1781 makes it an offense for any person to give or agree to give any money, property, or other valuable consideration for the procuring or aiding to procure such contract by a member of Congress. The words "property" and valuable consideration," as used in such provisions, do not include the delivery to a member of Congress of a nonnegotiable note made by a government contractor, promising to pay a certain sum as the proceeds of the contract were received; such notes being executed pursuant to an agreement to pay such member for his services in procuring a contract. United States v. Driggs (U. S.) 125 Fed. 520, 522.

As affected by inadequacy.

A "valuable consideration," as used in Ky. St. § 1907, in relation to fraudulent conveyances, requires that the consideration should be valuable, and a consideration not much, if any, in excess of 50 per cent. of the goods sold, is so inadequate as to cause surprise or warrant a suspicion of fraud or contrivance on the part of the purchaser. Carter v. Richardson (Ky.) 60 S. W. 397, 399.

A valuable consideration is something mutually interchanged between the parties. It is not necessary that they should be of equal value. Dygart v. Remerschnider, 82 N. Y. 629, 642 (citing 2 Bl. Comm. 297, 444; 4 Kent, Comm. 462).

Acts to be subsequently performed.

A valuable consideration for a conveyance of land may be other than the actual payment of money, and may consist of acts to be done after the conveyance. Stanley v. Schwalby, 16 Sup. Ct. 754, 763, 162 U. S. 255, 40 L. Ed. 960.

Agreement to forbear.

A valuable consideration in a contract is anything which is of an advantage to the one or disadvantage to the other. Forbearance of suit is a sufficient consideration to support a contract; and the waiver by a guarantor of a note of the right to pay the note and sue the maker, made at the request of the holder, who is desirous of saving the maker from the annoyance of the suit, is a sufficient consideration to uphold a release of the guarantor from all liability to the holder. Ditmar v. West, 35 N. E. 47, 7 Ind. App. 637.

From time immemorial an agreement to forbear to sue has been held to be a valid and sufficient consideration. Bridges v. Stephens, 34 S. W. 555, 559, 132 Mo. 524.

Agreement to pay debt of another.

The words "valuable consideration," as used in section 74 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing that no attorney shall, after action brought, promise or give a valuable consideration for having placed in his hands a demand for the purpose of bringing action thereon, includes an agreement to pay the debt of another to a third person. The source from which the money is to come cannot change the fact that it is a valuable consideration. Whether the consideration be paid out of the money he is to receive from the transaction, or independent of it, is of no consequence. It is none the less his money, and none the less a consideration, though he take it from the proportion which he is to receive as a result of the litigation. In re Fitzsimons, 79 N. Y. Supp. 194, 197, 77 App. Div. 345.

Cancellation of pre-existing debt.

"Valuable consideration," as used in Civ. Code Cal. § 1214, providing that every conveyance of real estate other than a lease for a term not exceeding a year is void as against a subsequent purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration, whose conveyance is first duly recorded, should be construed to include the cancellation of pre-existing indebtedness in consideration of which the conveyance was made. Gassen v. Hendrick, 16 Pac. 242, 74 Cal. 444.

Dismissal of condemnation proceeding.

The term "valuable consideration" is defined in the abstract as the relinquishment by the promisee of some right which he may lawfully exercise or enforce. As applied to sales, it is the relinquishment of the right of property; in respect to bailments, it is the relinquishment of the right of possession; in considerations founded upon some act or forbearance, it is the relinquishment of a personal right, singly or in conjunction with others. Where a county dismissed a condemnation proceeding which was nearly completed, in consideration of a certain agreement, such dismissal constituted a valuable consideration. Barbour County Court v. Hall, 41 S. E. 119, 122, 51 W. Va. 269.

VALUABLE IMPROVEMENTS.

Rev. St. c. 141, § 3123, provided that in certain cases persons against whom judgments are rendered in ejectment may recover the value of permanent and valuable improvements made by them on the land. Held, that the words "valuable and permanent improvements," as there used, had reference to the purposes for which the lands are or may be used; thus, if the lands are farming lands, they must be improvements which enhance the value of the land for farming purposes—which enhance the value of the land as a whole. If, in making the improvements, valuable timber is destroyed, and the value of the land thus made less, this should be taken into account in estimating the value of the improvements, and if the cutting of the timber and clearing the land was an injury, rather than a benefit, to the premises, the person ejected should not be entitled to recover, as for a benefit, therefor. Pacquette v. Pickness, 19 Wis. 219, 224.

VALUABLE MINERALS.

Other valuable minerals, see "Other."

VALUABLE OR NECESSARY CONSTITUENT.

Under Act March 20, 1884, as amended April 22, 1890, prohibiting the adulteration of foods, "Breakfast Cocoa," in the preparation of which the manufacturer takes the cocoa bean and extracts a considerable portion of the oil therefrom, is not a violation of the prohibition in the statute that an article of food shall be deemed to be adulterated if any "valuable or necessary constituent" has been wholly or partly abstracted. Rose v. State, 11 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 87, 88, 5 O. C. D. 72, 73.

VALUABLE PAPERS.

"Valuable papers," within Code, § 2163, providing that any paper writing appearing to be the will of a deceased person, written by him, having his name subscribed to it, or inserted in some part of it, and found after his death among his valuable papers, shall be sufficient to convey lands, are such as are regarded by the testator as worthy of preservation—in his estimation, of some value. Valuable papers are not confined to deeds for lands or slaves, obligations for money, or certificates for stock. Any others which are kept and considered worthy of being taken care of by the particular person must be regarded as embraced in that description. Hooper v. McQuary, 45 Tenn. (5 Cold.) 129, 132.

Valuable papers are not papers having a money value, but such as are kept and considered worthy of being taken care of by the particular person. Marr v. Marr, 39 Tenn. (2 Head) 303, 306. Entries in a diary of daily transactions, whether on separate sheets of paper or in book form, preserved by the writer, and which were directed to be delivered by the writer's servant to the person selected by him to manage his estate after his death, would be valuable papers. Reagan v. Stanley, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 316, 322.

"Valuable papers," as used in Rev. Code, c. 119, § 1, providing that no last will shall be good unless signed by the testator and witnessed, or unless such last will and testament be found among the valuable papers and effects of any deceased person, does not necessarily and without exception mean the most valuable papers. Valuable papers consist of such as are regarded by the testator as worthy of preservation, and therefore, in his estimation, of some value. It is not confined to deeds for land or slaves, applications for money, or certificates of stock. Any others which are kept and considered worthy of being taken care of by the particular person must be regarded as embraced in the term "valuable papers." Winstead v. Bowman, 68 N. C. 170, 173.

VALUABLE RIGHT.

A "valuable right," within Pen. Code, art. 790, providing that swindling is the acquisition of any personal or movable property, money, or instrument of writing conveying or securing a valuable right, etc., is one which could be enforced at law. A chance in a raffle is not such a right. Rosales v. State, 8 S. W. 344, 345, 22 Tex. App. 673.

VALUABLE THING.

See, also, "Anything of Value"; "Thing of Value."

"Money or other valuable thing," within the meaning of a statute imposing a penalty for running a ferry for money or other valuable thing without obtaining a license, does not include a supposed benefit to one who runs a free ferry as an inducement to trade at his store, if there is no prior agreement to trade at his store with the parties ferried, and no money paid by them prior to the time that they are so ferried. Shinn v. Cotton, 12 S. W. 157, 52 Ark. 90.

Bond, check, or note.

"Valuable thing," within the meaning of the statute making it criminal to obtain from another anything of value by means of false pretenses, is defined by Rev. St. § 6794, to include a check or bond given for the payment of money. Tarbox v. State, 38 Ohio St. 581, 582.

"Valuable thing," as used in Rev. St. 1845, c. 30, § 130, making it a penal offense for any person to play for money or other valuable thing at any game with cards, dice, etc., would include checks, notes, or instruments understood by the parties to represent value. Gibbons v. People, 33 Ill. 442, 443, 445.

"Valuable thing," as used in Rev. St. 1879, § 1335, punishing any person who shall designedly, by color of any false token or writing, or by any false pretense, obtain the signature of any person to any written instrument, or obtain from any person any money, personal property, or other "valuable thing," includes a note. State v. Porter, 75 Mo. 171, 174.

"Valuable thing," as used in a statute providing for the punishment of any person obtaining money, wares, merchandise, or other valuable thing by false pretenses, includes everything of value, and embraces the promissory note of a third person. "Valuable thing" is more comprehensive than "valuable security." Every valuable security is a valuable thing, but many valuable things are not valuable securities. Mere tangible things were not alone meant. State v. Thatcher, 35 N. J. Law (6 Vroom) 445, 453.

County records.

County records are "valuable things," within the meaning of Gen. St. 1889, par. 2195, which provides that every person who shall be convicted of breaking and entering any shop, store, booth, tent, warehouse, or other building, etc., in which there shall be any goods, wares, or merchandise, or other valuable thing, shall be guilty of burglary. State v. Rogers, 39 Pac. 219, 220, 54 Kan. 683.

Lodging.

The phrase "valuable thing," as used in Act April 18, 1884, c. 26, 23 Stat. 11 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3679], providing that every person who, with intent to defraud, falsely assumes to be an officer or employé acting under the authority of the United States, and in such pretended character demands or obtains any money or other valuable thing, shall be guilty, etc., covers the obtaining of a month's lodging. United States v. Ballard (U. S.) 118 Fed. 757, 759.

Signature.

"Valuable thing," as used in Crimes Act, § 171, making it a misdemeanor to obtain, by false pretenses, money, wares, merchandise, goods, or chattels or other valuable thing, does not include the signature of an instrument which cannot under any circumstances affect the signer. "The phrase 'valuable thing,' was first employed in statutes for the punishment of false pretenses under the strict rule for the interpretation of penal statutes. The collocation of this phrase with words descriptive of only tangible personal property might seem to indicate a legislative design to limit its application to things of like nature. It is the true policy of the law neither to restrain the interpretation of the word within too narrow limits nor to explain it away to the encouragement of fraud. The signature of a negotiable note, which on its being passed to a bona fide holder would render the signer legally liable, has been held to be a 'valuable thing,' within the meaning of statutes relating to false pretenses. However, the term 'valuable thing' will not be extended beyond the signature of instruments which can be so used as to become valid in law or in equity against the signer, notwithstanding proof of the false pretenses by which the signature was obtained, and will never be given a meaning broad enough to comprehend signatures which cannot under any circumstances affect the signer if he make proof of the facts which must be established to maintain a criminal prosecution." Robinson v. State, 20 Atl. 753, 754, 53 N. J. Law, 41.

Unenforceable contract.

The term "valuable thing," within the meaning of the statute making it criminal to obtain any valuable thing by false pretenses, does not include a contract which is not capable of being enforced. State v. Clay, 13 S. W. 827, 829, 100 Mo. 571.

VALUATION.

See "Excessive Valuation"; "Just Valuation."

As an estimation.

"Valuation," as used in a contract that certain material is to be taken after valuation, as shown by the books of account of the partnership, means an estimation, and is not equivalent to value or market value. Lowenstein v. Schiffer, 56 N. Y. Supp. 674, 679, 88 App. Div. 173.

As statement of value.

"Valuation" as used in Rev. St. c. 7, § 22, providing that the assessors shall receive, as the true valuation of the property of each individual, the list, if any, brought in by him according to the provisions of the chapter, etc., is equivalent to "enumeration" or "statement," and not to "estimate of value." Moors v. Street Com'rs of Boston, 134 Mass. 431.

As value.

"Valuation," as used in a statement furnished an assessor that certain railroad property was "set down as of the value of six thousand dollars per mile, which was a fair valuation thereof," means that $6,000 per mile was a "just and fair value." The word "valuation," as here employed, signifies value. Valuation is defined as the price set upon anything—the estimated or rated worth of anything. "Value" is generally but an estimate of the worth of a thing, but "valuation," when used in its passive signification, as in this statement, means the estimated value or worth placed on the thing. State v. Central Pac. R. Co., 7 Nev. 99, 104.

"Valuation," as used in an agreement for the sale and purchase of "all soiled or damaged goods at the valuation," means value, and the contract will be deemed incomplete. Sergeant v. Dwyer, 46 N. W. 444, 445, 44 Minn. 309.

VALUE.

See "Actual Cash Value"; "Actual Market Value"; "Actual Value"; "Anything of Value"; "Appraised Value"; "Cash Value"; "Clear Annual or Yearly Value"; "Contract Price or Value"; "Current Value"; "Exchange Value"; "Face Value"; "Fair Value"; "Going Value"; "Increased Value"; "Intrinsic Value"; "Just Value"; "Market Value"; "Net Value"; "Nominal Value"; "Par Value"; "Pecuniary Value"; "Present Value"; "Probable Value"; "Purchaser for Value"; "Rental Value"; "Specie Value"; "Speculative Value"; "Taxable Value"; "Thing of Value"; "True and Full Value"; "True Value"; "Yearly Value."

"Value is the relation of two services. The idea of value entered into the world for the first time when a man said to his brother, 'Do this for me, and I will do that for you.' They had come to an agreement. Then we could say the two services were worth each other." State v. Yates, 10 Ohio Dec. 150, 158, 19 Wkly. Law Bul. 150.

The word "value" means the exchange power which one commodity or service has in relation to another. State v. Yates, 10 Ohio Dec. 150, 158, 19 Wkly. Law Bul. 150 (citing Walker, Science of Wealth).

The word "value," in its commonly received signification, means the sum of money a thing will produce to the seller when it is sold. We are aware that this is not abstractly the true measure of value. The quantity of labor and capital necessary to produce a given article, or, in other words, the actual cost of its production, is the true criterion of its worth. For instance, if a manufacturer be asked the value of a yard of cloth, his opinion of the value will be determined by his calculation of the expense of producing a yard of cloth of similar quality. If we ask a retail dealer the value of a yard of cloth, his opinion of its value will be determined by the quantity of money such an article will produce in the market. It is apparent that the marketable value may be affected by a multitude of circumstances which will not in their results extend to the cost of production. Value is in its nature so vague and indefinite that no human scrutiny can seize all its constituent parts, and therefore opinions of value are admissible in evidence from the necessity of the case. Town of Rochester v. Town of Chester, 3 N. H. 349, 358.

The word "value," it is to be observed, has two different meanings, and sometimes expresses the utility of some particular object, and sometimes the power of purchasing other goods which the possession of that object conveys. The one may be called "value in use"; the other "value in exchange." State v. Yates, 10 Ohio Dec. 150, 158, 19 Wkly. Law Bul. 150 (citing Smith, Wealth of Nations).

The value of property consists in its use, and he who owns the use forever, though it be on condition subsequent, is the true owner of the property for the time being. Wells v. City of Savannah, 21 Sup. Ct. 697, 702, 181 U. S. 531, 45 L. Ed. 986.

Value is any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract. Ann. Codes &

St. Or. 1901, § 4427. An antecedent or pre-existing debt constitutes value and is deemed such whether the instrument is payable on demand or at a future time. Negotiable Instruments Law N. D. § 25; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 1043; Brewster v. Schrader, 57 N. Y. Supp. 606, 608, 26 Misc. Rep. 480.

The term "value," as used in revenue laws, means the amount at which the property would be taken in payment of a just debt due from a solvent debtor. Pol. Code Cal. 1903, § 3617, subd. 5; Pol. Code Mont. 1895, § 3680, subd. 5; Pol. Code Idaho 1901, § 1313, subd. 5; Rev. St. Utah 1898, § 2505.

The word "value," as used with reference to the value of property stolen by one on trial for the offense, signifies "the sum for which the like goods are at the time commonly bought and sold in the market. If a thing has a value to the owner, though to no one else, to steal it is larceny, its value as to the rest of the world being immaterial. Still, in determining the grade of the offense, the value merely to the owner is not the standard for the jury." 2 Bish. Cr. Proc. § 751. Under this rule, the proper standard of value of a saddle, in a prosecution for the larceny of the saddle, is the market value of the article, if it has any market value, and, if it has none, then the amount that it will cost to replace it will be the standard of its worth. Martinez v. State, 16 Tex. App. 122, 128.

The value of the stock of a corporation is the net value of its assets, and is found by deducting its indebtedness from the gross value of its tangible and intangible property. State v. Karr, 90 N. W. 298, 300, 64 Neb. 514.

The term "value," in a constitutional provision that property shall be taxed according to value, means the worth of the property as compared with the money of the country—the standard by which all values are regulated. City of Chattanooga v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co., 75 Tenn. (7 Lea) 561, 569.

The value, for purposes of taxation, of property, results from the use to which it is put, and varies with the profitability of that use, present and prospective, actual and anticipated. Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express v. Crawford County, 40 S. W. 710, 713, 63 Ark. 576, 87 L. R. A. 371.

The use of corn as feed for horses and mules constitutes "value" in such corn. Miller v. State, 77 Ala. 41, 43.

Under a statute making it an offense for a public officer to receive property or value of any kind upon any agreement that his vote or official action shall be influenced thereby, it is held that the words "value of any kind" are more comprehensive than "property." People v. Van De Carr, 84 N. Y. Supp. 461, 464, 87 App. Div. 386.

The words "in value" in St. Kan. c. 33, § 8, providing that one-half in value of all the real estate in which the husband, at any time during the marriage, had a legal or equitable interest, etc., shall be set apart by the executor to his widow in fee simple, are used to negative the idea that it might be one-half in area that is to be set off to the widow. Ferry v. Burnell (U. S.) 14 Fed. 807, 810.

The charter of a railway company provided that, in proceedings by it to obtain private property for its use, the commissioners appointed to assess the compensation to be paid to the owners should assess the value at the time of entering on and taking by the company, and that, on appeal, the jury, or, if tried by the court, the court, should assess the value at the time of such entering on and taking, and a judgment should be entered for the amount of such assessment. In order to make the compensation to the owner just, on appeal by him from the award of the commissioners, the court, rendering a verdict for a greater sum than that awarded by the commissioners, should enter judgment for the amount so awarded, together with interest from the date of filing the award of the commissioners to the time of entering the judgment. Warren v. First Division of St. Paul & P. R. Co., 21 Minn. 424, 426.

In Scott v. St. Paul & S. C. Ry. Co., 21 Minn. 322, it was held that the word "value," in a charter provision that commissioners in condemnation proceedings should appraise the value of the land appropriated for right of way, embraces not only the value of the right of way strip as an isolated parcel of land, but such additional value as attached to it by reason of its connection with adjacent land of the same owner. Wilmes v. Minneapolis & N. W. Ry. Co., 29 Minn. 242, 245, 18 N. W. 39, 41.

The word "value," in a railroad charter providing for an appraisal of the value of land taken for railroad purposes, means compensation for the land, not merely the mere value of the land taken. Hursh v. First Division of St. Paul & P. R. Co., 17 Minn. 439, 449 (Gil. 417, 427).

As actual value.

"Value," as used in Const. art. 9, § 12, prohibiting a city from becoming indebted exceeding 5 per cent. of the "value" of its taxable property, cannot be construed to mean necessarily actual value. City of Chicago v. Fishburn, 59 N. E. 791, 793, 189 Ill. 367.

"Value," as used in Civ. Code, § 1260, providing that homesteads of not exceeding $5,000 in value may be selected and claimed by any head of a family, means actual value. Ham v. Santa Rosa Bank, 62 Cal. 125, 134, 45 Am. Rep. 654.

"Value," as used in a statute relating to taxation, and requiring the county commissioners, at the time of making county rates and levy, to assess mortgages, money owing by solvent debtors, all articles of agreement, and accounts bearing interest, for the use of the commonwealth, three mills on every dollar of the value thereof, the phrase, "every dollar of the value thereof" means the actual value, and not the face value. Commonwealth v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 104 Pa. 89, 101.

Amount synonymous.

See, also, "Amount."

In cases of notes current as money, the words "amount" and "value" are ordinarily synonymous terms. Commonwealth v. Warner, 54 N. E. 353, 355, 173 Mass. 541 (citing Commonwealth v. Hussey, 111 Mass. 432).

As cost price.

In a referee's report finding that the defendant purchased from the plaintiffs a bakery and stock of goods, agreeing to pay therefor the cost price, and finding that the value was a certain amount, "value" is synonymous with the term "cost price." Neib v. Hinderer, 4 N. W. 159, 160, 42 Mich. 451.

The use of the word "value," in a fence viewer's certificate stating the value of a division fence, is not a compliance with Rev. St. § 1396, which requires the viewers to examine the fence and ascertain the expense thereof. Voelz v. Breitenfeld, 32 N. W. 757, 759, 68 Wis. 491.

As effect or import.

In a statute providing that an indictment for forgery shall be sufficient if it set forth the purport and value of the false writing, the word "value" is not used in the sense of the worth of the instrument in money, but in the sense of the effect the instrument is intended to accomplish, and hence is a synonym of "effect," or "import." Chidester v. State, 25 Ohio St. 433, 438; Santolini v. State, 42 Pac. 746, 747, 6 Wyo. 110, 71 Am. St. Rep. 906.

As fair valuation.

The words "value thereof," in a provision that a corporation might purchase property necessary for their business, and issue stock to the amount of the value thereof in payment therefor, meant the fair valuation of the property. Boynton v. Andrews, 63 N. Y. 93, 94.

A direction that certain legacies should be paid by the testator's executors to the legatees in notes, bonds, and mortgages transferred to them, with their "respective value at the time," means at their fair intrinsic value, and not at the amount due upon them. Beatty v. Cory Universalist Soc., 7 Atl. 338, 339, 41 N. J. Eq. 563.

Income synonymous.

In Act April 21, 1846, authorizing trusts for the benefit of the owners and occupants of mill privileges on the Wynantskill, and providing that the annual value or income of the property to be held in trust is not to exceed the sum of $2,000, etc., "value" and "income" are used as synonymous terms, but, when taken separately and alone, there is a distinction between them. Property may have an annual value without any income. Troy Iron & Nail Factory v. Corning (N. Y.) 43 Barb. 231, 247.

As market value.

Bouvier, in his definition of value, says: "This term has two different meanings. It sometimes expresses the utility of an object, and sometimes the power of purchasing other articles with it. The first may be called the 'value in use' and the latter the 'value in exchange.' Webster recognizes a difference between extrinsic and exchangeable value." But in condemnation proceedings "value" will be held to mean market value. Little Rock Junction Ry. v. Woodruff, 5 S. W. 792, 795, 49 Ark. 381, 4 Am. St. Rep. 51.

When applied to property, and no qualification is expressed or implied, "value" means the price which the property could command in the market. In re McGhee's Estate, 74 N. W. 695, 697, 105 Iowa, 9.

The word "value," as defined by Bouvier, has two different meanings. "It sometimes expresses the utility of an object, and sometimes the power of purchasing goods with it. The first may be called the 'value in use'; the latter, the 'value in exchange.'" For the purpose of the law of eminent domain, the term "value" has reference to the value in exchange, or market value. There are some cases which seem to hold that the value in use to an owner is to be taken if it exceeds the market value, but it will generally be found, on careful examination, that such cases either refer to the damages accruing to the owner from the taking, and not to the value of the property itself, or they overlook the distinction between the two things. The consensus of the best-considered cases is that for the purpose in hand the value to be taken is the market value. San Diego Land & Town Co. v. Neale, 20 Pac. 372, 374, 78 Cal. 63, 3 L. R. A. 83.

The primary meaning of "value" is worth; and this worth is made up of the useful or estimable qualities of the thing. Ordinarily, when an article of sale is in the market, and has a market value, there is no difference between its value and the market price, and the law adopts the latter as the proper evidence of value. This is not, however, because "value" and "price" are really convertible terms, but only because they are ordinarily so in a fair market. Kountz v. Kirkpatrick, 72 Pa. (22 P. F. Smith) 376, 386, 13 Am. Rep. 687.

"Value," when applied without qualification to property of any description, necessarily means the price which it will command in the market. It supposes that the purchaser has clear and perfect title, or the unlimited right to dispose of the property at pleasure. The value of a lot of land is the price which can be obtained from a purchaser, conveying to him a fee or the right of absolute dominion over the property. When a testatrix, without any qualification, directed real estate to be valued, she evidently intended that an estimate of its worth should be made in reference to the interest which she had in it. Fox v. Phelps (N. Y.) 17 Wend. 393, 399.

By the term "value of stock" is usually meant market value. B. L. Blair Co. v. Rose, 60 N. E. 10, 11, 26 Ind. App. 487 (citing Cook, Stock & S. § 581, note 2).

Text-writers use the terms "value" and "market value" as interchangeable, and both as being the equivalents of "actual value," "salable value," and, in proper cases, "rental value." Jonas v. Noel, 39 S. W. 724, 725, 98 Tenn. 440, 36 L. R. A. 862.

The "value" of property is what it would sell for within a reasonable time from that in which the value is sought to be ascertained. This is held to be a correct definition of the term, at least so far as it goes, and not erroneous as an instruction, where no fuller definition is requested. Wright v. Solomon (Tex.) 46 S. W. 58, 60.

Value consists in the estimate or opinion of those influencing the market, attachable to certain intrinsic qualities belonging to the article to be valued. Washington Ice Co. v. Webster, 68 Me. 449, 463.

The word "value," in the rule that private property cannot be taken for public use without the payment of value therefor, means value in money in the market, and, when coal land is taken, is to be estimated from the market price of the land, and not from the price of unmined coal. Searle v. Lackawanna & B. R. Co., 33 Pa. (9 Casey) 57, 63.

Under a statute (Rev. St. art. 4876) declaring that where a defendant in sequestration retains possession of the property by giving a bond, and judgment is rendered for plaintiff, final judgment shall be entered against the obligor in such bond for the value of the property replevied, it was held that "the value of the property replevied" meant the market value at the time of the trial. Luedde v. Hooper, 66 S. W. 55, 56, 95 Tex. 172.

In an action to recover for damages sustained by a lessee by the taking of the property leased, by a city in widening a street, the judge correctly instructed the jury as follows: "The value of the leases is their market value. 'Market value' means the fair value of the property as between one who wants to purchase and one who wants to sell any article; not what could be obtained for it under peculiar circumstances, when a greater than its fair price could be obtained; not its speculative value; not a value obtained from the necessity of another. Nor, on the other hand, is it to be limited to that price which the property would bring when forced off at auction under the hammer. It is what it would bring at a fair public sale, when one party wanted to sell and the other to buy. The fact, therefore, that the lessee did not want to move, wanted to stay there, would have paid a very large sum to stay there, is not a test of market value, because it is not a case of one who wants to sell and one who wants to buy. The question is, if he wanted to sell his lease, what he could have obtained for it upon the market from parties who wanted to buy and would give its fair price." Lawrence v. City of Boston, 119 Mass. 126, 128, 129.

Price synonyms.

All the lexicographers, both law and general, in certain instances, give the words "value" and "price" as convertible and synonymous. As used in Code, c. 145, § 14, requiring an indictment for larceny to state the value of a thing stolen, if not synonymous with, it is at least equivalent to, the word "price," as used in an indictment charging the larceny of property of a certain price. State v. Sparks, 3 S. E. 40, 41, 30 W. Va. 101.

Ordinarily, when an article of sale is in the market and has a market value, there is no difference between its value and the market price, and the law adopts the latter as the proper evidence of the value. "Value" and "price" are, therefore, not synonymous, or the necessary equivalents of each other, though commonly "market value" and "market price" are legal equivalents. Thiess v. Weiss, 31 Atl. 63, 66, 166 Pa. 9, 45 Am. St. Rep. 638 (citing Kountz v. Kirkpatrick, 72 Pa. [22 P. F. Smith] 376, 13 Am. Rep. 687).

The primary meaning of "value" is worth. "Price" is not synonymous with "value," but frequently "market value" and "market price" are used synonymously. Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Parsons, 32 Pac. 1083, 1084, 51 Kan. 408.

"Value" is a word more comprehensive than 'price.' By the price of a thing, therefore, we shall henceforth understand its value in money; by the value or exchange value of a thing its general power of purchase; the command its position gives over purchasable commodities in general." Marriner v. John L. Roper Co., 16 S. E. 906, 907, 112 N. C. 164.

"Value," as used in an act providing that certain designated persons shall have a lien for the value of labor done and materials furnished, is not used in contradistinction to "price" and "agreed value." It was not the intention that a contractor, materialman, or laborer who agreed for a certain sum could have a lien for a greater sum on the ground that the value of what he furnished was greater. Jewell v. McKay, 23 Pac. 139, 141, 82 Cal. 144.

A contract between an original contractor and a subcontractor provided that the work should be subject to the supervision and control of a certain engineer; that he should make monthly estimates, four-fifths of which value to be paid to the subcontractor, and, when the work was completed, a final estimate; that the monthly and final estimates as to the quantity, character, and value of the work done should be conclusive between the parties. The term "value," as used in the contract, is to be distinguished from the term "price," as applied to the quantity of any of the different classes of work specified in the contract; and the engineer, in making the monthly estimates, had the right to deduct from the quantity of work done what he considered would equalize the part taken out as to quality and value with the whole work, and was not bound to allow the plaintiff, for all work done, the price specified in the contract for that kind of work. Faunce v. Burke, 16 Pa. (4 Harris) 469, 481, 55 Am. Dec. 519.

By the express provisions of Tax Law, § 53, the word "value," as used in such act, means the usual selling price at the place where the property to which such term is applied shall be at the time of assessment, being the price which could be obtained therefor at private sale, and not at forced or auction sale. State Board of Tax Com'rs v. Holliday, 49 N. E. 14, 17, 150 Ind. 216, 42 L. R. A. 826.

As used in War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, c. 448, § 25, Schedule A, 30 Stat. 458 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2300], requiring stamps on deeds of realty in proportion to the consideration or value of the interest transferred, where it is conveyed subject to incumbrances, means the value of the thing conveyed. The thing conveyed is the equity of redemption and the value of it is its price. Central Trust Co. v. Columbus, H. V. & T. R. Co. (U. S.) 92 Fed. 919, 920.

As rate.

The word "value" in Const. art. 10, § 9, providing that an unfunded debt of a city

"shall not be funded nor redeemed at a value exceeding that established by law at the time said debt was contracted," means rate, and not amount. One definition of the word "value" is "rate." If that word had been used instead of "value," the difficulty of construction would disappear. We would understand at once that it was forbidden to fund or redeem the debt at a greater rate of interest than that established by law at the creation of the debt. Antoni v. Wright (Va.) 22 Grat. 833, 855.

As rental value.

The terms "value of the use" of the premises, and "rental value," mean substantially the same thing. Alexander v. Bishop, 13 N. W. 744, 747, 59 Iowa, 572.

As valuable consideration.

The term "value," as used in the negotiable instrument law, means valuable consideration. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 653, c. 73, § 207; Code Supp. Va. 1898, § 2841a [Ann. Code 1904, p. 1455]; Negotiable Instruments Law N. D. § 191; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 1060; Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, § 3178; Ann. Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 4592.

A valuable consideration is a thing of value parted with, or a new obligation assumed at the time of obtaining a thing, which is a substantial compensation for that which is obtained thereby. It is also called simply "value." Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 5130; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 2464; Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 2803.

VALUE IN CONTROVERSY.

"Value in controversy," as used in a clause of the Bill of Rights authorizing a jury trial when the value in controversy exceeds $100, means "the amount actually in controversy, not necessarily the amount as shown by the pleadings." Streeter v. Connecticut River Lumber Co., 18 Atl. 651, 65 N. H. 201.

VALUE OF CONTRACT.

The phrase "value of the contract," as applied to a case brought by a party complaining of its breach, means the value of the contract to such party—a value not dependent on speculation or conjecture, but to be ascertained in view of all the circumstances of the case relating to the nature of the contract, its requirements, and the ability of the complaining party to perform it to the end. United Press v. A. S. Abell Co., 80 N. Y. Supp. 454, 460, 79 App. Div. 550.

VALUE OF LAND TAKEN.

The phrase "value of the land taken," in the charter of a railroad company authorizing it to take land by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, and providing that the value of the land taken shall be determined by commissioners, is of the same meaning as the words "just compensation," in the clause of the Constitution relative to the payment of just compensation for property taken for public purposes. Parks v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co., 33 Wis. 413, 420; Virginia & T. R. Co. v. Henry, 8 Nev. 165, 174.

"Value of the land," as used in Sess. Acts 1849, p. 219, § 9, providing that the benefits that may be charged against landowners adjacent to a railroad, portions of whose lands may be taken and appropriated to public use and deducted from the value of the lands taken in estimating the just compensation to which the landowners are entitled, means its actual value independent of the location of the road. Pacific R. R. v. Chrystal, 25 Mo. 544, 546.

The value of land taken for public use is not restricted to its agricultural or productive qualities, but inquiry may be made as to all other legitimate purposes to which the property could be appropriated. Harrison v. Young, 9 Ga. 359, 364.

The "value of the land taken," within Laws 1857, c. 1, § 13, providing for the appraisal of the value of lands taken by a railroad company for right of way, embraces not only the value of the strip of land taken as an isolated parcel of land, but such additional value as attaches to it by reason of its connection with adjacent land of the same owner. Scott v. St. Paul & C. Ry. Co., 21 Minn. 322, 323.

VALUE OF RAILROAD.

The value of a railroad track at any given time is not the original cost nor its ultimate cost after years of expenditure in repairs and improvements. On the other hand, its value cannot be determined by ascertaining the value of the land included in the roadway, assessed at the market price of adjacent lands, and adding the value of the cross-ties, rails, and spikes. The value of land depends largely upon the use to which it can be put and the character of the improvements upon it. The assessable value for taxation of a railroad track can only be determined by looking at the elements on which the financial condition of the company depends—its traffic as evidenced by the rolling stock and gross earnings in connection with its capital stock. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Backus, 14 Sup. Ct. 1114, 1118, 154 U. S. 421, 38 L. Ed. 1031.

The value of a railroad for purposes of taxation is not the mere value of its right of way, roadbed, its structure, its depot grounds and structures thereon, considered by themselves, but the value of all these as an operating going concern; this value being in general determinable by the profits which result from its operation. State v. Austin & N. W. R. Co., 62 S. W. 1050, 1051, 94 Tex. 530.

VALUE RECEIVED.

As consideration, see "Consideration."

The words "for value received," in setting forth a promissory note in a declaration, are words of description, and not an averment. The term "for value received" does not at all enter into the legal meaning or effect of the promissory note. McRae v. Raser (Ala.) 9 Port. 122, 124, 125.

The words "value received," in setting forth a promissory note in a declaration, are words of description, and not an averment, and, if the note produced in evidence is without these words, there is no variance. McRae v. Raser (Ala.) 9 Port. 122, 124.

The words "value received," on a promissory note, are merely formal, and are not conclusive. St. Vrain Stone Co. v. Denver, U. & P. R. Co., 32 Pac. 827, 829, 18 Colo. 211.

The words "for value received" are essential to the validity of a bill of exchange. Coursin v. Ledlie's Adm'rs, 31 Pa. (7 Casey) 506, 509.

The law is well settled that in a negotiable instrument the words "value received" are not necessary. Benjamin v. Tillman (U. S.) 3 Fed. Cas. 190, 191.

Under a statute (Rev. St. Mo. § 547) providing that a promissory note payable in money, expressed to be for value received, shall be negotiable as inland bills of exchange, a certificate of deposit lacking the words "for value received" is held not to be negotiable, the phrase quoted being essential to negotiability. Savings Bank of Kansas v. National Bank of Commerce (U. S.) 38 Fed. 800.

The words "for value received," when used in an instrument, do not necessarily import a consideration of money; a promise to pay in the future may be shown to have been the consideration. Osgood v. Bringolf, 32 Iowa, 265, 270.

The words "value received" in a negotiable instrument are prima facie sufficient to show a consideration. Austin, Tomlinson & Webster Mfg. Co. v. Helser, 61 N. W. 445, 447, 6 S. D. 429; Thrall v. Newell, 19 Vt. 202, 208, 47 Am. Dec. 682; Hayes v. Hood, 10 N. Y. Supp. 265, 266, 57 Hun, 585 (citing Quimby v. Morrill, 47 Me. 470).

An instrument whereby the maker in terms guaranteed the payment of a note (describing it), for value received, sufficiently states the consideration for such guaranty within the meaning of the statute of frauds. The words "value received" are a sufficient expression. Watson's Ex'rs v. McLaren (N. Y.) 19 Wend. 557, 563; Miller v. Cook, 23 N. Y. 495, 496; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Cleveland, C. & C. R. Co. (N. Y.) 41 Barb. 9, 21; Emerson v. O. Aultman & Co., 14 Atl. 671, 672, 69 Md. 125; Citizens' Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v. Babbitt's Estate, 44 Atl. 71, 72, 71 Vt. 182; Caldwell v. McKain (S. C.) 2 Nott & McC. 555, 557; Cheney v. Cook, 7 Wis. 413, 423; Day v. Elmore, 4 Wis. 190, 196; D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Baker, 25 N. W. 606, 607, 84 Minn. 307, 57 Am. Rep. 55.

The words "for value received" in a promissory note signed by the maker prima facie import a valid consideration for his promise to pay it. Town of Grand Isle v. Kinney, 41 Atl. 130, 132, 70 Vt. 381; Noyes v. Smith (Me.) 5 Atl. 529, 530; Moses v. National Bank, 13 Sup. Ct. 900, 901, 149 U. S. 298, 37 L. Ed. 743.

The words "value received," in a guaranty expressed to be for value received, without stating what was the value received, cannot have the effect to exclude proof of the consideration, for such proof does not contradict or vary the import of these words in the instrument, it merely showing in what the value consisted. Jones v. Palmer (Mich.) 1 Doug. 379, 383.

The words "for value received" in a deed import a sufficient consideration to raise a use to the bargainor under the statute of uses. Jackson v. Alexander (N. Y.) 3 Johns. 484, 495, 3 Am. Dec. 517 (cited in Turner v. Howard, 42 N. Y. Supp. 335, 338, 10 App. Div. 555).

The words "for value received," in a will declaring a legacy to be for value received, will raise a presumption that the legacy is given in discharge of an obligation, and therefore, in the absence of contrary evidence, the words preclude all lapse of the legacy by reason of the legatee dying before the testator. Ward v. Bush, 45 Atl. 534, 59 N. J. Eq. 144.

VALUE UNKNOWN.

The words "value and contents unknown," in the printed part of a bill of lading, apply only to packages mentioned therein, the contents of which are concealed from view, and do not apply to corn in bulk loaded into the car from an elevator. Tibbits v. Rock Island & P. Ry. Co., 49 Ill. App. 567, 571.

The use of the phrase "value and contents unknown," in a bill of lading reciting the receipt of goods for carriage in good order and well conditioned, but that the value and contents are unknown, exclude the inference of any admission by the carrier as to the quantity or quality of the contents of the package at the time of delivery beyond what is visible to the eye from handling the same. The California (U. S.) 4 Fed. Cas. 1058, 1059.

VALUED POLICY.

A valued policy is where the parties have agreed on the value of the interest insured in order to save the necessity of further proof, and have inserted the valuation in the policy in the nature of liquidated damages. Cushman v. Northwestern Ins. Co., 34 Me. 487, 491.

A valued policy is not understood to be one which estimates the value of the property insured merely, but which values the loss, and is equivalent to an assessment of damages in the event of a loss. Lycoming Ins. Co. v. Mitchell, 48 Pa. (12 Wright) 387, 372.

The term "valued policy" applies to cases only where a valuation is fixed upon the underwritten property by way of liquidated damages, and for the purpose of avoiding a subsequent valuation of the property in case of loss. Universal Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Weiss, 106 Pa. 20, 27.

A valued policy is one in which the amount payable in case of loss is fixed by the terms of the policy itself, as where the property is insured, valued at or worth a specific amount. Riggs v. Home Mut. Fire Protection Ass'n, 39 S. E. 614, 618, 61 S. C. 418.

Mr. Wood in his Treatise on Fire Insurance, section 41, says: "Valued policies are those in which both the property and the loss are valued, and which bind the insurer to pay the whole sum insured in case of total loss." A policy for a certain sum on a building, containing a stipulation that the insurer will pay all loss or damage not exceeding the sum insured, is not a valued, but an open, policy. Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Butler, 38 Ohio St. 128, 134.

A valued policy determines beforehand the amount for which the insurer is liable in case of loss, and such amount is inserted in the policy as a fit sum to be paid if loss occurs. It does more than merely value the property insured; it values the loss. To do this the policy must amount to a contract either to pay, in case of loss, a stipulated sum, or that the property shall be estimated at the stipulated sum in case of loss. Luce v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (U. S.) 15 Fed. Cas. 1071, 1072.

A valued policy is one which expresses on its face an agreement that the thing insured shall be valued at a specified sum. Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 2596; Rev. Codes N.

D. 1899, § 4497; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 1847.

A valued policy is where the value of the subject insured is agreed upon by the parties. If it is not estimated at any particular amount or rate, it is an open policy. Cox v. Charleston Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (S. C.) 3 Rich. Law, 331, 332, 45 Am. Dec. 771.

In a valued insurance policy, the value of the thing insured is fixed by the contract of the parties, and requires no proof; and, this constituting the only difference between an open and a valued policy, the value being agreed on, it is binding on both parties, and cannot be opened unless the value fixed is so exorbitant as to make it a fraudulent or gambling policy. In an action on a valued policy to recover damages for a partial loss, the damage to be assessed by the jury is the difference between the appraisal of the damaged article and that stipulated in the policy with all necessary damages, and the proper method of ascertaining the amount of the policy on a valued policy, by partial loss, is by an appraisal by persons whose experience gives them competent knowledge of the value of the article, and the amount of the injury sustained. Natchez Ins. Co. v. Buckner, 5 Miss. (4 How.) 63, 79.

Where a policy for marine insurance was in the form of a valued policy, and after a statement of the subject insured there appeared the phrase, "Valued at $— as indorsed," but the blank was not filled in, and there was no indorsement as to value, it was held that the failure to fill the blank or to make any indorsement as to value constitutes the policy an open policy, and not a valued policy. Snowden v. Gulon, 5 N. E. 322, 326, 101 N. Y. 458.

A policy, after insuring $1,700 on a mill and machinery and $150 on the movable machinery therein, proceeded in written words as follows: "Said insured being the lessee of said mill for one year from November 1, 1850, and having paid the rent thereof of $2,171.01, which interest, diminishing day by day in proportion to the whole rent of the year, is hereby insured." Held, that the policy was a valued one, although in a printed part of the instrument there was a provision that the loss or damage should be estimated according to the cash value at the time of loss. Cushman v. Northwestern Ins. Co., 34 Me. 487, 491.

To make a contract of maritime insurance a valued policy, and substitute an agreed valuation of the ship or goods for their actual value, to be ascertained by proof, as the rule of damages or measure of indemnity in case of loss, a special agreement of the parties is, as a general rule, required. And a clause is, in some cases, inserted in the policy, expressing the agreement that the subject insured shall be valued at the sum insured or a specified sum mentioned. Laurent v. Chatham Fire Ins. Co., 1 Hall (1 N. Y. Super. Ct.) 45, 48.

VARA.

A vara, in Texas, has always been regarded as equivalent to 33 $\frac{1}{8}$ inches. A standard vara is somewhat less than 33 $\frac{1}{8}$ inches. Humboldt, in 1808, found a Mexican vara to be 839.16 millimeters, or a slight fraction over 33 inches. But it seems that a vara measure of somewhat larger dimensions obtained in Texas from an early period. The standard Mexican vara is so near to 33 inches that a standard vara measure laid on an American yard would so nearly correspond with 33 inches that a difference could not be perceived by the naked eye. United States v. Perot, 98 U. S. 428, 429, 25 L. Ed. 251.

VARIANCE.

See "Material Variance."

A variance is understood to be a substantial departure from the issue in the evidence adduced, and must be in some matter which in point of law is essential to the charge or claim. Kelser v. Topping, 72 Ill. 226, 229; Warrington v. State, 1 Tex. App. 168, 174; House v. Metcalf, 27 Conn. 631, 638; Plumb v. Griffin, 50 Atl. 1, 2, 74 Conn. 132.

A variance is not now regarded as material, unless it is such as might mislead the defense, or expose the accused to the danger of being put twice in jeopardy for the same offense. Kruger v. State, 35 N. E. 1019, 1021, 135 Ind. 573.

A variance, to be material, must actually mislead the adverse party to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense upon the merits; and, whenever it is alleged that a party has been so misled, that fact must be proved to the satisfaction of the court, and the court may thereupon order the pleading to be amended on such terms as may be just. There is a marked distinction between an immaterial variance and an absolute failure of proof. The former may be cured by amendment of pleading, but the latter is fatal to the action or defense. Dudley v. Duval, 70 Pac. 68, 71, 29 Wash. 628.

A variance in a criminal case is an essential difference between the pleading and the proof. Mulligan v. United States (U. S.) 120 Fed. 98, 99, 56 C. C. A. 50.

It is an ancient, reasonable, and sound principle of the common law that the declaration should be conformable to the writ, and, in the language of Lord Coke, must not be either narrower or broader. At the earliest period of written pleadings in which we have clear and distinct traces, either in books of precedents or reports, the declaration when the action was commenced by the original writ contained a recital of it at large. If, therefore, an objectionable variance existed between the writ and the declaration, it appeared on the face of the latter, and the defendant availed himself of it by demurrer, plea in abatement, motion in arrest of judgment, or upon writ of error. Bank of New Brunswick v. Arrowsmith, 9 N. J. Law (4 Halst.) 284, 287.

"Variance" means material difference. It is no variance that the proof does not show all the points in a declaration. Where the declaration alleged that plaintiff was a minister, that defendant spoke the words charged, that they were spoken of the plaintiff in that capacity, and that thereby the plaintiff lost his employment, and the depositions of certain witnesses showed the speaking of the words, and the plaintiff's capacity and loss of employment were shown by other testimony, there was no variance. Skinner v. Grant, 12 Vt. 456, 462.

A variance is a disagreement between the allegations and the evidence in some matter essential to the charge or claim. A grand juror's complaint charged that A. and B., at the town of P., not being agents of the town of P. to sell spirituous liquors, did on, etc., sell to C. one quart of brandy, one quart of rum, one quart of gin, and one quart of ale. A. was tried alone. The statute provides that no person shall sell, by himself or agent, any spirituous or intoxicating liquors, except as provided in later sections of the act, and that ale is included among intoxicating liquors, within the meaning of the act. Held, that evidence was admissible under the complaint of a sale by A. alone, and that it was not necessary that A. should have owned the liquor or have had authority from the owner to sell it. State v. Wadsworth, 80 Conn. 55, 57.

Chitty says, if the consideration or the contract proved in evidence vary from that stated in the pleadings, the plaintiff will be nonsuited. 1 Chit. Pl. 303. Starkey gives the following rule: "Wherever the allegation of place is descriptive of the terms of a contract, the proof must correspond with the averment." In Drewry v. Twiss, 4 Term R. 560, Justice Buller says a trifling variation in setting out a contract, a record, or any written instrument is fatal because it does not appear that the written contract given in evidence is that on which plaintiff declares. It is a matter of description. Obert v. Whitehead, 11 N. J. Law (6 Halst.) 293, 294.

The numerous cases in slander where the words proved differ from the words charged, and in trespass where the abutments are specifically but erroneously described, show that the doctrine of variance extends to actions of tort as well as of contract. Brookfield v. Morse, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 331.

VARIETY SHOW.

"Variety show," as used in the Houston city charter, authorizing the city council "to prohibit and punish keepers and inmates of bawdyhouses and variety shows," means a disorderly house as defined by statutes, which is any theater or playhouse where intoxicating liquors are sold and woman of bad reputation are employed in any capacity; and an ordinance declaring any place a variety show, where persons engage in music, dancing, or plays, and liquor is sold, offered, or given to any person there present, is unauthorized. Ex parte Bell, 22 S. W. 1040, 1041, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 308, 40 Am. St. Rep. 778.

VAULT.

A vault, as defined by Webster, is a cellar; and an indictment charging defendant with breaking and entering a sheriff's office, and also into a vault therein, is sufficient as charging the breaking and entering a house. Bigham v. State, 20 S. W. 577, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 244.

A vault, in reference to interment, is but a place to entomb, and, when so used, becomes a tomb, a receptacle for the dead, a last resting place; and a grant of such a place gives an exclusive right. In re Brick Presbyterian Church (N. Y.) 3 Edw. Ch. 155, 168.

VEGETABLE.

The tariff act of 1842, providing that a berry or vegetable used principally in dyeing or composing dyes should be admitted free of duty, applies to the vegetables in their native state, and not after they are transmuted, by manufacture, into a substance which takes a different denomination in commerce. Schneider v. Lawrence (U. S.) 21 Fed. Cas. 715, 716.

Beans.

Beans may well be included under the term "vegetables." As an article of food, whether baked or boiled or forming the basis of soups, they are used as a vegetable, as well when ripe as when green, and this is the principal use to which they are put, and they will so be denominated, though they are "seeds" in the language of botany or natural history. Robertson v. Salomon, 9 Sup. Ct. 559, 130 U. S. 412, 32 L. Ed. 995; Nix v. Hedden, 13 Sup. Ct. 881, 882, 149 U. S. 304, 37 L. Ed. 745 (cited in United States v. Buffalo Natural Gas Fuel Co. (U. S.) 78 Fed. 110, 112, 24 C. C. A. 4).

"Vegetables," within the meaning of a tariff act fixing a duty on vegetables, includes beans. They are mentioned as examples of vegetables in Webster's Dictionary. Windmuller v. Robertson (U. S.) 23 Fed. 652, 653.

Pickled limes.

Pickled limes, not being vegetables, are not dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 241, 30 Stat. 170 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1649], fixing the rate for all vegetables, including pickles. Roche v. United States (U. S.) 116 Fed. 911.

Tomatoes.

Vegetables are those plants which are grown in kitchen gardens, whether eaten cooked or raw, and which are served at dinner, in, with, or after the soup, fish, or meats which constitute the principal part of the repast, as potatoes, carrots, parsnips, turnips, beets, cauliflower, cabbage, celery, and lettuce, and are not served like fruits, generally, as a desert, and, as the word is used in the United States tariff act of March 3, 1883, would include tomatoes. Nix v. Hedden, 13 Sup. Ct. 881, 882, 149 U. S. 304, 37 L. Ed. 745 (affirming Id. [U. S.] 39 Fed. 109).

VEHICLE.

See "Motor Vehicle"; "Public Vehicle"; "Wheeled Vehicle."

"A vehicle is any carriage moving on land, either on wheels or runners; a conveyance; that which is used as an instrument of conveyance, transportation, or communication." Davis v. Petrinovich, 21 South. 344, 112 Ala. 654, 36 L. R. A. 615 (quoting Cent. Dict.).

The word "vehicle" includes every description of carriage or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on land. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 4.

Bicycle, tricycle, or motor carriage.

See, also, "Carriage."

"Vehicle," as used in statutes providing that every person traveling with any carriage or other vehicle, who shall meet any other person so traveling, shall seasonably drive his carriage or vehicle to the right of the center of the road, means any machine which is used or driven on the traveling part of the highway for the purpose of conveyance thereon, and, as such, the term includes a bicycle. Holland v. Bartch, 22 N. E. 83, 85, 120 Ind. 46, 16 Am. St. Rep. 307; Mercer v. Corbin, 20 N. E. 132, 134, 117 Ind. 450, 3 L. R. A. 221, 10 Am. St. Rep. 76; State v. Collins, 17 Atl. 131, 16 R. I. 371, 3 L. R. A. 394; Lacy v. Winn, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 409, 412; Davis v. Petrinovich, 21 South. 344, 112 Ala. 654, 36 L. R. A. 615; Myers v. Hinds, 68 N. W. 156, 157, 110 Mich. 300, 33 L. R. A. 856, 64

Am. St. Rep. 345; Laredo Electric & Ry. Co. v. Hamilton, 56 S. W. 998, 1000, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 480.

A bicycle comes within the term "other vehicle," as used in Code, § 4008, exempting a team or wagon or other vehicle to the head of a family from execution, where such bicycle is used daily by the laborer in connection with his work. Roberts v. Parker, 90 N. W. 744, 117 Iowa, 389, 57 L. R. A. 764, 94 Am. St. Rep. 316.

The term "vehicle" includes a bicycle, the latter being used very excessively for convenience, recreation, pleasure, and business; and the riding of one upon the public highway in the ordinary manner, as is now done, is neither unlawful nor prohibited, as they cannot be banished because they were not ancient vehicles and used in the Garden of Eden by Adam and Eve. Thompson v. Dodge, 60 N. W. 545, 546, 58 Minn. 555, 28 L. R. A. 608, 49 Am. St. Rep. 533.

Bicycles come under the definition and description of "vehicles," and sidewalks are not the proper place for them. Jones v. City of Williamsburg, 34 S. E. 883, 97 Va. 722, 47 L. R. A. 294.

"Vehicle," as used in a city ordinance providing that no person shall place or draw any wagon, cart or other vehicle on any sidewalk, will be held to include a bicycle, since the word is used in connection with wagon and cart, and will be limited to vehicles of like character. Gagnier v. City of Fargo, 88 N. W. 1030, 1031, 11 N. D. 73, 95 Am. St. Rep. 705.

The word "vehicle," as used in How. Ann. St. § 3582, giving turnpike companies a right to collect certain rates of toll from persons traveling on their roads in vehicles drawn by animals, does not include bicycles, and therefore a turnpike company has no right to charge for the use of its road by persons using bicycles. Murfin v. Detroit & E. Plank-Road Co., 113 Mich. 675, 676, 71 N. W. 1108, 38 L. R. A. 198, 67 Am. St. Rep. 489.

The word "vehicle," whenever it occurs in the sections regulating the use of vehicles on the highways, shall be construed to include bicycles, tricycles, and motor carriages. Gen. St. Conn. 1902, § 2038.

Dray or wagon.

The owner of a rolling mill situated near, but outside, the corporate limits of the city of Memphis, owned some drays, which were kept in the mill, but used in the free delivery of iron manufactured in the mill, to their customers within the corporate limits. Defendants lived at the mill outside the corporate limits. An ordinance provided a license tax on "every owner of a wagon or other vehicle kept or used for free delivery of goods to customers or others in the city."

In considering the question whether the words "other vehicles," used in the ordinance, included the vehicle commonly called a "dray," the court said: "It seems to us that the common sense of the proposition must be the law of it, and without further discussion we hold that a dray, being a vehicle other than the vehicle named in the ordinance, is necessarily embraced within its provisions and meaning." City of Memphis v. Battalle, 55 Tenn. (8 Heisk.) 524, 537, 24 Am. Rep. 285.

The word "vehicles," in a license to a livery stable keeper to let out for hire carriages, buggies, or vehicles, except drays for hire, includes wagons, and would possibly include drays also, except for the express provision of the ordinance. City of Griffin v. Powell, 64 Ga. 625, 627.

Ferryboat.

Webster states that the word "vehicle" is rarely applied to watercraft. As used in act for the incorporation of cities (section 42), empowering the common council to levy and collect in each year a specific tax on any carriages and vehicles used and run for passengers for hire, "vehicles" does not include a ferryboat. Duckwall v. City of New Albany, 25 Ind. 283, 286.

Locomotives or cars.

Railroad locomotives and cars are not "vehicles," within Act Cong. Jan. 26, 1887, giving the commissioners of the District of Columbia power to regulate the moving of vehicles in the streets of Washington. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. District of Columbia (U. S.) 10 App. Cas. 111, 120.

Sleigh.

A covered sleigh, called a "stage," which would carry six passengers inside, with a place under the driver's seat to carry the mail, and was used daily for carrying passengers, was a "vehicle used chiefly for carrying passengers," within the meaning of Sess. Laws 1853, p. 535, c. 245, fixing a certain rate of toll over a toll road for such vehicles. Marsells v. Seaman (N. Y.) 21 Barb. 319, 323.

Street car.

Rev. St. tit. 13, cl. 20, pt. 1, making the owner of every vehicle running on any public highway for the transportation of persons liable for all damages occasioned by the willful act of any one in his employ as the driver of such vehicle, does not apply to street railways. Whitaker v. Eighth Ave. Ry. Co., 51 N. Y. 295, 298.

Threshing machine.

The words "vehicle and load," in Highway Law, § 154, providing that no town should be liable for damages resulting from the breaking of any bridge by transportation on the same of any vehicle and load together weighing four tons or over, was construed to include both the threshing machine and separator, whose combined weight caused a bridge to break. Heib v. Town of Big Flats, 73 N. Y. Supp. 86, 87, 66 App. Div. 88.

VEIN.

See "Fissure Vein"; "Single Vein."

A "vein," as the term is used in the mining law, "is a body of mineral, or mineral-bearing rock, within defined boundaries, in the general mass of the mountain." Iron Silver Min. Co. v. Chessman (U. S.) 8 Fed. 297, 307; Id., 6 Sup. Ct. 481, 484, 116 U. S. 529, 29 L. Ed. 712 (cited in Raisbeck v. Anthony, 41 N. W. 77, 73 Wis. 572); Stevens v. Williams (U. S.) 23 Fed. Cas. 40; Cheesman v. Shreeve (U. S.) 40 Fed. 787, 792.

In the case of Jupiter Min. Co. v. Boddie Consol. Min. Co. (U. S.) 11 Fed. 668, 675, Circuit Judge Sawyer said: "A vein or lode authorized to be located is a seam or fissure in the earth's crust, filled with quartz, or with some other kind of rock in place, carrying gold, silver, or other valuable mineral deposits named in the statute. It is not enough to discover detached pieces of quartz, or mere bunches of quartz not in place. The vein, however, may be thin, and it may be many feet thick, or thin in places—almost or quite 'pinched out,' in miners' phrase—and in other places widening out into extensive bodies of ore. So, also, in places it may be quite or nearly barren, and at other places immensely rich." Stinchfield v. Gillis, 30 Pac. 839, 840, 96 Cal. 33.

"Vein," "lode," and "ledge" are synonymous terms, and mean any body of mineral or mineral rock within defined boundaries in the general mass of the mountains. Nor does the fact that it was occasionally found in the general course of this vein or shoot in pockets deeper down into the earth, or higher up, affect its character as a vein, lode, or ledge. Synnott v. Shaughnessy, 7 Pac. 82, 84, 2 Idaho, 122 (citing Stevens v. Williams, 1 Morr. Min. Rep. 566, 573).

"Vein," as the term is used in mining law, means "a fissure between well-defined boundaries, containing ore, even though the ore is found at considerable intervals and in small quantities." United States v. King, 22 Pac. 498, 499, 9 Mont. 75.

A vein is a continuous body of mineral-bearing rock in place, in the general mass of the surrounding formation. If it possess these requisites, and carry mineral in appreciable quantities, it is a "mineral-bearing vein," within the meaning of the law, even though its boundaries may not have been ascertained. Beals v. Cone, 62 Pac. 943, 953, 27 Colo. 473, 83 Am. St. Rep. 92.

Justice Hallett's definition of the word "vein," as used in mining law, is: "A body of mineral or mineral-bearing rock within defined boundaries in the mass of the mountain." Judge Goddard gives this definition: "Any mineralized belt or zone of rock, lying within boundaries clearly distinguishing it from neighboring rock coming from the same source, impressed with the same forms, and appearing to be created by the same process." Justice Field gives the same definition; also the following: "A continuous bed of mineralized rock lying within any other well-defined boundaries on the earth's surface, and under it." And Justice Miller quotes approvingly all the definitions above given. Duggan v. Davey, 26 N. W. 887, 896, 4 Dak. 110.

A vein is an aggregation of mineral matter containing ores in fissures of rocks. Waterloo Min. Co. v. Doe (U. S.) 82 Fed. 45, 51, 54, 27 C. C. A. 50.

A vein, to the miner, is a body of ore, quartz, or mineral-bearing substance lying within the crust of the earth, bounded on each side by the country rock, greatly varying in width, and extending in length across and through the country for greater and less distances. King v. Amy & Silversmith Consol. Min. Co., 24 Pac. 200, 202, 9 Mont. 543.

Though to constitute a vein it is not required that well-defined walls be developed or paying ore found within them, there must be rock, clay, or earth so colored or decomposed by the mineral elements as to mark and distinguish it from the inclosing country. Burke v. McDonald, 33 Pac. 49, 50, 2 Idaho, 646.

"Veins," as used in the mining land laws of the United States, means "lines or aggregations of metal imbedded in quartz or other rock in place. It is intended to indicate the presence of metal in rock." Wheeler v. Smith, 32 Pac. 784, 786, 5 Wash. 704; United States v. Iron Silver Min. Co., 9 Sup. Ct. 195, 198, 128 U. S. 673, 32 L. Ed. 571.

As requiring a fissure.

In Eureka Consol. Min. Co. v. Richmond Min. Co. (U. S.) 8 Fed. Cas. 819, it was said: "It is difficult to give any definition to the term 'vein,' as understood and used in the acts of Congress, which will not be subject to criticism. A fissure in the earth's crust made by some force of nature, in which the mineral is deposited, would seem to be essential to the definition of a 'lode,' in the judgment of geologists; but to the practical miner the fissure and its walls are only of importance to indicate the boundaries of it, within which he may look for and reasonably expect to find the ore he seeks. A continuous body of mineralized rock, lying within any other well-defined boundaries on the earth's surface, or under it, would equally constitute, in his eyes, a lode. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the term as used in the acts of Congress is applicable to any zone or belt of mineralized rock lying within boundaries clearly separating it from the neighboring rocks." Buffalo Zinc & Copper Co. v. Crump, 69 S. W. 572-575, 70 Ark. 525, 91 Am. St. Rep. 87.

"Veins," as used in reference to mines, are aggregations of mineral matter in fissures of rocks, and the fissure or fracture is an essential element in the definition. Lodes are aggregations of mineral matter containing ores in fissures, and, as used by miners, "lode" is synonymous with vein, and applies to all deposits of mineralized matter within any zone or belt of mineralized rock separated from the neighboring rock by well-defined boundaries. Hayes v. Lavagnino, 53 Pac. 1029, 1032, 17 Utah, 185.

In defining "veins" the text-books and several of the decisions speak of them as fissures in the earth filled with quartz in place, carrying gold and silver or other minerals. But true fissure veins often exist and are continuous without having any filling in certain points or places of mineral matter. To constitute a vein it is not absolutely necessary that there should be a clean fissure filled with mineral, but it may and does exist when filled in places with other matter. The fissure should, of course, have form and be well defined, with hanging and foot walls. Between these walls will be found bodies of quartz, rich or poor; but there is also liable to be found, in many places, short or long distances between the quartz bodies or pay chutes where no quartz will be found in the fissure between the walls. Yet the vein exists, and is often as well defined as if the same was filled with quartz. Consolidated Wyoming Gold Min. Co. v. Champion Min. Co. (U. S.) 63 Fed. 540, 544.

While metalliferous rock in place not in a fissure may be found under such conditions within clearly defined boundaries as to require recognition as a vein or lode, a broad metalliferous zone having within its limits true fissure veins, plainly bounded, cannot be regarded as a single vein or lode, although such zone may itself have boundaries which can be traced. Mt. Diablo Mill. & Min. Co. v. Callison (U. S.) 17 Fed. Cas. 918.

Placer claim.

"Veins," in the language of miners, are narrow plats of rock intersecting other rocks, and are the fillings of cracks or fissures. The term, in a statute providing for the location and recording of mining claims or veins or lodes bearing valuable deposits, does not include a placer mining claim. Moxon v. Wilkinson, 2 Mont. 421, 424.

VEINS IN PLACE.

See "In Place."

VELOURS.

Velours is an imitation of sealskin, used for manufacturing hats and caps, and is composed of cow or calf hair, vegetable fiber, and cotton. Arthur v. Fox, 2 Sup. Ct. 371, 108 U. S. 125, 27 L. Ed. 675; Herrman v. Miller, 8 Sup. Ct. 1090, 1098, 127 U. S. 363, 32 L. Ed. 186.

VENALES.

The word "venales" means either things held or procured to be sold, or things necessary to be quickly sold, from their perishable character. Pettee v. Orser, 19 N. Y. Super. Ct. (6 Bosw.) 123, 133.

VEND.

"Vend," as used in the granting part of a patent, authorizing the patentee to exclusively make, use, exercise, and vend his invention, does not prohibit another from both a selling and an exposing to sale. "Vend" means the habit of selling and offering for sale. Selling and exposing to sale are not coextensive. The former may include the latter; but a mere exposure to sale, i. e., with intent to sell or for the purpose of selling, is not only not equivalent to a sale, but, as regards the patentee, may be attended with wholly different consequences. Minter v. Williams, 4 Adol. & El. 63, 65.

Gen. Laws 1885, c. 296, § 4, making it criminal to "vend, sell, deal, or traffic" in intoxicating liquors, etc., without a license therefor, includes the sale of a keg of beer as an original package by the agent of a brewer, as the plain meaning of the words includes such sale. Peltz v. State, 32 N. W. 763, 68 Wis. 538.

VENDEE.

In contract for sale as owner, see "Owner."

VENDER—VENDOR.

See "Traveling Vendor"; "Itinerant Vendor."

In contract of sale, as owner, see "Owner."

The word "vendor," in its ordinary signification, means one who sells, regardless of the character of the property sold. Lumbert v. Woodward, 43 N. E. 302, 304, 144 Ind. 335, 55 Am. St. Rep. 175.

Under McClain's Code, § 2532, providing that any itinerant vender of any drug, etc., a physician who gives medicine to his own patients, though he may do so at different places, is not a "vender" in the sense in which the word is used in the statute. State v. Bonham, 65 N. W. 154, 155, 96 Iowa, 252.

Grantor distinguished.

The cases have established a distinction between the vendor and the grantor. He is the vendor who negotiates the sale, and becomes the recipient of the consideration, though the title comes to the vendee from another source, and not from the vendor. Rutland v. Brister, 53 Miss. 683, 685.

VENDOR'S LIEN.

A vendor's lien is the right which the vendor of land has, at any time after an obligation given in payment for the land becomes due, to enforce the obligation and to cut off the maker's equitable interest arising out of the agreement. Morgan v. Dalrymple, 46 Atl. 664, 665, 59 N. J. Eq. 22.

Where one sells property to another and conveys the same by deed, a lien arises in equity in favor of the vendor for the purchase money, or for such part thereof as remains unpaid. This lien is a vendor's lien. Gee v. McMillan, 12 Pac. 417, 419, 14 Or. 268, 58 Am. Rep. 315.

"Properly speaking, a vendor's lien does not exist until the vendor has parted with his title. So long as he retains the title, he cannot be said to have any implied lien on the land. The security which he has then on the purchase money is created by express reservation, and cannot be impaired by any act of the vendee." Kent v. Williams, 46 Pac. 462, 114 Cal. 537.

The lien for the purchase money of land sold was described in Act May 12, 1862, as a "vendor's lien," and it has continued to be so described ever since. Lee v. Murphy, 51 Pac. 549, 552, 119 Cal. 364.

So shadowy a right as the claim of the vendor of land to have the unpaid purchase money after default charged upon the land by a court of equity is not a "lien," within the provisions of the practice act, which precludes the right to attach. It is not a lien acquired by express contract, but is one of a very imperfect character, at least inchoate, not recognized at all in a court of law, where attachments are enforced, but fastened upon the land by a court of equity upon application duly made, even against the apparent intention of the parties. The vendor has no present, indefeasible right to have his debt charged upon the land. It is not a present, specific lien. He is simply in a condition which may or may not, at some future time, depending upon contingencies over which he has no control, enable him to acquire a lien, or obtain an appropriation of the proceeds of the land to the payment of the debt through the intervention of a court of equity. It seems to be a misnomer to call this imperfect, contingent, unassignable, personal privilege, before suit brought, a present, subsisting lien in any sense. It is but a possible capacity to acquire a lien at some future day. It is not a lien by which a debtor can be said to be secured, within the meaning of those terms as used in the practice act with reference to attachments. Porter v. Brooks, 35 Cal. 199, 204, 205.

Lord Eldon, in defining the vendor's lien, uses the following language: "Where the vendor conveys without more, though the consideration is on the face of the instrument expressed to be paid, and by a receipt indorsed upon the back, if it is a simple case of a conveyance, the money or part of it not being paid as between the vendor and the vendee and persons claiming as volunteers, on the doctrine of this court, which, where it is settled, has the effect of a contract, though perhaps no actual contract has taken place, a lien shall prevail." Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. 329. There is nothing in this definition that justifies the inference that a vendor has a lien resulting from a breach of a contract. It merely secures the payment of the promised price. Graham v. Moffett, 78 N. W. 132, 133, 119 Mich. 303, 75 Am. St. Rep. 393.

A vendor's lien is always in the nature of a mortgage, and one having a vendor's lien has an insurable interest in the property. Balow v. Teutonia Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 43 N. W. 924, 926, 77 Mich. 540.

Ordinarily a vendor's lien is understood to arise only out of the sale of land; but if, in any event, there can exist a vendor's lien in favor of the unpaid vendor of chattels, it is only in those cases where the possession of the chattel remains with the vendor. Parlin & Orendorff Co. v. Davis' Estate (Tex.) 74 S. W. 951, 952 (citing Fulton v. National Bank of Denison, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 115, 62 S. W. 84).

As an equitable right.

A vendor's lien is a lien which the vendor of real estate has on the property sold, to secure the purchase price. "This lien is not a specific and absolute charge upon the property, but a mere equitable right to resort to it upon failure of payment by the vendee." Sparks v. Hess, 15 Cal. 186, 193.

The lien which the vendor of real property retains after an actual conveyance for the unpaid price is not a specific and actual charge on the land, but a mere equitable right to resort to it on failure of payment by the vendee. It is in its nature a personal privilege, nonassignable, which the vendor can assert only in a suit for the purpose of having it decreed and enforced. Fitzel v. Leaky, 14 Pac. 198, 201, 72 Cal. 477.

There is perhaps no subject of equity jurisprudence on which there is a greater diversity of opinion than exists in relation to the origin, nature, and effect of a vendor's lien, against whom and in whose favor it avails, and how it may be discharged or waived. The various definitions given and principles applied to it by the court are hopelessly irreconcilable, and if we take the decisions found in decisions and text-books without observing the distinctions between the lien imposed by law in favor of a vendor who has parted with the legal title and taken no security for the purchase money, and the security which the vendor has while he holds the legal title under an unexecuted contract for the conveyance of lands upon payment of the purchase money, there will appear to be great confusion and inconsistency. The former—the implied lien—is properly known as a "vendor's lien." It is the creature of courts of equity, founded upon the equitable presumption that, where the vendor has parted with his title and taken no security for the payment of the purchase money, the parties intended that the property itself should remain as a privilege for the payment of the purchase price of the land. The lien thus created by implication is not a specific, absolute charge upon the property. It is personal to the vendor, and does not pass by a transfer of his claim for the purchase money. The latter is improperly designated as a "vendor's lien." Where the vendor holds the legal title under an unexecuted contract for the conveyance of land upon the payment of the purchase money, the transaction shows upon its face that he holds it as security. Gessner v. Palmateer, 26 Pac. 789, 790, 89 Cal. 89, 13 L. R. A. 187.

A vendor's lien is not the result of any agreement or any intention of the vendor and vendee, but is a simple equity raised by courts for the benefit of vendors of real estate. It is a privilege purely personal, and cannot exist in favor of any but the vendor. Clalborne v. Castle, 32 Pac. 807, 808, 98 Cal. 30.

A vendor's lien is not recognized by our statutes. It is a creature of the courts of equity. It does not grow out of any agreement, but is created in equity without an express agreement of the parties. It is an implied agreement existing between the vendor and vendee that the former shall hold a lien on the land for the payment of the purchase money. Blomstrom v. Dux, 51 N. E. 755, 757, 175 Ill. 435.

A vendor's lien is a mere creature of equity. It rests upon the principle that when one gets the estate of another he ought not to keep it without paying the consideration. Chilton v. Braiden's Adm'x, 67 U. S. (2 Black) 458, 17 L. Ed. 304; Slide & Spur Gold Mines v. Seymour, 153 U. S. 509, 14 Sup. Ct. 842, 38 L. Ed. 802. The implied lien will not be enforced when it would operate as a means of deception or in prejudice of good faith of those affected by it. Venner v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 90 Fed. 348, 355, 33 C. C. A. 95.

The equitable lien of a vendor of land is not founded on matter of record, nor on expressed contract, but is merely implied from the presumed intentions of the parties. It is purely a creature of equity; but, whether it be regarded as a natural equity or a trust, its very nature implies the evidence in the vendor of a title, either legal or equitable, to the land on which it attaches; and hence where the vendor executes only a bond to make title on the payment of the purchase money, retaining the title in himself as security for the purchase money, no lien exists. Servis v. Beatty, 32 Miss. 52, 81.

A vendor's lien is that lien which is equity is implied to belong to a vendor for the unpaid purchase price of land sold by him, where he has not taken any other lien or security for the same beyond the personal obligation of the purchaser. Such lien is not the result of any agreement between vendor and vendee, but is simply an equity raised by the courts for the benefit of the former. McKeown v. Collins, 38 Fla. 276, 21 South. 103. In 2 Warvelle on Vendors, § 676, it is said that, a vendor's lien being created by inference alone, it is in effect a mere equity raised and administered by the courts, by whom it will be enforced or denied between parties as the exigencies of each particular case may seem to require. Johnson v. McKinnon (Fla.) 34 South. 272, 275.

A vendor's lien is the lien for purchase money of land remaining unpaid. "The lien of a vendor is not founded on arbitrary principles that require a rigid construction. It is not of such a nature as should induce the court to lay violent hands on it whenever a plausible pretext can be found for so doing. It is founded on principles of justice, and ought, therefore, to be protected. It originated in the care which the law has for the preservation of equitable rights. It was intended to prevent one man from enjoying the property of another without consideration, and therefore it applies as well to the representative of a deceased vendor as to the vendor himself. It is in the nature of a mortgage provided by the benignity of the law for those who may have been too confiding." Tiernan v. Beam, 2 Ohio (2 Ham.) 383, 388, 15 Am. Dec. 557.

A vendor's lien is founded in natural justice and the presumed intent of the parties to the contract. Both forbid that the vendee shall enjoy the property without payment of the consideration. This lien of the vendor is a kind of equitable mortgage, inherent in the contract of sale, and qualifying the ownership of the vendee, whether that ownership be legal or merely equitable. It is paramount to the right of the vendee, and of all succeeding to his interest, in whole or in part, by operation of law. In equity the vendee is not the owner adversely to the lien of the vendor, but is treated as a trustee for him until payment of the purchase money. Wilson v. Davisson (Va.) 2 Rob. 384, 403.

As an estate in land.

A vendor's lien upon land is not an estate in the land, but is a charge or right which has its inception only on bill filed. The lien is not confined to a legal title or title in fee. It applies to leaseholds, and appears to be received as to all recognized titles. It arises in favor of one who has merely an equitable interest. It attaches to a pre-emption claim on the public lands. Shrimsher v. Newton, 64 S. W. 534, 535, 3 Ind. T. 555 (citing Stephens v. Shannon, 43 Ark. 464; Pierson v. David, 1 Iowa [1 Clarke] 23).

As arising by implication of law.

A vendor's lien is one arising by implication of law between a vendor and vendee, and not by contract. Lewis v. Shearer, 59 N. E. 580, 582, 189 Ill. 184.

A vendor's lien on real estate for the unpaid purchase price is created by implication of law. But when a lien for the purchase money is expressly reserved by the vendor in his deed of conveyance, a lien is created by contract. It is a contract that the land shall be subject to a lien until the purchase money is paid, and is really a mortgage. Warford v. Hankins, 50 N. E. 468, 469, 150 Ind. 489 (citing Bever v. Bever, 144 Ind. 157, 162, 163, 41 N. E. 944, and authorities cited).

A vendor's lien is not the result of a direct contract therefor. It arises by implication of law out of the sale of land, and exists in favor of the grantor against the grantee as a security for what remains of the purchase money unpaid and otherwise unsecured. If, at the time of the sale, other security is given, the law will not imply a lien on the land sold. Jones v. Rush, 57 S. W. 118, 120, 156 Mo. 364 (citing Pom. Eq. Jur. 1250, 1252).

A vendor's lien is that lien which in equity is implied to belong to a vendor for the unpaid purchase price of land sold by him, where he has not taken any other lien or security for the same beyond the personal obligation of the purchaser. Such lands are the creatures of equity, and not by contract of the parties. A lien created by express written contract between the vendor and vendee is not a vendor's lien, but is a security more in the nature of a mortgage. The lien of the vendor on lands for the purchase money is lost in all cases where any security is taken on the land or otherwise for the whole or a part of the purchase money, unless there is an express agreement to the contrary. That the additional security so taken should prove unavailing does not affect the question. The lien is waived by the taking of the security because it shows the intention of the vendor not to rely upon his implied equitable lien. McKeown v. Collins, 21 South. 103, 106, 38 Fla. 276.

Other liens distinguished.

The artisan or innkeeper acquires his lien by having and retaining goods in his possession. When his possession is gone, his lien is gone, and the owner's right of possession instantly reverts to him. The vendor's lien is not a right that he acquires, but a right which he retains; the vendee never having had either possession or right of possession in default of payment in tenure. It is in the nature of an undisposed right in and to the property sold to the defaulting vendee. An unpaid vendor with the goods in his possession has more than a mere lien on it. He has a special property analogous to that of a pawnee. Arnold v. Carpenter, 18 Atl. 174, 175, 16 R. I. 560, 5 L. R. A. 357.

It is characteristic of a vendor's lien, as distinguished from a contract lien, that it arises on a transfer of title. It is the doctrine of equitable jurisprudence which says that land which is immovable is the best security for its own price, and that title thereto should therefore pass subject to the equitable burden of such security. Slide & Spur Gold Mines v. Seymour, 14 Sup. Ct. 842, 845, 153 U. S. 509, 38 L. Ed. 802.

VENDITIONI EXPONAS.

Venditioni exponas is a writ of execution directed to the sheriff to sell goods and chattels, and, in some states, lands which he has taken in execution by virtue of a fieri facias. Borden v. Tillman, 39 Tex. 262, 273 (citing Lockridge v. Baldwin, 20 Tex. 306, 70 Am. Dec. 385); Hastings v. Bryant, 115 Ill. 69, 75, 3 N. E. 507. The object of this writ, so far as it regards personal property, is to force the sheriff to sell when he has returned a levy unsold for want of buyers, and to bring him into contempt for not selling it. He cannot, therefore, again return "Not sold for want of buyers." Ritchie v. Higginbotham, 26 Kan. 645, 648 (citing Herman on Executions).

A venditioni exponas is in its nature and operation, as to the property on which the levy may have been made, an alias execution; it merely commands and authorizes, as to real estate, the completion of the execution already begun. Beebe v. United States, 18 Sup. Ct. 532, 535, 161 U. S. 104, 40 L. Ed. 636.

A writ of venditioni exponas is undoubtedly a writ of execution. It was so denominated in Kane v. McCown, 55 Mo. 196, and in Wood v. Augustine, 61 Mo. 46. In Webb v. Armstrong, 24 Tenn. (5 Humph.) 379, it was held that a writ of venditioni exponas was an execution, within the meaning of the statute authorizing motions against sheriffs for failure to return executions. It is an execution or writ to satisfy the judgment on behalf of the plaintiff. Hicks v. Ellis, 65 Mo. 176, 186.

VENIRE.

See "Open Venire"; "Special Venire."

The word "venire," Latin, the infinitive of "venio," "to come," is of not very well-defined legal meaning. Its practical significance is a writ directed to the sheriff, commanding him to cause to come from the body of the county a certain number of qualified citizens to act as jurors. Bouv. Dict.; Worcester. Dict. According to this definition it is the writ directed to the sheriff, and not the body of names which constitutes the venire, though sometimes popularly used in the latter sense. Posey v. State, 73 Ala. 490, 493.

Rev. St. c. 135, § 10, requires the clerk of the courts to issue venires in due form for the purpose of summoning grand jurors. The venire so required is a judicial writ, and to be in due form must bear the seal of the court from which it issues. Persons selected as grand jurors under a venire without the seal have no authority to act as grand jurors, though impaneled and sworn in court without objection, and therefore all indictments found by them may be quashed on motion. State v. Lightbody, 38 Me. 200, 201.

VENIRE FACIAS DE NOVO.

See "Motion for Venire de Novo."

"A venire facias de novo, commonly termed a 'venire de novo,' is a second writ of venire to summon another jury for another trial. This is the old common-law mode of proceeding to a second trial, and differs from the granting of a new trial in this: the venire de novo is awarded for some defect appearing upon the face of the record; a new trial is granted for some matter extrinsic to the record. Again, a venire facias de novo and a new trial are very different things, though alike in some points. They agree in this: that a new trial takes place in both, and that the court may or may not grant either. They differ in this: that the venire facias is the ancient proceeding of the common law; the new trial a modern invention to mitigate the severity of the proceeding by attain. The most material difference between them is that a venire de novo must be granted upon matters appearing upon the record, but a new trial may be granted upon things out of it, as if the verdict be contrary to the evidence, or the judge has given wrong instruction. 2 Graham, New Trials, 36, 38. A venire de novo is granted when the verdict, whether general or special, is imperfect by reason of some uncertainty or ambiguity, or by finding less than the whole matter put in issue, or by any error in assessing damages." Bosseker v. Cramer, 18 Ind. 44, 46 (quoting 2 Tidd, Pr. 922).

In Alabama it is said that a "venire facias de novo" means, according to the practice in that state, nothing more than submitting the case to another jury for trial. Sewall v. Glidden, 1 Ala. 52, 58.

A venire de novo is granted when the verdict, whether general or special, is imperfect by reason of some uncertainty or ambiguity, or by finding less than the whole matter put in issue, or by not assessing the damages. Maxwell v. Wright, 67 N. E. 267, 160 Ind. 515 (citing Bosseker v. Cramer, 18 Ind. 44).

"Strictly speaking, the term 'venire de novo' is only applicable when applied to a verdict, but, as there is such a close similarity between verdict by the jury and findings by the court, the term as well as the motion is applied to both. * * * A motion for a venire de novo can only be entertained when the verdict or finding is so defective, uncertain, or ambiguous that no judgment can be rendered on it." Waterbury v. Miller, 41 N. E. 383, 386, 13 Ind. App. 197.

In Indiana it is said that the office of a motion for a venire de novo, under the practice in that state, was to test the sufficiency of the special finding to sustain the conclusions of law or of the special verdict to support a judgment, and to determine whether the findings are within the issues. Sheeks v. State, 60 N. E. 142, 143, 156 Ind. 508.

A venire de novo is only proper when there is some defect in the verdict of the jury or finding of the court, and is not allowable on the ground that the trial court allowed plaintiff to amend his complaint to conform to the evidence, or refused to direct the jury to find a special verdict. Sandford Tool & Fork Co. v. Mullen, 1 Ind. App. 204, 206, 27 N. E. 448.

VENIRE FACIAS JUDICATIONIS.

"Venire facias judicationis is the writ by which the sheriff causes to come from the body of his county a certain number of qualified citizens who are to act as jurors in the court." Durrah v. State, 44 Miss. 789, 796 (quoting Steph. Pl. 104).

VENOM.

Venom is something applied externally or discharged from animals, as by the bite or sting of serpents, scorpions, etc. Preferred Mut. Acc. Ass'n v. Beidelman (Pa.) 1 Monag. 481, 482.

VENTE A REMERE.

"Vente à réméré" is defined to be "an agreement or paction by which the vendor reserves to himself the power of taking back the thing sold by returning the price paid for it." Civ. Code La. art. 245; Livingston v. Story, 36 U. S. (11 Pet.) 351, 387, 9 L. Ed. 746.

VENUE.

The word "venue" is defined to mean a neighboring place; the place from which a jury are to come for the trial of cases. The word was used as synonymous with "place of trial" by all legal writers both in England and in this state up to 1847. The venue in a complaint is to be fixed, irrespective of convenience of witnesses, where some or one of the parties resides, if either reside in the state, and a change of the place of trial for the convenience of witnesses is properly made when the venue has been fixed in the proper county. Moore v. Gardner (N. Y.) 5 How. Prac. 243.

The word "venue," as used in the statute prior to the Code, was well adapted to designate the county where the action was to be tried. Its meaning was well understood. No other single word can be made to express the same thing, and I never could understand why it should have been so carefully excluded from the diction of the Code. It is declared that motions must be made within the district in which the action is triable, or else in a county adjoining the county in which the action is triable, etc. Bangs v. Selden (N. Y.) 13 How. Prac. 374, 377.

The venue of a case is the county or district in which an action is brought for trial, and which is to furnish the panel of jurors; and to change the venue is to transfer the cause for trial to another county. Armstrong v. Emmet, 41 S. W. 87, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 242.

When we speak of "venue," we mean the county or jurisdiction in which the acts are alleged to have occurred, and from which the jury are to come to try the issue. Konold v. Rio Grande W. Ry. Co., 51 Pac. 256, 257, 16 Utah, 151.

The term "venue" means, primarily, the county in whose clerk's office the proceedings in a cause are conducted. The venue may be in one county, and the place of trial in another. A change of venue is a change of the county where the proceedings are to be had. Barnard v. Wheeler (N. Y.) 3 How. Prac. 71, 72.

In legal phraseology, "venue" means the county where a cause is to be tried, and originally a venue was employed to indicate the county from which the jury was to come. Sullivan v. Hall, 48 N. W. 646, 647, 86 Mich. 7, 13 L. R. A. 556.

The word "venue," as used in the Constitution, prohibiting the Legislature from passing local or special laws providing for changing the venue in civil or criminal cases, means the county wherein the action is brought and the jury are to be obtained. Act 1869, providing for the transfer of certain records and suits from the county seat of Lander county to the county seat of White county, created out of a portion of the county of Lander, does not provide for changing the venue in any case, even if the act directs that suits relating to property in the new county are to be tried in the new county. State v. McKinney, 5 Nev. 194, 198.

The venue at common law regulates the process of summoning a jury, who anciently were always returned from the vicinage; but it was held in Massachusetts that venues are of no use. In the early days of the law they were not averred, and it is held that a declaration without a venue, or with a wrong one, is bad in form, when specially demurred to, for no other reason but because of long usage. Briggs v. Nantucket Bank, 5 Mass. 94, 96.

VERACITY.

"According to the best lexicographers of our language, at least in this country, the words 'truth,' 'veracity,' and 'honesty' are almost synonymous, very nearly the same definitions being given to each of the words. Truth is so nearly allied to honesty and moral soundness, it seems to us, that, where a witness has testified in chief that the reputation of a person for truth and veracity is good, it is competent to ask him on cross-examination if he has not heard of a certain matter which would seriously affect the reputation of the party for honesty and moral soundness, as being necessarily inconsistent and at variance with the reputation he has given the party." Wachstetter v. State, 99 Ind. 290, 297, 50 Am. Rep. 94.

VERBAL

"Parol; by word of mouth; as verbal agreement, or verbal evidence." Black, Law Dict.

VERBAL CONTRACT.

"There is no difference between the character of a written and verbal contract; the only difference being that in the one case the evidence of the terms of the contract is in writing, while in the other it is not." Musgrove v. City of Jackson, 59 Miss. 390, 392.

VERBAL PROCESS.

"A verbal process is a true relation in writing in due form of law of what has been done and said verbally in the presence of a public officer, and what he himself does on the occasion." Hall v. Hall, 11 Tex. 528, 539 (quoting 2 Bouv. 300).

VERDICT.

See "Adverse Verdict"; "Chance Verdict"; "Gambling Verdict"; "General Verdict"; "Partial Verdict"; "Privy Verdict"; "Quotient Verdict"; "Separate General Verdict"; "Special Verdict"; "True Verdict."

"A verdict is the answer of a jury given to the court concerning the matters of fact committed to them for trial." Davis v. Delaware Tp., 41 N. J. Law (12 Vroom) 55, 56; Withee v. Rowe, 45 Me. 571, 586; Shaw v. State, 2 Tex. App. 487, 491; Morton v. State, 3 Tex. App. 510, 513.

A "verdict" may be defined to be the answer of the jury to the questions of fact contained in the issue formed by the pleadings of the parties. Day v. Webb, 28 Conn. 140, 144.

A verdict is a decision of an issue by a jury. Froman v. Patterson, 10 Mont. 107, 113, 24 Pac. 692.

A verdict is the ascertained truth to which effect is given by the judgment of the court. Vaughan v. Cade (S. C.) 2 Rich. Law, 49, 52.

A verdict is a declaration of the truth as to the matters of fact submitted to the jury. Shenners v. West Side St. Ry. Co., 78 Wis. 382, 387, 47 N. W. 622, 623; McBean v. State, 83 Wis. 206, 211, 53 N. W. 497.

A verdict is the compound result of the legal instructions given to the jury by the court, and of their findings of fact applied to the legal principles laid down for their guidance. Bonham v. Bishop, 23 S. C. 96, 105.

A verdict is a declaration by a jury of their decision of the issues submitted to them in the case, and it must be in writing and concurred in by each member of the jury. Code Cr. Proc. Tex. 1895, art. 743.

A verdict is the conclusion of a jury on controverted questions of fact. It is a conclusion of fact, and not of law. United States v. O'Neal (U. S.) 10 App. Cas. 205, 236.

A verdict is defined in Rap. & L. Law Dict. to be "the opinion of a jury, or a judge sitting as a jury, on a question of fact." After a case is decided, propositions cannot be held or refused in the decision of the case. Propositions of law, to be held or refused by a court sitting as a jury, must be presented before verdict. Carlyle Water, Light & Power Co. v. City of Carlyle, 31 Ill. App. 325, 338.

A rightful verdict is the answer of the jury, given to the court concerning the questions of fact committed to their trial and examination. Whatever they find beyond this is inoperative and immaterial, and must be rejected. In a proceeding by attachment, when an interplea has been filed, the only issue submitted to the jury is as to the title of the property levied on. The jury have no right then to assess the value of the property, or damages for its detention or destruction. McLean v. Douglass, 28 N. C. 233, 235.

A verdict is the unanimous decision made by the jury and reported to the court on the matters lawfully submitted to them in the course of the trial of a cause. Hawley v. Barker, 5 Colo. 118, 120; Smith v. Paul, 45 S. E. 348, 349, 133 N. C. 66; Simmons v. Hamilton, 56 Cal. 493, 495. It should be the result of sound judgment, dispassionate consideration, and conscientious reflection. Williams v. Pressler, 65 Pac. 934, 11 Okl. 122. It is a very important act. It is the culmination of the trial, and embodies the conclusions of the jury on the questions of fact litigated on the trial. It can only be delivered to a court legally constituted to receive it. French v. Merrill, 50 N. Y. Supp. 776, 777, 27 App. Div. 612.

A verdict is supposed to be, and ought to be, a deliberate conclusion of the mind of each and every juror, when uninfluenced and unprejudiced by the opinions or knowledge outside the jury. Campbell v. Chase Granite Co., 42 Atl. 228, 229, 92 Me. 90.

The general rule is that the verdict must comprehend the whole issue or issues submitted to the jury in the particular cause; otherwise the judgment on it may be reversed. Patterson v. United States, 15 U. S. (2 Wheat.) 225, 4 L. Ed. 224. In subservience to this rule, however, it has been held that though the verdict may not be expressed formally and punctually in the words of the issue, yet if the point in issue can be concluded from the finding of the jury, the court will work the verdict into form and make it serve. Middleton v. Quigley, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 352, 354.

Within the provisions of St. Mont. 1879, § 408, providing that an exception to the decision or a verdict on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence cannot be reviewed on appeal unless, etc., the verdict or decision referred to relates exclusively to findings alleged to be erroneous for want of sufficient support in the evidence. Kleinschmidt v. McAndrews, 6 Sup. Ct. 761, 763, 117 U. S. 282, 29 L. Ed. 905.

The exact meaning of the word "verdict" is "a true saying." Anthony v. Anthony, 29 S. E. 923, 103 Ga. 250.

A verdict is the act of the jury, and cannot be aided either by intentment or a reference to extrinsic facts. Sewall v. Glidden, 1 Ala. 52, 58.

A verdict must be pronounced by open voice in open court, and a verdict written down and delivered in writing to the justice is improper. Johnson v. Depuy, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 165.

Conclusiveness.

A verdict concludes the parties as to the facts of the case, whereas a new trial merely places them together as they stood originally, with the right of further investigation, and the opportunity of having any errors corrected by the second trial. A verdict settles the facts, and is final; a new trial opens the issue without prejudice. The first belongs to the jury; the second is under the control of the court. Altee v. South Carolina Ry. Co., 21 S. C. 550, 558.

A verdict is no precedent, and settles nothing but the immediate controversy to which it relates. McGinnis v. Canada Southern Bridge Co., 49 Mich. 466, 472, 13 N. W. 819.

As affecting debt.

A verdict does not annihilate or extinguish a debt or change the nature of it, or the rule of law. It only amounts to a conclusive evidence of the debt, so that the creditor has the same right to set it off after the verdict as he had before. And where the creditor is sued by the debtor after a verdict for the debt has been obtained, the creditor may set up the debt as a set-off, as he could have done had no suit been brought thereon. Bell v. Cowgell (Pa.) 1 Ashm. 7, 9.

As the concurrence of individual judgments.

"A verdict is the expression of the concurrence of individual judgments, rather than the product of mixed thoughts. It is not the theory of jury trials that the individual conclusions shall be added up, and the sum divided by 12, and the quotient declared the verdict. * * * Before the state can demand the conviction and punishment of an alleged criminal, the 12 jurors should each be led from the testimony to a clear conviction of his guilt." State v. Ivanhoe, 57 Pac. 317, 320, 35 Or. 150.

As decision of a jury.

The word "verdict" has a well-defined signification in law. It means the decision of a jury, and it never means the decision of a court or a referee or a commissioner. In common language the word "verdict" is sometimes used in a more extended sense, but in law is always used to mean a decision of the jury; and, when used in a statute, it must be supposed that the Legislature intended to use the word as it is used in law. Kerner v. Petigo, 25 Kan. 652, 656.

Although the word "verdict," in a philological sense, embraces the idea of the finding of a referee as well as of a jury upon the question of fact submitted, yet as used in the Code of New York, and in a legal sense generally, it is understood to be the determination of a jury upon the matters of fact in issue in a cause upon the evidence. Otis v. Spencer (N. Y.) 8 How. Prac. 172, 173.

None but a jury can render a verdict. The finding of a court can only be expressed by an order or judgment. Bearce v. Bowker, 115 Mass. 129.

As a determination made out of court.

A verdict of the jury is commonly spoken of and regarded as a determination made out of court and reported to the court, and it would be a peculiar, if not an unprecedented, definition to describe the verdict of the jury as a determination in a trial court. Henavie v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 48 N. E. 525, 527, 154 N. Y. 278.

Findings of fact.

The word "verdict" includes not only the verdict of the jury, but also the finding, upon the facts, of a judge, or of a referee appointed to determine the issues in a cause. Comp. Laws S. D. § 5080; Lone Tree Ditch Co. v. Rapid City Electric & Gas Light Co. (S. D.) 93 N. W. 650; Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 2804; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 5131; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 2465.

The word "verdict," as it is used in law, is not applicable to the findings of fact by the jury. McCullagh v. Allen, 10 Kan. 150, 154.

As either general or special.

"A verdict is the finding of the facts of a case by the jury. It may be either general or special. In either case it is the response of the jury to the issues of fact submitted to them by the court. To ascertain, then, the intent and meaning of a verdict, we must look back to the issues submitted." Eason v. Miller, 15 S. C. 194, 202.

"Pennington Small Causes, 177, 178, when speaking of verdicts, says: 'A verdict should always be positive and general, and not conditional or special. A conditional verdict, or a special one, or one in the form of an award, would be erroneous.' I am persuaded, however, that such an opinion is, as to special verdicts, hasty and inaccurate. The right of juries to find special verdicts has existed in England since the passage of St. Westm. II, 18 Edw. I, c. 30, § 2, and in this state since the first establishment of our judicial department." Springer v. Reeves, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 207.

Judgment distinguished.

Under the statute providing that a motion to discharge an order of arrest may be made before judgment, a motion made after verdict, and before the judgment is entered, is made in time. A verdict is not a judgment. A verdict may be had, and yet no judgment be entered upon it. The judgment is that final determination from which an appeal may be taken, and which is evidenced by the former entry by the clerk of the court. Fuentes v. Mayorga (N. Y.) 7 Daly, 103, 104.

A statute granting a new trial in cases where the "verdict or other decision" is against law refers to the issue of facts tendered by the pleadings, and does not refer to the judgment; and hence that the judgment is against law would not be ground for a new trial. Froman v. Patterson, 24 Pac. 692, 694, 10 Mont. 107.

Nonsuit.

Under 6 Geo. IV, c. 50, providing that the party who shall apply for a jury shall pay the costs thereof unless the judge before whom the cause is tried shall, "immediately after verdict," certify, etc., the word "verdict" does not include a nonsuit directed against plaintiff on his opening, so as to entitle defendant to the costs of a jury previously applied for by him. Wood v. Greenwood, 10 Barn. & C. 689.

As either public or private.

A verdict, according to the common law, was either privy or public. Willard v. Sharfer (Pa.) 6 Phila. 520.

A verdict is either privy or public, and a privy verdict is where the judge has left or adjourned the court, and the jury, being agreed, in order to be delivered from their confinement, obtain leave to give their verdict privily to the judge out of court. Such a verdict is of no force unless afterwards affirmed by a public verdict given openly in court, whereat the jury may vary from the privy verdict; so that a privy verdict is indeed a mere nullity; and it is held that a sealed verdict partakes of all the characteristics of a privy verdict, and is no verdict in itself, but must be affirmed by the jury in open court. Young v. Seymour, 4 Neb. 88, 89.

The only effectual verdict is a public verdict, in which the jury openly declare they have found the issue for the plaintiff or for the defendant. Withee v. Rowe, 45 Me. 571, 586.

As a record.

See "Record."

As affected by separation of jury.

The separation of a jury before bringing in their verdict in a capital case does not per se render the verdict void, but it will be set aside or not, according to the circumstances. Davis v. State, 3 Tex. App. 91, 101.

As requiring signing.

Signing is not a requisite to the validity of a verdict. Morton v. State, 3 Tex. App. 510, 513 (citing Commonwealth v. Ripperdon, 16 Ky. [Litt. Sel. Cas.] 195; Burton v. Bondies, 2 Tex. 203).

VERDICT AGAINST LAW.

See "Against Law."

VERIFICATION—VERIFY.

See "Duly Verified."

A "verification" is an affirmation by the party making the pleading that he is prepared to establish the truth of the facts which he has pleaded. In pleadings, literally, a making out to be true. The old formula was, "And this the said plaintiff (or defendant) is ready to verify." Harp v. State, 26 S. W. 714, 715, 59 Ark. 113.

Where a statute requires that a certain statement be verified before an officer authorized to administer oaths, no form of solemnities are necessary, other than the signature of the affiant and the statement of the officer that the affidavit was sworn to before him. A verification does not mean an authentication by the official seal of the office. Ashley v. Wright, 19 Ohio St. 291, 296.

Under Rev. St. Ill. 1889, c. 82, §§ 4, 28, which provide that every lien claimant, in order to obtain a lien, must file a statement "setting forth the times when such material was furnished or labor performed, verified by affidavit," an affidavit stating that the claimant has performed the labor and furnished the materials set forth in the above statement is not sufficient verification to sustain a lien, since it does not verify the dates given in the statement. McDonald v. Rosengarten, 25 N. E. 429, 134 Ill. 126.

One "verifies" an account by merely adding up or doing the other work of mathematical calculation, and finding the figures correct, or by such comparison of entries and items as one may make and find correct, and any extent of this is examination, however superficial. Guarantee Co. v. Mechanics' Sav. Bank & Trust Co. (U. S.) 80 Fed. 766, 777, 26 C. C. A. 146.

The word "verified," when applied to any pleading or paper required in any criminal cause, means supported by oath or affirmation. Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2402; Hornor's Rev. St. Ind. 1901, § 1285.

As requiring oath.

The words "duly verified," in an insurance policy containing a clause requiring that, if the claim of loss was for a building, the insured should procure and attach to the preliminary proofs of loss a duly verified certificate of a builder as to the actual cash value of the building immediately before the fire, does not require an attestation by affidavit. While the term "verified," applied to legal papers, generally means or implies an oath, it does not always or necessarily do so; and as affidavits are usually made to facts, not to opinions—expenditures, not to estimates—the estimate of the value of the building, signed by the architect and builders, will be sufficient. Summerfield v. Phoenix Assur. Co. (U. S.) 65 Fed. 292, 296.

The word "verify" sometimes means to confirm and substantiate by oath, and sometimes by argument. When used in legal proceedings, it is generally employed in the former sense; thus, a plea in abatement, which concludes with what is called a verification, does so in these words: "All which the defendant is ready to verify"—clearly meaning to prove to be true or establish by evidence. De Witt v. Hosmer (N. Y.) 3 How. Prac. 284.

The term "verified," as applied to pleadings and statements of claims filed with municipal officers, has a settled meaning, and refers to an affidavit, attached to such a statement of claim, as to the truth of the matters therein set forth. Patterson v. City of Brooklyn, 40 N. Y. Supp. 581, 582, 6 App. Div. 127.

VERIFIED BY AFFIDAVIT.

A provision of the mechanic's lien law that a statement of account must be "verified by affidavit" plainly means certifying that the statement as made is true; and an affidavit that a statement contains a true account of materials furnished and that there is a stated sum due thereon is insufficient, in so far as it fails to state that the time set forth when the material was furnished was truly stated. Orr & Lockett Hardware Co. v. Needham Co., 48 N. E. 444, 445, 169 Ill. 100, 61 Am. St. Rep. 151.

VERILY BELIEVES.

The words "verily believes," in an affidavit that the affiant "verily believes," etc., is a sufficient compliance with the statute requiring such affidavit to state that the affiant has good reason to believe. "This court has frequently held that the true test of the sufficiency of an affidavit which employs the language of the statute is whether perjury can be assigned upon it." Miller v. Munson, 34 Wis. 579, 581, 17 Am. Rep. 461; Mairet v. Marriner, 34 Wis. 582. The rule being thus established, it remains to be determined whether the words here employed are such that perjury could be assigned, if the person making the affidavit knew them to be false at the time. What do the words "verily believes" import? In Election Cases, 65 Pa. (15 P. F. Smith) 20, the act of the assembly required an affidavit that the statements in the petition were true; but the affiants stated that they were true to the best of their knowledge and belief, and it was held sufficient, as the law did not require absolute verity. Webster defines "verily" as meaning "with great confidence; really; truly; in truth; in fact; certainly." It seems to be synonymous with "verity," which he defines to be "the quality of being very true or real; consonance of a statement, proposition, or other thing with fact; truth." "Verily believes," therefore, includes good reason in fact to believe. "If we are correct in this construction, then the words import more than the statutory requirement; for, while a person might have a good reason to believe, and yet disbelieve, he could not verily believe, without also having good reason in fact to believe." Russell v. Ralph, 10 N. W. 518, 519, 53 Wis. 328. See, also, Penn Nat. Bank v. Altoona Mfg. Co., 15 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 320, 322.

"Verily believes" is equivalent to "firmly believes," as used in Act March 20, 1810, § 11, relating to appeals, and providing that the appellant shall swear or affirm that it is not for the purpose of delay such appeal is entered, but because he firmly believes injustice has been done; for "verily" is as strong a word as "firmly." If the belief be a strong or firm one, it is within the meaning of the law. Thompson v. White (Pa.) 4 Serg. & R. 135, 138.

VERITY.

"Verity" is defined by Webster to be "the quality of being very true or real; consonance of a statement, proposition, or other thing to fact; truth." It seems to be synonymous with "verily," which Webster defines as meaning "with great confidence; really; truly; in truth; in fact; certainly." Russell v. Ralph, 10 N. W. 518, 520, 53 Wis. 328.

VERMILION.

"Vermilion" is a mercurial preparation, though duty is not to be imposed on it under that head in Tariff Act July 30, 1846, schedule D, 9 Stat. 42, for the reason that it is specifically enumerated in schedule E. Boying v. Lawrence (U. S.) 3 Fed. Cas. 1023, 1024.

VERTICAL FINING.

"Vertical fining" is a term used with reference to the manufacture of glass, and means the vertical finding by each particle of the glass when in a molten condition of its natural relative position by reason of its increased specific gravity, caused by the expulsion of gases from such particles by the influence of heat. Siemens v. Chambers & McKee Glass Co. (U. S.) 51 Fed. 902, 909.

VERY FAST.

To say that a train is running "very fast" is equivalent to saying that it is running at a speed of more than eight miles an hour. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Peyton, 76 Ill. 340, 341.

VERY FINE STOCK.

The expression "very fine stock," in a written offer for the sale of roses, is held not to constitute an express warranty of title. Stumpp & Walker Co. v. Lynber, 84 N. Y. Supp. 912.

VERY GOOD COMPANY.

A contract to obtain a policy of fire insurance "in a very good company" implied that the insurance was to be obtained from a company able and willing to pay in the event of a loss. Landusky v. Beirne, 80 N. Y. Supp. 238, 239, 80 App. Div. 272.

VERY SLIGHT FAULT.

The "very slight fault" is that which is excusable, and for which no responsibility is incurred. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 3556, subd. 13.

VERY WELL.

"Very well," as used in a reply to an offer by one party, may mean assent, and again may mean the strongest dissent. The tone, inflection, gesture, and manner are the only indicators by which the phrase may be properly interpreted. Oullahan v. Baldwin, 35 Pac. 310, 312, 100 Cal. 648.

VESSEL.

A refrigerator is not a "vessel" or bottle, though it may betimes contain liquor, and is not within Gen. St. 1899, § 2420, authorizing a warrant to issue to seize intoxicating liquors and vessels or bottles containing the same. J. D. Iler Brewing Co. v. Campbell, 71 Pac. 825, 826, 66 Kan. 361.

VESSEL.

See "Armed Vessels"; "Cartel Vessel"; "Coasting Vessel"; "Ex Vessel"; "Foreign Vessel"; "Sail Vessels."

Other vessel, see "Other."

Seagoing vessel, see "Seagoing."

Vessel in distress, see "Distress."

Vessels in coasting trade, see "Coasting Trade."

Vessels plying coastwise, see "Coastwise Trade."

Vessel regularly employed, see "Regularly Employed."

The word "vessel," as applied to maritime affairs, is understood to mean any vehicle used for transportation on the water. United States v. Open Boat (U. S.) 27 Fed. Cas. 846, 352.

The word "vessel" means any structure which is made to float upon the water for purposes of commerce or war, whether impelled by wind, steam, or oars, as used in the Code, declaring that commercial partners are those who are engaged in carrying personal property for hire, in ships or other vessels; and the act cannot be extended to railroads. Chaffe v. Ludeling, 27 La. Ann. 607, 611 (citing Webst. Dict. "Vessel").

"A vessel is a locomotive machine for transportation over rivers, seas, and oceans; and it is the purpose and business of the craft, and not its form or its means of propulsion, that determines whether it is a vessel." Warn v. Easton & McMahon Transit Co., 2 N. Y. Supp. 620, 622.

As used in St. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 101, § 4, imposing a penalty on the seller of coals if they are delivered without a proper ticket, and applying only to cases of a delivery by a lighter, vessel, barge, or other craft, the meaning of the word "vessel" is limited, by the words "other craft," to mean "craft," and the section does not apply where the cargo has been delivered bodily out of the vessel in which the coals were shipped onto the wharf of the purchaser. "Vessel" may denote a large or small vessel. Its meaning must be regulated by the context. Blanford v. Morrison, 15 Q. B. 724, 731.

"Vessels" making the capture, within Rev. St. § 4680, are vessels within signal distance and able to render effective aid. United States v. Officers, etc., of The Mangrove, 23 Sup. Ct. 343, 345, 188 U. S. 720, 47 L. Ed. 664.

The word "vessel," as defined by Rev. St. § 3 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 4], has included every description of water craft or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on water. Arnold v. Eastin's Trustee, 76 S. W. 855, 857, 25 Ky. Law Rep: 895.

The term "vessel" includes ships, steamers, and every boat or structure adapted to navigation or movement from place to place by water, either upon the lakes, rivers, or artificial waterways. Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 6842, subd. 6.

The term "vessel," as used in the Penal Code, includes ships, steamers, canal boats and every boat or structure adapted to navigation or movement from place to place by water, either upon the ocean, lakes, rivers, or artificial waterways. Pen. Code N. Y. 1903, § 718.

"Vessel," as used in the Penal Code, when used with reference to shipping, includes ships of all kinds, steamboats, steamships, canal boats, and every structure adapted to be navigated from place to place. Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 2692; Pol. Code Mont. 1895, § 16, subd. 7; Rev. St. Utah 1898, § 2498; Pol. Code Cal. 1903, § 17, subd. 7; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 7719; Pen. Code S. D. 1903, § 814.

The word "vessel," when used with reference to shipping, includes ships of all kinds, steamboats, canal boats, barges, and every structure adapted to be navigated from place to place for the transportation of merchandise or persons. Pen. Code Ariz. 1901, par. 7, subd. 7; Pen. Code Mont. 1895, § 7, subd. 7; Pen. Code Cal. 1903, § 7, subd. 7.

The word "vessel" includes every description of water craft or other artificial contrivance used or capable of being used as a means of transportation on water. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 4.

In the construction of the title relating to merchant seamen, the term "vessel" shall be understood to comprehend any description of vessel navigating on any sea or channel, lake, or river to which the provisions of the title may be applicable. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3120.

The term "vessel," as used in an act for the protection of submarine cables, unless the context otherwise requires, shall be taken to mean every description of vessel used in navigation, in whatever way it is propelled. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3589.

Barge.

A barge, though without means of self propulsion, is subject to a maritime lien for breach of a contract of hiring as a vessel. The New York (U. S.) 93 Fed. 495, 497.

That species of watercraft known on the western rivers of Pennsylvania as "barges" are neither ships, boats, nor vessels, within an act giving lien for work furnished in the construction or repair of such vessels. Appeal of Nease & Co. (Pa.) 3 Grant, Cas. 110.

A "barge" is a boat or vessel, and hence is within the letter of a law relating to "boats and vessels." The Resort v. Brooke, 10 Mo. 531, 534.

Boat distinguished.

See "Boat."

Canal boat.

Acts 1862, c. 482, providing for the collection of demands against ships and vessels, should be construed to include a canal boat. Fralick v. Betts (N. Y.) 13 Hun, 632, 633 (citing Emmons v. Wheeler [N. Y.] 3 Hun, 545); King v. Greenway, 71 N. Y. 413, 419; Crawford v. Collins (N. Y.) 45 Barb. 269, 271.

A canal boat, which is a boat designed to make a transit over the artificial waters of a canal from port to port, similar to the vehicles on a railroad between two points, is not a vessel in the merchant service performing voyages, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 317, declaring an action in favor of a person belonging to a vessel in the merchant service for services during a voyage. Warn v. Easton & McMahon Transit Co., 2 N. Y. Supp. 620, 622.

A canal boat is not a ship or vessel, within the meaning of 2 Rev. St. pp. 493, 494, authorizing proceedings for the collection of demands against ships and vessels. Such provision applies only to ships and vessels which navigate the ocean and such as are required to have a coasting license under the laws of the United States. Many v. Noyes (N. Y.) 5 Hill, 34, 35.

A canal boat or scow is not a "vessel of the United States" within the meaning of the act of Congress declaring that no bill of sale, mortgage, etc., of any vessel or part of a vessel of the United States shall be valid, unless the same shall be recorded in the office of the collector of the customs, where such vessel is registered or enrolled. Hicks v. Williams (N. Y.) 17 Barb. 523, 529.

The term "vessel" would include both canal boats and scows. The Hezekiah Baldwin (U. S.) 12 Fed. Cas. 93.

Dredge.

A steam dredge, adapted to be an instrument of transportation on navigable water, transporting from place to place the steam shovel and engine, and maintaining the same afloat while being used for the purpose of deepening channels, is within Rev. St. § 3 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 4], defining a "vessel" as an artificial contrivance used or capable of being used as a means of transportation on water. The Pioneer (U. S.) 30 Fed. 206, 207; Saylor v. Taylor (U. S.) 77 Fed. 476, 477, 23 C. C. A. 343.

The term "vessel" is defined by Congress as including every description of water craft or other artificial contrivance used or capable of being used as a means of transportation on the water. A dredge is incapable of being used as a means of transportation, and hence is not a vessel, and is not subject to a maritime lien. Bartlett v. Steam Dredge No. 14, 64 N. W. 951, 952, 107 Mich. 74, 61 Am. St. Rep. 314.

A dredge boat, without power of self-propulsion and capable of use as a dredging machine only, cannot be regarded as a "vessel," but as a manufacture or machine, within the meaning of Rev. St. § 2511, entitling a manufacture or machine, after exportation from the United States, to be reimported without duty, if returned in the same condition as exported. United States v. Dunbar (U. S.) 67 Fed. 783, 784, 14 C. C. A. 639.

Dredges and scows are vessels, and are not dutiable as "goods, wares, and merchandise" under the tariff laws. The International (U. S.) 83 Fed. 840.

Ferry boat.

A ferry boat is a "vessel," within the meaning of Laws 1862, c. 482, as amended by Laws 1863, c. 422, providing that, whenever a debt shall be contracted by the builder of a vessel on account of work done or materials furnished, said debt shall be a lien on such vessel, etc. Phoenix Iron Co. v. Hopatcong, 27 N. E. 841, 844, 127 N. Y. 206.

Flatboat with pile driver.

A flatboat, with a pile driver and its engine erected thereon, which is mainly used in constructing bulkheads for the erection of channel lights, and which is also employed in transporting materials used in the work, is to be classed as a "vessel," within the maritime jurisdiction, and so subject to maritime liens. Lawrence v. Flatboat (U. S.) 84 Fed. 200, 201.

A pile driver, consisting of a floating platform carrying a derrick, engine, and pile-driving apparatus, and also furnished with a wheel by which it may propel itself, and which is not fitted for the purposes of transportation, is not a vessel. Pile Driver E. O. A. (U. S.) 69 Fed. 1005, 1007.

Floating bathhouse.

A floating bathhouse, moored to the shore, the house being secured to the shore by means of bolts and chains, and so arranged as to allow it to rise and fall with the tide, and so constructed that the tide flowed freely through it, was not a vessel, though so described in a libel brought against a steamer that collided with it. The M. R. Brazos (U. S.) 17 Fed. Cas. 951.

A bathhouse, built on boats and designed for navigation and transportation, is within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States. The Public Bath No. 13 (U. S.) 61 Fed. 692, 693.

Floating dry dock.

"Vessel," as used in Laws 1875, c. 405, declaring that wharfage is collectible from any vessel that uses or makes fast to any pier, etc., embraces every floating structure, so that a floating dry dock is a vessel, within the meaning of that word as used. Walsh v. New York Floating Dry Dock Co. (N. Y.) 8 Daly, 387, 389.

Floating elevator.

The term "vessel," as used in admiralty, applies to a floating elevator used in New York Harbor, and consisting of a canal boat on which has been built an apparatus for hoisting grain, although not enrolled or licensed, and having no motive power of its own, nor capacity for other cargo than that of the elevator. The Hezekiah Baldwin (U. S.) 12 Fed. Cas. 93.

Floating marine pump.

A marine pump, weighted with heavy ballast, so as to rest on piles, but capable of floating and being towed from place to place, and which is used for sucking mud from beneath the water or from scows alongside, and forcing it by steam power on the adjacent land, is not a vessel, so as to be the subject of admiralty jurisdiction. The Big Jim (U. S.) 61 Fed. 503.

Floating wharf.

A floating structure, designed to be moored alongside a wharf, so that carts containing refuse to be dumped into boats can be driven over it from the wharf, is not a "vessel," within the meaning of the maritime law, so that a lien for wharfage cannot attach to it under such law. Ruddiman v. A Scow Platform (U. S.) 38 Fed. 158.

Foreign vessel.

The term "vessel," as used in section 4606 of the Revised Statutes [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3118], providing for the punishment of any person who without the consent of the master goes on board an arriving vessel before she reaches her place of destination, and is moored thereat, applies to foreign vessels, as well as domestic vessels. United States v. Sullivan (U. S.) 43 Fed. 602, 604.

Incomplete boat.

"Vessel," as used in Misc. Laws, c. 13, § 17, relating to liens of materialmen for materials furnished in building a vessel, means one that is complete and capable of being used to carry freight or passengers. The hull of a vessel, without the other parts necessary to its use, does not come within the meaning of the statute. Northrup v. The Pilot, 6 Or. 297, 299.

A lapstreaked boat, which was unfinished and still in the hands of the builder, and wholly unfit for carrying men or goods on water, is not a "vessel," within Rev. St. c. 126. Commonwealth v. Francis (Mass.) 1 Thacher, Cr. Cas. 240, 242.

A vessel is any structure made to float on the water for the purpose of commerce or war, whether impelled by wind, steam, or oars, and does not apply to an incomplete portion thereof, as a hull or other part, requiring construction of other parts. Yarnberg v. Watson, 4 Pac. 296, 297, 13 Or. 11.

An old steamboat, from which the boilers, wheels, engines, and machinery had been removed, and which had been changed into a pleasure barge, having no independent means of propulsion, but intended to be towed by a towboat, and to be used in the transportation of excursion parties in the neighborhood of a city, and having her cabins fitted up and used as dancing halls by those who engaged her, is a vessel, within the language of Act Pa. April 20, 1858 (P. L. 363), and Act Pa. June 13, 1836 (P. L. 616), and as such subject to a lien for materials furnished and work done in fitting and repairing her. The City of Pittsburg (U. S.) 45 Fed. 699.

A mariner rendering services on board a vessel carrying coal between Philadelphia and New York on tide waters, though she be stripped of sails and masts and be towed by steamboats, may proceed in rem against such vessel for his wages. The D. C. Salisbury (U. S.) 7 Fed. Cas. 279.

Open boat.

As used in 3 Stat. 602, declaring that the ports of the United States shall be and remain closed against every vessel owned wholly or in part by a subject of his Britannic majesty coming or arriving from any port in Canada, the term "vessel" does not include open boats without decks. United States v. Open Boat (U. S.) 27 Fed. Cas. 354, 355.

As used in Act May 15, 1820, providing that after the 30th of September the ports of the United States shall remain closed against every "vessel," etc., the term "vessel" does not include an open boat. Id. 27, Fed. Cas. 346, 352.

Pleasure yacht.

"Vessel," as the term is used in the limited liability act, is properly limited to ships and other seagoing craft, and does not include vessels employed in inland navigation, which are especially designated by the name of "boats," such as a small pleasure yacht. The Mamie (U. S.) 5 Fed. 813, 817.

Raft.

The general term "vessels" includes rafts. United States v. Marthinson (U. S.) 58 Fed. 765, 766.

The term "vessel" does not include a log raft constructed to be towed down a river to sawmills. Moores v. Louisville Underwriters (U. S.) 14 Fed. 226, 236.

A log raft is a "vessel," and entitled to the same rights in navigable streams as other vessels. The Mary (U. S.) 123 Fed. 609, 612.

A raft made of cross-ties, used as a convenient mode of bringing them to market, manned by a pilot, crew, and cook, who lived and had shelter thereon during a voyage which lasted many days, and propelled by the tides and by poles and large oars, was a "vessel," within Rev. St. U. S. § 3 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 4], defining a vessel as including every description of water craft or other artificial contrivance used or capable of being used as a means of transportation by water. Seabrook v. Raft of Railroad Cross-Ties (U. S.) 40 Fed. 596, 598.

A steam tug towing a raft of logs must carry the lights provided by Rev. St. § 4233, rule 4 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2894], relating to the carrying of lights by steam vessels when towing other vessels, though such raft may not come strictly within Rev. St. U. S. § 3 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 4], declaring that the word "vessel" includes every description of water craft or other artificial contrivance used or capable of being used as a means of transportation on water. The Annie S. Cooper (U. S.) 48 Fed. 703, 704.

The word "vessel" does not include a raft, so as to enable persons to maintain a libel in rem for services in navigating a raft of logs, under an act giving such right for the navigation of a vessel. Raft of Cypress Logs (U. S.) 20 Fed. Cas. 169, 170.

A "raft" is a pile of lumber fastened together and placed on the water, and hence is not a vessel, and any assistance rendered to a raft is not a salvage service. Salvor Wrecking Co. v. Sectional Dock Co. (U. S.) 21 Fed. Cas. 281.

Rowboat or sailboat.

In common parlance, small rowboats, or small sailboats, are not included in the designation of "vessel," as used in the regulations of the harbor masters of New York Harbor, providing that no vessel shall anchor within certain prescribed limits. Lambert v. Staten Island R. Co., 70 N. Y. 104, 110.

A rowboat is not a "vessel," within the steering and sailing rule (Rev. St. U. S. rule 21 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2891]), requiring that every steamer, when approaching another vessel so as to involve risk of collision, shall slacken her speed, or, if necessary, stop or reverse. Of all water craft rowboats are most easily handled. A few strokes of the oars in the hands of any competent man will take a rowboat out of the path of an approaching steamer. The latter is confined to a channel, often narrow, while the rowboat requires but a few inches of water to float it. To apply the above rule to such craft would wholly ignore the risk upon which it is founded. Fischer v. Camden Ferry Co., 16 Atl. 634, 635, 124 Pa. 154.

Scow.

Scows are properly to be construed vessels, instruments of commerce and navigation, a contract for the repair of which is maritime, because of its relation to trade and commerce and "some connection with a vessel employed in trade." Endner v. Greco (U. S.) 3 Fed. 411, 413 (citing The Kate Tremaine [U. S.] 14 Fed. Cas. 144; The Onorere [U. S.] 18 Fed. Cas. 728; The Bob Connell [U. S.] 1 Fed. 218; New England Marine Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 78 U. S. [11 Wall.] 1).

A scow is not a "vessel of the United States," within the meaning of the act of Congress declaring that no bill of sale, mortgage, etc., of any vessel of the United States, shall be valid unless the same shall be recorded in the office of the collector of customs. Hicks v. Williams (N. Y.) 17 Barb. 523, 529.

A vessel is any structure intended to float upon the water, and a scow is a vessel within the act relating to the harbor master. Adams v. Farmer (N. Y.) 1 E. D. Smith, 588, 589.

The term "vessel" would include both canal boats and scows. The Hezekiah Baldwin (U. S.) 12 Fed. Cas. 93.

Small lighter.

"Vessel," as used in a statute providing that the proprietors of a certain bridge shall constantly keep some suitable person at the bridge, who shall raise the draw for any vessel that shall be passing up or down the river, etc., includes all vessels of every description, if they cannot conveniently pass unless such draw is raised. Small lighters with movable masts, so circumstanced in their passage through the bridge that their masts can be conveniently taken down and be replaced after the passage, are not within the contemplation of such statute. Hood v. Proprietors of Dighton Bridge, 3 Mass. 263, 267.

Steamboat.

The term "vessel" includes a ship of any magnitude, and includes a steamboat. Tisdell v. Combe, 7 Adol. & E. 788, 796.

A steam vessel is none the less a vessel, in respect to her being water borne, because she is propelled in whole or in part by steam. The Manhattan (U. S.) 16 Fed. Cas. 596, 597.

A vessel is none the less one on account of the manner of her propulsion, whether by oars, sails, or steam; and, as used in the act relating to construction and occupation of berths, "vessel" includes steam vessels. The Devonshire (U. S.) 13 Fed. 39, 41.

A steamboat, registered and enrolled as a coasting vessel, is within the description of vessels provided for by 2 Rev. St. p. 493, as to the collection of the demands against "ships and vessels." Pendleton v. Franklin, 7 N. Y. (3 Seld.) 508, 512.

The word "vessel," as used in the act relating to immigrants and seamen, shall include vessels propelled by steam. Civ. Code S. C. 1902, § 2302.

As structure.

See "Structure."

VESSEL OF COMMERCE.

A whaling ship is a "vessel of commerce," within a statute abolishing punishment by flogging in the navy and in "vessels of commerce." United States v. Cutler (U. S.) 25 Fed. Cas. 740.

VESSEL OF THE NAVY.

The term "vessels of the navy," as used in the title on prize, shall include all armed vessels officered and manned by the United States, and under the control of the Department of the Navy. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3126.

VESSEL OF THE UNITED STATES.

A foreign-built vessel, the property of citizens of the United States, which had not been registered in the manner prescribed by the statute of 1792, is not a vessel of the United States. The Merritt, 84 U. S. (17 Wall.) 582, 585, 21 L. Ed. 682.

The term "vessels of the United States," as used in Act Cong. July 29, 1850, providing that no bill of sale or mortgage of any vessel of the United States shall be valid, as against any other than the parties thereto, unless recorded, was intended to protect the claims of persons dealing with the vessel as a vessel of the United States, connected with the commerce and navigation of the nation, and a steamboat properly enrolled under the acts of Congress was not such a vessel and within the scope of the act. Brammell v. Hart, 59 Tenn. (12 Heisk.) 366, 368.

VEST.

The word "vest" is defined to give an immediate right of present or future enjoyment. Stewart v. Harriman, 56 N. H. 25, 29, 22 Am. Rep. 408.

The word "vest" has a well-established and well-recognized meaning. In the Standard Dictionary the verb "to vest" is defined as meaning to confer ownership of a property on a person, or invest a person with full title to property, and in the Century Dictionary as meaning to pass or devolve as a matter of right or title, irrespective of any immediate right of possession. The ordinary and popular, and, indeed, the legal, meaning of a provision that personal property shall be vested in a certain person, is that the title to the property passes to and rests in him. Smith v. Proskey, 79 N. Y. Supp. 851, 853, 39 Misc. Rep. 385.

The term "vested" is not the exact opposite of "contingent," but is in a measure confused with it. It has the quality of opening and sharing, of ending and shifting, in such way that he who yesterday was the only person vested to-day has others sharing with him, and to-morrow may be wholly divested, and this, too, against his consent. McGillis v. McGillis, 42 N. Y. Supp. 921, 924, 11 App. Div. 359.

As used in an insurance policy, the terms "interest" and "title" are not synonymous. A mortgagor in possession and a purchaser holding under a deed defectively executed have both of them absolute as well as insurable interests in the property, though neither of them has the legal title. "Absolute" is here synonymous with "vested," and is used in contradistinction to "contingent" or "conditional." Loventhal v. Home Ins. Co., 112 Ala. 108, 116, 20 South. 419, 33 L. R. A. 258, 57 Am. St. Rep. 17.

The word "vest," in a deed providing that at the death of one the premises thereby conveyed were to vest in another, was effectual on such death to give such other person the property. He became the owner of it by the use of that word. Lewis v. Howe, 64 App. Div. 572, 577, 75 N. Y. Supp. 851, 854.

Testator gave his residuary estate to his nephews and nieces and the issue of any of them that may be deceased, living at his death, such issue taking their parents' share, and in default of issue such share to be divided among the survivors. By a subsequent clause he directed that no nephew or niece or representative of such should have a right to call the trustees under the will to an accounting until he might be entitled to receive the share of his residuary estate, nor should any estate vest until such time. Held, that the word "vest" was used in the sense of "payable," and that the nephews and nieces took an estate the title of which vested in them on the death of testator. In re Phillips' Estate, 55 Atl. 210, 205 Pa. 504, 97 Am. St. Rep. 743.

As equivalent to possession.

Some confusion has arisen in the use of the word "vested" when applied to personal property. Originally the word referred only to real estate. It signified the acquisition of a portion of the actual ownership. The fee simple being supposed to be carved out into parts or divisions by the creation of particular estates, a grant to any person of one of these portions of the fee vested him with, or vested in him, an estate in the land. Thus "vested" is nearly equivalent to possession. The only definition that can be given to the word "vested" in English Law, as applied to future interests other than remainders, is that it means not subject to a condition precedent. Hence legacies payable at a future time certain to arise, and not subject to a condition precedent, are vested. On the other hand, legacies only payable on an event which may never happen, and hence subject to a condition precedent, are contingent. Scott v. West, 24 N. W. 161, 170, 63 Wis. 529.

VESTED ESTATE.

"An estate is vested when there is a person in being who will take if the precedent estate terminates." Sheridan v. House, *43 N. Y. (4 Keyes) 569, 587, 4 Abb. Dec. 218, 225.

A vested estate is an estate when there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the lands upon the ceasing of some intermediate or precedent estate. Taylor v. Gould (N. Y.) 10 Barb. 388, 389, 393; Hersee v. Simpson, 46 N. Y. Supp. 755, 756, 20 App. Div. 100; Hopkins v. Hopkins (N. Y.) 1 Hun, 352, 354; Thornton v. Zea, 55 S. W. 798, 799, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 509; Smaw v. Young, 20 South. 370, 375, 109 Ala. 528; Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 2037.

An estate is vested when there is an immediate right of present enjoyment, or a present fixed right of future enjoyment. Flanner v. Fellows, 68 N. E. 1057, 1058, 206 Ill. 136; Smith v. West, 103 Ill. 332, 337; Bennett v. Garlock (N. Y.) 10 Hun, 328, 338; Hopkins v. Hopkins (N. Y.) 1 Hun, 352, 354; In re Moran's Will, 96 N. W. 367, 370, 188 Wis. 177; Clarke v. McCreary, 20 Miss. (12 Smedes & M.) 347, 353; Hayes v. Goode

(Va.) 7 Leigh, 452, 496. The law favors vested estates and no remainder will be construed to be contingent which may, consistently with the intention, be deemed vested. For the same reasons estates are held to be vested at the earliest possible period, unless a contrary intention is clearly manifested in the grant. Tindall v. Tindall, 66 S. W. 1092, 1094, 167 Mo. 218; Strode v. McCormick, 41 N. E. 1091, 1093, 158 Ill. 142.

By a vested estate, in relation to interests of the freehold quality, is to be understood an interest clothed, as to legal estates with a legal seisin, or as to equitable estates with an equitable seisin, which enables the person to whom the interest is limited to exercise the right of present or future enjoyment immediately in point of estate. A vested estate is an interest clothed with a present, legal, and existing right of alienation. Thornton v. Zea, 55 S. W. 798, 799, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 509.

The term "vested estate" includes all estates which are not contingent, whether in possession, reversion, or remainder, as used in Civ. Code, § 490, subsec. 2, providing that, if the estate be in possession and the property cannot be divided without materially impairing its value, a vested estate in real property jointly owned by two or more persons may be sold. Ward v. Edge, 39 S. W. 440, 443, 100 Ky. 757.

VESTED FUTURE ESTATE.

Future estates are vested when there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the lands upon the ceasing of the intermediate or preceding estate. Sage v. Wheeler, 37 N. Y. Supp. 1107, 1109, 3 App. Div. 38; Palmer v. Dunham, 6 N. Y. Supp. 46, 47, 52 Hun, 468; Wadsworth v. Murray, 51 N. Y. Supp. 1038, 1043, 29 App. Div. 191; Livingston v. New York Life Ins. & Trust Co., 13 N. Y. Supp. 105, 107, 59 Hun, 622; Dana v. Murray, 122 N. Y. 604, 616, 26 N. E. 21, 24; Leslie v. Marshall (N. Y.) 81 Barb. 560, 564; Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 4374; Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 8795.

VESTED FUTURE INTEREST.

A "future interest" is vested when there is a person in being who would have a right, defeasible or indefeasible, to the immediate possession of the property, upon the ceasing of the intermediate or precedent estate. Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 694; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 3293; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 209; Civ. Code Idaho 1901, § 2357; Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 1115.

VESTED IN INTEREST.

An estate is "vested in interest" when there is a present, fixed right of future enjoyment. Smith v. West, 103 Ill. 332, 337. One of the tests, though not exclusive, is the right of alienation. Some of the authorities hold that the policy of the law against clogging the free alienation of estates is the reason for the rule against perpetuities. Gray, Perpetuities, § 205, says: "A vested interest is not subject to the rule against perpetuities, for ex vi termini it is not subject to a condition preceding it. A remainder is vested, if it is ready to take effect whenever and however the particular estate determines." Gates v. Seibert, 57 S. W. 1065, 1066, 157 Mo. 254.

A remainder is vested in interest where the person is in being and ascertained who will, if he lives, have an absolute and immediate right to the possession of the land upon the ceasing or failure of all the precedent estates, providing the estate limited to him by the remainder shall so long continue; in other words, where the remainderman's right to an estate in possession cannot be defeated by third persons, the contingent evidence, or by the felony of a condition precedent if he lives, and the estate limited to him by way of remainder continues until all the precedent estates are determined, his remainder is vested in interest. Hawley v. James (N. Y.) 5 Paige, 317, 466.

VESTED IN POSSESSION.

An estate is "vested in possession" when there is a right of present enjoyment. Smith v. West, 103 Ill. 332, 337; Gates v. Seibert, 57 S. W. 1065, 1066, 157 Mo. 254.

VESTED INTEREST.

See "Absolute Vested Interest."

A vested interest is where there is an immediate fixed right of present or future enjoyment, whereas an executory interest ex vi termini implies that something further is to be done for the completion of the trust and the vesting of an estate in a party. Hayes v. Goode (Va.) 7 Leigh, 452, 496.

A "vested estate" gives a certain and fixed right of present or future enjoyment; that is, an interest clothed with a present, legal, and existing right of alienation. An interest, when vested, and whether it entitles the owner to the possession now or at a future period, is fixed and present, so that the right of ownership over the land or other subject of property to the extent of the estate may be aliened. Allison v. Allison's Ex'rs, 44 S. E. 904, 915, 101 Va. 537, 63 L. R. A. 920.

It is not the uncertainty of enjoyment in the future, but the uncertainty of the right to that enjoyment, which makes the difference between a vested and a contingent interest. Hawkins v. Behling, 48 N. E. 94, 95, 168 Ill. 214 (citing 4 Kent, Comm. 205; Temple v. Scott, 143 Ill. 290, 296, 32 N. E. 366); Lewis v. Howe, 66 N. E. 975, 977, 174 N. Y. 340; Smaw v. Young, 20 South. 370, 371, 109 Ala. 528.

At common law, before the contingency happened, contingent remainders could not be conveyed, except by way of estoppel. Yet they were assignable in equity, since theoretically such a remainder was not an estate, but a mere chance of having one. Under the statutes in various states, if the person who is to take the estate is ascertained, he has what is called a "vested interest in a contingent remainder" which may be alienated by deed. Bunting v. Speck, 21 Pac. 288, 292, 41 Kan. 424, 3 L. R. A. 690.

"Vested interest" can mean nothing else than an interest in respect of which there is a fixed right of present or future enjoyment. The power of a testator over his will to destroy it, make a new one, or appoint another executor, seems to leave narrow ground for the contention that the interest of the executor named therein is a vested interest. Stewart v. Harriman, 56 N. H. 25, 29, 22 Am. Rep. 408.

A policy of life insurance, the moment it is issued, creates a vested interest in the beneficiary named. Laughlin v. Norcross, 53 Atl. 834, 835, 97 Me. 83.

A testator, by his will, after making specific bequests, ordered that the rest of his estate should be sold by his executors and turned into money as soon after his death as convenient and distributed among his children in the following proportions: Two shares to each of his sons, and one share to each of his daughters—and provided that none of the legacies should lapse by the death of any of his children, but in the case of such death the share of the deceased child or children should go to his or their issue in the proportions stated, and if such a deceased child should leave no issue then his or her share should go to and among his surviving children in like proportions. It was held under the will that on the death of the testator his children took vested interests in their respective shares, though no payment could be made until after the land was sold, but it in nowise affected the vesting of the title. Herbert v. Smith, 1 N. J. Eq. (Saxt.) 141, 145.

VESTED LEGACY.

On the subject of what constitutes a vested or contingent legacy, this court has in many cases iterated and reiterated the rule of the courts in England that where there is a substantive bequest or gift of a sum of money to be paid at a future time the legacy is vested, but where there is no antecedent debt or bequest independent of the period fixed for payment then it is not vested, but contingent. Magoffin v. Patton (Pa.) 4 Rawle, 113; Appeal of Selbert, 19 Pa. (7 Harris) 49, 56; Lamb v. Lamb (Pa.) 8 Watts, 184 (cited in Appeal of Bowman, 34 Pa. [10 Casey] 19, 23).

The term "vested" is constantly used of legacies to indicate more than not being "contingent," in the common use of that term as to estates in real property, namely, to indicate one which is not subject to be divested, or one that is not defeasible by lapse of time or otherwise. A legacy is not said to be vested, except where a legatee has power to extinguish by release or give perfect title by assignment. Where words of futurity are annexed to the substance of the gift, and there is nothing in the will to manifest a different intention, the gift itself will be deemed future, and the question of who is the beneficiary will be deemed dependent on the state of facts when that future time shall arrive. And in this class of cases the legacy is said meanwhile not to be vested, although, if it were an estate in real property given by the same language, it would technically be called a "vested," as distinguished from a "contingent" remainder. Talmadge v. Seaman, 32 N. Y. Supp. 906, 908, 85 Hun, 242 (citing Delafield v. Shipman, 18 Abb. N. C. 300, note).

When a legacy is directed to be paid at a future time or on a future event, it is vested or contingent, according to the intent of the testator as expressed in his will. If the time or event is annexed to the payment of the legacy, it is vested; if to the substance or gift of the legacy, it is contingent. Therefore if a legacy be given to a person, payable or to be paid at or when he shall attain the age of 21 years, or at any other definite period or event, the legacy becomes vested immediately upon the testator's death, and is transmissible to the will or administration of the legatee, though he die before the time of payment. But if the words "payable" or "to be paid" are omitted, and the legacy is given at 21, or at or upon any other future period, the interest is contingent, and depends for its vesting on the legatee being alive at the period or event specified. Rubencane v. McKee, 6 Atl. 639, 641, 6 Del. Ch. 40 (citing Conwell's Adm'r v. Heavilo's Adm'r [Del.] 5 Har. 296).

A legacy is contingent, and not vested, when the payment thereof is deferred for reasons personal to the legatee. Thus a will directing the trustee, on the death of a life tenant, to pay out of the residuary estate a certain amount to each of two nephews of testatrix when they shall reach majority, and, in case either die before that age, to pay his legacy to the survivor, creates contingent, and not vested, legacies. In re Engles' Estate, 81 Atl. 76, 78, 166 Pa. 645.

If a legacy, charged upon the personal estate only of the testator, be given unconditionally, and dependent upon no future contingency, then, though the day of payment be postponed, as if it is to be paid when the legatee attains the age of 21 years, or marries, or some other contingency happens, yet, if the legatee die before that day, his representatives shall take. It is a vested legacy,—it cannot fall. Fairly v. Kilne, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 754, 758, 4 Am. Dec. 414.

Where a testator, among other things, directed and bequeathed as follows: "All the residue of my estate, after payment of my debts, etc., I give and bequeath to my children, to wit," naming them, "equally to be divided among them, share and share alike. Nevertheless my intent and meaning is that if my said daughter Anna should die, but leaving no child or children, then her dividend out of my estate shall be equally divided among my sons and my daughter Mary"—this was a "vested legacy." Hull v. Eddy, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 169, 178.

VESTED REMAINDER.

A vested remainder is where a present interest passes to a certain and definite person, but to be enjoyed in futuro. There must be a particular estate to support it. The remainder must pass out of the grantor at the creation of the particular estate. It must vest in the grantee during the continuance of the estate, or eo instante that it determines. Poor v. Considine, 73 U. S. (6 Wall.) 458, 474, 18 L. Ed. 869; Cuyler v. Ferrill (U. S.) 6 Fed. Cas. 1088, 1090; Byrne v. France, 33 S. W. 178, 180, 131 Mo. 639; Bunting v. Speck, 21 Pac. 288, 296, 41 Kan. 424, 3 L. R. A. 690; Haward v. Peavey, 21 N. E. 503, 505, 128 Ill. 430, 15 Am. St. Rep. 120; Hauptman v. Carpenter, 16 App. D. C. 524, 528; Richardson v. Penicks, 1 App. D. C. 261, 264; Phinix v. Foster, 7 South. 836, 837, 90 Ala. 262; Allison v. Allison's Ex'rs, 44 S. E. 904, 915, 101 Va. 537, 63 L. R. A. 920.

A remainder is vested when there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the lands on the ceasing of the intermediate or precedent estate. Taylor v. Gould (N. Y.) 10 Barb. 888, 396; Hennessy v. Patterson, 85 N. Y. 91, 100; Minot v. Minot, 45 N. Y. Supp. 554, 557, 17 App. Div. 521; Dana v. Murray, 84 N. Y. St. Rep. 611, 617; Bennett v. Garlock (N. Y.) 10 Hun, 328, 338; Williams v. Peabody (N. Y.) 8 Hun, 271, 272; Kingsley v. Broward, 19 Fla. 722; Croxall v. Sherrerd, 72 U. S. (5 Wall.) 268, 288, 18 L. Ed. 572; Chapin v. Crow, 147 Ill. 219, 222, 35 N. E. 536, 37 Am. St. Rep. 213; Forsythe v. Lansing's Ex'rs, 59 S. W. 854, 855, 109 Ky. 518; Curtis v. Zutavern (Neb.) 93 N. W. 400, 405; Wood v. Griffin, 46 N. H. 230, 234.

The term "vested," as applied to remainders, has unfortunately been used in English and American law with two meanings: (1) It may signify simply a remainder so far vested as to be capable of alienation, and the subject of succession by inheritance. (2) It may also signify a remainder so absolutely vested that the remainderman is certain to come into possession immediately on the determination of the precedent estate. Johnson v. Edmond, 33 Atl. 503, 505, 65 Conn. 492, 499.

A vested remainder is an immediate right of present enjoyment or a present fixed right of future enjoyment. Bufford v. Holliman, 10 Tex. 560, 572, 60 Am. Dec. 223; Havens v. Sea Shore Land Co., 20 Atl. 497, 501, 47 N. J. Eq. 365; Mercer v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co., 45 Atl. 865, 869, 91 Md. 102.

A vested remainder is one limited to a certain person at a certain time or upon the happening of a necessary event. Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 3100; Olmstead v. Dunn, 72 Ga. 850, 860; Fields v. Lewis, 45 S. E. 437, 438, 118 Ga. 573.

"A vested remainder is a fixed interest, to take effect in possession after a particular estate is spent." Paul v. Frierson, 21 Fla. 529, 533; Hempstead v. Dickson, 20 Ill. (10 Peck) 193, 195, 71 Am. Dec. 260.

A vested remainder is an estate fixed to remain in a determinate person after the particular estate is spent or comes to an end. Marvin v. Ledwith, 111 Ill. 144, 150.

"Vested remainders are remainders which pass by the conveyance to certain persons, but the possession and enjoyment only are postponed until a particular estate is determined." Bunting v. Speck, 21 Pac. 288, 290, 41 Kan. 424, 3 L. R. A. 690.

"Vested remainders" (or remainders executed, whereby a present interest passes to the party, though to be enjoyed in future) are where the estate is invariably fixed, to remain to a determinate person, after the particular estate is spent. In re Moran's Will, 96 N. W. 367, 369, 118 Wis. 177; Ducker v. Burnham, 146 Ill. 9, 22, 34 N. E. 558, 37 Am. St. Rep. 135; Hawley v. James (N. Y.) 16 Wend. 61, 137; Jackson's Adm'r v. Sublett, 49 Ky. (10 B. Mon.) 467, 470.

A vested remainder is a remainder limited to a certain person and on a certain event, so as to possess a present capacity to take effect in possession should the possession become vacant. Wallace v. Minor, 10 S. E. 423, 425, 86 Va. 550; Lantz v. Massie's Ex'x, 40 S. E. 50, 99 Va. 709; Chippis v. Hall, 23 W. Va. 504, 515.

Gray, Perpetuities, § 209, says: "A remainder is vested if it is ready to take effect whenever and however the particular estate determines, and it is immaterial that the particular estate is determinable by a contingency which may fall beyond a life or lives in being." Gates v. Seibert, 57 S. W. 1065, 1066, 157 Mo. 254.

A "vested remainder" is an estate to take effect after another estate for years, life, or in tail, which is so limited that, if that particular estate were to expire or end in any way at the present time, some certain person, who was in esse and answered the description of the remainderman during the continuance of the particular estate, would thereupon become entitled to the immediate possession, irrespective of the concurrence of any collateral contingency. Woodman v. Woodman, 35 Atl. 1037, 1038, 89 Me. 128; Chapin v. Nott, 67 N. E. 833, 835, 203 Ill. 341 (citing Boatman v. Boatman, 198 Ill. 414, 65 N. E. 81); Weehawken Ferry v. Sisson, 17 N. J. Eq. (2 C. E. Green) 475, 479.

A "vested remainder" is a present fixed right of future enjoyment, depending on no dubious or uncertain event. Rickey v. Hillman, 7 N. J. Law (2 Halst.) 180, 187.

A vested remainder is a remainder which is limited to a person in being and ascertained to take effect by words of express limitation on the determination of the preceding particular estate. When it is ascertained that the remainder may take effect in possession on the determination of the preceding estate, at whatever time, and however early, and by whatever means these estates may determine, the remainder must be considered as vested. Kemp v. Bradford, 61 Md. 330, 335.

A vested remainder is one that takes effect in the interest and right immediately on the death of the testator, although it may not take effect—indeed, if it be a remainder, it cannot take effect—in possession and enjoyment until the death of the devisee for life or other determination of the particular estate. In a case of a devise of an estate for life to testator's son, with remainder to testator's heirs, such heirs were ascertained at the moment of the event of the testator's decease, and by the same event the will took effect. There was no contingency as to who was to take, and the court held that the remainder vested in testator's children equally, including the one to whom the life estate was devised. Brown v. Lawrence, 57 Mass. (3 Cush.) 390, 397.

Contingent remainder distinguished.

"The broad distinction between vested and contingent remainders is this: In the first there is some person in esse, known and ascertained, who by the will or deed creating the estate is to take and enjoy the estate, and whose right to such remainder no contingency can defeat. In the second it depends upon the happening of a contingent event whether the estate limited as a remainder shall ever take effect at all. The event may either never happen, or it may not happen until after the particular estate upon which it depended shall have been determined, so that the estate in remainder will never take effect." Bunting v. Speck, 21 Pac. 288, 296, 41 Kan. 424, 3 L. R. A. 690.

It is the present capacity of taking effect in possession, if the possession should ever become vacant, not the certainty that it ever will become vacant while the remainder continues, that distinguishes a vested from a contingent remainder. Kinkead v. Ryan, 53 Atl. 1053, 1055, 64 N. J. Eq. 454 (citing Van Dyke's Adm'r v. Vanderpool's Adm'r, 14 N. J. Eq. 198); Havens v. Sea Shore Land Co., 20 Atl. 497, 501, 47 N. J. Eq. 385; Ralley v. Milam, 5 S. W. 367, 368, 9 Ky. Law Rep. 409; Johnson v. Robertson, 45 S. W. 523, 524, 20 Ky. Law Rep. 135; Walters v. Crutcher (Ky.) 15 B. Mon. 2, 10; Chew v. Keller, 100 Mo. 368, 13 S. W. 395; Patrick v. Blair, 24 S. W. 767, 769, 119 Mo. 105; Smaw v. Young, 20 South. 370, 381, 109 Ala. 528; Paul v. Frierson, 21 Fla. 529, 533; Kingsley v. Broward, 19 Fla. 722; Croxall v. Sherrerd, 72 U. S. (5 Wall.) 268, 288, 18 L. Ed. 572; Heilman v. Heilman, 129 Ind. 59, 65, 28 N. E. 310.

It is not the uncertainty of ever taking effect in possession that makes a remainder contingent, for to this extent every remainder is and must be liable, since the remainderman may die without heirs before the distribution of the particular estate. The present capacity to take effect in possession, if the possession were to become vacant before the estate limited in remainder determines, universally distinguishes a vested from a contingent remainder. Moore's Adm'r v. Sleet, 68 S. W. 642, 643, 113 Ky. 600; Forsythe v. Lansing's Ex'rs, 59 S. W. 854, 855, 109 Ky. 518; Evans v. Davis (Pa.) 1 Yeates, 332, 340; Bruce v. Bissell, 119 Ind. 525, 528, 22 N. E. 4, 12 Am. St. Rep. 436.

The term "remainder" is a relative expression, and implies that some part of the thing is previously disposed of. Vested remainders, or remainders executed, whereby a present interest passes to the party, are where the estate is invariably fixed to remain to a determinate person after the particular estate is spent. And contingent or executory remainders, whereby no present interest passes, are where the estate in remainder is limited to take effect either to a dubious and uncertain person or upon a dubious and uncertain event. Hudson v. Wadsworth, 8 Conn. 348, 359.

A "vested remainder" is an estate in present, although to be enjoyed in the future, while a contingent remainder is an estate to vest upon the happening of some future event. A contingent, and not a vested, remainder is created in the children of the devisees by a will in which the testatrix gives property to her sisters, to hold the same during their lives and at their decease to descend to their children, respectively, and to be equally divided among them or the survivors of them. Spear v. Fogg, 32 Atl. 791, 792, 87 Me. 132.

Estates created by a testator will be regarded by the courts as vested estates, and not contingent, unless it is manifest that a contrary result was intended. A power given a life tenant to sell and convey the fee did not render the remainder contingent, but it was a vested remainder. Kirkpatrick v. Kirkpatrick, 197 Ill. 144, 64 N. E. 267. And though a power is given to a trustee to pay or deliver over the estate to the life tenant, yet the remainder is vested. Harvard College v. Balch, 171 Ill. 275, 49 N. E. 543. In 4 Kent, Comm. p. 228, the author says: "A remainder limited upon an estate tail is held to be vested, though it must be uncertain whether it will ever take place." Boatman v. Boatman, 65 N. E. 81, 83, 198 Ill. 414.

VESTED RIGHT.

A "vested right" is defined to be an immediate fixed right to present or future enjoyment, or where the interest does not depend on a period or an event that is uncertain. Clarke v. McCreary, 20 Miss (12 Smedes & M.) 347, 353; Marshall v. King, 24 Miss. (2 Cushm.) 85, 90; Oriental Bank v. Freeze, 18 Me. 109, 36 Am. Dec. 701; Edworthy v. Iowa Savings & Loan Ass'n, 86 N. W. 315, 316, 114 Iowa, 220 (citing Louisville & T. Turnpike Road Co. v. Boss [Ky.] 44 S. W. 981); Gladney v. Sydnor, 72 S. W. 554, 556, 172 Mo. 318, 60 L. R. A. 880, 95 Am. St. Rep. 517.

A vested right is a right to do or possess certain things which the parties had already begun to exercise, which is either authorized by the statute or to the exercise of which no obstacle exists in the laws which have been enacted. Day v. Madden, 48 Pac. 1053, 1057, 9 Colo. App. 464.

A vested right is held subject to the laws for the enforcement of public duties, and though the privileges and rights of heirs and legatees who can take and receive shares of the property of a decedent are vested immediately on the death of the testator or intestate, and the right to such share vests in those entitled directly on his death, yet the right to take a legacy is subject to the laws for the assessment and collection of a tax, as a premium on the right and privilege to receive the inheritance, as much as it is subject to laws which authorize the taxation of the very property bequeathed. Gelsthorpe

v. Furnell, 51 Pac. 267, 270, 20 Mont. 299, 39 L. R. A. 170.

The term "vested rights," within the meaning of the rule that vested rights cannot be taken away by retrospective legislation, includes the right in property which one owns. A vested right is property, as tangible things are property, when they spring from contract or the principles of the common law. There is a vested right in an accrued cause of action, in a defense to a cause of action, or even in the statute of limitation, when the bar has attached, by which an action for a debt is barred. When a writ has been approved by judgment, the fruits of recovery cannot be divested by new legislation or subjected to new hazard by reviving a new writ of appeal or some other mode of review. Cassard v. Tracy, 27 South. 368, 374, 52 La. Ann. 835, 49 L. R. A. 272.

A "vested right" is property which the law protects. Hoelt v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor, 45 Pac. 185, 186, 113 Cal. 91, 33 L. R. A. 174.

A "vested right" is the privilege to enjoy property legally vested, or to enforce contracts and enjoy the rights of property conferred by the existing law. To take property from A. and give it to B.; to deny validity to contracts legal when made; to prevent their enforcement according to the terms stipulated; to compel a party to perform in a different manner from his contract—in these and like cases, rights will be divested; but a privilege or right to resort to this or that particular court is not such a right as the Legislature is prohibited from changing. Fisher's Negroes v. Dabbs, 14 Tenn. (6 Yerg.) 119, 154.

At the common law, the husband immediately on his marriage succeeded to certain rights in the real and personal estate which the wife then possessed. These rights became vested rights at once, and any subsequent alteration in the law could not take them away. Holliday v. McMillan, 79 N. C. 315, 318.

Where one who contracts to build a bridge for a county draws an order in payment of a valid debt on the fund to be earned, which is accepted by the county, the order is an equitable assignment of so much of the fund as is necessary to pay it, and creates a valid contract between the payee and the county, which is a vested right that cannot be affected by a mechanic's lien law subsequently passed, giving parties furnishing material to the contractor a lien on money due or to become due under his contract. Young v. Jones, 54 N. E. 235, 236, 180 Ill. 216.

A "vested right" has been defined briefly as an immediate, fixed right of possession or future enjoyment. Young v. Jones, 54 N. E. 235, 236, 180 Ill. 216.

When the right to a patent becomes perfect, the full equitable title passes to the purchaser, with all the benefits, immunities, and burdens of ownership. A contract for the purchase of public land is complete when the certificate of entry has been executed and delivered. A patent certificate protects the purchaser's rights as fully as a patent. A "vested right to a patent" for public land is equivalent to a patent issued. The execution and delivery of a patent after the right to it has become complete are mere ministerial acts of the officers charged with that duty. As a matter of law officers of the Land Department of the government are agents of the law. They cannot act beyond its provisions, nor make any disposition of land not sanctioned by law; and where, after a purchaser of government land has acquired a vested right to the patent, the officers of the land department wrongfully cancel his entry and issue a patent to another person, such act does not deprive the officer of his right to the land. Stimson Land Co. v. Rawson (U. S.) 62 Fed. 426, 429.

A "vested right" is defined as the power one has to do certain actions or to possess certain things according to the laws of the land. The Act of Assembly of 1837 authorizing a railroad company to erect a bridge over a creek is constitutional, and gives no right of action to the owner of a mill above, though damage results to him from a loss of navigation and obstructing the flowage of water; and an act giving the right of action for the unauthorized obstructions, passed after the obstructions were made, which act was not accepted by the railroad company, interferes with the vested rights of the company, being a violation of their charter and of the obligations of the contract with them, and hence unconstitutional. Bailey v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. (Del.) 4 Har. 389, 400, 44 Am. Dec. 593.

When "vested rights" are spoken of by the courts as being exempt from legislative interference, they mean those rights to which a party may adhere, and upon which he may insist, without violating any principle of sound morality. In the language of Judge Duncan, in Satterlee v. Matthewson (Pa.) 16 Serg. & R. 169, 191: "There can be no vested right to do wrong." In the nature of things, there can be no vested right to violate a moral duty, or to resist the performance of a moral obligation. Grinder v. Nelson (Md.) 9 Gill, 299, 309, 52 Am. Dec. 694.

Exemption.

Privileges extended to debtors by existing exemption laws are not, as to particular property which comes within their protection, "vested rights." Bull v. Conroe, 13 Wis. 233, 238.

"Vested rights," in the widest sense, are rights which are complete and consummated, so that nothing remains to be done to fix the right of the citizen to enjoy them. A statutory exemption from performance of service upon juries or from militia duty, or exemption from taxation, and numerous other rights which will suggest themselves, are vested rights equally with the right to the writ of habeas corpus, the right to trial by jury, and the right of private property; yet there are but two classes for which immunity against the encroachment of the lawmaker can be claimed. The first class are those expressly protected by the constitutional provisions, either federal or state, such as the right of trial by jury and the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus. The other class is not expressly shielded by the fundamental law, and is limited to two or three instances. These are the title to private property, the incompetency of the Legislature to pass a law denying to a man notice, actual or constructive, of a suit against him or a right to be heard therein, and a principle that a man shall not be made a judge in his own case. Moore v. State, 43 N. J. Law (14 Vroom) 203, 243, 39 Am. Rep. 558.

The term "vested right" relates to property rights, and does not embrace within its meaning the immunity or exemption created by an omission, in the statute under which a corporation is effected, to impose a liability for the paving of streets used and occupied by the corporation as a street surface railroad. Weed v. Common Council of City of Binghamton, 56 N. Y. Supp. 105, 108, 28 Misc. Rep. 208.

Expectant and contingent rights distinguished.

A vested right is an immediate, fixed right of present or future enjoyment. Rights are vested, in contradistinction to being expectant or contingent. They are vested when the right to enjoyment, present or prospective, has become the property of some particular person or persons, as a present interest. They are expectant when they depend on the continued existence of the present condition of things until the happening of some future event. They are contingent when they are only to come into existence on an event or condition which may not happen or be performed until some other event may prevent their vesting. Pearsall v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 16 Sup. Ct. 705, 713, 161 U. S. 648, 40 L. Ed. 838.

Expectation.

A right cannot be considered as vested, unless it is something more than a mere expectation, and has already become a title, legal or equitable, to the present or future enforcement of a demand or a legal exemption from a payment made by another. Richardson v. Akin, 87 Ill. 138 (citing Cooley, Const. Lim. 359); Toronto v. Salt Lake County, 37 Pac. 587, 588, 10 Utah, 410.

A "vested right," to be within the protection of the Constitution against interference therewith, must be something more than a mere expectation based upon the anticipated continuance of existing laws. It must have become a title, legal or equitable, to the present or future enjoyment of property in some way or another. Steers v. Kinsey, 58 S. W. 1050, 1053, 68 Ark. 360 (citing Black, St. Const. 430; Suth. St. Const. § 164).

A mere expectation is not a "vested right," and the right of officers who are not appointed under the Constitution to compensation becomes vested only as it accrues, so that an act reducing their salaries may be made to apply to services rendered after the passage of the act in proceedings commenced prior thereto. In re Mayor, etc., of City of New York, 53 N. Y. Supp. 875, 876, 33 App. Div. 365.

A right cannot be considered a vested right unless it is something more than such a mere expectation as may be based upon an anticipated continuance of the present general laws. It must have become a title, legal or equitable, to the present or future enjoyment of the property, and it is because the mere expectation of property in the future is not considered a vested right that the rules of descent are held subject to change in their application to all estates not already passed to the heir by the death of the owner. Stratton Claimants v. Morris Claimants, 15 S. W. 87, 91, 89 Tenn. (5 Pickle) 497, 12 L. R. A. 70.

A mere expectation is not a vested right, under Greater New York Charter, Laws 1897, c. 378, § 998, fixing the compensation of commissioners in street-opening proceedings at six dollars per day. Commissioners appointed before the charter took effect are entitled to only such sum for services performed after the taking effect of the charter. In re Wilkins Place, 54 N. Y. Supp. 65, 68.

Inchoate right to dower.

It is said in Mason v. Mason, 140 Mass. 63, 3 N. E. 18, that an inchoate right of dower is a vested right of value, but it would seem that the word "contingent," which was used in Bullard v. Briggs, 24 Mass. (7 Pick.) 533, 537, 19 Am. Dec. 292, would more accurately describe the nature of the estate. Flynn v. Flynn, 50 N. E. 650, 651, 171 Mass. 312, 42 L. R. A. 98, 68 Am. St. Rep. 427.

Penalty.

The law recognizes no vested rights in penalties. Parmelee v. Lawrence, 48 Ill. 331, 339.

The repeal of a penal statute pending an appeal from judgment thereunder is not a deprivation of a vested right, since no one has a vested right in an unenforced penalty. Anderson v. Byrnes, 54 Pac. 821, 822, 122 Cal. 272.

A vested right is one perfect in itself, and which does not depend upon a contingency or the commencement of a suit. It was held that a county did not have a vested right in a statutory penalty before judgment was obtained therefor. Coles v. Madison County, 1 Ill. (Breese) 154, 157, 12 Am. Dec. 161.

A right cannot be regarded as vested in the constitutional sense until it amounts to something more than such a mere expectation of future benefit or interest as may be founded upon an anticipated continuance of the existing general laws. Thus the right of a municipality to the penalties and interest accruing on delinquent taxes cannot be said to be a vested right. City of New Whatcom v. Roeder, 61 Pac. 767, 769, 22 Wash. 570.

Remedies or matters of procedure.

Parties have no vested rights in remedies or matters of procedure, and there is nothing in attachment proceedings that constitutes a vested right on the part of the plaintiffs therein to the property attached. Steers v. Kinsey, 58 S. W. 1050, 1053, 68 Ark. 360.

A "vested right" is property arising from contract, or from the principles of the common law, which cannot be destroyed, devested, or impaired by legislation. In cases where a contract is made in pursuance of a statute, which also prescribes the parties against whom and the mode in which it may be enforced, the right to enforce it in the manner prescribed is part of the contract, and is not affected by a subsequent act repealing the provisions in reference to the enforcement of the contracts authorized by the statute under which it was made; but imperfect and inchoate rights are subject to future legislation, and may be extinguished while in that condition. Royston v. Miller (U. S.) 76 Fed. 50, 53.

VESTURE.

The term "vesture," according to Lord Coke, was used to denote corn, grass, underwood, and the like. Co. Litt. 46. Shepherd, in his Touchstone, seems to speak of the terms "vesture" and "herbage," as having the same meaning. But this is not the sense of the passage. Shepherd is enumerating the words by which particular interests, and the words by which the land itself, will pass, and he mentions grants of the vesture or herbage and instances grants of particular interests, and a grant of all the profits and an instance of a grant of the land itself. The terms "vesture" and "herbage" are coupled by Touchstone, not because they mean the same thing, but because they are words by which a particular interest will pass. Simpson v. Coe, 4 N. H. 301, 303.

VETERAN.

In the rules adopted by the state civil service commission, the word "veterans" is defined as relating to "honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the army and navy of the United States in the late Civil War, who are citizens and residents of this state." People v. Stratton, 80 N. Y. Supp. 260, 273, 79 App. Div. 149; People v. Burch, 80 N. Y. Supp. 274, 275, 79 App. Div. 156.

"Veterans," as used in Laws 1883, c. 354, as amended by Laws 1884, c. 14, and Laws 1886, c. 29, giving a preference in public employment to veterans of the Civil War, etc., means those who have had much experience, who have grown old in service, and does not include a member of a military regiment temporarily called out for a few days' service only. People v. Adams, 18 N. Y. Supp. 806, 897, 64 Hun. 634.

The word "veteran," in the chapter relating to the civil service, shall mean a person who served in the army or navy of the United States in the War of the Rebellion and was honorably discharged therefrom, or a citizen of the commonwealth who distinguished himself by gallant and heroic conduct while serving in the army or navy of the United States and has received a medal of honor from the President of the United States. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 327, c. 19, § 20.

VETERINARY SURGEON.

A "veterinary surgeon" is a person lawfully practicing the art of treating and healing injuries and diseases of domestic animals. As used under Gen. St. 1894, § 7948, a person cannot lawfully practice such arts without a license. Evidence that a person was a veterinary surgeon is sufficient evidence that he is a licensed veterinary surgeon. Lyford v. Martin, 82 N. W. 479, 480, 79 Minn. 243.

A veterinary surgeon lawfully engages, and is bound, to use in the performance of his duties and in his employment such reasonable skill, diligence, and attention as may be ordinarily expected of persons of that profession. He does not contract to use the highest degree of skill, nor extraordinary amount of diligence, but to exercise a reasonable degree of knowledge, diligence, and attention. Barney v. Pinkham, 45 N. W. 694, 29 Neb. 350, 26 Am. St. Rep. 389.

VETO.

The word "veto" is of Latin extraction, and, literally translated, means "I forbid" or "I deny." These words have a singularly ominous sound when they are applied in a democratic government, and at once call attention to the fact and challenge the authority. There are, in constitutional governments, two fundamental theories upon which the grant of the power of "veto" rests: First, to preserve the integrity of that branch of government in which the vetoing powers are vested, and thus maintain an equilibrium of governmental powers; second, to act as a check upon corrupt or hasty and ill-considered legislation. These theories have entered into all debates touching the power. The right, when given at all, is usually lodged in the executive branch of government. Rome vested it in the tribune, and the salutation, "I forbid," pronounced by a tribune, stationed at the door of the Roman senate, meeting a bill, nullified it. The crown, in England, possesses the same power. French philosophers exhausted their learning and ingenuity upon the constitution of 1791, and saw it fall apart, for the reason, among others, that the king possessed the power of suspension of legislation, unless adopted by three successive assemblies. The Spanish king might twice refuse his sanction to the action of the Cortes before it could find a place in the law, under the Constitution of 1812; and the Norwegian constitution of 1814 was like it in this respect. The early colonial legislatures felt the same power both from crown and governor, for it was the practice of the latter to have money orders in his favor injected into or accompanying bills to be signed, so that he might receive the former at the time or before he signed the latter, which accompaniment was much preferred; while the grievance against the crown found expression in the declaration, "He has refused his assent to laws the most wholesome and necessary for the public good." It was thought by Blackstone that this absolute power of veto was needful for equilibrium, and so he wrote: "Here, then, is lodged the sovereignty of the British constitution, and lodged as beneficially as is possible for society; for in no other shape could we be so certain of finding the three great qualities of government so well and so happily united. If the supreme powers were lodged in any one of the three branches separately, we must be exposed to the inconveniences of either absolute monarchy, aristocracy, or democracy, and so want two of the three principal ingredients of good polity—either virtue, wisdom, or power. If it were lodged in any of the two branches—for instance, in the king and House of Lords—our laws might be providently made and well executed, but they might not always have the good of the people in view; if lodged in the king and commons, we should want that circumspection and mediatory caution which the wisdom of the peers is to afford; if the supreme rights of legislature were lodged in the two houses only, and the king had no negative on their proceedings, they might be tempted to encroach upon the royal prerogative, or perhaps to abolish the kingly office, and thereby weaken (if not totally destroy) the strength of the executive power. But the constitutional government of this island is so admirably tempered and compounded that nothing can endanger or hurt it but destroying the equilibrium of power between one branch of the legislature and the rest." Bl. Comm. (Chase's Ed.) 17. It is to be noticed in this connection that the British constitution makes the crown a constituent part of the legislature, which does not find place in this government. The truth of the statement that one generation has not foresight sufficient to legislate for the next finds vivid confirmation from this quotation, for it remains as a fact that since 1692 the right of veto by the crown has not been exercised, and it is asserted by some writers that its exercise at this day would lead to a revolution. The veto power was regarded with great distrust and disfavor by the framers of our government, both state and national, and its right of exercise is by no means universal now. Only one of the original state Constitutions—Massachusetts—gave even a qualified veto, while the Articles of Confederation withheld it entirely, reaching the other extreme of requiring the assent of nine states to important acts of legislation, thus giving to a minority of five states an absolute right of veto. The happy solution of this question by the framers of the federal Constitution had for its basis the integrity of the executive branch of the government, and very little consideration was given to the theory of a check upon ill-considered and hasty legislation. As late as 1884, and, so far as I possess the information at this date, Delaware, North Carolina, Ohio, and Rhode Island still, withhold the veto power from the executive; while in eight others a majority vote of the whole number of members elected to the Legislature constitutes all that is required to override a veto. By the constitution of 1871 the German Empire vests its legislative powers in the federal council and the imperial diet. No mention is made of the emperor, but in certain specified bills concerning the army, taxes, etc., the proposal of the federal council only was accepted, and this gives to the emperor as king of Prussia the right of veto against its actions. The Swiss federal constitution gives the president no "veto" power, but in certain cantons the right rests with the voters. In the kingdom of Poland the objection of a single deputy was sufficient to nullify the bill. This history, and these illustrations, serve to show that the people of all constitutional governments are extremely solicitous and jealous of this power, and have at all times hedged it about by carefully expressed limitations. Consequently it follows that the right of this exercise by an executive must always be supported by plain and undoubted authority. It has of recent dates been the gradual and growing belief that this power is wisely placed in the executive head of municipal authority, not as essential to preserve an equilibrium of governmental powers, but for almost the sole purpose of a check upon any corrupt and hasty actions of ill-considered legislation. This is not a new idea, but it was not accepted until experience has shown it to be, usually, for the best interests of the people in the government of cities. Franklin long ago stated one reason for the lodgment of this power in an executive: "A single man may be afraid or ashamed of doing injustice. A body is never either one or the other, if it is strong enough. It cannot apprehend assassination, and, by dividing a shame among them, it is so little apiece that no one minds it." While, for these and other reasons, it is doubtless the tendency of modern legislation to bestow this power upon the executive head of municipal government with much liberality, yet it is equally true, and always to be borne in mind, that the power must be express or necessarily implied, and, without it, it does not exist. People v. Board of Councilmen, 20 N. Y. Supp. 51, 54 (citing Dill. Mun. Corp. [4th Ed.] §§ 208, 331; Martindale v. Palmer, 52 Ind. 413; Nat. Bank of Commerce v. Town of Grenada [U. S.] 41 Fed. 91; MacKenzie v. Wooley, 39 La. Ann. 949, 3 South. 128).

The Governor's disapproval of a bill is commonly known as a "veto." Commonwealth v. Barnett, 48 Atl. 976, 199 Pa. 161, 55 L. R. A. 882.

VEX.

"Vexing or harassing," as used in a statute requiring the affidavit for a distress warrant to state that it is not sued out for the purpose of vexing or harassing the defendant, is equivalent to the phrase "injuring or harassing," and hence an affidavit using the latter phrase is a compliance with the statute. Biesenbach v. Key, 63 Tex. 79, 81.

VEXATION.

Vexation may mean, within a mere dictionary definition, trouble or annoying inconvenience to which a party is put in going to law. Williamson v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. (U. S.) 105 Fed. 31, 38.

"Vexation," as applied to the element of damages to which a party whose property has been attached is entitled, applies to the instances where there is no reasonable found-dation for believing that a statutory ground for an attachment exists, or if the process be sued out wantonly or recklessly without probable cause, or if it be resorted to in a mere race of diligence to obtain a first lien, when no statutory ground exists in fact or is reasonably believed to exist. City Nat. Bank v. Jeffries, 73 Ala. 183, 191.

VEXATIOUS DELAY.

Gen. St. § 1707, providing that interest may be recovered on money withheld by an "unreasonable and vexatious delay," should be construed as meaning something more than delay in the payment of a sum due. Corson v. Neatheny, 11 Pac. 82, 84, 9 Colo. 212.

VEXATIOUS REMOVAL.

"Vexatious removal," as used in the statute for preventing the vexatious removal of an indictment into the court of Queen's Bench, would not include removal which the prosecution was compelled to make in order to secure any trial. Reg. v. City of Manchester, 7 El. & Bl. 453, 460.

VEXATIOUSLY.

The word "vexatiously," as used in Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 8012, providing that in any action against any insurance company to recover the amount of any loss under a policy, if it appear from the evidence that such company has vexatiously refused to pay such loss, the court may allow the plaintiff certain damages, is a vague term. It is little more than an epithet. The Supreme Court of Missouri has held that no direct proof of its existence is exacted of the plaintiff. Williamson v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. (U. S.) 105 Fed. 31, 38 (citing Lockwood v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co., 47 Mo. 50).

VI.

Mr. Goddard, in discussing an enjoyment of an easement which is not peaceable, defines "vi," in the phrase "vi clam aut precario," to mean violence, or force and strife, or contention of any kind; and the illustration he gives is where the enjoyment has been during a period of litigation about the right claimed, or the user has been continually interrupted by physical obstacles placed with a view of rendering user impracticable. Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. McFarlan, 43 N. J. Law (14 Vroom) 605, 622 (citing Goddard, Easem. 172).

VI ET ARMIS.

See "Trespass Vi et Armis."

"Vi et armis," with force and arms, usually used in indictments for trespasses and wrongs, etc., with actual violence. Mr. Chitty, in his Criminal Law (volume 1, p. 241), says "that although, since St. 27 Henry VIII, c. 8, many indictments for trespasses and other wrongs accompanied with actual violence have been deemed insufficient for want of the words 'with force and arms,' the court has refused to quash proceedings where such words have been omitted," and this seems to be the better opinion; for otherwise the terms of the statutes making the offense would be destitute of meaning. Taylor v. State, 25 Tenn. (8 Humph.) 285, 286.

The words "vi et armis" have been held to be unnecessary in several American cases cited in notes to the point as to their necessity in an information when other words implying force are used. Chitty says that it seems to be generally agreed that, where there are other words implying force, the omission of the phrase "vi et armis" is sufficiently supplied. Such was the decision in State v. Hanley, 47 Vt. 290. State v. Pratt, 54 Vt. 484, 485.

The offense of "forcible trespass" must be done with a strong hand, or, as otherwise expressed, "manu forti," which it is held implies greater force than is expressed by the phrase "vi et armis." Consequently it is held that a charge that the trespass was committed vi et armis is insufficient to charge a forcible trespass. State v. Ray, 32 N. C. 39, 40.

VIA.

In England the word "via" signified a kind of public way over which the public passed on foot and on horseback and on vehicles with wheels, and "via" was called "the highway." Boyden v. Achenbach, 79 N. C. 539, 541.

"Via" means by the way of, and as used in shipping bills never designates a terminal point, but designates the route by which the thing is to be carried, where there are two or more available routes. Denver & R. G. Ry. Co. v. De Witt, 29 Pac. 524, 1 Colo. App. 419.

"Via," as used in a draft drawn on a newspaper of M., via E. Nat. Bank, will not be given a meaning of "by the way of," but will be held to import a presentation at the bank of E. Bartholomew v. First Nat. Bank, 52 Pac. 239, 18 Wash. 683.

The words "via a port for orders," in a marine policy on a voyage via a certain port for orders, was construed not to render a stay of the vessel in such port for a longer time than necessary to receive orders a deviation; but it was held that the vessel had a right to stay a reasonable time to sell a portion of its cargo, and whether the time of its stay was unreasonable or not was held a question for the jury. Arnold v. Pacific Mut. Ins. Co., 78 N. Y. 7, 16.

VIADUCT.

As bridge, see "Bridge."

A "viaduct" is an extensive bridge for the purpose of conducting a road for a roadway over a valley where an embankment would be impracticable or inconvenient—an elevated roadway or a bridge; and hence a statute authorizing the building of a viaduct within one county is within the constitutional provision forbidding the Legislature from enacting any special or private laws for laying out or opening highways, except in case of state roads extending into more than one county. Wagner v. Milwaukee County, 83 N. W. 577, 579, 112 Wis. 601.

VIBRATE.

"Oscillate" is defined as to vibrate as a pendulum; to move backward and forward; to swing. "Oscillatory" is defined as moving alternately one way and another as a pendulum; swinging; vibrating. "Vibrate" is defined as to move or play to and fro as a pendulum; to oscillate; to swing. So a machine for treatment of disease by producing an oscillating or vibratory motion in the limbs of the patient is infringed by a machine producing substantially the same motions in the limb by a rotary motion in the machine. Taylor v. Wood (U. S.) 23 Fed. Cas. 807, 812.

VICAR.

"Vicar," as used in the ninety-first of the canons of 1603, providing that the parish clerk was to be appointed "by the parson or vicar, or, where there is no parson or vicar, by the minister of that place for the time being," describes the functionary, whatever title he may bear, who for the time being has the cure of the parish as principal. Pinder v. Barr, 4 El. & Bl. 105, 115, 28 Eng. Law & Eq. 235, 239.

VICE.

(Lat.) In the place or stead; "vice mea," in my place. Black, Law Dict.

VICE COMMERCIAL AGENT.

"Vice consuls" and "vice commercial agents," when used in the title relating to diplomatic and consular officers, shall be deemed to denote consular officers, who shall be substituted, temporarily, to fill the places of consuls general, consuls, or commercial agents, when they shall be temporarily absent or relieved from duty. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1150.

VICE CONSUL.

"Vice consuls" are consular officers substituted temporarily to fill the place of consuls when temporarily absent or removed from duty. Schunior v. Russell, 18 S. W. 484, 485, 83 Tex. 83.

"Vice consuls" and "vice commercial agents," when used in the title relating to diplomatic and consular officers, shall be deemed to denote consular officers, who shall be substituted, temporarily, to fill the places of consuls general, consuls, or commercial agents, when they shall be temporarily absent or relieved from duty. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1150.

VICE PRESIDENT.

Of corporation as agent, see "Agent."

A vice president is an officer next in rank below a president. Pond v. National Mortgage & Debiture Co., 50 Pac. 973, 974, 6 Kan. App. 718.

VICE PRINCIPAL.

A "vice principal" is one to whom an employer delegates the performance of duties which the law imposes on him, and the employer is responsible because the duty is his own. Durkin v. Kingston Coal Co., 33 Atl. 237, 238, 171 Pa. 193, 29 L. R. A. 808, 50 Am. St. Rep. 801; Peirce v. Oliver, 47 N. E. 485, 488, 18 Ind. App. 87 (citing 3 Elliott, R. R. § 1317).

He is a "vice principal" who is intrusted by the master with power to superintend, direct, or control the workman in his work, so that for negligence in such superintendence, direction, or control the master is liable. Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co., 85 Mo. 588, 596.

The satisfactory evidence of "vice principalship" is his supervision, control, and subjection to his orders and directions. New Omaha Thomson-Houston Electric Light Co. v. Baldwin, 87 N. W. 27, 31, 62 Neb. 180.

At first a vice principal was limited to be a person who had the right to employ and discharge the servants, but this rule has since been relaxed, and the rule now is that it is a question of authority to represent the master which determines the question of whether a person is vice principal. Grattis v. Kansas City, P. & G. R. Co., 55 S. W. 108, 111, 153 Mo. 380, 48 L. R. A. 399, 77 Am. St. Rep. 721.

A vice principal is one who is intrusted by the master with the authority to superintend, control, or command other persons employed by the master, or with the authority to direct any other employé in the performance of his duty. Mexican Nat. Ry. Co. v. Finch, 27 S. W. 1028, 1030, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 409.

A vice principal, for whose negligence an employer will be liable to other employées, must be either: First. One in whom the employer has placed the entire charge of the business or of a distinct branch of it, giving him, not merely authority to superintend certain work or certain workmen, but control of the business, and exercising no discretion or oversight of his own. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Bell, 112 Pa. 400, 4 Atl. 50. Secondly. One to whom he delegates a duty of his own, which is a direct, personal, and absolute obligation, from which nothing but performance can relieve him. Lewis v. Seifert, 116 Pa. 628, 647, 11 Atl. 514, 2 Am. St. Rep. 631; Prevost v. Citizens' Ice & Refrigerating Co., 40 Atl. 88, 89, 185 Pa. 617, 64 Am. St. Rep. 659; Casey v. Pennsylvania Asphalt Pav. Co., 47 Atl. 1128, 1130, 198 Pa. 348; Johnson v. Western N. Y. & P. Ry. Co., 49 Atl. 794, 795, 200 Pa. 314.

A vice principal is the representative of the master, and for his acts and negligence the master is responsible. An employé of a corporation may become such a representative in two ways: First. He may be intrusted with the entire management and supervision of all the business of the corporation, or with the entire management and supervision of a distinct and separate department of its business, and in such a case he may be termed a "general vice principal," because in all his acts relative to the business of the corporation he stands in the place of the master, and the latter is liable for his negligence in their performance. Second. One who has not the authority of a general vice principal may be intrusted by the master with the discharge of absolute personal duties that rest upon it, such as the duty to use reasonable care to employ competent and careful fellow servants, and in such a case he may be termed a "special vice principal." He stands in the place of the master when he is discharging one of these personal duties of the master, and the latter is liable for his negligence in the discharge of it; but in the performance of his other services as a general employé he is not the representative of the master, nor is the master liable for his negligence in the performance of them. Whether or not the master is liable for the negligence of such a servant in a given case must be determined by the nature of the duty in the performance of which he was guilty of the negligence. If he was engaged in discharging an absolute duty of the master, the latter is liable; otherwise, it is not. City of Minneapolis v. Lundin (U. S.) 58 Fed. 525, 527, 7 C. C. A. 344 (citing Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 13 Sup. Ct. 914, 919, 921, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. Ed. 772; What Cheer Coal Co. v. Johnson, 56 Fed. 810, 6 C. C. A. 148; Brown v. Winona & St. P. R. Co., 27 Minn. 162, 165, 166, 6 N. W. 484, 38 Am. Rep. 285; Brown v. Minneapolis & St. L. Ry. Co., 31 Minn. 553, 18 N. W. 834).

A vice principal is one vested with the entire management, control, and supervision of a particular work to be done, so as to say, not only what shall be done, but how it shall be done, and has full power and authority to command the men under him in the work, and the work is under his practical direction and control, save and except as he may receive directions from time to time from his employer, and there is ordinarily no one else present and authorized to superintend and direct the work of the men. He then represents the employer—stands for the employer. When the foreman of a gang of men is invested with such control, he is a vice principal. Lindvall v. Woods (U. S.) 44 Fed. 855, 857.

An employé or servant who is clothed with special powers and authority with respect to the management of the master's business and the control of his fellow servants in the matter of the performance of their work, and to whom is delegated the performance of the master's absolute duties to other servants with reference to the obligation to provide them with the several instruments and several places to work, is as to such, either servants or employées, a vice principal, when engaged in the performance of the said powers and authority conferred upon him. He is a fellow servant when engaged in the common employment of the master. Perras v. A. Booth & Co., 84 N. W. 739, 741, 82 Minn. 191.

Where an employer provides some other person than himself to see that his servants are furnished with a safe place to work, and with suitable machinery and appliances kept in good repair, the person to whom such duty is delegated, no matter what his rank or grade, cannot be a servant in the sense or nature of the rule applicable to injuries occasioned by fellow servants. Such person is an agent, and is generally called in the law a vice principal. Under this definition one employed to see that docks on which lumber was moved, and which were from 7 to 16 feet above the ground, were kept in good repair, was a vice principal, and not a fellow servant as to such duties. Van Dusen v. Letellier, 44 N. W. 572, 575, 78 Mich. 492.

A foreman of a gang at a factory, who, while performing the duties of a common laborer, directs a workman to go into an inclosure and assist him, is not a vice principal in giving the order, though he had power to employ and discharge men. Casey v. Pennsylvania Asphalt Pav. Co., 47 Atl. 1128, 1130, 198 Pa. 848.

The chief engineer of a refrigerator company, having general charge of the engine room and freezing department, of which he is foreman, and in which capacity he gives orders to the men in that department, and having authority to engage men for short jobs, in the manager's absence, is not a vice principal, so as to make the master liable for his negligence in directing certain work, resulting in injury to an employé. Prevost v. Citizens' Ice & Refrigerator Co., 40 Atl. 88, 89, 185 Pa. 617, 64 Am. St. Rep. 659.

One in charge of a gang of men erecting poles and a telegraph line along a railroad is a fellow servant of the members of such gang, so that one of them, injured through his negligence, cannot recover therefor of the railroad company, though they were employed by the company, which was paying for the work, and he was employed by the telegraph company and allowed by the railroad company to superintend the gang. Johnson v. Western N. Y. & P. Ry. Co., 49 Atl. 794, 795, 200 Pa. 314.

In determining whether an employé occupies the position of vice principal, the mere superiority in dignity, grade, or compensation, in favor of one servant of a common principal over other servants, is not a mark by which to distinguish whether or not the former is a vice principal. The most general test is that, in order to be a vice principal, a servant must so far stand in the place of his master as to be charged in the particular matter with the performance of a duty toward the inferior which, under the law, the master owes to such servant, as, for example, furnishing tools or machinery and appliances, or giving orders with respect to work to be done by the subordinate. Ohio River & C. R. Co. v. Edwards (Tenn.) 76 S. W. 897, 899.

The controlling consideration in determining whether an employé is a vice principal is not his comparative rank or his authority to command, nor to employ or discharge, but whether he is the representative of the master in respect to those duties which the master cannot escape by a delegation of them. Southern Indiana Ry. Co. v. Harrell, 68 N. E. 262, 264, 161 Ind. 689, 63 L. R. A. 460.

One to whom a master gives the entire charge of the selection of the materials and the construction of a runway used in carting coal from the hatchway of a vessel to a bin on the dock, and who also employs and directs the laborers in unloading the coal, is the representative of the master. Brown v. Gilchrist, 45 N. W. 82, 84, 80 Mich. 56, 20 Am. St. Rep. 496.

A yardmaster, in charge of switchyards of a railroad, who is subordinate to a general yardmaster, who is in turn subordinate to a trainmaster, and he to a superintendent, is not a "vice principal," but a "fellow servant," in his relation to other employés engaged in switching in the yard. Pennsylvania Co. v. Fishack (U. S.) 123 Fed. 465, 471, 59 C. C. A. 269.

A "vice principal" is one intrusted by the master with power to superintend, direct, or control the workmen in their work. If a person employs another to perform a duty which he would have to discharge if another were not employed to do it for him, such employé, as to that service, stands in the master's stead with relation to other persons. Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co., 85 Mo. 588, 594.

A vice principal is one to whom is deputed the discharge of some duty or the exercise of some power which belongs to the master as such, and he does not act as a vice principal, nor engage in any work which does not pertain to the duty or peculiar power of the master, just as an agent does not act as an agent, when doing some act entirely outside of his agency. Decatur Cereal Mill Co. v. Gogerty, 80 Ill. App. 632, 636.

One in charge of a number of laborers at night, and invested with the power of directing them in their work and looking after the business of his employer, whether he was called "foreman" or not, was a "vice principal" of his employer. Fox v. Jacob Dold Packing Co., 70 S. W. 164, 167, 96 Mo. App. 173.

All persons engaged in the service of any railroad corporation doing business in the state, who are intrusted by such corporation with the authority of superintendence, control, or command of other persons in the employ or service of such corporation, or with the authority to direct any other servant in the performance of any duty of such servant, or with the duty of inspection or other duty owing by the master to the servant, are "vice principals" of such corporation, and not fellow servants. Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2874.

All persons engaged in the service of any person, firm, or corporation, foreign or domestic, doing business in this state, who are intrusted by such person, firm, or corporation as employer with the authority of superintendence, control, or command of other persons in the employ or service of such employer, or with the authority to direct any other employé in the performance of any duties of such employé, are vice principals of such employer, and not fellow servants. Rev. St. Utah 1898, § 1842.

As affected by actual assistance.

A "vice principal" in charge of workmen does not become a co-workman whenever he actually assists in the manual performance of a task, instead of superintending it. If he chooses to take on himself the role of laborer, he may do so, and does not thereby divest himself of his responsibility as foreman or superintendent, and his duty to see that the work is done in a careful way. The judgment and care which he must use as superintendent to see that precautions are being taken to take care of his gang continues to be exacted of him by law, although he may have stepped down from his pedestal for an interval. Haworth v. Kansas City Southern R. Co., 68 S. W. 111, 114, 94 Mo. App. 215.

One, while acting as a vice principal and standing in the place of a master, may lay aside that character and occupy for a time the place of a fellow servant, and while thus engaged he is in law a fellow servant. Gann v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co., 47 S. W. 493, 494, 101 Tenn. 380, 70 Am. St. Rep. 687.

As determined by duty performed.

A vice principal is one whom the master has clothed with power to act in his stead in the performance of a duty owing from the master to his servants, and for all his acts or omissions in respect of the matters in which he acts in the place of the master, in performing the master's duty, the master is liable. Simply because one servant is superior in grade, rank, or authority does not make him any more the representative of the master than those lower in position. It is not grade or position that determines whether a servant is acting for and instead of the master, but the duty he is performing. Cole Bros. v. Wood, 36 N. E. 1074, 1083, 11 Ind. App. 37.

In every case the position of vice principal must be determined by ascertaining whether the act performed or duty omitted is one the doing of which is charged by the master upon the servant; in other words, whether the servant has been put in the place of the master as to the particular service performed or omitted. New Pittsburgh Coal & Coke Co. v. Peterson, 35 N. E. 7, 8, 136 Ind. 398, 43 Am. St. Rep. 327.

The test whether in a given case an employé is to be regarded as a "vice principal" or a fellow servant is, not his title or rank or power to employ or discharge servants of the master, but the nature of the services which he performs. An employé, authorized to perform duties which are clearly the master's, is to that extent a vice principal. Pearce v. Oliver, 18 Ind. App. 87, 47 N. E. 485. In every case the controlling inquiry must be whether the act or omission resulting in injury involved the duty owing by the master to the injured servant. Southern Indiana Ry. Co. v. Harrell, 66 N. E. 1016, 1019, 161 Ind. 689, 63 L. R. A. 460 (citing Robertson v. Chicago & E. R. Co., 146 Ind. 486, 45 N. E. 656.)

As determined by power to hire and discharge.

The power to hire and discharge is the test of a vice principal, when the question involved is that of selecting or retaining proper servants, for in this respect the servant would properly represent the master; but in no other sense is it a test. The power to summarily discharge unworthy servants and hire new ones is often a very necessary power for the safety of other servants, but it does not change the character of the foreman's duties from that of a servant to those of a principal, nor impose upon him the master's responsibility in other respects. A servant is a vice principal only when he stands in place of the principal with reference to the principal's duty or in the exercise of the principal's functions. Anything beyond this is inconsistent with the well-settled rule of the master's duty. Hanna v. Granger, 23 Atl. 659, 660, 18 E. I. 507.

Where a railroad foreman had power to, and did, employ and discharge the men, who were under his directions and subject to his orders, and subject to the orders of no one else, he was a "vice principal," and not a fellow servant of one of such men. It is well settled in this state that where the master appoints an agent, with superintending control over the work, and with power to employ and discharge hands, and direct and control their movements in and about the work, the agent, in respect to such matters, stands in the place of the master. His negligence is the negligence of the principal, and for it the latter is liable. Stephens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 86 Mo. 221, 229.

VICINAGE.

The word "vicinage" is defined as meaning neighborhood or vicinity, and does not mean county. Ex parte McNeeley, 36 W. Va. 84, 90, 14 S. E. 436, 32 Am. St. Rep. 831, 15 L. R. A. 226.

The term "vicinage" at common law meant the county where the act in question was committed. The term was usually applied to the trial of criminal offenders; the common law requiring that the trial should be had in the vicinage. State v. Crinklaw, 59 N. W. 370, 371, 40 Neb. 759 (citing with approval Olive v. State, 11 Neb. 1, 7 N. W. 444).

"Vicinage," as used in Acts 1859, p. 559 (general railroad law), requiring jurors in appraisement proceedings to be of the vicinage of the property, means the county, and not the town or neighborhood in which the land to be taken lies. Convers v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 18 Mich. 459, 468.

The word "vicinage" means the neighborhood. As used in this state, in the legal phrase that a trial by jury means a trial by the jury of the vicinage, it means the county. Taylor v. Gardiner, 11 R. I. 182, 184.

"Vicinage," within the rule that the jury is to come from the vicinage, means district. Rice v. Sims (S. C.) 3 Hill, 5, 7.

VICINETUM.

The word "vicinetum," as employed in stating the fact that at common law a jury was required to be returned from the vicinetum, meant from the neighborhood, or the place where the cause of action was laid or the crime charged to have been committed. State v. Kemp, 34 Minn. 61, 63, 24 N. W. 349.

"Vicinetum" is derived of this word 'vicinus,' and signifieth neighborhood or a place neere at hand, or a neighbor place; and the reason whereof the jury must be of the neighborhood is for that vicinus facta vicini præsumitur scire, all of which is implied in this word." State v. Sawtelle, 66 N. H. 488, 505, 82 Atl. 831, 835 (quoting Co. Litt. 158b).

VICINITY.

See "Immediate Vicinity."

"Vicinity" is defined as that which is near, or not remote. It is said to be derived from "vicus," a village, and to signify the place which does not exceed in distance the extent of a village. As used in P. L. 1885, p. 74, § 1, providing that a gaslight company shall have power to make and sell gas in a certain town and its vicinity, the power is given to lay its gas pipes in the streets of a borough the outer limits of which were not more than a mile distant from those of the other places. Borough of Madison v. Morristown Gaslight Co., 52 Atl. 158, 159, 63 N. J. Eq. 120.

The term "vicinity" does not express any definite idea of distance. A few feet, or several hundred yards, or even a greater distance, from an object, would be in its vicinity. Schmidt v. Kansas City Distilling Co., 2 S. W. 417, 90 Mo. 284, 59 Am. Rep. 16.

It is very usual to read or speak of "vicinity" and "immediate vicinity," "neighborhood" and "near neighborhood"; the latter expression uniformly denoting closer proximity than the former. These words have no fixed standard of meaning, and denote no particular distance; but our ideas of them shift and vary to correspond with the relative position of their objects, and they have no precise or practical meaning of themselves, but only when applied to something else. We would say that Germantown was in the vicinity of Philadelphia, and Brooklyn of New York, Manchester in the vicinity of Pittsburgh, and the moon in the vicinity of the earth, when compared with planets more remote. "Vicinity," when applied to a practical matter, might very readily cause disagreement in honest minds, for vicinity is not a matter of eyesight only, but for the judgment also. In re Hancock St. Extension, 18 Pa. 26, 31.

"Vicinity," as used in a contract by which it was agreed that if a party decided to drill any more wells upon certain premises, or in the vicinity, up to a certain number, the other party should have the contract for drilling, cannot be construed to include lands two miles distant from the premises mentioned. Sparks v. Pittsburg Co., 28 Atl. 152, 153, 159 Pa. 295.

In considering the question as to whether two pieces of property situated about one mile from each other can be considered as in the vicinity or neighborhood of each other, or as constituting adjoining premises, within the meaning of the rule that the keeping of gunpowder upon private premises may be a nuisance, when in case of explosion it would be liable to injure persons or property of those residing in the vicinity, neighborhood, or upon adjoining premises, the court said that, where property is injured directly and without any intervening cause by the force of an explosion, it is legally within the neighborhood or vicinity of the scene of the explosion, and that adjoining premises may in contemplation of law be defined in the same way. St. Mary's Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Bradford Glycerine Co., 14 Ohio Cir. Ct. 522, 527, 7 O. C. D. 582, 585.

The word "vicinity," as used in a statute granting a gas company the right to manufacture gas for the purpose of lighting the streets and buildings in a certain town and its vicinity, applies only to the streets, avenues, alleys, and public places adjoining the town, and does not embrace other places and territories constituting an independent municipal government. English's Law Dictionary defines "vicinity" as adjacent; that which is near. Webster defines "vicinity" as the quality or state of being near, or not remote; nearness; that which is adjacent to anything; neighborhood. Borough of Madison v. Morristown Gaslight Co., 54 Atl. 439, 440, 65 N. J. Eq. 356.

The word "vicinity" is not technical, with a precise legal meaning, as the word "county," or the ancient word "visne," vicinage would be held to be; and Acts 1795, c. 45, providing that, where the cause of death happens in one county and death in another, an indictment may be found in the latter, is not repugnant to the declaration in the Constitution that in criminal prosecutions the verification of facts in the vicinity where they happen is one of the greatest securities of the life, etc., of the citizen. Com. v. Parker, 19 Mass. (2 Pick.) 550, 553.

The meaning of the word "vicinity," as employed in a decree restraining defendant from practicing as a physician in a certain city and vicinity, necessarily depended upon the size of the city and its location and particular surroundings; and in view of the size of the city, its location and surroundings, it was held that the territorial surrounding of the city for a distance of 10 miles from corporate boundaries was a reasonable limitation. Timmerman v. Dever, 52 Mich. 34, 17 N. W. 230, 50 Am. Rep. 240.

Where land is described as lying in the "vicinity of, and on the margin of" a bay, it is considered to have a boundary on the bay, and includes a shore ownership. State v. Brown, 27 N. J. Law (3 Dutch.) 13, 17.

The terms "local" and "vicinity," used in connection with assessments for improvements, are not to be taken as indicating any definite limits, but are usually understood to extend to the real property reported by the assessors to be actually benefited to a certain amount. State v. Ramsey County, 23 N. W. 222, 229, 33 Minn. 295.

"Vicinity," as used in Rev. St. 1881, § 3168, providing that city commissioners should meet at the time and place designated and examine the property sought to be appropriated for a public improvement, and should also view and examine the real estate in the vicinity thereof to be benefited or injured by such proposed improvement, is a word of limitation. In regard to local improvements, property benefited by the improvement will be held to be within its vicinity. Mock v. City of Muncie (Ind.) 32 N. E. 718, 719.

As neighborhood.

"Neighborhood" is Anglo-Saxon. "Vicinity" is Latin. Hence they differ in degree and strength. "Vicinity" does not denote so close a connection as "neighborhood." A neighborhood is a more immediate vicinity. Houses immediately adjoining a square are in the neighborhood of the square. Those somewhat further removed are in the vicinity. Coyle v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 27 Mo. App. 584, 593.

"Vicinity," as used in a plea by defendant in an action for the infringement of a patent to the effect that the alleged invention had been in use generally in London and the vicinity thereof, meant the same as "neighborhood." Palmer v. Wagstaffe, 20 Eng. Law & Eq. 527.

"Vicinity" means neighborhood, and signifies nearness as opposed to remoteness. Whether a place is in the vicinity or the neighborhood of another depends upon no arbitrary rule of distance or topography. State v. Meek, 67 Pac. 76, 77, 28 Wash. 405; Langley v. Barnstead, 63 N. H. 246 (approved in Territory v. Lannon, 22 Pac. 495, 496, 9 Mont. 1).

"Etymologically and by common understanding the phrase 'in the vicinity' means 'in the neighborhood.' Whether a place is in the vicinity or in the neighborhood of another place depends upon no arbitrary rule of distance or topography. One village may be said to be in the vicinity of another village, without being joined or incorporated with it; and one house may be said to be near, in the vicinity of, or in the neighborhood of, another house, and not structurally adjoin it. 'Vicinity' admits of a more indefinite and wider latitude in place than 'proximity' or 'contiguity,' and as applied to territory may embrace a more extended space than that lying contiguous to the place in question, and as applied to towns and other territorial divisions may embrace those not adjacent." As used in Gen. Laws, c. 68, § 10, requiring towns which have been greatly benefited by public improvements made by another town in the vicinity to pay a portion of the expense, it means towns in the neighborhood of that in which the improvement is made, and is not confined to adjoining towns. Langley v. Barnstead, 63 N. H. 246, 247.

VICIOUS.

A horse is of "vicious disposition" when it is possessed of those habits and propensities which are dangerous in their character to persons coming in contact with it. Brown v. Green (Del.) 42 Atl. 991, 993, 1 Pennewill, 535.

Within the meaning of the rule that an owner of a domestic animal is not, in general, liable for an injury committed by it, unless it be shown that he had notice of its vicious propensities (Van Leuven v. Lyke, 1 N. Y. [1 Comst.] 515, 49 Am. Dec. 346), by "vicious propensity" is included a propensity to do any act that might endanger the safety of the persons and property of others in a given situation; not such as would impair the utility of the animal for the purpose for which it was kept. Dickson v. McCoy, 39 N. Y. 400, 403.

A "vicious animal" is any individual of a vicious species, or a vicious individual of a harmless species; and hence a horse which is not shown to be individually vicious cannot be construed a vicious animal. Phillips v. De Wald, 7 S. E. 151, 152, 79 Ga. 732, 11 Am. St. Rep. 458.

A dog which is accustomed to attack and bite other dogs without being incited to do so is a "vicious animal," whether it has been trained to such habits or not. Wheeler v. Brant (N. Y.) 23 Barb. 324, 325.

VICIOUS CONDUCT.

See "Excessively Vicious Conduct."

"Vicious conduct," as used in Code, art. 16, § 37, authorizing a divorce for excessively vicious conduct, means conduct constituting grave offenses, and is not made out by mere proof of drunkenness by the wife, though frequent, and accompanied by abuse and indecent language, occasioning domestic broils. Shutt v. Shutt, 17 Atl. 1024, 71 Md. 193, 17 Am. St. Rep. 519.

VICTIM.

The use of the word "victim" in an instruction in a homicide case that the fact that the defendant was seeking to enforce the collection of taxes against another Chinaman, or even against his victim, did not give defendant any right to take his life, is calculated to create prejudice against the accused, and is erroneous. It seems to assume that the deceased was wrongfully killed, when the very issue was as to the character of the killing. When the deceased is referred to as a victim, the impression is naturally created that some unlawful power or dominion has been exerted over his person. It is nearly equivalent in fact to an expression characterizing the defendant as a criminal. People v. Williams, 17 Cal. 142, 147.

VICTUAL—VICTUALS.

"Victual," as used in an agreement by which a son agreed to maintain his father and mother during their natural lives—that is, to victual, clothe, pay doctor bills, and keep house and care for them, suitable to their condition—does not mean to furnish whisky and tobacco also. Wisehart v. Grose, 71 Ind. 260, 261.

Rev. Laws, § 997, prohibiting any person from treating a juror by giving him "victuals or drink," included the giving of cigars, though they were not within the strict letter of the statute. Baker v. Jacobs, 23 Atl. 588, 64 Vt. 197.

Lord Tenterden, C. J., in Rex v. Hodgkinson, 10 Barn. & C. 74, in considering St. 50 Geo. III, c. 41, which provides that nothing in the act should prohibit persons from selling any fish, fruit, or victuals, said: "I think the word 'victuals' comprises everything which constitutes an ingredient in the food of man, and all articles which, mixed with others, constitute food." And it was held that barm or yeast was victuals, within the meaning of the clause. State v. Angelo, 51 Atl. 905, 907, 71 N. H. 224.

VIDELICET.

The words "to wit" and "that is to say," as used in a pleading, are termed a "videlicet." The natural and proper use of a videlicet is to particularize that which is general before, and to explain that which is indefinite, doubtful, or obscure; but it must neither be contrary to the premises nor increase or diminish the precedent matter, and therefore if a man seised in fee of black acre, white acre, and green acre in D. should grant all his lands in D., viz., black acre and white acre, yet green acre shall also pass by the grant. Stukeley v. Butler, Hob. 168, 171.

The office of "to wit" is to particularize what is too general in a preceding sentence, and render clear and of certain application that which might seem otherwise doubtful or obscure. Buck v. Lewis, 9 Minn. 314, 317 (Gil. 298, 300).

The words "to wit" are used to call attention to a more particular specification of what has preceded. Gilligan v. Commonwealth, 37 S. E. 962, 964, 99 Va. 816 (quoting Web. Int. Dict.).

The use of the "videlicet" is to avoid a variance, and to avoid a positive averment, which must be strictly proved. Brown v. Berry, 47 Ill. 175, 177.

The office of a "videlicet" is to explain what goes before, and, when it is repugnant to or inconsistent with the preceding matter, it is inoperative and void. Cotton v. Ward (3 T. B. Mon.) 19 Ky. 304, 310.

The precise and legal use of a "videlicet" in every species of pleading is to enable the pleader to distinguish and fix with certainty that which was before general, and which without such explanation might with equal propriety have been applied to different objects. Commonwealth v. Hart, 76 Mass. (10 Gray) 465, 468.

The office of the "videlicet" is to mark that the party does not undertake to prove the precise circumstances alleged, and in such cases—I. e., when the circumstances are not essential in their nature—he is ordinarily not held to prove them. State v. Heck, 23 Minn. 549, 550.

The office of a videlicet is to explain what went before, and where it is repugnant or contradictory it is material and traversable; and as such an averment coming after a videlicet is traversable, so it must be proved when material, if averred without a videlicet. The general rule in relation to allegations under a videlicet or a scilicet seems to be that, if they be impossible or contrary or repugnant to the preceding matter, they shall be rejected as surplusage; but where they are used to explain what goes before them, and are consistent with the preceding matter, they are material and traversable. Gleason v. McVickar (N. Y.) 7 Cow. 42, 43.

The common office of a "videlicet" is to state time, place, or manner which are not of the essence of the matter in issue, and thereby to relieve the party of the duty of proving the allegation strictly as made; but it may be and is frequently used as particularizing the more general antecedent matter. Sullivan v. State, 87 Miss. 846, 354, 7 South. 275, 277.

The proper office of a "videlicet" is to particularize or explain what goes before it. It may restrain the generality of preceding words, but cannot enlarge or diminish the preceding subject-matter. In the former case it is merely explanatory of the thing which precedes it, while in the latter it is repugnant to it. When a material videlicet is preceded by words of direct averment, the videlicet is regarded as a direct allegation, and therefore is traversable; and, being regarded as traversable, it follows that, if traversed, it must be proved. Gould, Pl. c. 3, §§ 35-41. The pleader cannot relieve himself from the necessity of proving unnecessary allegations or irrelevant matter by putting them under a videlicet. Where, in an action on an accident policy, the complaint, after alleging the accidental death of the insured, alleged, under a videlicet clause, the cause and manner of the accident in such a manner as to make one complete and consistent allegation, the general issue traverses, not only the general allegation, but also the allegations under the videlicet. Clark v. Employers' Liability Assur. Co., 48 Atl. 639, 642, 72 Vt. 458.

The precise and legal use of a videlicet in every species of pleading is defined to be to enable the pleader to isolate, to distinguish, and to fix with certainty that which was before general, and without which explanation might with equal propriety be applied to different objects. Commonwealth v. Quinlan, 153 Mass. 483, 484, 27 N. E. 8.

VIEW.

See "Immediate View and Presence"; "In View of"; "Within His View"; "Servitude of View."

We understand by "view" every opening which may more or less facilitate the means of looking out of a building. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 715.

As hears.

"View," as used in Gen. St. § 836, authorizing a justice to arrest any person who in his "view" engages in disorderly conduct, etc., does not limit the officer to cases in which he acquires his knowledge of the disorder by seeing it, to the exclusion of cases where he hears it. State v. Williams, 15 S. E. 554, 36 S. C. 493.

As inspect.

"The courts are frequently called upon to act upon evidence addressed to the senses, often called 'view' or 'inspection,' and to recognize without further proof that the person before them is an aged person, male or female, a child, a boy or girl, white or black, a person with or without visible deformity of limbs, or the like. In People v. Justices of Court of Special Sessions (N. Y.) 10 Hun, 224, decided in 1877, the court held that evidence of age may be received from any person capable of giving it for the purpose of proving the fact, or where the appearance of the party sufficiently indicates his probable age that may be acted upon as evidence of the fact." Garbarsky v. Simkin, 73 N. Y. Supp. 199, 200, 36 Misc. Rep. 195.

In the case of Wakefield v. Boston & M. R. R., 63 Me. 385, the court adopted the definition of the word "view" given by Webster. We quote from the opinion in that case the following: "To view," says Webster, "means to look at with attention, or for the purpose of examining; to inspect; to explore. It differs," says the same author, "from look, see, or behold, in expressing more particular or continued attention to the thing which is the object of sight." In the course of the same opinion, it was declared that, in order to enable the appraisers to form a correct judgment, they should see the premises from such a standpoint as will give them an accurate knowledge of the premises. Under 3 Rev. St. p. 538, § 3, providing that assessors shall view all the lands within 1½ miles of the line of the proposed road, and make a list of the same, a minute inspection is not required, but some personal inspection, made from points affording a fair sight of the land and its surroundings, is required. The assessors should make an examination of the lands upon which it is proposed to lay the tax from such points of observation as will enable them to accurately ascertain the location of said lands and in what manner the proposed road will affect each separate tract. Hendricks v. Gilchrist, 76 Ind. 369, 370, 371.

"View," as used in Rev. St. c. 18, §§ 12, 13, providing that in certain cases the jury should be sworn and view the premises injured by the location of a railroad, means to inspect or explore. Webster says to view means to look at with attention, or for the purpose of examining; to inspect; to explore. "It differs," says the same author, "from look, see, or behold, in expressing more particular or continued attention to the thing which is the object of sight." Wakefield v. Boston & M. R. R., 63 Me. 385, 387.

"Viewing," as used in Comp. St. c. 23, § 7, fixing the fees of the coroner for viewing a dead body, means something more than mere looking, seeing, or beholding; and it requires inspection, investigation, and inquiry into the cause of the death of the person, and the coroner alone cannot make this inquiry, and he is not entitled to his fees unless he has with a jury held an inquest as provided by law. Lancaster County v. Hol-yoke, 55 N. W. 950, 952, 37 Neb. 328, 21 L. R. A. 394.

As intent.

"View," as used in a charge of a court defining burglary to be the breaking and entering of a dwelling house in the nighttime with a view to commit a felony, is synonymous with the word "Intent." To say that a certain thing was done with a view to commit a felony is the same thing as to say that it was done with intent to commit a felony. State v. Clary, 24 S. C. 116, 117.

The word "view," in an instruction that, to constitute a warranty, there must not only be an affirmation by the seller respecting the quality of the thing, but the affirmation must be made with a view of assuring the buyer of the truth of the fact, is equivalent to intention, purpose, or design. Halliday v. Briggs, 18 N. W. 55, 56, 15 Neb. 219.

VIEWERS.

"Viewers," as used in the Code, imports that the decision of the officers is to be made on their special inspection of the thing in controversy; but it does not necessarily imply that they must make the inspection together. Tubbs v. Ogden, 46 Iowa, 134, 135.

VIGILANCE.

See "Active Vigilance"; "Strictest Vigilance."

VILE.

"Vile," as used in a complaint for divorce, alleging that defendant cursed and abused plaintiff by calling her vile names, means debased, lost to decency, and entirely wanting in everything that goes to make a woman respectable, so that the allegation alleges a fact constituting cruel treatment. Irwin v. Irwin, 37 Pac. 548, 551, 2 Okl. 180.

VILL.

"Vill" and "hamlet" are in common acceptance used as synonymous terms, and where an order is made concerning the overseers of the poor of a hamlet, where such order should be made concerning a vill, the hamlet will be presumed to be a vill to support the order. Rex v. Morris, 4 Term R. 550, 552.

VILLAGE.

See "Organized Village."

A village is defined to be a town site platted and unincorporated, and hence the fact that a village is included in a larger corporation does not change the location of a county seat, which was located in the village. Way v. Fox, 80 N. W. 405, 407, 109 Iowa, 340.

A "village" is a subordinate branch of the civil government. Weismer v. Village of Douglas (N. Y.) 6 Thomp. & C. 514, 519.

Any municipal subdivision of a county, less than a city, is included within either of the terms "town" or "village," as is clearly apparent from the legislation of the state from the adoption of Rev. St. 1887 to the present. Our interpretation of these statutes is borne out by Town of Enfield v. Jordan, 119 U. S. 680, 7 Sup. Ct. 358, 30 L. Ed. 523; Brown v. Village of Grangeville, 71 Pac. 151, 152, 8 Idaho, 784.

Gen. St. 1878, c. 39, §§ 21, 22, as amended by Laws 1883, c. 38, provides that a seed grain contract, in order to constitute a lien, must be filed in the office of the town clerk of the town, or the clerk or recorder of the city or village, in which the borrower resides, etc. Held that, for the purposes of the action, the village and the balance of the town in which it is situated are as entirely distinct as if they constituted two separate townships, and that where the borrower resides in a village a filing with the town clerk of the town within which the village is situated does not satisfy the requirements of the law. Minnesota Agricultural Co. v. Northwestern Elevator Co., 60 N. W. 671, 672, 53 Minn. 536.

The word "village," employed in the statute allowing one as a homestead a lot in any village, etc., did not include lots which had never been platted as village lots, and were not found upon any reported town plat, but were merely subdivisions of a farm, made for a purpose foreign to that of platting for sale or for village settlement, though within a hamlet of agricultural residence.

Bouchard v. Bourassa, 23 N. W. 452, 453, 57 Mich. 8.

The word "village" imports only a municipal corporation, organized by some special act or under some general law, except when a different definition shall be expressly given to the same. Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 4972.

The word "village" includes every place laid out in lots or blocks, other than cemeteries and incorporated cities. Cobbeys' Ann. St. Neb. 1903, § 10,407.

As assemblage of houses.

A "village" is any small assemblage of houses, occupied by artisans, laboring people, and farmers; in French villages, also by farmers. It is a defined locality, with a name, and its inhabitants are called "villagers." The term "inhabitants of the village" has a well-defined and well-understood meaning, and does not include persons who are not, by their own showing, inhabitants of the village. Hebert v. Lavalie, 27 Ill. (17 Peck) 448, 454.

The term "village," as used in the Constitution providing for a homestead in a city, town, or village, should be given its ordinary and usual signification. Turning to the lexicons, we find that Webster defines a village to be a small assemblage of houses less than a town or city, and inhabited chiefly by farmers and other laboring people. The definition given by Bouvier is: Any small assemblage of houses for dwellings or business, or both, in the country, whether they are situated upon regularly laid-out streets and lots or not. Mikael v. Equitable Securities Co. (Tex.) 74 S. W. 67, 68.

A "village" is a collection of houses, collocated after something like a regular plan in regard to streets and lanes, without intervening farm lands, with a convenient curtilage allowed to each. In re West Philadelphia (Pa.) 5 Watts & S. 281. "It is a small assemblage of houses, less than a town or city, and inhabited chiefly by farmers and other laboring people. In the United States any small collection of houses in the country is called a village." The term is derived from "villa," a country seat. In re Tullytown Borough, 1 Pa. Dist. R. 292, 293 (citing Webst. Dict.).

A "village" means an assembly of houses less than a city, but nevertheless urban or semiurban in its character, and having a density of population greater than can usually be found in rural districts. A very common definition of a village, found in the books, is as follows: "Any small assemblage of houses for dwelling or business, or both, in the country, whether situated upon regularly laid out streets and alleys or not." State v. Lammers, 89 N. W. 501, 502, 113 Wis. 398.

"Villages and towns," as used in Act Wash. T. Feb. 2, 1888, authorizing the incorporation of towns and villages, and not defining the meaning of the term, will be presumed "to be used in their ordinary acceptation as meaning an aggregation of houses and inhabitants more or less compact." Territory v. Stewart, 23 Pac. 405, 406, 1 Wash. St. 98, 8 L. R. A. 106.

A village consists of a tract of land, more or less thickly inhabited, forming a nucleus for residence and business purposes. It is an assemblage of houses less than a town or city, but nevertheless urban or semiurban in its character. State v. Village of Minnetonka, 59 N. W. 972, 974, 57 Minn. 526, 25 L. R. A. 755.

An assemblage of houses in the country, less than a town or city, and inhabited chiefly by farmers and other laboring people. Russell v. Detroit Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 45 N. W. 356, 357, 80 Mich. 407.

A place where there is a station house, a warehouse, a store, a blacksmith shop, a post office, and five or six dwelling houses, whether they are situated upon regularly laid-out streets and alleys or not, is a "village," for the purpose of excusing a railroad company from fencing its track within the limits hereof. Toledo, W. & W. Ry. Co. v. Spangler, 71 Ill. 568, 569.

A small assemblage of houses for dwellings or business, or both, in the country, constitutes a "village," whether they are situated upon regularly laid-out streets and alleys or not. A point at which there is a railroad station, a mill, a blacksmith shop, a store, a grocery, and a number of dwellings, though there is nothing to show that any streets or alleys had been laid off and dedicated to the public, is a village. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Williams, 27 Ill. (17 Peck) 48, 49.

"Village" is defined to be any small assemblage of houses in the country; a collection of houses collocated after a regular plan in regard to streets and lanes. In re Incorporation of Village of Edgewood, 18 Atl. 646, 648, 130 Pa. 348.

A settlement consisting of 14 families, each family on the average containing about 5 persons, all of whom resided along a stream, the distance from one extreme end of the settlement to the other being about 2½ miles, some of the families residing within 40 rods of each other, and others being distant about a mile or more, their chief occupation being farming, and the settlement containing school district and post office, is a "village," within the meaning of Sess. Laws 1892, p. 70, c. 62, § 5, prohibiting the keeping of animals along the banks of a stream within 7 miles from any city, town.

A village is an assembly of inhabitants living in the vicinity of each other and not separated by any other intervening civil division of the state. Town of Enterprise v. State, 10 South. 740, 744, 29 Fla. 128.

Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 2927, provides that the county commissioners of each county shall appoint at least one suitable person for each "village" or neighborhood where spirituous liquors are sold in less quantities than a gallon, whose duty it shall be to inspect all liquors being sold in such quantities. It was held that the term "village" is more specific than the term "neighborhood," and each aggregation of individuals living in close proximity, as is customary in village life, must be treated as a village for the purposes of the statute; and it is specifically held that, as the statute was passed in 1880, the word "village" should be construed to cover a city which was a village at the time the act was passed. State v. Meek, 67 Pac. 76, 77, 26 Wash. 405.

Borough synonymous.

"Borough" and "village," as used in an indictment charging that the money embezzled belonged to an organized borough and village, are duplicates or cumulated names of the same thing, and are synonymous. Brown v. State, 18 Ohio St. 496, 507.

Gen. St. 1878, c. 39, § 2, as amended by Gen. Laws 1883, c. 38, requiring chattel mortgages to be filed with the clerks of "villages," did not include the class of municipal corporations styled "boroughs," created and organized under special acts of the Legislature. Bannon v. Bowler, 26 N. W. 237, 238, 34 Minn. 416.

As incorporated village.

Code 1880, § 1047, providing that any person who may be injured by the locomotive or cars of a railroad company while such cars are running at a greater rate of speed than six miles an hour through any "city, town, or village," shall have a right of action, etc., refers to an incorporated "city, town, or village," and the statute applies to all violations of its terms within the legal or corporate limits of such "city, town, or village," without regard to the irregular and variable lines of settlement and improvement of such city. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Jordan, 63 Miss. 458, 461.

Under Laws 1891, c. 467, limiting the speed of railroad trains through cities and villages, the word "village" will not be held to include unincorporated villages, since the word "village," in the original statute, had a definite meaning, including only those which were incorporated. Nolan v. Milwaukee

W. Ry. Co., 64 N. W. 319, 320, 91 Wis. 16.

While often used to apply to any small assemblage of houses for dwelling or business, or both, in the country, whether incorporated or unincorporated, yet as used in Laws 1897, c. 94, requiring railroad companies to provide stations at all villages and boroughs, "village" will be held to apply exclusively to incorporated villages, being used in connection with the word "borough," which is never applied to any place except an incorporated municipality. State v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 79 N. W. 510, 76 Minn. 469.

Unless the context shows that another sense is intended, the word "village" shall mean an incorporated village. Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, § 1536—907.

The term "village," whenever used in the acts relating thereto, shall be construed to mean a village incorporated under the act or subject to its provisions. Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 2935.

The term "village" means an incorporated village. Laws N. Y. 1892, c. 877, § 22.

As a municipal corporation.

See "Municipal Corporation."

As requiring a name.

A place without a name cannot have any legal existence as a "village." A name is essential to a corporation or social entity, whether for municipal or other purposes. Tilford v. Wallace (Pa.) 8 Watts, 141, 143.

As a precinct.

See "Precinct."

Town synonymous.

The terms "town" and "village" are, within the meaning of the law, synonymous. Martin v. People, 87 Ill. 524; Phillips v. Town of Scales Mound, 195 Ill. 353, 63 N. E. 180; Town of Enfield v. Jordan, 119 U. S. 686, 7 Sup. Ct. 358, 30 L. Ed. 523. And hence the fact that in some of the proceedings for the organization of a village it was designated as a "town," and that the village adopted the name of the town of C., does not invalidate the proceedings. People v. Pike, 64 N. E. 393, 394, 197 Ill. 449.

"Village," as used in the body of an act relative to municipal corporations, might be deemed a synonym of the word "town" in the title, so as to render the title properly expressive of the purpose of the act. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Town of Kentwood, 22 South. 192, 49 La. Ann. 931.

The word "village" in its legislative meaning will include a town. The late-

Justice Bradley, in the case of Town of Enfield v. Jordan, 119 U. S. 680, 7 Sup. Ct. 858, 30 L. Ed. 523, in a discussion of the common use of the words "town" and "village," said: "In New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, and Illinois the subdivisions of a county answering to the 'town' of New England and New York are called 'townships,' though the words 'town' and 'village' are indiscriminately applied to large collections of houses less than a city." Long Branch Police, Sanitary & Improvement Commission v. Dobbins, 40 Atl. 599, 600. 61 N. J. Law, 659.

A "village" is a small collection of houses, in the country, less than a town. In Delaware the words "town" and "village" are indiscriminately applied to collections of houses. Town of Enfield v. Jordan, 7 Sup. Ct. 358, 361, 119 U. S. 680, 30 L. Ed. 523 (citing Johns. Dict.; Webst. Dict.; Ogilvie, Dict.).

A "village" and a "town" are not identical. A village is ordinarily less than a town, and more occupied by agriculturists; yet the two cannot be definitely distinguished by the size of the place or employment of the inhabitants. A statute that the word "town" may include cities, as well as incorporated villages, is a clear implication that it does not include unincorporated villages. Truax v. Pool, 46 Iowa, 256, 257.

The terms "villages," "cities," and "townships," in a statute authorizing villages, cities, and townships to issue bonds in aid of railroads, does not include an incorporated town. Welch v. Post, 99 Ill. 471, 473.

Laws 1885, p. 60, empowering "cities and villages" to maintain and repair drains, ditches, and plumbing works for drainage purposes by a special assessment on benefited property, does not include incorporated towns. Gray v. Town of Cicero, 53 N. E. 91, 92, 177 Ill. 459.

Gen. St. 1878, c. 39, §§ 21, 22, as amended by Laws 1883, c. 38, provide that a seed grain contract, in order to constitute a lien, must be filed in the office of "the town clerk of the town, or the clerk or recorder of the city or village, in which the borrower resides, etc." Held, that for the purposes of the action the village and the balance of the town in which it is situated are as entirely distinct as if they constituted two separate townships, and that where the borrower resides in a village a filing with the town clerk of the town within which the village is situated does not satisfy the requirements of the law. Minnesota Agricultural Co. v. Northwestern Elevator Co., 60 N. W. 671, 672, 58 Minn. 536.

The use of the word "village" instead of "town," in Act March 6, 1868, entitled "An act to authorize the village of Lake City to aid in the construction of the ——— Railroad," held an inadvertent mistake, and not to render the statute inoperative and void. State v. Lake City, 25 Minn. 404, 413.

VILLAINOUS.

A newspaper article concerning the acts of the county supervisors in regard to the bonding of the county to assist in railroad building, and stating that, "instead of the money being in the treasury here, it was never inside of Placer county, for the supervisors swapped it off in Sacramento, and a 'villainous swap' it was," may be construed to mean only that the exchange of the money for the bonds was unwise, improvident, and disadvantageous to the county of Placer; the word "villainous" being used to express the degree of improvidence or injudiciousness of the exchange, and not the motives or inducements that led to it, and no corruption in office may be construed. Van Vactor v. Walkup, 46 Cal. 124, 133.

VILLAS.

"Villas" is the name given to villages in the Spanish law. It is distinguished from cities ("ciudades") and towns ("pueblos"). Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 530, 537.

VINDICTIVE DAMAGES.

"Punitive," "vindictive," and "exemplary," as to damages, are all synonymous terms. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kelly's Adm'x, 38 S. W. 852, 854, 100 Ky. 421 (citing Chiles v. Drake, 59 Ky. [2 Metc.] 146, 74 Am. Dec. 406).

"Punitive damages" are sometimes spoken of as "vindictive damages" and "exemplary damages." They are sometimes referred to as "smart money" and "blood money." They are called "punitive damages" because of the theory that such damages will act as a sort of punishment of the defendant for such wrongdoing; not only a punishment for past wrongdoing, but to deter the defendant and others in similar business from repeating such wrongdoing in the future. Oliver v. Columbia, N. & L. R. Co., 43 S. E. 307, 320, 65 S. C. 1.

The term "vindictive damages" is used to designate damages in excess of compensatory damages, which are allowed as a punishment of the wrongdoer. It is synonymous with exemplary or punitive damages. Murphy v. Hobbs, 5 Pac. 119, 123, 7 Colo. 541, 49 Am. Rep. 366.

"Exemplary, punitive, and vindictive damages" are such damages as are in excess of the actual loss, and are allowed in theory when a tort is aggravated by evil motive, actual malice, deliberate violence, oppression, or fraud. Such damages are sometimes called "smart money." Springer v. J. H. Somers Fuel Co., 46 Atl. 370, 371, 198 Pa. 156.

In actions in tort, where gross fraud, malice, oppression, or wanton, willful, or reckless conduct, or criminal indifference to civil obligations affecting the rights of others, or where legislative enactment authorizes it, the jury may assess exemplary, punitive, or vindictive damages; these terms being synonymous. Claiborne v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 33 S. E. 262, 263, 46 W. Va. 363.

Vindictive, punitive, or added damages are damages given in addition to those actually required to compensate the injured party, and intended as smart money or punishment for injuries and sufferings which were intended or occurred through carelessness and negligence, amounting to a wrong so reckless and wanton as to be without palliation or excuse. Ross v. Leggett, 23 N. W. 695, 699, 61 Mich. 445, 1 Am. St. Rep. 608.

"Vindictive damages" are such as may be given to punish the defendant for his fraud and actual malice. Ogg v. Murdock, 25 W. Va. 139, 146.

"Vindictive damages" operate by way of punishment, and are allowed as compensation for the private injuries complained of. Smith v. Bagwell, 19 Fla. 117, 123, 45 Am. Rep. 12.

It is of very little consequence by what name the damages given are called, provided the case is one involving that class of injuries for which plaintiff is entitled to recover. They may be called exemplary, punitive, vindictive, compensatory, or added damages. The important question always is, in every case, was the character of the wrong suffered or injury sustained such as may be lawfully atoned for or compensated in money? Ross v. Leggett, 61 Mich. 445, 453, 23 N. W. 695, 1 Am. St. Rep. 608.

"When the term 'vindictive damages' or 'exemplary damages' is employed in a civil action for libel, the words mean the atonement which the law demands shall be made to the libeled party by the offender, and such atonement involves essentially his punishment. It is a condemnation and an infliction for traducing the individual." Fry v. Bennett (N. Y.) 1 Abb. Prac. 289, 307.

In this court the doctrine is well settled that in actions of tort the jury, in addition to the sum awarded by way of compensation for the plaintiff's injuries, may award exemplary, punitive, or vindictive damages, sometimes called "smart money," if the defendant has acted wantonly or oppressively, or with such malice as implies a spirit of mischief or criminal indifference to civil obligations; but such guilty intention on the part of the defendant is required to charge him with exemplary or punitive damages. Exemplary or punitive damages, being awarded, not by way of compensation to the sufferer, but by way of punishment to the offender and as a warning to others, can be awarded only against one who has participated in the offense. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Prentice, 18 Sup. Ct. 261, 263, 147 U. S. 101, 37 L. Ed. 97.

Expenses of litigation do not fall under the head of "vindictive damages" under the Code. Mosely v. Sanders, 76 Ga. 293, 294.

VINOUS.

The fermentation which generates alcohol from vegetable juices is called "vinous alcohol." Eureka Vinegar Co. v. Gazette Printing Co. (U. S.) 35 Fed. 570, 571.

The term "vinous spirits" does not include alcohol. State v. Martin, 34 Ark. 340, 341.

VINOUS LIQUOR.

"Vinous liquors," according to general knowledge, includes all kinds of wine. Caldwell v. State, 30 South. 814, 815, 43 Fla. 545 (citing Hatfield v. Commonwealth, 14 Atl. 151, 120 Pa. 395).

"Vinous liquors" are those liquors made from the juice of the grape. Adler v. State, 55 Ala. 16, 23.

"Vinous liquors" are liquors "which have undergone vinous or alcoholic fermentation." Eureka Vinegar Co. v. Gazette Printing Co. (U. S.) 35 Fed. 570, 571.

The term "vinous or alcoholic liquor," in a statute prohibiting the sale of such liquor, includes wine made from grapes and from blackberries, though there is evidence that it is not intoxicating. Reyfelt v. State, 18 South. 925, 73 Miss. 415.

Alcohol.

As used in Act Feb. 22, 1842, providing that the sale of "vinous and spirituous liquors" may be licensed, etc., should not be construed to include alcohol. There is a marked distinction between the specific thing known as alcohol and the liquors commonly used as beverages, which contain more or less of alcohol, but are not alcohol, though they may be alcoholic. The words "vinous or spirituous liquors," as used in the statute, refer to alcoholic beverages. Lemly v. State, 12 South. 22, 70 Miss. 241, 20 L. R. A. 645.

Bitters.

Under an indictment charging the sale of spirituous and vinous liquors, a defendant may be convicted for the sale of medicated bitters capable of producing intoxication. Prinzel v. State, 33 S. W. 350, 351, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 274.

The words "vinous and intoxicating liquors," as used in the title of a local option act, are sufficient to authorize legislation with respect to wines and intoxicating medicated bitters; the same being included within and classified by such terms. Hancock v. State, 40 S. E. 317, 318, 114 Ga. 439.

Cider.

The question whether "vinous liquors," within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the sale thereof without a license, includes cider, is a question of fact for the jury. "Certainly in common acceptance cider is not understood to be either a vinous or a spirituous beverage, yet, when fermented, it doubtless contains a percentage of alcohol sufficient to bring it within the fair meaning of the term 'vinous.' We do not mean to intimate that the unfermented juice of apples is in any circumstances to be regarded as either a vinous or spirituous liquor, but we do not know and cannot say as a matter of law that its character may not be so changed by fermentation as to bring it within the meaning of the term 'vinous.'" Commonwealth v. Reyburg, 16 Atl. 351, 352, 122 Pa. 299, 2 L. R. A. 415.

"Vinous liquor," as used in an act of the Legislature declaring that vinous liquors are intoxicating, cannot be construed to include apple cider. The word "vinous" is derived from the Latin "vinum," wine, and so named because made from the fruit of the vine. "Wine" is defined in Worcester's Dictionary, after the statement of its derivation and after reference to the word in the language of many nations, among others to the Latin "vinum," as meaning, first, the fermented juice of certain fruits, resembling in many respects the wine obtained from grapes, but distinguished therefrom by naming the source whence it is derived, as ginger wine, gooseberry wine, currant wine, etc. The word "vinous" should not be applied to the juice of fruits which grow on trees, and in common parlance cider and beer are never called "vinous liquor" or "wine," although there may be found in works on chemistry general expressions that wine is the expressed juice of ripe fruits containing sugar, which causes it to readily undergo fermentation. Feldman v. City of Morrison, 1 Ill. App. (1 Bradw.) 460, 462. See, also, Allred v. State, 8 South. 56, 57, 90 Ala. 112.

Fermented juice of blackberries.

The term "vinous liquors," as used in a statute prohibiting the sale of such liquor, included the fermented juice of blackberries, as well as that of grapes, where such juice, after fermentation with sugar, produced intoxication when taken as a beverage. Hirton v. State, 31 South. 563, 564, 132 Ala. 29.

Intoxicating liquor synonymous.

"Vinous liquors," as used in Code, § 629, requiring a license for engaging in the business of selling vinous liquors, is not synonymous with "intoxicating liquors," and are such as are made from the fermented juice of grapes. Vinous liquor is also a spirituous liquor, in that it contains spirits of alcohol. Vinous liquors may be intoxicating, but they do not include all intoxicating liquors, beverages, or bitters. A given liquor may be in a high degree intoxicating, and yet not be a vinous liquor, in the sense of the statute. Fermented or hard cider is an illustration. Cane beer is another. Allred v. State, 8 South. 56, 57, 89 Ala. 112.

Spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors are commonly known to contain a considerable portion of alcohol, and alcohol is commonly known to be intoxicating. Hence an allegation, in an indictment for the sale of spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors contrary to law, is equivalent to alleging the sale of intoxicating liquors contrary to law. State v. Relly, 52 Atl. 1005, 1006, 66 N. J. Law, 399.

Malt liquor.

Vinous liquor is liquor made from the juice of the grape. It is used in such sense in Act March 19, 1875, prohibiting within certain limits the sale or giving of "vinous liquor," and hence the statute does not prohibit the sale of malt liquors. Tinker v. State, 8 South. 855, 90 Ala. 647.

VIOLATE—VIOLATION.

See "Die in Consequence of Violation of Law"; "Die in Known Violation of Law"; "While Violating Law."

"Violate" is synonymous with "ravish." State v. Montgomery, 45 N. W. 292, 293, 79 Iowa, 737.

The forty-third section of the third article of the act creating an insurance department, and providing that every "violation" of the act should subject the party to a penalty of $500, applies to acts of omission, as well as acts of commission. State v. Case, 53 Mo. 246, 250.

"Violation," as used in Laws 1893, c. 388, art. 2, § 26, providing that no person shall produce or manufacture any compound in imitation of natural butter, or sell any compound produced in violation of this section, etc., means practical nonconformity as well as punishable transgression, and hence would not be limited to such compounds as are manufactured in the state. People v. Fox, 38 N. Y. Supp. 635, 636, 4 App. Div. 38.

A sentence of excommunication read by the pastor of a church, stating that the offender had "violated the seventh commandment," and declaring in the subsequent part of the sentence that "this church does now, as always, bear its solemn testimony against the sin of fornication and uncleanness," did not impute the crime of adultery in its legal and technical sense as an indictable offense, but was merely a charge of unchaste and licentious conduct. Farnsworth v. Storrs, 59 Mass. (5 Cush.) 412, 415.

VIOLATION OF TRIAL BY JURY.

By a constitutional prohibition as to "a violation of trial by jury" is to be understood a taking away of that right, prohibiting it, or subjecting it to unreasonable and burdensome regulations, which, if they do not amount to a literal prohibition, are at least virtually of that character. Such a constitutional provision does not prevent the Legislature from providing for changes of jurisdiction or regulating the exercise of the right. Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, 19 Sup. Ct. 580, 590, 174 U. S. 1, 43 L. Ed. 873.

VIOLENCE.

See "Actual Violence"; "Excessive Violence"; "Irresistible Violence"; "Mob Violence."

"Violence," as used in a statute relating to robbing a person with violence, does not mean any physical act to the person of the complainant which resulted in the taking. "Violence," as used in the statute, generally implies the overcoming or attempting to overcome an actual resistance, or the preventing of such resistance through fear. It may include restraint of the person, and it generally implies that the acts tend to produce terror and alarm in the person on whom the violence is committed. It ought not to be held that every assault and battery, even the most trivial, which results in the taking of property from the assaulted person, constitutes that element of violence which is mentioned in the statute. People v. McGinty (N. Y.) 24 Hun, 62, 64.

Under a statute declaring it to be a felony to take or convey by violence a free negro out of that state into another, with intent to sell him as a slave, defendant was convicted on proof that by practicing deception upon a free negro he had induced the negro to go into another state, where he was sold by defendant as a slave. The court held that "violence" is a general term, and includes all sorts of force; that a conviction could not be sustained, in the absence of proof of actual violence; and that the term did not include deception. State v. Weaver, 44 N. C. 9, 13.

A death caused by "violence," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 1221, requiring the service of the coroner where a death is supposed to be caused by violence, is a death caused by unlawful means such as usually call for the punishment of those who employ them. State v. Bellows, 56 N. E. 1023, 1029, 62 Ohio St. 307.

The word "violence," is one of the synonyms of the word "force." State v. Daly, 18 Pac. 357, 358, 16 Or. 240.

The word "violence," in the common-law definition of robbery as a felonious taking of money or goods of any value from the person of another, or in his presence, against his will, by violence or putting in fear, has the same meaning as the word "force" in the statutory definition of the crime. Long v. State, 12 Ga. 293, 320.

"Violence" is defined by Bouvier to be "the abuse of force; that force which is employed against any right, against the laws, and against public liberty." It has reference to human agency, and includes the idea of responsibility for crime. A human life may be violently destroyed, and not feloniously destroyed. Death may result from the kick of a horse, or a man may be mangled or crushed to death by machinery. In re Burns' Case, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 549, 552.

As physical force.

The term "violence" is synonymous with physical force, and the two are used interchangeably in relation to assaults. Any language which expressly or by implication charges exertion of physical force on the person assaulted charges assault with actual violence, and hence charging an aggravated battery is sufficient. State v. Wells, 31 Conn. 210, 212.

"Violence," according to the Law Dictionaries, is synonymous with "physical force." According to the American & English Encyclopedia of Law, it is a general term, and includes all sorts of force; and in High v. State, 26 Tex. App. 545, 573, 10 S. W. 238, 8 Am. St. Rep. 488, it was held that a mere assault was not violence. Alexander v. State, 50 S. W. 716, 717, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 395.

"Violence" is defined by Webster to be "physical force; strength of action or motion." Bouv. Law Dict. says it is "the abuse of force; that force which is employed against any rights, against the laws, and against public liberty." Commonwealth v. Rhoads (Pa.) 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 146.

VIOLENT.

"In its ordinary acceptation the term 'violent' means not natural or spontaneous; not intentional, voluntary, expected, or usual. The degree of force is not always material. In this view of the case the bite of a fly or spider or the sting of a bee may be as well characterized as violent as a bite of a rattlesnake or the sting of a scorpion." Bacon v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n (N. Y.) 44 Hun, 599, 606.

The term "violent," as used in a statute prohibiting riot, is synonymous with "riotous"; and hence the fact that the affidavit alleged the act to have been committed in a riotous, instead of a violent, manner, was immaterial. State v. Kutter, 59 Ind. 572, 574.

VIOLENT MEANS.

See "External, Violent, or Accidental Means."

VIOLENT PRESUMPTION.

"We understand by a 'violent presumption' one which is very strong and forcible, although not one which is necessarily conclusive." Shealy v. Edwards, 75 Ala. 411, 419.

"A violent presumption in the law of evidence is the presumption arising where the connection between the fact to be inferred and that which is proven is found by experience and observation to be invariably in all instances. It is equal to full proof." Davis v. Curry, 5 Ky. (2 Bibb) 238, 239.

VIOLENT TEMPER.

Amiable, peaceable, slow to anger, make up the antithesis to quick or violent temper. In common parlance the two traits, character for violent temper and bad boy, are not one and the same. One may have a hasty or violent temper, and yet in common acceptance not be regarded as a bad boy. Martin v. State, 8 South. 858, 861, 90 Ala. 602, 24 Am. St. Rep. 844.

VIOLENTLY.

An allegation that a person committed an injurious act "violently and with great force" is equivalent to charging such person with the proposed wrong in the doing of the act. The word "violently," in this connection, means outrage, unjust force, attack, assault; and the word "force," in this connection, means unlawful violence offered to persons or things. Summers v. Tarney, 24 N. E. 678, 679, 123 Ind. 560.

"Violently" means with violence, and as used in an indictment for rape imports that the act was against the consent of the prosecutrix. Commonwealth v. Fogerty, 74 Mass. (8 Gray) 489, 490, 69 Am. Dec. 264.

As by force or forcibly.

"Violently" signifies "with force," or "forcibly"; and an indictment charging that the defendant "violently and against her will" feloniously ravished a certain female is sufficient, as imputing that the act was done "by force." "Violence" is defined by Webster as "physical force." State v. Williams, 32 La. Ann. 335, 337, 36 Am. Rep. 272.

"Violently," as used in an indictment charging a man with assault on a female with intent to violently and against her will ravish and carnally know her, is not equivalent to "by force," as used in Rev. St. c. 154, § 17, defining rape as ravishing and carnally knowing a female by force and against her will. Worcester defines "force" as "strength, vigor, might, energy, power, or violence," and "violently" as "with violence, forcibly, or vehemently." The term "force," when applied to the acts of a man in illicit sexual intercourse with a female, has a peculiar and technical meaning. The definition nearest to its exact meaning is "violence, power exerted against the will or consent." Webster. Dict. One signification of the active verb "to force" is to ravish, to violate by force, as a female, and conveys to the mind ideas similar to those which are imparted by the words "by force." The adverb "violently" has a more general meaning. If used by a man in application to acts of sexual intercourse, without accompanying language indicating compulsion, it would not of necessity import a crime against the person of a female who was the subject of the acts. State v. Blake, 39 Me. 322, 324.

"Violently," as used in an indictment charging a person with "violently" and feloniously raping, ravishing, and carnally knowing a female, is equivalent to the word "forcibly," and supplies its place. Walling v. State, 7 Tex. App. 625, 628.

As by violence.

An indictment charging the taking of certain articles from the person of the prosecuting witness "violently" held fairly equivalent to an allegation that they were taken "by violence," in the words of the statutory definition. The definition of "violently" is in a violent manner, and "violent" is defined as moving or acting with physical strength, urged or impelled with force. Webster. Int. Dict. The signification of the word "violently," when applied to the forcible and felonious taking of articles of value from the person of another, is not strained when held to be equivalent to the words "by violence." Craig v. State, 62 N. E. 5, 6, 157 Ind. 574.

VIOLIN.

A violin is a small instrument, played upon exclusively by the hand. When used by a musician in his business, it is exempt, under Gen. St. c. 133, § 32, exempting from attachment the implements of a debtor necessary for carrying on his trade or business, etc. Goddard v. Chaffee, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 395, 396, 79 Am. Dec. 796.

VIRTUE.

See "By Virtue of."

VIRTUOUS.

"Virtuous," as used in a statute providing that if any person shall by persuasion and promise of marriage, or other false and fraudulent means, seduce a virtuous unmarried female, etc., means a woman who has never had unlawful sexual intercourse. O'Neill v. State, 11 S. E. 856, 857, 85 Ga. 383.

On a prosecution for seduction of a "virtuous unmarried female," the judge charged that "the presumption of law is that the female alleged to have been seduced was virtuous, and that presumption remains until removed by proof. She must have personal chastity. If she at the time of the alleged seduction had never had unlawful intercourse with man, if no man had then carnally known her, had had carnal intercourse with her, she was a virtuous female within the meaning of the law. If man had then carnally known her, had had carnal intercourse with her, she is not a virtuous female within the meaning of the law." In discussing this charge the court said: "Under the definition the judge gave the jury of this word [virtuous] it means simply a woman who has never before been guilty of fornication or adultery. She may be a bad woman at heart; she may be filled with all uncleanness; she may be burning with lust; and yet, if through lack of opportunity, she be yet not an actual violator of the law, she is a virtuous woman in the sense of this law, and one may be guilty of the fiendish crime of seducing her, inducing her to submit to his lustful embraces, and to allow of criminal intercourse. I do not think so. It needs no fraud or vile acts to make an actual criminal of such a woman. She cannot be seduced from virtuous, chaste thoughts to lustful desires and lascivious passions. She is there already." Wood v. State, 48 Ga. 192, 288, 15 Am. Rep. 664.

VIRTUTE OFFICII.

See "By Virtue of His Office."

VIS MAJOR.

"Vis major" is translated as "superior force." It is used in the civil law in the same way that the words "act of God" are used in the common law. Brousseau v. The Hudson, 11 La. Ann. 427, 428.

A loss is said to have been caused by vis major when it results immediately from a natural cause, without the intervention of man, and could not have been prevented by the exercise of prudence, diligence, and care, and the use of those appliances which the situation of the party renders it reasonable that he should employ. Story defines "vis major" to be any irresistible natural cause, which cannot be guarded against by the ordinary exertions of human skill and prudence; and this definition is approved by Chief Justice Cockburn, in Nugent v. Smith, 1 C. P. Div. 423, 437. Thus a storm of unusual and extraordinary violence, a sudden gust of wind, and a tempest have been held to be examples of vis major. The George Shiras (U. S.) 61 Fed. 300, 301, 9 C. C. A. 511.

VISIBLE.

The word "visible" is defined by Webster to mean "noticeable; apparent; open; conspicuous." In the Century Dictionary, as "apparent; open; conspicuous; as a man with no visible means of support; discoverable; in sight; obvious; manifest; clear; distinct; plain; patent; unmistakable." An object that is noticeable, apparent to the touch, may be said to be "visible." Gale v. Mutual Aid & Accident Ass'n, 21 N. Y. Supp. 893, 895, 66 Hun, 600.

"Visible" means perceptible by the eye, that may be seen, apparent, open, or obvious, and is so used in reference to visible defects in machinery or appliances. Kansas City & P. R. Co. v. Ryan, 35 Pac. 292, 294, 52 Kan. 637.

The words "outward, open, actual, visible, substantial, and exclusive," in connection with a change of possession, mean substantially the same thing. They mean not concealed, not hidden, exposed to view; free from concealment, dissimulation, reserve, or disguise; in full existence, denoting that which not merely can be, but is opposed to potential, apparent, constructive, and imaginary; veritable; genuine; certain; absolute; real at present time, as a matter of fact; not merely nominal; opposed to form; actually existing; true; not including, admitting, or pertaining to any others; undivided; sole; opposed to inclusive. Bass v. Pease, 79 Ill. App. 808, 818.

The word "visible," as used in the collision rules, when applied to lights, shall mean visible on a dark night, with a clear atmosphere. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 2863, 2876, 2886.

VISIBLE MARK.

An accident insurance policy providing that it should not cover any injury, fatal or otherwise, of which there is no "visible mark" upon the body, does not necessarily mean a bruise, contusion, laceration, or broken limb, but may be any visible evidence of an internal strain which may appear within a reasonable time after the injury is received. Thayer v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 41 Atl. 182, 183, 68 N. H. 577 (citing Pennington v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 85 Iowa, 468, 52 N. W. 482, 39 Am. St. Rep. 306; United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n v. Barry, 131 U. S. 100, 9 Sup. Ct. 755, 33 L. Ed. 60; Freeman v. Mercantile Ass'n, 156 Mass. 351, 354, 30 N. E. 1013, 17 L. R. A. 753).

The death of the insured was a "visible mark" of injury upon the body, within the meaning of an accident policy providing that the insurance shall not cover any injury of which there is no visible mark upon the body, and a localized redness of the tissues of the brain, though not revealed until the autopsy, was a visible mark. The terms of the policy do not require that the mark should be upon the surface of the body. In United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n v. Barry, 9 Sup. Ct. 755, 759, 131 U. S. 100, 33 L. Ed. 60, the policy provided that it should not extend to any injury of which there was no external visible sign. The court, in charging, said that the visible sign does not necessarily require that the injury should be external. Visible signs of injury are not to be confined to broken limbs or bruises on the surface of the body. There may be other external indications which are visible signs of internal injury. Complaint of pain is not a visible sign. Complaint of internal soreness is not such a sign; but if the internal injury produces, for example, a pale and sickly look in the face, or causes vomiting, or sends forth to the observation of the eye any signs of the injury, then those are external and visible signs, provided they are the direct results of the injury. Union Casualty & Surety Co. v. Mondy, 71 Pac. 677, 679, 18 Colo. App. 395.

VISIBLE MEANS OF SUPPORT.

In a statute including among disorderly persons those who have no visible means of support, the use of the word "visible" indicates that appearances must to some extent be relied on. "Visible" and "apparent" are words of similar meaning. People v. Herlick, 26 N. W. 767, 59 Mich. 503.

VISIBLE POSSESSION.

By "visible possession" is meant that the true owner must have actual knowledge of the hostile claim, or the possession must be so open, visible, and notorious as to give notice to the world that the right of the true owner is invaded intentionally and with the purpose to assert a claim adversely to his. Johnston v. City of Albuquerque (N. M.) 72 Pac. 9, 11 (citing 1 Cyc. 997).

VISIBLE PROPERTY.

An averment that a person has "no visible property exempt from execution" is not an equivalent to an averment that he is insolvent or unable to respond in damages. Connery v. Swift, 9 Nev. 39, 43.

VISIBLE RISK.

An open and visible risk is such as would in an instant appeal to the senses of an intelligent person. It is one so patent that a person familiar with the business would instantly recognize it. Johnston v. Oregon S. L. & U. N. Ry. Co., 31 Pac. 283, 286, 23 Or. 94.

VISIBLE SIGN OF INJURY.

The word "visible" is defined by Webster to mean noticeable, apparent, open, or conspicuous. "An object that is noticeable, apparent to the touch, may be said to be visible." In an action upon an accident policy, providing that benefits should not extend to any injury of which there should be no external or visible signs, it appearing that plaintiff was severely injured in his diaphragm, etc., but that there was no objective evidence of the same visible to the eye upon his person, it being ascertainable only by manipulation of the muscles, he was held entitled to recover. The evidence of the injury need not be necessarily visible to the eye. If it can be ascertained by applying the hand upon the body, it is sufficient. Gale v. Mutual Aid & Accident Ass'n, 21 N. Y. Supp. 893, 895, 66 Hun. 600.

Whether the phrase, "visible and external signs of injury," in a clause of an accident policy providing that the benefits shall not extend to any bodily injury of which there shall be no external and visible signs upon the body of the insured, extends to a case where the only marks on the body of the insured are bloody froth at the mouth, and spots upon the face and breast, and red spots upon the body, is a question to be determined by the jury, and such marks cannot be said as a matter of law not to constitute external and visible signs of injury. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n v. Newman, 8 S. E. 805, 809, 84 Va. 52.

A clause in an accident policy that the insurance does not extend to any bodily injury of which there shall be no external and visible sign upon the body of insured does not apply to fatal injuries, but only to those not resulting in death. It would be utterly unjust if this condition applied in cases of death, as it would exclude recovery in all instances where death occurs by drowning, freezing, poisoning, suffocation, concussion, means of death leaving no outward mark, and also where the insured has been killed and his body is missing. McGlinchey v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 14 Atl. 13, 16, 80 Me. 251, 6 Am. St. Rep. 190.

VISIT.

See "Is Visiting."

Frequent distinguished, see "Frequent."

A rule of court empowering the marshal to regulate the admission of persons to "visit" the prisoners did not authorize him at his pleasure to prevent an attorney from visiting his client in the prison, provided the attendance of the attorney was on the client's business, necessary to and required by him. Ex parte Matanle, 4 Barn. & Adol. 365.

"Visits," as used in Burns' Ann. St. 1894, § 2080 (Horner's Ann. St. 1897, § 2002), providing that whoever, being a male person, frequents or visits a gambling house or houses, shall be fined, is a verb, and as used is singular, and not plural, making a single visit sufficient to constitute an offense. Roberts v. State, 58 N. E. 203, 204, 25 Ind. App. 366.

VISITOR.

A "visitor" is one who comes to a locality for pleasure or health, and who engages in no business while there, and remains only for a reasonable time; and if the party engages in any business himself, or employs his slave in any business, except as mere personal attendants upon himself or family, then the character of visitor is lost, and his slave is entitled to freedom. Ex parte Archy, 9 Cal. 147, 157, 168.

"Visitor" is defined as one who visits or comes or goes to see another, as in civility or friendship, but, as used in a trip railway ticket, providing that the ticket is good for the members of the family of the purchaser or visitors to such family, is used in the sense of "guest"; and as a guest is one who is a visitor sojourning in the house of or entertained at the table of another, and partakes of his hospitality, a neighbor who frequently makes short calls is not a visitor, within the meaning of the ticket. Odell v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 45 N. Y. Supp. 464, 465, 18 App. Div. 12.

VISITORIAL POWER.

An individual who conveys property in trust for charitable purposes has, unless he should assign it to another, what is called the "visitorial power," in the exercise of which he may prescribe rules for its management and for the administration of the trust; but it is a power which may be assigned, and the incorporation of trustees under a charter which confers on them the full power and management devests such right of the founder, and vests it in the corporation. Trustees of Union Baptist Ass'n v. Huhn, 26 S. W. 755, 756, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 249.

The "visitorial power" connected with a charitable trust is a mere power to control and arrest abuses and to enforce a due observance of the statutes of a charity. It is not a power to revoke the gift, to change its uses, or to divest the rights of the parties entitled to the bounty. Allen v. McKean, 1 Fed. Cas. 489, 498.

VISNE.

The word "visne," from which juries were drawn at common law, is interpreted to mean county. Ex parte McNeeley, 36 W. Va. 84, 90, 14 S. E. 436, 15 L. R. A. 226, 32 Am. St. Rep. 831.

The word "visne," as employed in stating the fact that at common law a jury was required to be returned from the visne, meant from the neighborhood, or the place where the cause of action was laid or the crime charged to have been committed. State v. Kemp, 34 Minn. 61, 63, 24 N. W. 349.

VITIATION.

"Vitiation" of a contract is not avoidance. It is, under circumstances, ground for it. Richardson v. Horn, 31 Atl. 896, 897, 8 Houst. 26.

VIVUM VADIUM.

See "Vadium Vivum."

VOCATION.

Laws 1876, c. 122, forbidding the employment of children for any immoral purpose, exhibition, or practice, or in any "business, exhibition, or vocation" injurious to the health or dangerous to life or limb, means an employment either vicious in itself or one partaking of the character of an amusement, and would not include any productive industries or necessary occupations. Hickey v. Taaffe, 1 N. E. 685, 686, 99 N. Y. 204, 52 Am. Rep. 19.

VOCIFEROUS.

"Vociferous" means making a loud outcry, clamorous, or noisy, as vociferous heralds. Under Pen. Code, art. 314, punishing the use of "loud and vociferous language" in manner calculated to disturb persons assembled for innocent amusement, a conviction will be set aside where witnesses testified that they heard defendant, but were unable to understand what he said, though they were in the same room. Anderson v. State (Tex.) 20 S. W. 358, 359 (citing Webst. Dict.).

VOID.

See "Utterly Void"; "Become Void."
See, also, "Null and Void."

"Void" means of illegal form; of no effect whatever. And. Law Dict. Of no legal force or effect. Webst. Dict. Chandler v. Kennedy, 85 N. W. 439, 441, 8 S. D. 56.

The term "void," in its more limited sense, implies an act of no effect at all, being a nullity ab initio. Inskeep v. Lecony, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 111, 112.

A void act is one which is entirely null, not binding on either party. Cummings v. Powell, 8 Tex. 80, 81, 85.

A void thing is in legal effect no thing, and it may be doubtful whether a void act is capable of ratification against the wish of the other parties to the transaction. Smith v. Genet (N. Y.) 2 City Ct. R. 88, 91.

Where a statute provides that a particular act shall be void, and fixes a penalty for the perpetration of the act, which is also prohibited, the word "void" should be interpreted as meaning void absolutely, in accordance with the technical accuracy of the word. Land, Log & Lumber Co. v. McIntyre, 75 N. W. 964, 966, 100 Wis. 258, 69 Am. St. Rep. 925.

A void contract is one which has no legal force, and which for that reason cannot be enforced. King v. King, 59 N. E. 111, 112, 63 Ohio St. 363, 52 L. R. A. 157, 81 Am. St. Rep. 635.

A void contract is a mere nullity, of which any one can take advantage, and which is, in legal estimation, incapable of being ratified. Callis v. Day, 88 Wis. 643, 646 (citing Schouler, Dom. Rel. p. 518).

A void contract is one without legal effect. Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Scammon, 32 N. E. 914, 915, 144 Ill. 490, 19 L. R. A. 114 (citing Bishop, Cont. § 611).

"Void," when used in a statute, does not always mean absolutely void for every purpose, and, when determining its meaning in a given case, regard must be had to the subject-matter of the statute, and its scope, purpose, and effect. Columbia & P. S. R. Co. v. Brailiard, 40 Pac. 382, 12 Wash. 22.

The term "void" is perhaps seldom, unless in a very clear case, to be regarded as implying a complete nullity; but it is, in a legal sense, subject to large qualifications, in view of all the circumstances calling for its application and the rights and interests to be affected in a given case. Brown v. Brown, 50 N. H. 538, 552.

The word "void," as used in a policy of insurance to the effect that, if the insured shall have or shall hereafter make any other insurance on the property insured, then the policy shall be void, does not mean voidable or something else than void, although the interpretation works a forfeiture and avoids the instrument. This construction of the word "void" should be given to the second of two policies of insurance on the same property, each containing the condition that, if the insured had or should make other insurance, then the policy should be void. Thus the second policy would not invalidate the first, for it never effected the insurance. Jersey City Ins. Co. v. Nichol, 85 N. J. Eq. (8 Stew.) 291, 299, 40 Am. St. Rep. 625.

Illegal distinguished.

There is a wide distinction between that class of contracts which are unlawful, in the sense that the law will not enforce them, and which we usually term "void contracts," and that other class which are designated as "illegal contracts." Money paid in furtherance of an illegal contract cannot be recovered back; but it is otherwise as to money paid in furtherance of a contract which by statute is void, but not illegal, as in the case of contracts void under the statute of frauds. An illegal contract may be repudiated by either party. City of Los Angeles v. City Bank, 34 Pac. 510, 512, 100 Cal. 18.

Irregular distinguished.

Void proceedings would destroy jurisdiction in a court of inferior powers, but merely irregular proceedings would not. The difference is not readily perceivable. Generally speaking, it is the difference between substance and form, between void and voidable, or between void action and imperfect action. Error or nullity goes to the foundation, and discovers that the proceedings have nothing to stand on, while irregularity denotes that the court was acting within its jurisdiction, but failed to consummate its work in all respects according to the required forms. The one applies to matters which are contrary to law; the other, to matters which are contrary to the practice authorized by law. One relates more to the act, and the other more to the manner of it. Cobbossee Nat. Bank v. Rich, 16 Atl. 506, 508, 81 Me. 164.

Voidable distinguished.

A thing is void which is done against law at the very time of doing it, and when no person is bound by the act. But a thing is voidable which is done by a person who ought not to have done it, but who nevertheless can avoid it himself after it is done. Martin v. Cowles, 18 N. C. 29, 32; Anderson v. Roberts (N. Y.) 18 Johns. 515, 527, 9 Am. Dec. 235; Arnold v. Fuller's Heirs, 1 Ohio 458, 467.

A thing that is void is as if never done to all purposes, so that all persons may take advantage thereof. Again, a thing may be void to some purposes only, and still further a thing may be so void by operation of law that he that will have the benefit of it will make it good. Franklin v. Kelley, 2 Neb. 79, 98.

A thing strictly void in the technical sense of the word is incapable of ratification, while those that are merely voidable may be ratified. Dayton v. Nell, 43 Minn. 246, 248, 45 N. W. 231.

A contract is void when it is a nullity, binding on no party, and unsusceptible of ratification. When either party is bound, or it may be confirmed, it is only voidable. Breckenridge's Heirs v. Ormsby, 24 Ky. (1 J. J. Marsh.) 236, 240, 19 Am. Dec. 71.

A void act is one which is entirely null, not binding on either party, and not susceptible of ratification, while a voidable act is one which is obligatory on others until disaffirmed by the party with whom it originates. Cummings v. Powell, 8 Tex. 80, 85.

The true distinction between void and voidable acts, orders, and judgments is that the former can always be assailed in any proceeding, and the latter only in a direct proceeding. Alexander v. Nelson, 42 Ala. 462, 469.

While it is true that the word "void" has been inappropriately used by lawyers and judges, it nevertheless has a determinate meaning in law, when applied as an adjective to statutes, contracts, and other acts intended to effect some purpose or purposes, which meaning is that such contracts and statutes or acts are totally ineffectual for the purposes, or for a part of the purposes, intended. If totally ineffectual for any purpose intended, they are simply void. If totally ineffectual as to only a part of such purposes, they are relatively void. This distinction is not identical with that between void and voidable, since a voidable act or contract takes effect as intended, and continues to be effectual to all intents and purposes, until it is set aside or nullified as to all or some part of the persons or things which were before affected by it. For example: The contracts of infants and contracts procured by fraud, if not otherwise against law or the policy of law, are not void, but only voidable, because they take effect when made, and remain effectual until avoided; whereas, void acts, though in the form of contracts or statutes, never take any effect as such, and acts which are only relatively void are denied any effect, even temporary, against a part or class of the persons or things that they purport or were intended to bind or affect. Watkins v. Wilhoit (Cal.) 85 Pac. 646, 648.

Bingham, in his treatise on Infants (page 8), says: "A void act never is or never can be binding, neither on the party in whom it originates nor on others. A voidable act is binding on others until disaffirmed by the party with whom it originates. So that the contract of an infant is voidable, not void, and infancy is a personal privilege, of which only the infant can avail himself." Slocum v. Hooker (N. Y.) 13 Barb. 536, 537.

A deed or instrument utterly void is as one which never existed. It passes nothing, and confers no right or title upon the party named as grantee. But an instrument or deed fraudulent as to creditors and purchasers, and voidable by them, is nevertheless valid as between the parties to it, and the title is deemed to have passed and vested in the grantee or assignee, liable to be divested at the suit of the party aggrieved. A void deed is incapable of confirmation or of being made good by any subsequent act of the party, while one which is merely voidable may be made good by matter ex post facto. Hone v. Woolsey (N. Y.) 2 Edw. Ch. 289, 291.

In Terrill v. Auchauer, 14 Ohio St. 80, it is said that the distinction between the words "void" and "voidable," in their application to contracts, is often of great practical importance, and when entire accuracy is required the term "void" can be properly applied only to those contracts that are of no effect whatever, such as are mere nullities and incapable of confirmation or ratification. The distinction suggested between deeds that are void and those that are voidable only is usually regarded as determining the necessity for the interposition of a court of equity. Commercial Nat. Bank v. Wheelock, 40 N. E. 636, 638, 52 Ohio St. 534, 49 Am. St. Rep. 738.

Bacon considers a fraudulent gift void as to some persons only, and says it is good as to the donor and void as to creditors. Wherever the act done takes effect as to some purposes and is void as to persons who have an interest in impeaching it, the act is not a nullity, and therefore in a legal sense it is not void, but merely voidable. Another test of a void act or deed is that every stranger may take advantage of it, but not of a voidable one. Again, a thing may be void in several degrees: (1) Void, so as if never done, to all purposes, so as all persons may take advantage thereof; (2) void as to some purposes only; (3) so void by operation of law that he that will have the benefit of it, may make it good. Anderson v. Roberts (N. Y.) 18 Johns. 515, 527, 9 Am. Dec. 235.

That is absolutely void which the law or the nature of things forbids to be enforced at all, as contracts to do any legal act or omit a legal public duty, or contracts in a form forbidden by law, or made by persons having no legal power or capacity to contract, as bonds of married women. That is relatively void or voidable which the law condemns as a wrong to individuals and refuses to enforce against them, as contracts tainted with fraud or any other kind of wrong against persons. A contract that is absolutely void cannot be ratified or confirmed, for that would be giving sanction and validity to an agreement which the law declares illegal and refuses to enforce; but a contract relatively void, though it cannot be enforced against the defrauded party, is not so void as to vitiate the title under it as against a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice, or prevent the party intended to be injured by it from renouncing the privilege which the law allows him of rejecting it altogether, or from ratifying it and thus making it his own. Seylar v. Carson, 69 Pa. (19 P. F. Smith) 81, 87.

The word "void," as used in the New York statute declaring that a contract for the sale of land not expressing the consideration shall be void, is used in its natural signification, and it cannot be said that a contract declared void by the statute still subsists as a contract, and that the only effect of the statute is to deprive a party of the remedy; but the word "void" is used as a word of substance, and therefore a contract in derogation of the provisions of the statute is utterly void and of no effect. Marie v. Garrison (N. Y.) 13 Abb. N. C. 210, 257.

Whatever may be avoided may in good sense be called void, and this use of the term "void" is not uncommon in the language of statutes and of courts; but in regard to the consequences to third persons the distinction is highly important, because nothing can be founded on a deed which is absolutely void, whereas from those which are only voidable fair titles may flow. These terms have not always been used with nice discrimination; indeed, in some books there is a great want of precision in the use of them. Somes v. Brewer, 19 Mass. (2 Pick.) 184, 191, 13 Am. Dec. 408 (cited and approved in Crocker v. Bellangee, 6 Wis. 645, 668, 70 Am. Dec. 489; Bromley v. Goodrich, 40 Wis. 131, 140, 22 Am. Rep. 685).

The terms "void" and "voidable," as used in our books, seem to stand for absolutely and relatively void. That is absolutely void which the law or the nature of things forbids to be enforced at all, and that is relatively void which the law condemns as a wrong to individuals and refuses to enforce as against them. Pearsoll v. Chaplin, 44 Pa. (8 Wright) 9, 15.

Construed as voidable.

The term "void" is equivocal. It may import absolutely null, or merely voidable. Mailholt v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 82 Atl. 989, 991, 87 Me. 374, 47 Am. St. Rep. 836.

"Void" is an indefinite expression, that has no fixed meaning, and what is only void-able is often called void. Larkin v. Saffarans (U. S.) 15 Fed. 147, 152 (quoting Abb. Law Dict.; Bouv. Law Dict.).

The word "void" has been held to mean voidable. Election Cases, 65 Pa. (15 P. F. Smith) 20, 34.

The word "void," in one of its recognizable uses, signifies, not a thing which is void in such a sense that it cannot be rendered valid, but merely which is void unless and until it shall be rendered valid by some event or act. Rheiner v. Union Depot St. R. Co., 17 N. W. 623, 625, 31 Minn. 289.

It is a common practice of legislatures and courts to use the words "void" and "voidable" interchangeably, where the distinction between them is not material to the question or case under consideration. United States v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. (U. S.) 67 Fed. 948, 954, 15 C. C. A. 96.

Courts often speak of acts and contracts as "void," when they mean no more than that some party concerned has a right to avoid them. Beecher v. Marquette & P. Rolling Mill Co., 7 N. W. 695, 696, 45 Mich. 103.

"Void" has with lexicographers a well-defined meaning as of no legal force or effect whatsoever, or null and incapable of confirmation or ratification. But it is sometimes and not infrequently used in enactments, in opinions, in contracts, and in arguments in the sense of voidable; that is, capable of being avoided. The word "void," when used in any of these instruments, will therefore be construed in the one sense or the other as shall best effectuate the intent in its use, which will be determined from the whole language of the instrument and the manifest purpose it was framed to accomplish. Van Schaack v. Robbins, 36 Iowa, 201, 203.

Where the word "void" is used to secure a right or to confer a benefit on the property, it will, as a rule, be held to mean null and incapable of confirmation; but, if used respecting the rights of individuals capable of protecting themselves, it will often be held to mean voidable only. Van Schaack v. Robbins, 36 Iowa. 201, 203 (cited in Denny v. McCown, 54 Pac. 952, 953, 34 Or. 47).

By the term "void" is not always meant that utter negativeness which is the equivalent of nonexistence, but more often is meant that which, relatively to persons, circumstances, conditions, or forms of action, may be treated as though it were nonexistent. In this latter sense there is little distinction between it and the word "voidable." Frazier v. Jeakins, 68 Pac. 24, 23, 64 Kan. 615, 57 L. R. A. 575.

There is in our books great looseness and no little confusion in the use of the terms "void" and "voidable," growing, perhaps, in some degree out of the imperfection of our language. There are at least four kinds of defects which are included under these expressions, while we have but those two terms to express them all. 2 Kent, Comm. 234; 7 Bac. Abr. 64, "Void and Voidable"; 22 Vin. Abr. 12, "Void and Voidable"; Jac. Law Dict. "Void." (1) Proceedings may be wholly void, without force or effect as to all persons and for all purposes, and incapable of being or being made otherwise. This is the broadest sense of the word, but the cases which fall within this signification are probably not numerous. (2) Things may be void as to some persons and for some purposes, and as to them incapable of being otherwise, which are yet valid as to other persons and effectual for other purposes; as a deed executed by an idiot, and by others capable of contracting, may be void as to the idiot, and yet binding as to the others. An instrument in form of a deed, but without a seal, may be void as a conveyance, and yet be binding for some other purposes. (3) Things may be void as to all persons and for all purposes, or as to some persons and for some purposes, though not so as to others, until they are confirmed; but, though said to be void, they are not so in the broadest sense of that term, because they have a capacity of being confirmed, and after such confirmation they are binding. For this kind of defect our language affords no distinctive term. They are strictly neither void—that is, mere nullities—nor voidable, because they do not require to be avoided, but until confirmed they are without validity. They are usually spoken of as void; and, as usage is the only law of language, they are so called correctly. It is, therefore, always to be considered an open question, to be decided by the connection and otherwise, whether the term "void" is used in a given instance in one or the other of these in some respects dissimilar senses. (4) Contracts and proceedings are properly called voidable which are valid and effectual until they are avoided by some act. Prima facie they are valid, but they are subject to defects, of which some person has a right to take advantage, who may by proper proceedings for that purpose entirely defeat and destroy them. Voidable contracts are in general, perhaps always, like the last class referred to, capable of confirmation by the party who has the right to avoid them. 1 Bouv. Inst. § 1321. Matters which are properly voidable are very commonly spoken of as void. Smith v. Saxton, 23 Mass. (6 Pick.) 483, 487. Technically and legally speaking, they are improperly so called. But the word "void" is so often used by good writers, and even by legal writers, in the sense of invalid, ineffectual, or not binding, that it can hardly be said that this is not a correct and legitimate use of the term. Our books are full of examples of the loose and inaccurate use of these words, and many difficult questions have grown out of this circumstance. They are so common that we think no strong inference can be justly drawn from the unqualified use of these words as to the particular kind or degree of invalidity meant, where the attention of the court is not clearly directed to that point. State v. Richmond, 26 N. H. (6 Fost.) 232, 237.

The courts sometimes call contracts in general restraint of trade "unlawful" or "illegal," but in every instance it will be found that these terms were used in the sense merely of "void" or "unenforceable" as between the parties; the law considering the disadvantage so imposed upon a contract a sufficient protection to the public. Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Hollis, 55 N. W. 1119, 1121, 54 Minn. 223, 21 L. R. A. 337, 40 Am. St. Rep. 319.

Same—Conveyances and deeds.

While the word "void" is of broader technical signification, it is often used in the sense of "voidable." An instance is found in Gardner v. Early, 69 Iowa, 42, 28 N. W. 427, where a deed, because of failure to carry forward the tax to the tax lists of other years, as required by law, is said to be invalid and void; but the language immediately following and other language of the opinion clearly indicates that nothing more was intended than that it was a voidable instrument. Lawrence v. Hornick, 46 N. W. 987, 988, 81 Iowa, 193.

A voidable indenture is valid, subsisting, and operating, until it be avoided by those who have power over it. Overseers of Bloomfield Tp. v. Overseers of Acquackanonck Tp., 8 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 257, 260.

In considering the question whether a deed of one who was insane at the time of the execution thereof is void absolutely, or merely voidable, the court said: "The term 'void,' as applicable to conveyances or other agreements, has not at all times been used with technical precision, nor restricted to its primary and limited sense, as contradistinguished from 'voidable'; it being frequently introduced, even by legal writers and jurists, where the purpose is nothing further than to indicate that a contract was invalid and not binding in law. But the distinction between the terms 'void' and 'voidable' in their application to contracts is often one of great practical importance, and whenever an entire technical accuracy is required the term 'void' can only be properly applied to those contracts that are of no effect whatever, such as are a mere nullity and incapable of confirmation or ratification." And it was held that the deed of one insane was voidable merely, and could be ratified by the grantor when he was lucid. Allis v. Billings, 47 Mass. (6 Metc.) 415, 417, 39 Am. Dec 744.

Same—Conveyance of pre-empted land.

"Void," as used in Act Cong. Sept. 4, 1841, declaring that a conveyance by a party who has entered land under the pre-emption laws before a patent shall have been issued shall be void, means voidable. Franklin v. Kelley, 2 Neb. 79, 98.

Same—Franchises.

The word "void," as used in an unlimited sense, implies an act of no effect, a nullity ab initio, but as used in the provision for forfeiture in Laws 1867, c. 895, incorporating a bridge company, and providing that in certain contingencies all rights and privileges created should be null and void, clearly means voidable. New York & L. I. Bridge Co. v. Smith, 42 N. E. 1088, 1089, 148 N. Y. 540.

Same—Fraudulent conveyance.

The term "void" is often used in the statutes and decisions in a way to mislead. A law which declares an instrument valid between parties, but void as to creditors, means that it is voidable by creditors who choose to attack it. Being valid as between the parties, it is good as to all the world except those who assail it upon the ground permitted by the law. In re Antigo Screen Door Co. (U. S.) 123 Fed. 249, 256, 59 C. C. A. 248.

The term "void," in Sand. & H. Dig. § 3472, providing that conveyances of property in fraud of creditors shall be void, means voidable. Doster v. Manistee Nat. Bank, 55 S. W. 137, 138, 67 Ark. 325, 43 L. R. A. 334, 77 Am. St. Rep. 116.

The word "void," as used in Rev. St. § 2320, providing that every conveyance of the land made with intent to defraud creditors shall be void, does not mean absolutely void, but voidable. That it has been held to mean absolutely void in many and most jurisdictions, and is so laid down by many and perhaps most of the elementary writers, cannot be denied. But that the law in Wisconsin is to the contrary, as was declared by this court as early as Hyde v. Chapman, 33 Wis. 391, decided in 1873, cannot be gainsaid. The doctrine of that case has been fully considered and approved since that time. French Lumbering Co. v. Theriault, 83 N. W. 927, 928, 107 Wis. 627, 51 L. R. A. 910, 81 Am. St. Rep. 856.

While the statute pronounces transfers for the purpose of hindering and defrauding creditors void, the word "void" is construed by all the courts to mean voidable. Such transfers are valid between the parties and operate to transfer the title to the grantee, subject to being impeached at the suit of creditors. Brasie v. Minneapolis Brewing Co., 92 N. W. 340, 341, 87 Minn. 456, 94 Am. St. Rep. 709 (citing Spooner v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 76 Minn. 317, 79 N. W. 305, 77 Am. St. Rep. 651; Hathaway v. Brown, 22 Minn. 214).

"Void" is a word more often used to point out what may be avoided by those interested in doing so than to indicate an absolute nullity—a proceeding or act to be disregarded on all occasions. Many things are called void, not absolutely so, which can only be called relatively void; for instance, conveyances in fraud of creditors are declared by statute to be void, yet they are good unless attacked by such creditors, and if they fail to attack them for the period of limitations they become absolutely valid. So in a contract for the sale of land, or for a lease, it is common to insert a clause that the instrument shall be void in certain contingencies, yet it remains perfectly valid unless the provision is taken advantage of by the vendor or the vendee. Kearney v. Vaughan, 50 Mo. 284, 287.

The word "void" is not always used in an absolute sense. It has from the earliest times been applied to fraudulent gifts of goods, which, though good against the donor, are said to be void as to his creditors. The transaction falls within the class described as void as to some persons only. Colt v. Sears Commercial Co., 37 Atl. 311, 314, 20 R. I. 64.

When it is said that a voluntary deed is void as against the creditors of a grantor, or will be set aside, the terms "void" or "set aside" are to be understood as meaning only that the conveyance, while good as against all others, shall not operate to defeat the equity of the creditors of the grantor. Hence an insurance policy requiring sole and unconditional ownership is not void when taken out by the grantee of realty by deed of gift, though the deed has been adjudged void as against the grantor's creditors. Steinmeyer v. Steinmeyer, 42 S. E. 184, 185, 64 S. C. 413, 59 L. R. A. 319, 92 Am. St. Rep. 809.

The word "void," as used in the statute of frauds relating to the creation or transfer of an estate, will generally be understood as meaning voidable, and therefore capable of being made unavoidable by ratification, as part performance of a parol contract for the sale of lands, or performance to an extent that renders it impossible to restore the original position of the parties, will take the case out of the statutes. In re Muller's Estate (Pa.) 16 Phila. 321.

A conveyance by a fraudulent vendee of goods in payment or security of the vendor's debt requires no other assent than that which is contained in the vesting of the vendee with all the vendor's right in the property. The word "void," as used in the statement of the principal that a fraudulent conveyance of property is void as to the creditors of the vendor, means that the rights of the creditor as such are not, with respect to the property, affected by the conveyance, but that he may, notwithstanding the conveyance, avail himself of all the remedies for collecting the debt out of the property or its avails which the law has provided in favor of creditors, and in pursuing those remedies he may treat the property as though the conveyance had not been made. Webb v. Brown, 3 Ohio St. 246, 254.

Under the statute declaring that sales made by a debtor, with intent on the part of the debtor and the purchaser to defraud the debtor's creditors, shall be deemed utterly void and of no effect as between the parties to the sales, the sales are not void; nor is it true, without qualification, that they are void as against creditors. Such sales are void against such creditors only as are able, by means of some kind of legal process, to fasten on the property or its proceeds while in the hands of the fraudulent vendee; but, however fraudulent the original purchase may have been, if the vendee, before the rights of the creditor are in any way fixed by legal process or proceeding, honestly restores it to the vendor, the vendee is exonerated from further liability. Hallowell v. Bayliss, 10 Ohio St. 536, 542.

Same—Insurance policy.

In the construction of an insurance policy, the word "void" may be used in a variety of senses, and is not in such cases used in its extreme sense. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Burget, 61 N. E. 712, 714, 65 Ohio St. 119, 55 L. R. A. 826, 87 Am. St. Rep. 596.

Though a policy usually stipulates that a breach of its conditions on the part of the insured would render the policy void, this word is always employed in the sense of voidable. Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Allen, 24 South. 399, 403, 119 Ala. 436.

Where a policy of insurance provides that it should become void while the note remains overdue and unpaid, the effect of the default was merely to defeat the right to recover for any loss occurring during its continuance. Williams v. Albany City Ins. Co., 19 Mich. 451, 463, 2 Am. Rep. 95.

The word "void" in a contract has often been held to mean voidable only, and at the election of the party wronged. Although a condition be attached to an insurance policy declaring it shall be void on failure to pay an assessment within a specified time, yet the policy does not thereby become ipso facto void. The company may at its option declare the policy canceled and notify the delinquent, or may waive its right of avoidance and continue to assess the premium note. Columbia Ins. Co. v. Buckley, 83 Pa. 293, 296, 24 Am. Rep. 172.

The word "void," as used in a fire insurance policy, providing that, if the insured shall have any other insurance on the property insured without the consent of the company, the policy shall be void, is to be regarded as meaning that the company may at its exclusive option treat it so, and not that the policy becomes an absolute nullity as to either party. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Spliers, 87 Ky. 285, 293, 8 S. W. 453.

The term "void," as used in How. Ann. St. § 4349, declaring void all insurance policies containing other or different terms than those expressed in the Michigan standard policy, means voidable. Armstrong v. Western Mfrs.' Mut. Ins. Co., 54 N. W. 637, 638, 95 Mich. 140.

Same—Judicial sale.

In Allis v. Billings, 47 Mass. (6 Metc.) 415, 417, 39 Am. Dec. 744, the court says the term "void," as applicable to conveyances or other agreements, has not at all times been used with technical precision, nor restricted to the particular and limited sense, as contradistinguished from voidable; it being frequently introduced, even by legal writers and jurists, where the purpose is nothing further than to indicate that a contract was invalid and not binding in law. The distinction between the terms "void" and "voidable" in their application to contracts is often one of great practical importance, and whenever entire technical accuracy is desired the term "void" can only be properly applied to those contracts that are of no effect whatsoever, such as are mere nullities and incapable of confirmation or ratification. In Rex v. Inhabitants of Hipswell, 8 Barn. & C. 471, it is said that "void" is sometimes construed "voidable"; and, where the provision is introduced for the benefit of the parties only, such a construction may be right, but when it is introduced for public purposes, and to protect those who are incapable of protecting themselves, it should receive its full force and effect. It is so used in Code, § 441, providing that a judicial sale of real estate shall be void when the purchaser was one of the appraisers thereof. Terrill v. Auchauer, 14 Ohio St. 80, 85.

Same—Lease.

Where a lease provided that the leased premises should be used only as a dwelling and boarding and lodging house, and should not be sublet, and also contained a provision that the lease should be void if the tenant failed to perform on his part, the word "void" meant voidable at the option of the lessor. Smith v. Sinclair, 84 Atl. 943, 59 N. J. Law, 84.

"Void," as used in a lease providing that it shall become "void" on the failure of the tenant to pay the stipulated rent, means "voidable at the landlord's election." Bowman v. Foot, 29 Conn. 331, 338 (citing Jones v. Carter, 15 Mees. & W. 718).

The provisions of St. 1850, c. 54, § 3, that an illegal use of premises rented shall make void the lease under which the tenant holds, makes it void only at the option of the lessor; the conditions being intended for his benefit. Almy v. Greene, 13 R. I. 350. In Trask v. Wheeler, 89 Mass. (7 Allen) 109, the court says: "If it were to be held that the lease is made void against the will of the landlord, any tenant, desiring to get rid of his lease, might do so by violating the statute. Though the lease is declared void, yet it belongs to that class of things which are said to be void only as to some persons." Small v. Clark, 54 Atl. 758, 760, 97 Me. 304.

Same—Mortgage.

The term "void," as used in the statute requiring mortgages without delivery of possession to be absolutely void as to classes of persons referred to, bears the sense of voidable, or subject to be avoided. Tolbert v. Horton, 18 N. W. 647, 648, 31 Minn. 518.

Same—Municipal ordinance.

The term "void" has been used indiscriminately in some cases, as applied to ordinances which are nullities and those which may be avoided as an unreasonable or improper exercise of authority. An ordinance may be unreasonable in its provisions, though dealing with a subject on which municipal authorities have power to legislate, and such ordinances have been termed void, but yet are only so in the sense that their unreasonableness is a good defense against their enforcement. Hewes v. Glos, 48 N. E. 922, 923, 170 Ill. 436.

Same—Note or check given for money won on wager.

Much confusion has grown out of the ill-advised and inaccurate use of the words "void" and "voidable." Where the purpose of a statute is to protect a person presumably unable to protect himself, the word "void" may with good reason be construed under certain circumstances to mean voidable only; but we know of no reason for applying this rule to a statute whose purpose is to subserve a public policy, and as used in a statute providing that all notes or contracts given for money won on any wager shall be void, the word is used in its exact meaning. In this state the word "void," used in certain statutes, has been construed to mean voidable only, as in Burns' Ann. St. 1894, § 2724, providing that conveyances by persons of unsound mind shall be held void; and a contract of suretyship by a married woman, declared void under Burns' Ann. St. 1894, § 6964, is construed to be voidable only, coverture being a personal defense. Irwin v. Marquett, 59 N. E. 38, 39, 26 Ind. App. 383, 84 Am. St. Rep. 297.

Notwithstanding the general tendency of courts to construe the word "void" as "voidable" only, when used in statutes that affect contracts made in disregard of their provisions, yet, where a public policy is to be subserved, as the suppression of usury or gaming, the settled rule is to give to the language employed its full force and effect. In Maxw. Interp. St. (2d Ed.) 256, it is said: "In general, however, it would seem that, where the enactment has relation only to the benefit of the particular person, the word 'void' would be understood as voidable only at the election of the persons for whose protection the enactment was made, and who are capable of protecting themselves, but that when it relates to persons not capable of protecting themselves, or when it has some object of public policy in view which requires the strict construction, the word receives its natural full force and effect." Under Rev. St. § 4269, providing that "all promises, agreements, notes, bills, bonds or other contracts, * * * when the whole or any part of the consideration of such promise * * * is for money won or lost * * * upon any game whatever, * * * shall be absolutely void and of no effect," a check given for money lost at a game of cards is void and of no effect, and the indorsee although a bona fide holder of such check without notice cannot recover upon it against the drawer. Lagonda Nat. Bank v. Portner, 46 Ohio St. 381, 384, 21 N. E. 634.

Same—Pardon obtained by fraud.

The word "void" is used in different senses, and frequently used to mean voidable. Where the term is used in reference to solemn judgments and acts of the superior courts, it may mean no more than voidable. The judgment or proceedings may be avoided, but until this is done, in the direct and regular course of revision, they stand. A record of a judgment may be avoided for fraud, but not between the parties or privies in a court of law. Hartshorn v. Day, 60 U. S. (19 How.) 211, 223, 15 L. Ed. 605. The use of the term "void" is not uncommon in the language of statutes and courts. In that sense it was employed in the opinion in Work v. Corrington, 34 Ohio St. 64, 75, 32 Am. Rep. 345, in the remark that pardons obtained by fraud are held to be void. It means simply that a pardon obtained by fraud is void, when in a proceeding before a court having jurisdiction for the purpose, with ample opportunity to the person holding the pardon to defend, such pardon is declared to be void. Knapp v. Thomas, 39 Ohio St. 377, 388, 48 Am. Rep. 462.

Same—Preference by insolvent.

The word "void" is not always used in an absolute sense. It has from the earliest times been applied to fraudulent gifts of goods, which, though good against the donor, are said to be void as to its creditors. Such transactions fall within the class of acts described as void as to some persons only, and which are made good by subsequent matter. The Legislature, in its provision that preferences by an insolvent shall be void, has used the customary word; yet, as creditors may affirm such a conveyance or waive their right to treat it as void, it is also properly called voidable. Colt v. Sears Commercial Co., 37 Atl. 311, 315, 20 R. I. 64.

The word "void," in the insolvent law, providing that a preferential transfer or conveyance by an insolvent, or one in contemplation of insolvency, within four months of the filing of a petition, etc., shall be void, and the assignee may recover the property or the value thereof as assets of the insolvent debtor, is always construed as voidable, meaning simply that such conveyances are voidable only in favor of proceedings under and in aid of the law. Smith v. Brainerd, 35 N. W. 271, 272, 37 Minn. 479.

Same—Purchase of corporation stocks, etc., by director.

Rev. St. Ohio, § 3313, provides that all stocks, bonds, or securities of a railroad company, purchased of the company by a director thereof, either directly or indirectly, for less than their par value, shall be null and void. Held, that the word "void" should be interpreted as used in the sense of voidable; such statute being for the protection of the corporation. Toledo, St. L. & K. C. R. Co. v. Continental Trust Co. (U. S.) 95 Fed. 497, 525, 36 C. C. A. 155.

Same—Sale by administrator or executor.

The words "void" and "voidable" are not always used in statutes and reports with entire legal accuracy, and the word "void" is often construed as meaning only voidable, and is so used in Rev. St. § 3914, providing that sales of real estate by an administrator, where he becomes interested in the purchase, should be void. If the statute should be construed so as to avoid sales by executors, administrators, and guardians on the ground stated, or for secret frauds, as against innocent purchasers for value, titles founded upon them would be so doubtful and uncertain that few would care to purchase or pay a fair price for them. Melms v. Pabst Brewing Co., 66 N. W. 518, 521, 93

Wis. 153, 57 Am. St. Rep. 899; Gibson v. Gibson, 78 N. W. 917, 918, 102 Wis. 501; Veeder v. McKinley-Lanning Loan & Trust Co., 86 N. W. 982, 986, 61 Neb. 892.

The word "void," in Gen. St. 1878, c. 57, § 41, providing that "no executor, administrator, or guardian making the sale shall directly or indirectly purchase . . . any part of the real estate so sold, and all sales made contrary to the provisions of this section shall be void," was used in the sense of voidable, and the sales prohibited are void; that is, at the election, timely exercised, of those interested in the land sold. It is difficult to lay down when courts may construe the term "void," occurring in a statute, to mean "voidable." We think generally it is to be understood that the Legislature employ the term in its strict and precise meaning, and that, when it says a thing shall be void, it means that the thing shall be null and of no effect whatever. White v. Iselin, 5 N. W. 359, 360, 362, 364, 26 Minn. 487.

Same—Sale of infant's real estate.

The word "void," as used in the statute authorizing the sale of infant's real estate, and providing that, unless bonds shall be given, the sale shall be void, should be construed to mean voidable. The common law pronounces a certain class of deeds by infants void, but still it is admitted that no such deed could be treated as void under all circumstances by the infant, and especially by the other and the adult party. In that class of cases, and many others, the words "void" and "voidable" are used indiscriminately by legislators and jurists, without regard to their true import. To make them void as to both parties, in a true sense of the word, might frustrate the object of their protection, and pervert an intended blessing into a curse to them, by depriving them of the profit of beneficial contracts. Thornton v. McGrath, 62 Ky. (1 Duv.) 349, 352.

In Thornton v. McGrath, 62 Ky. (1 Duv.) 349, the court held that, where the word "void" is used in the statutes and decisions of Kentucky in reference to sales of the lands of infants, it should be considered as meaning "voidable," for the reason that infants ought not to be deprived of the benefit of sales which were beneficial to them. The New York courts construe the statute in the same way, and hold that sales made in proceedings which are not in strict conformity with the statute are void. Ammons v. Ammons, 50 W. Va. 390, 403, 40 S. E. 490, 495 (citing Battell v. Torrey, 65 N. Y. 294).

VOID AND OF NO EFFECT.

The words "void and of no effect," as used in a fire policy providing that it shall become void and of no effect by the failure or neglect of the insured to comply with the terms, conditions, and covenants, are to be construed as equivalent to "voidable" or "to be treated as void by the insurer at his own exclusive option." Brumfield v. Union Ins. Co., 7 S. W. 893, 894, 87 Ky. 122.

The phrase "void and of no effect," when used in statutes declaring certain instruments to be void and of no effect, is sometimes used in the sense of voidable, merely—that is, capable of being avoided; as, for instance, where statutes provide that certain transactions are void as to creditors, they mean that the creditors may avoid them, and not others. Ewell v. Daggs, 2 Sup. Ct. 408, 412, 108 U. S. 143, 27 L. Ed. 682.

Rev. St. § 2756, declares that in case of garnishment the garnishee process shall not only be served on the garnishee, but on the defendant in the main action, and that unless the garnishee summons be so served, or proof is made that after due diligence such service cannot be made within the state, the service on the garnishee shall become void and of no effect from the beginning. Held, that the phrase "shall become void and of no effect from the beginning" cannot be construed to mean simply that the proceedings shall become voidable at the election of the defendant, since there was no reason why the Legislature might not provide that a failure to perform a certain act after jurisdiction of the res had been obtained shall divest the court of jurisdiction ab initio; and that the provision that a default in the performance of such service shall render the service on the garnishee void and of no effect must be construed according to its terms, which would clearly have the effect of divesting the court of the jurisdiction provisionally obtained by the service on the garnishee. Globe Milling Co. v. Boynton, 59 N. W. 132, 136, 87 Wis. 619.

The Ohio statutes declaring that every gift, grant, or conveyance of lands, etc., made or obtained to defraud creditors, etc., or to defraud or deceive the person or persons who shall purchase such lands, tenements, etc., shall be deemed utterly "void and of no effect," means void only as against such creditors or subsequent purchasers. Burgett's Lessee v. Burgett, 1 Ohio (1 Ham.) 469, 480, 13 Am. Dec. 634.

VOID AS AGAINST CREDITORS.

The expression that a fraudulent transfer is "void as against creditors" simply means that the rights of creditors as such are not, with respect to the property, affected by such transfer, but that they may, notwithstanding the transfer, avail themselves of all the remedies for collecting their debts out of the property or its avails which the law provides in favor of creditors, and that in pursuing these remedies they may treat the property as though the transfer had not been made—that is, as the property of the debtor. Allen v. Steiger, 31 Pac. 226, 228, 17 Colo. 552 (citing Bump, Fraud. Conv. [2d Ed.] p. 453).

VOID DEVISE.

There is a distinction between a lapsed and a void devise. In the former case the devisee dies in the intermediate time between the making of the will and the death of the testator, but in the latter case the devise is void from the beginning, as, if the devisee be dead when the will was made. Murphy v. McKeon, 32 Atl. 374, 53 N. J. Eq. (8 Dick.) 406.

VOID JUDGMENT.

"Void," as applied to judgments, means that they are an absolute nullity. Cochrane v. Parker, 54 Pac. 1027, 1029, 12 Colo. App. 169.

A void judgment is in legal effect no judgment. By it no rights are devised. From it no rights can be obtained, it being worthless in itself. All proceedings founded upon it are equally worthless. It neither binds nor bars any one. Bennett v. Wilson, 55 Pac. 390, 391, 122 Cal. 509, 68 Am. St. Rep. 61 (citing Freem. Judgm. § 117); Adams v. Agnew, 15 S. C. 36, 43; American Acc. Co. v. Reigart, 92 Ky. 142, 144, 17 S. W. 280, 281; Stafford v. Gallops, 31 S. E. 265, 266, 123 N. C. 19, 68 Am. St. Rep. 815.

A void judgment is one which has only the semblance of a judgment, as if rendered by a court having no jurisdiction. McKee v. Angel, 90 N. C. 60, 62.

A judgment, if actually rendered in favor of or against a party not before the court, is void, and no execution can legally issue thereon. When a judgment is void, it is a nullity whenever invoked, and it may be collaterally attacked in any court. Moore v. Perry (Tex.) 56 S. W. 120, 121.

A void judgment is that which is a judgment in name and form only. On collateral attack it matters not that a court erred in determining any question of law or fact. The judgment is not thereby made void. Burke v. Interstate Savings & Loan Ass'n, 64 Pac. 879, 881, 25 Mont. 315, 87 Am. St. Rep. 416.

The word "void" can with no propriety be applied to a thing which appears to be sound, and which, while in existence, can command and enforce respect, and whose infirmity cannot be made manifest. If a judgment rendered without in fact bringing the defendants into court cannot be attacked collaterally on this ground, unless the want of authority over them appears in the record, it is no more void than if it were founded upon a mere misconception of some matter of law or of fact occurring in the exercise of an unquestionable jurisdiction. Peyton v. Peyton, 68 Pac. 757, 763, 28 Wash. 278.

Mr. Freeman, in his work on Judgments (4th Ed.) 116, in speaking of void judgments, says "that they must be so from one or more of the following causes: (1) Want of jurisdiction over the subject-matter; (2) want of jurisdiction over the parties or some of them; (3) want of power to grant the relief contained in the judgment." Pitkin v. Burnham, 87 N. W. 160, 162, 62 Neb. 385, 55 L. R. A. 280, 89 Am. St. Rep. 763.

A void judgment is in reality no judgment at all. It is a mere nullity. It is attended by none of the consequences of a valid adjudication, nor is it entitled to the respect accorded one. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Stires (Neb.) 94 N. W. 629, 631 (citing Black, Judgm. § 170); Pitkin v. Burnham, 87 N. W. 160, 162, 62 Neb. 385, 55 L. R. A. 280, 89 Am. St. Rep. 763; State v. Bates, 61 Pac. 905, 906, 22 Utah, 65, 83 Am. St. Rep. 768. It can neither affect nor create rights as to the person against whom it professes to be rendered. It binds him in no degree whatever. It has no effect as a lien on his property. It does not raise an estoppel against him. It is not necessary to take any steps to have it reversed, vacated, or set aside. Black, Judgm. § 170. A void judgment is really no judgment. It leaves the parties litigant in the same position they were in before the trial. It leaves them in exactly the same position as if no trial had taken place. Such a judgment confers authority upon no one to enforce it. State v. Bates, 61 Pac. 905, 906, 22 Utah, 65, 83 Am. St. Rep. 768. A party against whom it is given may escape its effect as a bar, but only by application to have it vacated or reversed. Until that is done it is efficacious. Pitkin v. Burnham, 87 N. W. 160, 162, 62 Neb. 385, 55 L. R. A. 280, 89 Am. St. Rep. 763.

Judgments are frequently spoken of as "void" because they may be so declared in a proper proceeding. The general and correct rule, as established by authority, is that a judgment by a court of competent jurisdiction is not void unless the thing lacking or making it so is apparent on the face of the record. If the inaccuracy do not so appear, the judgment is not void, but voidable. One is a nullity, a mere brutum fulmen, and may be so treated by all persons in collateral as well as in direct attacks. The other, except in cases of fraud, is binding upon third parties and upon the parties to it as against a strictly collateral attack. Gall v. Fryberger, 75 Ind. 96; Bloomfield R. Co. v. Burress, 82 Ind. 83; Cain v. Goda, 84 Ind. 209 (cited in Earle v. Earle, 91 Ind. 27, 42).

Erroneous judgment distinguished.

A judgment rendered by a court which had no power so to do is void; it is as though there had been no judgment or process; it is coram non jndice. But if the court had jurisdiction and gave a wrong judgment, such judgment is merely erroneous. People v. Liscomb, 60 N. Y. 559, 568, 569, 19 Am. Rep. 211.

A "void judgment" is undoubtedly, in a broad sense of the term, an erroneous one. But a judgment may be manifestly erroneous, and yet not a void one. State v. Sheriff of Middlesex, 12 N. J. Law (3 J. S. Green) 68, 70 (citing Kempe v. Kennedy, 9 U. S. [5 Cranch] 173, 3 L. Ed. 70).

There is a distinction between "void" and "erroneous," as used with reference to acts from a judicial body, the general rule being that, where the body has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the person affected, its judgment in the case will not be void, though it may be erroneous. If the judgment is merely erroneous, it can be attacked, and the error corrected only by appeal or by a direct proceeding to set it aside, while if it be absolutely void it is a nullity from the beginning, and may be treated as such without further proceedings to have such nullity judicially declared. Kelly v. People, 4 N. E. 644, 645, 115 Ill. 583, 590, 56 Am. Rep. 184.

VOID ON ITS FACE.

A judgment void upon its face is one that appears to be void by an inspection of the judgment roll. The mere absence from the roll of a paper—as, for example, the return of the officer showing a service of the summons—cannot invalidate the judgment when the judgment itself recites the fact that the defendant was duly served with process. People v. Harrison, 24 Pac. 311, 312, 84 Cal. 607.

The phrase "void on its face," as applied to patents, means that a patent is seen to be invalid either when read in the light of existing law or by reason of what the court must take judicial notice of; as, for instance, that the land is reserved by statute from sale or is otherwise appropriated, or that the patent is for an unauthorized amount, or is executed by officers who are not intrusted by law with the power to issue grants of portions of the public domain. Poire v. Wells, 6 Colo. 406, 410.

VOID PROCESS.

"Void process" is defined to be such as was issued without power in the court to award it, or which a court has not acquired jurisdiction to issue in the particular case, or which fails in some material respect to comply with the requisite form of legal process. Bryan v. Congdon (U. S.) 86 Fed. 221, 223, 29 C. C. A. 670.

VOID TAX.

A void tax is no tax. It is as if there never had been any attempt at assessment. The owner is under no duty, either at law or in equity, to pay it. Hence there is no equitable reason for requiring the owner to pay such a tax before a cloud upon his title made by a tax sale shall be removed. Morrill v. Lovett, 49 Atl. 666, 668, 95 Me. 165, 58 L. R. A. 634.

VOIDABLE.

Void distinguished, see "Void."

A voidable contract is a contract which has some effect, but is liable to be made void by one of the parties or by a third party. Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Scammon, 32 N. E. 914, 915, 144 Ill. 490, 19 L. R. A. 114.

A voidable contract is one which is void as to the wrongdoer, but not void as to the wronged party unless he elect so to treat it. Inlow v. Christy, 40 Atl. 823, 824, 187 Pa. 186.

A voidable act is binding on others until disaffirmed by the party with whom it originates. Slocum v. Hooker (N. Y.) 13 Barb. 536, 537.

"Voidable" means subject to be avoided by judicial action of a court of adequate jurisdiction. The terms "voidable" and "null and void" are not the same. Pearse v. Morrice, 2 Adol. & El. 84.

VOIDABLE WILL.

There is no such thing known as a voidable will. McGee v. Porter, 14 Mo. 611, 612, 55 Am. Dec. 129.

VOIDS.

The word "voids" means the space between broken stones. United States v. Venable Const. Co. (U. S.) 124 Fed. 267, 269.

VOLITION.

"Volition" is the opposite of "accident." Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Vandecar (U. S.) 86 Fed. 282, 285, 30 C. C. A. 48.

VOLUNTARY.

See "Suicide, Voluntary or Involuntary."

"Voluntary" is defined to mean "done by design or intention; purposely; intentional; not accidental." Williams v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 31 N. Y. Supp. 343, 346, 82

Hun, 268; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Randolph (U. S.) 78 Fed. 754, 762, 24 C. C. A. 305; Campbell v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 60 S. W. 492, 495, 109 Ky. 661.

"Voluntary" implies acts of commission. Willey v. Laraway, 25 Atl. 436, 437, 64 Vt. 559.

Willful synonymous.

In speaking of the word "willful," as employed in statutory murder, the court says in McManus v. State, 36 Ala. 285: "'Willful' is not the synonym of 'voluntary.' In truth they express no idea which is common to both. The former is a word of much greater strength than the latter. Therefore, in this connection, it denotes governed by the will without yielding to reason; obstinate; stubborn; perverse; inflexible. 'Voluntary,' in this connection, means willing; acting with willingness. It is the antithesis of 'involuntary.'" State v. Preston, 34 Wis. 675, 684.

VOLUNTARY ABSENCE.

Rev. St. 1838, c. 34, § 2, subd. 7, providing that every settlement, when once legally acquired, shall continue until it shall be lost or defeated by acquiring a new one in the state, or by "voluntary or uninterrupted absence" from the town in which such legal settlement should have been gained for one whole year or upwards, means an absence, especially if the party resides within the state, during which the party is not a pauper needing and receiving support; and it does not mean an absence during which the town in which he has a legal settlement supports the absentee as a pauper in some other town in the state. Town of Scott v. Town of Clayton, 8 N. W. 171, 174, 51 Wis. 185.

VOLUNTARY ADMISSION.

See "Voluntary Confession."

VOLUNTARY ANNUITY.

17 Geo. III, c. 26, requiring grants of annuity to be registered, except that the act shall not apply to any "voluntary annuity granted without regard to pecuniary consideration," meant that any annuity granted for any other than a pecuniary consideration should, for the purpose of the act, be considered a voluntary annuity. An annuity granted in consideration of the grantee's giving up his business to the grantor was within the exception, and did not require registration. Crespigny v. Wittenoom, 4 Term R. 790, 793.

VOLUNTARY APPEARANCE.

A voluntary appearance of a defendant is equivalent to service of summons on him personally. Comp. Laws, § 9404; Ayers, Weatherwax & Reid Co. v. Sundback, 58 N. W. 4, 5, 5 S. D. 31.

A voluntary appearance of a party to a suit is a waiver of formal notice. Belt v. Blackburn, 28 Md. 242. Where defendant was notified by an officer that the latter had a summons for him, and he and his wife referred the officer to his attorney, who indorsed the summons, over his signature, "Enter my appearance for defendants," there was a voluntary appearance, constituting a waiver of formal service. Harrison v. Morton, 40 Atl. 897, 898, 87 Md. 671.

VOLUNTARY ASSIGNEE.

A voluntary assignee is a mere representative of the debtor, enjoying his rights only, and no others, and is bound where he would be bound. He is not the representative of the creditors, and is not clothed with their power. He is but a volunteer, and not a bona fide purchaser for value. He is, in short, but the hand of the assignor in the distribution of his estate among his creditors. Mills v. Ritter, 47 Atl. 194, 197 Pa. 353.

VOLUNTARY ASSIGNMENT.

A voluntary assignment "is a transfer, without compulsion of the law, by a debtor of his property to an assignee in trust to apply the same, or the proceeds thereof, to the payment of his debts, and to return the surplus, if any, to the debtor." Farwell v. Nilsson, 24 N. E. 74, 75, 183 Ill. 45 (cited in Same v. Cohen, 28 N. E. 35, 37, 138 Ill. 216, 18 L. R. A. 281); Ingram v. Osburn, 70 Wis. 184, 195 (citing Burrill, Assignm.).

A voluntary assignment is a transfer voluntarily made, without any compulsion of law, by a debtor of all or a part of his property to an assignee, as trustee to apply the property, or its proceeds, to the payment of a part or all of the assignor's debts, and to return the surplus, if there be any, to the debtor. Willcox v. Jackson, 4 Pac. 966, 973, 7 Colo. 521; Weber v. Mick, 23 N. E. 646, 649, 131 Ill. 520.

Voluntary assignments "have always been understood to be instruments voluntarily executed by a failing debtor, by which he assigns to some third person, as assignee or trustee, the whole, or sometimes the bulk, of his property, to be by said trustee distributed among the assignor's creditors in satisfaction of their demands." Weber v. Mick, 23 N. E. 646, 649, 131 Ill. 520.

A voluntary assignment is one which is made by the assignor of his own will, without legal compulsion, as distinguished from an assignment made in obedience to a law which compelled the assignor to make it.

Weider v. Maddox, 1 S. W. 168, 170, 66 Tex. 372, 59 Am. Rep. 617.

The term "voluntary," as applied to voluntary assignments, means voluntary as opposed to compulsory. It is applied to assignments to distinguish them from such as are made by the compulsion of the law, as under statutes of bankruptcy and insolvency, or by order of some competent court. Manny v. Logan, 27 Mo. 528, 530; Weber v. Mick, 23 N. E. 646, 649, 131 Ill. 520.

By the term "voluntary assignment" is meant a conveyance of some or all of a debtor's property in trust for the purpose of being disposed of by the trustee to raise a fund to pay debts, as distinguished from a sale to a creditor in payment of his claim, or from a pledge or hypothecation as a security in the nature of a mortgage. Wood v. Adler-Goldman Commission Co., 59 Ark. 270, 275, 27 S. W. 490, 491.

A voluntary assignment and conveyance of property by a debtor for the benefit of all his creditors, to an assignee, is not a judicial sale, and will not entitle the wife of the debtor to have partition. Willson v. Miller, 66 N. E. 757, 759, 30 Ind. App. 586 (citing Hall v. Harrell, 92 Ind. 408).

"A voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors implies a trust, and contemplates the intervention of a trustee. Assignments directly to creditors, and not upon trust, are not voluntary assignments for the benefit of creditors." Weber v. Mick, 23 N. E. 646, 649, 131 Ill. 520 (quoting Burrill, Assignm. §§ 2, 3).

"Voluntary assignment," as used in Act March, 1797, § 65, regulating the collection of duties on imports and tonnage, means an assignment, in trust, of all the debtor's property to pay debts, as distinguished from a mere sale of the property to a creditor in payment of his debts, or the mere pledge or hypothecation of property to a particular creditor, as a mere security in the nature of a mortgage. Dias v. Bouchaud (N. Y.) 10 Paige, 445, 461.

An assignment under a decree of court, or the passing of the legal title by such decree, is not a voluntary assignment. Burke v. Davis (U. S.) 63 Fed. 456, 459.

A provision in a lease that "the lessee shall not assign this lease, or let or underlet said premises, or any part thereof, without the consent of the lessor," is violated by a voluntary assignment by the lessee for the benefit of creditors. Medinah Temple Co. v. Currey, 44 N. E. 839, 840, 162 Ill. 441, 53 Am. St. Rep. 320.

A voluntary assignment is a general disposition by an insolvent debtor of all his property and effects to all or a part of his creditors, whereby he abandons his business, or puts himself in such a position that it is impossible for him to continue it. Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Max, 58 N. W. 14, 16, 5 S. D. 125, 24 L. R. A. 524.

Act Cong. March 2, 1799, § 65, provided that in all cases of insolvency the debt due to the United States should first be satisfied, and that the cases of insolvency should extend to cases in which a debtor, not having sufficient property to pay all his or her debts, should make a voluntary assignment thereof for the benefit of his creditors. Held, that where an assignment of part of the property was made to one person, and in 31 days the balance of the property was assigned to another, the claims of the United States were entitled to preference as to all the property, the two assignments being considered as one voluntary assignment for the benefit of his creditors. Downing v. Kintzing (Pa.) 2 Serg. & R. 326, 336.

VOLUNTARY BANKRUPTCY.

The Supreme Court, in Metsker v. Bonebrake, 108 U. S. 66, 71, 2 Sup. Ct. 351, 353, 27 L. Ed. 654, said: "It is not a voluntary bankruptcy if the man is forced into it as against his will by his partner, any more than by any one else. A proceeding brought by a part of the members of a firm is, in its initiation, a voluntary one, and will remain so in its entirety, if upon notice the other member or members of a firm actively join with the petitioners, or by acquiescence consent to the adjudication of the partnership; but if the nonpetitioning member refuses to join the proceedings, and contests the adjudication, then the proceeding becomes, as to him, an involuntary one." In re Murray (U. S.) 96 Fed. 600, 602.

VOLUNTARY CONFESSION.

A voluntary confession is one which springs from the spontaneous suggestion of the party's own mind, free from the influence of any extraneous disturbing cause. State v. Clifford, 53 N. W. 299, 300, 86 Iowa, 550, 41 Am. St. Rep. 518 (citing People v. McMahon, 15 N. Y. 384, 385); Phillips v. People (N. Y.) 57 Barb. 353, 363; People v. Chapleau, 121 N. Y. 268, 273, 24 N. E. 469, 471.

A confession, especially an affirmative one, appearing to have been made with no expectation of its bringing good or averting evil, is termed "voluntary"; the real question being in every case whether or not the confessing mind was influenced in a way to create doubt of the truth of the confession. Gallaher v. State, 50 S. W. 388, 395, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 296; Grimsinger v. State, 69 S. W. 583, 593, 44 Tex. Cr. R. 1.

A "voluntary confession" means one not extorted by threats or violence, nor obtained by any direct or implied promise. Roesel v. State, 41 Atl. 408, 412, 62 N. J. Law, 216.

A confession is deemed to be voluntary if it is shown to have been made after the complete removal of the impression produced by an inducement, threat, or promise which would otherwise render it involuntary. People v. Kurtz (N. Y.) 42 Hun, 835, 843 (citing Steph. Dig. Ev. art. 22).

A confession is not voluntary if caused by an inducement or threat or promise, proceeding from any person in authority, having reference to the charge against accused. State v. Alexander, 33 South. 600, 601, 109 La. 557 (citing Regina v. Boswell, Car. & M. 584; Beckham v. State, 14 South. 859, 100 Ala. 15; Commonwealth v. Myera, 160 Mass. 530, 36 N. E. 481).

A voluntary confession is one made by a person accused of crime, of his own free will, not influenced by fear or promises. Prima facie all confessions are voluntary, and it is for the party objecting to their admission as evidence to show that they were uttered under such pressure of hope or fear as to raise a doubt of their accuracy. It is undoubtedly the duty of a court to guard carefully the rights of a defendant in this respect, and more especially so when the person is in the custody of the law, and the hopes or fears are supposed to be raised by an officer of the law. The fact that a defendant may think that it will be better for him if he confesses, or worse for him if he does not confess, is immaterial if that condition is brought about by his own independent reasoning. It is when that state of mind is induced by promises or threats or other inducement from without, that the confession is to be rejected. Commonwealth v. Sego, 125 Mass. 210, 213.

A voluntary confession is one not induced or obtained under the influence of hope or fear. Bush v. State, 33 South. 878, 879, 136 Ala. 85.

A voluntary confession is one not extorted by threats, or obtained by any direct or implied promise relating to some benefit to be derived by the prisoner in the criminal prosecution. Bullock v. State, 47 Atl. 62, 64, 65 N. J. Law, 557, 86 Am. St. Rep. 668.

A voluntary confession is one made without the influence of hope or fear, or for the purpose of gaining any benefit or avoiding any harm connected with the criminal charge. It is the hope of escape from temporal punishment which excludes, and the hope must be derived from the inducements. The evidence is rejected because the inducements may have led to a false statement, and the confession is not entitled to credit, and not because the public faith is pledged by means of the promise. Colburn v. Town of

The word "voluntary," in regard to an admission of one accused of crime, as contrasted with "compulsory," is used with a technical meaning indicating certain surrounding circumstances. The question is, shall the evidence be excluded because the conditions make the admission too unreliable to go to the jury? And so where the admission was made in the presence of the sheriff after the accused had been duly warned, but it was contended that the admission was induced by promises of a detective who had before had the prisoner in charge, it did not follow, as a matter of law, that the subsequent admission was caused by the prior inducement. It was a question of fact, and, there not appearing a clear and manifest error in the judge's determination that the admission was voluntary, it was held to be properly admitted. State v. Willis, 41 Atl. 820, 824, 71 Conn. 293.

VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTION.

Contributions made by the fellows or members of a society under an obligation to pay the amount, which obligation continues so long as they remain fellows or members, are nevertheless voluntary where the engagements were originally entered into voluntarily. Linnean Soc. of London v. Church Wardens of St. Anne, 26 Eng. Law & Eq. 212, 217; Church Wardens, etc., of St. Anne v. Linnean Soc., 3 El. & Bl. 793, 885.

A society organized for the promotion of literature and the arts was supported by voluntary contributions, so as to entitle it to the benefit of St. 6 & 7 Vict., c. 36, § 1, though strangers were admitted to the exhibition of paintings only on paying a small fee at the door; the money thus received being applied to the purposes of the society. Regina v. Overseers of Manchester, 16 Adol. & El. 450, 460.

VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCE.

"A voluntary conveyance is a conveyance without any valuable consideration. The adequacy of the consideration does not enter into the question. The character of purchase as voluntary is determined by the fact whether anything valuable passes between the grantor and grantee as a consideration for the transfer. If there is a valuable consideration, no matter how trivial or inadequate, the conveyance is not voluntary." Gentry v. Field, 45 S. W. 286, 287, 143 Mo. 399 (quoting Bump. Fraud. Conv. [3d Ed.] 267); Martin v. White, 42 S. E. 279, 280, 115 Ga. 866.

A voluntary conveyance is one made without any substantial consideration. Trumbull v. Hewitt, 62 Conn. 448, 451, 26 Atl. 350.

The Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut defines a voluntary conveyance to be one that is wholly without a valuable consideration. Washband v. Washband, 27 Conn. 424. Hence a conveyance which expresses as a consideration love and affection and a small sum of money is not, upon its face, voluntary. It depends upon the intention of the parties, and thus is to be ascertained by an inquiry into all the facts and circumstances which will throw light upon a question as to whether the deed was executed as the consummation of a sale or as the evidence of a gift. Martin v. White, 42 S. E. 279, 280, 115 Ga. 866.

To bring a conveyance within the category of a voluntary conveyance there must be a total want of any substantial consideration. Nevertheless a conveyance made on a good consideration only is a voluntary conveyance. Knight v. Kidder (Me.) 1 Atl. 142, 150 (citing 3 Washb. Real Prop. [3d Ed.] 320).

VOLUNTARY DEED.

A voluntary deed is one made without any consideration, and such a deed is presumed to be fraudulent as against existing creditors. Kimball v. Fenner, 12 N. H. 248, 250.

VOLUNTARY DEPOSIT.

A voluntary deposit is made by one giving to another, with his consent, the possession of personal property to keep for the benefit of the former, or of a third party. The person giving is called the "depositor," and the person receiving, the "depository." Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 2825; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 4001; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 1353.

The voluntary deposit takes place by the mutual consent of the person making the deposit and the person receiving it. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 2932.

VOLUNTARY DESTRUCTION.

In an action on a life insurance policy which provided that the company should not be liable in case of "self-destruction of the person, whether voluntary or involuntary," the insured having come to his death by reason of an overdose of laudanum, taken ostensibly to relieve pain, the court said: "The words 'voluntary' and 'involuntary' must be regarded as being used in the policy in a sense somewhat analogous to that in which they are employed in the criminal law. They do not include cases of death by accident or misadventure, but they must be held to include all cases where death results immediately and proximately from the culpable negligence of the insured. Doubtless, also, if this should ensue by the performance of the insured of an unlawful or criminal act, it would be a case of voluntary self-destruction, within the meaning of the policy." The trial court having limited the effect of this condition of the policy to cases of gross negligence instead of culpable negligence, such limitation was held to be erroneous. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Laurence, 8 Ill. App. (8 Bradw.) 488, 492.

VOLUNTARY DISCONTINUANCE.

"A discontinuance is voluntary when the plaintiff withdraws his suit." Hunt v. Griffin, 49 Miss. 742, 748.

VOLUNTARY ESCAPE.

A voluntary escape is where an officer having the custody of a prisoner, charged with or guilty of an offense, knowingly gives him his liberty with intent to save him from his trial or execution of his sentence. Porter v. State, 30 S. W. 791, 792, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 364 (citing 4 Bl. Comm.).

A "voluntary escape" is defined to be when a person, having a felon lawfully in his custody, voluntarily permits him to escape from it, or to go at large. This is felony in case the prisoner be imprisoned for felony, and treason in case the person be imprisoned for treason, etc. But a person voluntarily permitting such escape is not to be tried until the principal offender escaping is convicted. Martin v. State, 32 Ark. 124, 126 (citing 1 Hale, P. C., 590, 599).

In an action under a statute which gives debt against a sheriff who shall willfully or negligently suffer a debtor taken in execution to escape, the court said: "There are, at the common law, two kinds of escape—the one, willful, or voluntary, as it is oftener called; the other, negligent. Whether before or after the judgment, the common law gave an action on the case for an escape of either kind. The difference, and the only difference, between the consequences of voluntary and negligent escapes of a debtor in execution, was that in the former case the sheriff could not retake the party, whereas in the latter he might; and if he did so upon fresh pursuit, and subsequently kept the party in safe custody, the recaption formed a defense to an action afterwards brought. The same rule applies under the statute. Nothing could purge a voluntary escape, when prosecuted in either the common law or under the statute, and, in both, recaption before action brought for a negligent escape was a bar. An escape is voluntary when it is by the consent or default of the officer. All other escapes are negligent." Adams v. Turrentine, 30 N. C. 147, 151, 152.

If a jailer allows a prisoner committed on final process to go at large, or if he takes him from the jail into a part of the same building occupied by the jailer and his family, and allows him to take his meals there, it will be a voluntary escape, after which the jailer has no right to retake or recapture him. Riley v. Whittiker, 49 N. H. 145, 149, 6 Am. Rep. 474.

An escape is not voluntary unless it be with the consent or by the default of the sheriff. Therefore, where by statute a sheriff was obliged to give the prisoner the liberties of the prison on sufficient bail being furnished, and had no right to restrain the prisoner should he see him at large, the fact that the prisoner went beyond the liberties of the prison, and was seen by the sheriff, who made no effort to restrain him, would not constitute a voluntary escape. Tillman v. Lansing (N. Y.) 4 Johns. 45, 48.

VOLUNTARY EXPOSURE.

The word "voluntary," as used in an accident policy providing that the insurer shall not be liable for injuries occasioned by voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, would, if literally interpreted, embrace every exposure of the insured not actually required by the circumstances of his situation, or enforced by the superior will of others, as well as every danger attending such exposure that might have been avoided by the exercise of care and diligence upon his part; but the word should properly be construed as referring only to dangers of a real, substantial character, which the insured recognized, but to which he nevertheless purposely and conscientiously exposed himself, intending at the time to assume all the risks of the situation. The latter interpretation is most favorable to the insured, and hence within the usual rule that an insurance policy should be construed so as to favor the insured, while at the same time such interpretation does no violence to the words used, one of the accepted meanings of voluntary being "done by design or intention"; "proposed"; "intended." Campbell v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 60 S. W. 492, 495, 109 Ky. 661; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Randolph (U. S.) 78 Fed. 754, 762, 24 C. C. A. 305; United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n v. Hubbell, 47 N. E. 544, 546, 56 Ohio St. 516, 40 L. R. A. 453; Lehman v. Great Eastern Casualty & Indemnity Co., 39 N. Y. Supp. 912, 915, 7 App. Div. 424 (citing Miller v. American Mut. Acc. Ins. Co., 92 Tenn. [8 Pickle] 167, 21 S. W. 39, 20 L. R. A. 765; Keene v. New England Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 161 Mass. 149, 36 N. E. 891; Williams v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 82 Hun. 260, 31 N. Y. Supp. 343; Id., 133 N. Y. 367, 31 N. E. 222).

A "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," within the meaning of an accident policy avoiding the policy if the insured should be guilty of a voluntary exposure of unnecessary danger, implies a conscious, unintentional exposure; something which one is consciously willing to take the risk of. Commercial Travelers' Mut. Acc. Ass'n v. Springsteen, 55 N. E. 973, 978, 23 Ind. App. 657; Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Chambers, 24 S. E. 896, 898, 93 Va. 138, 40 L. R. A. 432; Keene v. New England Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 86 N. E. 891, 892, 161 Mass. 149.

"Voluntary exposure," as used in an accident insurance policy conditioned that voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger should relieve the insurer from liability, means an intentional exposure; and, unless the insured intentionally did the act exposing him to danger, it cannot be said that he exposed himself to danger, within the terms of the policy. De Loy v. Travelers' Ins. Co. of Hartford, 32 Atl. 1108, 1109, 171 Pa. 1, 50 Am. St. Rep. 787.

The expression "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," in an accident policy providing that it does not cover voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, is equivalent to exempting the insurer from liability where the accident results from an intentional exposure of one's self to unnecessary danger. If the danger be concealed and unknown to the party who suffers from it, then it cannot be said he has voluntarily exposed himself to it. To constitute such exposure one must intentionally have done some act which reasonable or ordinary prudence would pronounce dangerous. Union Casualty & Surety Co. v. Harroll, 40 S. W. 1080, 98 Tenn. 591, 60 Am. St. Rep. 873.

Where an insurance policy provides that it does not cover death occasioned by "exposure to unnecessary danger," such phrase means an unnecessary risk taken of some known danger, which must itself be the actual cause of death. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. v. Anderson, 47 Pac. 331, 334, 5 Kan. App. 18.

The term "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," in a clause of an accident policy, indicates a consciousness of danger by the insured to which he voluntarily exposes himself, or where the danger is so obvious that one of ordinary intelligence would necessarily have apprehended it. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Sittig, 181 Ill. 111, 54 N. E. 903, 48 L. R. A. 359.

Under an accident policy excepting from risks "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," an accident is not within the exception unless the insured was aware of the danger he incurred, and purposely assumed the risk thereof. Ashenfelter v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. (U. S.) 87 Fed. 682, 683, 81 C. C. A. 193.

An accident insurance policy providing that it should not extend to a case of death or injury caused by "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger" means the intentional doing of some act which reasonable and ordinary prudence would pronounce dangerous. There is a clear distinction between a voluntary act and a voluntary exposure to danger. Hidden danger may exist, yet the exposure thereto without any knowledge of the danger does not constitute a voluntary exposure to it. The approach to any unknown and unexpected danger does not make the act a voluntary exposure thereto. The result of the act does not necessarily determine the motive which prompted the action. The act may be voluntary, yet the exposure involuntary. Burkhard v. Travellers' Ins. Co., 102 Pa. 262, 263, 48 Am. Rep. 205; Equitable Acc. Ins. Co. v. Osborn, 9 South. 869, 870, 90 Ala. 201, 13 L. R. A. 267.

An act is not "voluntary," within the terms of an accident insurance policy excepting loss from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, if it is such as a man of ordinary prudence would be induced to do by the circumstances. Duncan v. Preferred Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 13 N. Y. Supp. 620, 621, 59 N. Y. Super. Ct. (27 Jones & S.) 145.

The term "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," as used in a clause of a policy of accident insurance, means a consciousness of the danger by insured, to which he voluntarily exposes himself, or that the danger is so apparent that a man of ordinary intelligence would, in the circumstances, necessarily have known it. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Sittig, 54 N. E. 903, 181 Ill. 111, 48 L. R. A. 359.

"Voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger and hazardous or perilous adventure," as used in an accident insurance policy exempting the insurer from liability for death produced from such exposure, means wanton or grossly imprudent exposure. Manufacturers' Acc. Indemnity Co. v. Dorgan (U. S.) 58 Fed. 945, 952, 7 C. C. A. 581, 22 L. R. A. 620.

To show a voluntary exposure on the part of deceased, the evidence must have disclosed a design or intention on his part to expose his life or a high degree of negligence; something more than mere ordinary negligence. Williams v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 31 N. Y. Supp. 343, 346, 82 Hun, 268.

Where an accident policy provided for exemption from liability where the injury arose from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, the unnecessary danger must be known or obvious, such as prudent men should know; and, where an insured had been kicked by a mule, the company was liable unless insured knew of the dangerous kicking qualities of the mule, or had reasonable grounds for apprehending such qualities. Carpenter v. American Acc. Co., 24 S. E. 500, 502, 46 S. C. 541.

Where an accident policy exempts the insurer from liability in case of accident arising from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, the insured is not to be held to have voluntarily exposed himself to unnecessary danger unless he acted with gross or wanton negligence. And hence, where the insured was injured by being tossed by a bull which he was driving out of a pasture, the insurer was not exempt from liability unless he believed, or had good reason to believe, that there was danger in the attempt. Johnson v. London Guarantee & Accident Co., 72 N. W. 1115, 1116, 115 Mich. 86, 40 L. R. A. 440, 69 Am. St. Rep. 549.

Where an accident policy contained a clause exempting the company from liability from accident caused by voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, and in an action on the policy there was evidence that deceased brought on the difficulty which resulted fatally, but there was also evidence that he did not bring on the trouble, though there was an exposure to danger, it was not a voluntary exposure. Collins v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 63 Mo. App. 253, 256.

Insured, who was cashier in a bank, called at a sawmill to have some lumber cut for a cabinet to be used in the bank. While standing near a saw he stepped on a block which was concealed in the sawdust on the floor, and instinctively threw out his arm to recover himself. His hand came in contact with the saw and was cut off. Held, that the insured, in entering the sawmill, was acting within the scope of his employment, and it would not be held, as a matter of law, that he voluntarily exposed himself to unnecessary danger, though shortly before the accident he had been operating the saw himself. Hess v. Van Auker, 32 N. Y. Supp. 126, 127, 11 Misc. Rep. 422.

"Voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," within the meaning of such a condition in an accident insurance policy, must be an act done designedly, and not accidentally, and must have been done in obedience to and regulated by the will of the person who does it, and who must have intentionally and consciously assumed the risk of the obvious danger. Where the insured, while asleep on the top of the boilers of a steamboat, was injured by steam escaping from the safety valve, there was no voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, within the meaning of an exception of the policy, unless the insured was conscious of the danger from escaping steam; it not being sufficient to preclude him from recovery that he had been warned that it was dangerous to be on top of the boilers. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Clark, 59 S. W. 7, 9, 109 Ky. 350, 95 Am. St. Rep. 374.

Where a locomotive engineer thought it necessary to put on the brakes of an attached car in order to check the speed on a descending grade, and there was no brakeman there to do it, his attempting to pass from the tender of the engine to the car for that purpose, while the train was moving at the slow rate of eight miles per hour, was not a "willful exposure to unnecessary danger or peril," within the meaning of the term as used in an accident insurance policy. Providence Life Ins. & Inv. Co. v. Martin, 32 Md. 310, 314.

Boarding moving train.

An attempt to board a train of cars running eight or ten miles an hour, by a young, strong, and active man, with experience as a travelling man in boarding and alighting from moving cars, is an exposure to "obvious risk of injury," within the meaning of an accident insurance policy which excepts the insurer from liability for injuries received as a result of voluntary or unnecessary exposure to danger or to obvious risk of injury, and, when made merely for the purpose of avoiding the delay incident to missing the train, will prevent a recovery against the insurer for injuries received in consequence of such attempt. Small v. Travelers' Protective Ass'n of America, 45 S. E. 706, 118 Ga. 900, 63 L. R. A. 510.

Cleaning gun.

"Voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," as used in a policy of insurance exempting the company from liability if the assured was injured by voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, was not equivalent to ordinary negligence, but would require a degree of consciousness of danger before the exposure would be voluntary. The cleaning of a loaded gun without knowing that it was loaded would not constitute such voluntary exposure. Miller v. American Mut. Acc. Ins. Co., 21 S. W. 39, 43, 92 Tenn. (8 Pickle) 167, 20 L. R. A. 765.

Crossing track.

It is "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," within the prohibition of an accident policy, for one to attempt to cross a railroad track between the cars of a third train standing on it, when he saw that its crew were in their places, merely on his own assumption that he would have time enough before it was started. Wells v. Putnam, 47 N. E. 1005, 1006, 169 Mass. 226.

Insured, after waiting at a street crossing 10 or 15 minutes for a freight train to move, undertook to cross by climbing upon the drawheads of the cars, and cross through the train, and, while in the act, the train started, catching and crushing his foot. In holding that such act constituted "voluntary and unnecessary danger," within the meaning of that clause in his accident policy, which exempted the company from liability for any injury occasioned by voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, the court said: "These facts manifestly establish voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger. Indeed, it would be difficult to state a case more clearly within these terms. It is said to be undoubted law that the act of climbing over or between stationary cars without looking to see whether they are attached to an engine or not is the grossest kind of negligence, and such as will in ordinary actions preclude recovery for injuries received while making the attempt. Climbing over these drawheads and freight car couplings was not a case of the plaintiff going into concealed danger, as in some of the cases cited by plaintiff's counsel, but was that of taking a position obviously and necessarily dangerous." Bean v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp., 50 Mo. App. 459, 462, 463.

Crossing trestle.

Where a person was insured under an accident insurance policy which exempted the insurer from liability for accidents resulting from the insured's voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, the fact that the insured crossed a railroad trestle bridge having a plank walk and fence railing on one side, much used by the public, did not show, as a matter of law, that he exposed himself to unnecessary danger. Where, on a dark night, the insured, in his right mind, attempted to walk across a railroad trestle where there was no railing, and nothing to walk on but ties 10 inches apart, he voluntarily exposed himself to unnecessary danger. Follis v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 62 N. W. 807, 809, 94 Iowa, 435, 28 L. R. A. 78, 58 Am. St. Rep. 408.

An accident policy contained a stipulation exempting the company from liability for injuries occasioned by voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, hazard, or perilous adventure. During a dark and rainy night the insured, with two packages in his hands or arms, attempted by choice to pass over a trestle which he knew to be dangerous, other ways being open to him. Held, that there was in such conduct a voluntary exposure, etc., notwithstanding that it was his usual way of travel, and that he had been going, as had many others, that way for 10 years. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Jones, 80 Ga. 541, 7 S. E. 83, 12 Am. St. Rep. 270.

Discharging regular duty as switchman.

Where an insurance policy contains a clause exempting insurer from liability in case of death from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, such provision does not include a case where one is killed in the discharge of his regular duty as a railroad switchman while handling broken cars. National Ben. Ass'n v. Jackson, 2 N. E. 414, 416, 114 Ill. 533.

Escaping from officer.

Where the insured, in order to escape a police officer at the door of the room where he was, lowered himself from the window by a strip of bedticking, which broke, and let him fall, causing his death, it was caused by his own "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," within the meaning of an accident policy which did not cover death or disability resulting from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger. Shaffer v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (Ill.) 22 N. E. 589.

Fishing.

Where deceased, who could not swim, at the time of his death was seining in a river in which there were sink holes, and stepped into one of such holes, and was caught in the eddy, he not knowing of such danger, his death does not come within a clause in an accident policy exempting the company from liability from injuries resulting from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger or perilous venture. Conboy v. Railway Officials' Employés' Acc. Ass'n, 46 N. E. 363, 365, 17 Ind. App. 62, 60 Am. St. Rep. 154.

Going out on water in a boat to fish on a dark night, without knowledge that snags are there, is not an exposure to unnecessary danger, within a provision of an accident policy exempting the insurer from liability for injuries from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger. Collins v. Bankers' Acc. Ins. Co., 64 N. W. 778, 779, 96 Iowa, 216, 59 Am. St. Rep. 367.

Going into house of ill fame.

In an action to recover under an accident policy conditioned not to extend to death resulting from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, deceased having been shot just after coming out of a bawdyhouse, in an altercation arising between his companion and a hack driver over payment of fare, the court said: "It cannot be said that the shooting followed as a natural consequence of, or that it was the result of, or that it might reasonably have been expected to follow, going into the house of ill fame or passing therefrom out upon the sidewalk on the street. A degree of consciousness of danger is necessary before there would be that voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger required to prevent indemnity. The approach to an unknown and unexpected danger does not make the act a voluntary exposure thereto. The result of the act does not necessarily determine the motive which prompted the action. The act may be voluntary, yet the exposure involuntary." Jones v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 61 N. W. 485, 490, 92 Iowa, 652.

Going on platform of train.

It cannot be said that a passenger on a railroad train, who goes out on the platform while the train is in motion because he is overcome by the heat of the car or suffering from nausea, voluntarily exposes himself to unnecessary danger, within the meaning of a policy of accident insurance providing that the insurer should not be liable for accidents resulting from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger. Marx v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (U. S.) 39 Fed. 321.

Going on roof to get pigeons.

One injured while attempting to get pigeons in the cupola of his barn was not guilty of voluntary or unnecessary exposure to danger, within the meaning of an accident insurance policy providing that the policy should not cover disability when caused by voluntary or unnecessary exposure to danger, where the pigeons were to serve as food for himself and family. Matthes v. Imperial Acc. Ass'n, 81 N. W. 484, 485, 110 Iowa, 222.

Hunting.

One who hunts for game with a loaded gun, cannot be said to have voluntarily exposed himself to unnecessary danger, within the meaning of the provision of an accident insurance policy declaring that for injuries sustained by reason of a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger there can be no recovery. Cornwell v. Fraternal Acc. Ass'n, 69 N. W. 191, 192, 6 N. D. 201, 40 L. R. A. 437, 66 Am. St. Rep. 601.

Jumping from moving train.

Under an insurance policy providing that it should be void if the accident occurred from voluntary or unnecessary exposure to danger, no recovery can be had for the death of the assured, caused by his jumping from a moving train after it had passed a station. Smith v. Preferred Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 104 Mich. 634, 62 N. W. 990.

Sitting down on track.

An accident insurance policy stipulated that its benefits should not extend to death or disability happening, directly or indirectly, in consequence of voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger. The insured sat down on a track of a railroad in active operation, and was run over and killed. Held a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger. Metropolitan Acc. Ass'n v. Taylor, 71 Ill. App. 132, 135.

The death of a man who stepped on a railroad track when an engine running at the rate of 4 miles an hour was about 25 feet from him, and who sat down upon the track, so that he was struck by the engine and killed, resulted from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, within a clause of an insurance policy precluding a recovery in such a case. Williams v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 31 N. E. 222, 223, 133 N. Y. 366.

VOLUNTARY LICENSE.

VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

Voluntary manslaughter is the unlawful and intentional killing of a human being without malice. Dowdy v. State, 23 S. E. 827, 828, 96 Ga. 653.

Voluntary manslaughter is the unlawful killing of another without malice, on sudden quarrel or in heat of passion. Commonwealth v. Sayres (Pa.) 12 Phila. 553, 555; Kilpatrick v. Commonwealth, 31 Pa. (7 Casey) 198, 201; United States v. Lewis (U. S.) 111 Fed. 630, 633; Territory v. Catton, 16 Pac. 902, 906, 5 Utah, 451; State v. Lockwood, 24 S. W. 1015, 1016, 119 Mo. 463.

Voluntary manslaughter is defined by common law writers as an intentional killing in hot blood without malice. United States v. Meagher (U. S.) 37 Fed. 875, 881.

Voluntary manslaughter is the intentional taking of life without malice, without premeditation, without deliberation. State v. Prater, 43 S. E. 230, 232, 52 W. Va. 132.

Judge Gillett, in his work on Criminal Law, p. 404, in treating of "voluntary manslaughter," defines it as an unlawful intentional killing of a human being without malice and without premeditation. Although the statute adds "upon a sudden heat," it is only in the application of the definition to a given case that this element must be made use of. Hasenfuss v. State, 59 N. E. 463, 465, 156 Ind. 246.

Voluntary manslaughter is where one kills another in the heat of blood; and this usually arises from fighting or from provocation. State v. Miller (Del.) 32 Atl. 137, 138, 9 Houst. 564; State v. Lodge (Del.) 33 Atl. 312, 314, 9 Houst. 542; State v. Trusty (Del.) 40 Atl. 766, 768, 1 Pennewill, 319; State v. Jones (Del.) 47 Atl. 1006, 1007, 2 Pennewill, 573.

Voluntary manslaughter is the unlawful killing of another without malice, on sudden quarrel or in heat of passion. When, upon sudden quarrel, two persons fight, and one of them kills the other, that is voluntary manslaughter. McCann v. People (N. Y.) 6 Parker, Cr. R. 629, 631 (citing Whart. Homicide, p. 45).

"Voluntary manslaughter is the unlawful killing of another, without malice, in a sudden quarrel or in heat of blood. But it is not every killing in the heat of blood or upon sudden quarrel which is voluntary manslaughter. In order to be so it must be done without malice. * * * Involuntary manslaughter is when one, in the performance of an unlawful act, kills another by accident." Whitehurst v. Commonwealth, 79 Va. 556, 559.

Voluntary manslaughter is where one kills another in the heat of blood; and this usually arises from fighting or other provocation. In the former case, in order to reduce the crime from murder to manslaughter, it must be shown that the fighting was not preconcerted, and that there was not sufficient time for the passion to subside. State v. Wilson, 11 S. W. 985, 988, 98 Mo. 440.

Voluntary manslaughter is the killing of a human being by another person upon a sudden heat or passion caused by provocation apparently sufficient to make the passion uncontrollable in a reasonable person. Territory v. Manton, 19 Pac. 387, 388, 8 Mont. 95.

Voluntary manslaughter is properly defined in an instruction as the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, express or implied; voluntary, as done in a sudden heat, as upon adequate provocation the passion has been aroused, and the fatal act is unlawfully and voluntarily committed before sufficient time has elapsed to allow the passion to cool and for reason to resume its sway. Stout v. State, 90 Ind. 1, 11.

Voluntary manslaughter is defined to be the unlawful killing of a human creature without malice, either express or implied, and without any mixture of deliberation whatever; and in all cases of voluntary manslaughter there must be some actual assault upon the person killing, or an attempt by the person killed to commit a serious personal injury on the person killing, or other equivalent circumstance to justify the excitement of passion, and to exclude all idea of deliberation or malice, either express or implied. Huff v. State, 11 S. E. 618, 619, 85 Ga. 285.

Manslaughter is the unlawful killing of another without malice aforethought, either express or implied, which may be either voluntary, in the heat of passion, and upon sudden provocation, or involuntary, in the commission of some unlawful act. State v. Conley, 39 Me. 78, 87.

As requiring intention to kill.

In order that there may be a conviction of voluntary manslaughter, there must be an intention to kill. Daly v. Stoddard, 66 Ga. 145, 146.

Voluntary manslaughter, at common law, was an intention of killing in the heat of sudden passion, caused by sufficient provocation. Olds v. State (Fla.) 33 South. 296, 299.

Voluntary manslaughter is manslaughter "when the act is committed with a real design and purpose to kill, but through the violence of sudden passion, occasioned by some great provocation, which, in tenderness for the frailty of human nature, the law considers sufficient to palliate the criminality of the offense." Commonwealth v. Webster, 59 Mass. (5 Cush.) 295, 304, 52 Am. Dec. 711.

Voluntary manslaughter is the causing of the death of another by some unlawful act not accompanied by any intention to take life. Commonwealth v. Webster, 59 Mass. (5 Cush.) 295, 304, 52 Am. Dec. 711.

Voluntary manslaughter includes all felonious homicides less heinous than murder, which results directly from any unlawful force aimed at or applied to the party slain. It is not necessary that the perpetrator shall have willed the death of the slain, but, if unlawful and intentional violence be directed against the deceased, the law pronounces the consummated act of manslaughter to be voluntary. Harrington v. State, 3 South. 425, 427, 83 Ala. 9.

Murder distinguished.

Voluntary manslaughter often so nearly approaches murder that it is necessary to distinguish it clearly. The difference is this: manslaughter is never attended by legal malice or depravity of heart, being sometimes a willful act, as the term "voluntary" denotes. It is necessary that the circumstances should take away every evidence of cool depravity of heart or wanton killing. Therefore, to reduce an intentional blow, stroke, or wounding resulting in death to voluntary manslaughter, there must be sufficient cause of provocation, and a state of rage or passion without time to cool, placing the prisoner beyond the control of his reason, and suddenly impelling him to the deed. Commonwealth v. Drum, 58 Pa. (8 P. F. Smith) 9, 17.

Voluntary manslaughter is an intentional killing in hot blood, and differs from murder in this: That though the act which occasions the death be unlawful or likely to be attended with bodily mischief, yet the malice aforethought which is the essence of murder is presumed to be wanting, and, the act being imputed to the infirmities of human nature, the punishment is proportionately lenient. The provocation in the case of a killing in hot blood must be such as to account for the act by reason of the infirmities of human passions in men in general, and without attributing to the prisoner a cruel and relentless disposition. United States v. King (U. S.) 34 Fed. 302, 309.

VOLUNTARY NONSUIT.

A nonsuit is voluntary when the plaintiff throws up his case and consents to a judgment for the defendant for costs. Sandoval v. Rosser, 26 S. W. 933, 934, 86 Tex. 682.

A voluntary nonsuit is when a suit is terminated by a voluntary action and free will of the plaintiff, while an involuntary nonsuit is when the plaintiff, by some ruling of the court which precludes his recovery, is compelled to take a nonsuit. It is only proper to take a nonsuit where, at the trial, the ruling of the court is such as to preclude plaintiff from recovery. Williams v. Finks, 57 S. W. 732, 735, 156 Mo. 597.

Voluntary nonsuit is where a party submits to the court, and says, "I have not made out a case," and asks that it be dismissed. Such a judgment is not a judgment on the merits. Hammergen v. Schurmeier (U. S.) 8 Fed. 77, 78.

A voluntary nonsuit is allowed by the court on the plaintiff's own motion. The plaintiff submits to the court that he has not made or cannot make out a case, and asks, in effect, that it be dismissed. A motion by a plaintiff for a nonsuit, under our Code, is a dismissal. Wabash R. Co. v. McCormick, 55 N. E. 251, 252, 23 Ind. App. 258 (citing Burns v. Reigelsberger, 70 Ind. 522).

A voluntary nonsuit is an abandonment of his cause by the plaintiff, who allows a judgment for costs to be entered against him by absenting himself or failing to answer when called upon to hear the verdict. A "nonsuit" is the name of a judgment given against the plaintiff when he is unable to prove a case, or when he refuses or neglects to proceed to the trial of the cause after it has been put at issue without determining such issue. Deeley v. Heintz, 62 N. E. 158, 159, 169 N. Y. 129.

A voluntary nonsuit is an abandonment of a cause by the plaintiff, and an agreement that a judgment for costs be entered against him, but an involuntary nonsuit is where a plaintiff, on being called when the case is before the court for trial, neglects to appear, or when he has given no evidence upon which the jury could find a verdict. Boyce v. Snow, 88 Ill. App. 402, 405.

A nonsuit taken after instructions have been given which preclude recovery by the plaintiff is not a voluntary nonsuit. Martin v. Fewell, 79 Mo. 401, 409.

Nonsuits may be classed under two divisions: (1) Involuntary, as when awarded by the court against the plaintiff's objection; (2) voluntary, when allowed by the court on plaintiff's own motion. Washburn v. Allen, 77 Me. 344, 346.

VOLUNTARY PAYMENT.

A voluntary payment means one made without compulsion. Amsden v. Danielson, 35 Atl. 70, 19 R. I. 533.

Voluntary payments are when one knowingly pays, and intends to pay, an illegal or unfounded claim, with full knowledge of its illegality or groundlessness. See New York Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Manning (N. Y.) 3 Sandf. Ch. 58; Redmond v. City of New York, 125 N. Y. 632, 26 N. E. 727. These authorities show that a voluntary payment is one made with a full knowledge of the facts; a voluntary payment of an unfounded or illegal claim. Davis v. Kling, 28 N. Y. Supp. 1026, 1029, 77 Hun. 598.

"To constitute a voluntary payment," says the court, in the case of Scholey v. Mumford, 60 N. Y. 501, "the party paying must have had the freedom of exercising his will. When he acts under species of compulsion, the payment is not voluntary." Edward O. Jones Co. v. Board of Education of City of Mt. Vernon, 51 N. Y. Supp. 950, 953, 30 App. Div. 429.

Payment under protest upon a threat of suit, the parties knowing all the circumstances, is not a payment under such compulsion as protects it from the infirmity of a voluntary payment. Burnham v. Town of Strafford, 53 Vt. 610, 613.

Where a party is induced to pay money which he is under no legal duty to pay, through legal proceedings commenced or threatened, he cannot recover it back if the proceedings are bona fide and no undue advantage is taken; and the fact that it was made under protest does not make the payment voluntary. Meacham v. Town of Newport, 89 Atl. 631, 632, 70 Vt. 67 (citing Taggart v. Rice, 87 Vt. 47).

Cooley, Tax'n, 811, says: "When a voluntary payment is spoken of, the qualifying word is not used in its ordinary sense; and many payments are held to be voluntary which are made unwillingly, and only as a choice of evils or of risks." Maxwell v. San Luis Obispo County, 12 Pac. 484, 485, 71 Cal. 466.

What constitutes a voluntary payment has been many times discussed and variously decided, and it is impossible to reconcile all these decisions. There is a long line of cases in New York where, in order to carry out a contract for the sale of property, assessments which subsequently were decided to have been illegal have been paid; and it has been held that a payment so made was voluntary, and could not have been recovered. Of this class, Tripler v. City of New York, 125 N. Y. 617, 26 N. E. 721, is an instance. There the plaintiff paid an illegal assessment to clear the premises therefrom, in compliance with the terms of a sale from plaintiff to the purchaser. The court held that the payment was voluntary. So, also, in Wood v. City of New York, 25 App. Div. 579, 49 N. Y. Supp. 622. These cases, however, are distinguishable from those where money has been paid under a mistake of fact. In 7 Wait, Act. & Def. p. 402, the rule is thus stated: "If a party, with full knowledge of all the facts, voluntarily pays money in satisfaction of a demand made upon him, he cannot afterwards allege such a payment to have been unjustly demanded, and recover back such money." And in Waite v. Leggett (N. Y.) 8

Cow. 195, 18 Am. Dec. 441, it was said: "To constitute a voluntary payment it must appear that the money was paid with a knowledge of the facts which showed no liability to pay, and even with knowledge that it ought not to be paid." Lesster v. City of New York, 53 N. Y. Supp. 934, 937, 33 App. Div. 350.

No payment is a voluntary payment, so as to become an acknowledgment by the debtor of his liability on the whole demand, and an implied new promise to pay the residue of the debt, which was enforced by means of a proceeding in rem, without any act on the part of the debtor. Thomas v. Brewer, 7 N. W. 571, 572, 55 Iowa, 227.

A voluntary payment implies that the man who makes it intends to waive any right which he may have to resist it. When he gives notice by his protest that he does not waive his right, but intends to insist upon it, such implication is negatived. Chief Justice Tindall, in Valpy v. Manley, 1 Man. G. & S. 603, after quoting the dictum of Lord Kenyon, adds: "I am not aware that there is any difficulty or impropriety in laying it down that where money is voluntarily paid, with full knowledge of all the circumstances, the party intending to give up his right, he cannot afterwards bring an action for money had and received; but that it is otherwise where, at the time of paying the money, the party gives notice that he intends to resist the claim, and that he yields to it merely for the purpose of relieving himself from the inconvenience of having his goods sold." Rumford Chemical Works v. Ray, 34 Atl. 814, 815, 19 R. L. 456.

Where one receives money as a wrongdoer, it may in general be recovered from him in the equitable action for money had and received. The defendant in such case cannot complain that the plaintiff waives that form of action in which he might recover more than the value of the goods, and adopts a form in which he can only recover the money which the defendant has received, with interest. Wisner v. Bulkley (N. Y.) 15 Wend. 321, 323.

Of claim to release mechanic's lien.

The term "voluntary payment," in the rule that there cannot be a recovery of money voluntarily paid, cannot be construed to apply to a payment under protest by a property owner to procure a release of a mechanic's lien based on an unfounded claim, in order to clear the title of record, so that he may consummate a loan upon the property in order to raise money to pay an overdue mortgage and other pressing debts; the owner having no other means of raising the money. Joannin v. Ogilvie, 52 N. W. 217, 49 Minn. 564, 16 L. R. A. 376, 32 Am. St. Rep. 581.

Of costs of libels.

Where a vessel was libeled, together with her cargo, under Act Cong. March 2, 1811, and the seizure was withdrawn, and the vessel and cargo liberated so far as the customhouse was concerned, but they were detained by the marshal, who refused to deliver them without an order from the district court or until the costs of the libels were paid, and the owners paid the costs of the district attorney, and the fees of the clerk of the court, who refused to give an order for delivery of the property until his fees were paid, the payment of the costs was not a voluntary act, having been exacted by the officer under color of his office, and the costs, having been illegally exacted, might be recovered back by an action of indebitatus assumpsit at common law. Clinton v. Strong (N. Y.) 9 Johns. 370, 376.

Of duty on import.

Where a revenue collector insisted upon either having the goods appraised at the value at the time of shipment, the consequence of which would have been an addition of so much to the invoice price as to subject the importer to a penalty, or to allow the importer voluntarily to make the addition of the invoice price, and so escape the penalty, and the importer chose the latter course, the duties were not voluntarily paid by him, so as to debar him from bringing an action against the collector for the recovery of the excess thus exacted. To make a payment involuntary, it need not be by actual violence or any physical duress. It suffices if the payment is caused, on the one part, by an illegal demand, and made on the other part reluctantly, and in consequence of that illegality, and without being able to regain possession of the property, except by submitting to the payment. Maxwell v. Griswold, 51 U. S. (10 How.) 242, 255, 13 L. Ed. 405.

Of execution.

A voluntary payment is one made by a debtor on his own motion without any compulsory process. A payment on execution does not fall within the rule. Nichols v. Knowles (U. S.) 17 Fed. 494.

Of fees.

Where one has a clear legal right to inspect public records, and the official having possession and control thereof makes use of his official authority, and, under cover thereof, exacts fees to which he has no legal claim, the payment of such fees is not a voluntary payment. Townshend v. Dyckman (N. Y.) 2 E. D. Smith, 224, 233.

Of freight rates.

Where a shipper pays the rates established in violation of law by a common carrier, rather than forego his services, such payment is not "voluntary," in the legal sense, and the shipper may maintain his action for money had and received to recover back the illegal charge, for the corporation and the shipper are in no sense on equal terms. Mobile & M. R. Co. v. Steiner, 61 Ala. 559, 595.

Of judgment.

A payment of a judgment is not a voluntary payment. If such a payment is voluntary, every payment is voluntary, unless the property be sold by the sheriff. Brown v. Williams (N. Y.) 4 Wend. 360, 363.

Payment by the judgment debtor to prevent the issuance of an execution or the enforcement of an order of sale is not a voluntary or an officious payment. Wright v. Knoxville Livery & Stock Co. (Tenn.) 59 S. W. 677, 689.

Of license.

The term "voluntary payment" applies to the payment of money to procure a license to transact business as required by municipal ordinance, and the money cannot be recovered as being paid under compulsion, even if the ordinance requiring a license is void. Mays v. City of Cincinnati, 1 Ohio St. 268, 277.

When it appears that there was no liability to anything beyond civil and criminal prosecutions in case of refusal to pay certain license taxes, and in such prosecutions the invalidity of the law which authorizes the collection of the taxes would have been a perfect defense, a party making payment is not under such duress or compulsion that he can recover back the money so paid in an action brought for that purpose, but such payment must be deemed to have been voluntarily made. Maxwell v. San Luis Obispo County, 12 Pac. 484, 485, 71 Cal. 466.

Of tax.

Where the interest on stock representing a debt of the city of Baltimore was payable at certain banks in such city, and for six years the banks deducted, by direction of the city register, from the July installments of interest, the annual tax levied by the state of Maryland for state purposes, and remitted the balance to the owner of the stock in New York, such owner knowing that the tax was so collected, the receipt, without objection, of the interest, less the tax deducted, constituted a voluntary payment of the tax by such owner, so that she could not recover it back, though the stock was not properly taxable by the state. City of Baltimore v. Hussey, 9 Atl. 19, 21, 67 Md. 112.

A voluntary payment of a tax is a payment made under a claim from the tax authorities that the law compelled payment.

People v. Wemple, 36 N. E. 506, 507, 141 N. Y. 471.

To constitute a voluntary payment of taxes, the payment must be made under circumstances not tantamount to legal compulsion—either to release a seizure already made under a tax warrant, or to prevent one which is immediately apprehended. If a demand is made by the collecting officer, accompanied by a threat to levy for sale in case of refusal, or any equivalent expression of intention, and a payment is made under protest, with notice that suit will be instituted to recover back the taxes thus paid, it is sufficient to show that the payment was involuntary, as being under compulsion. It is not necessary to await an actual seizure. Erskine v. Van Arsdale, 82 U. S. (15 Wall.) 75, 21 L. Ed. 63; Gachet v. McCall, 50 Ala. 307. Any payment made by the taxpayer before demand made by the collector, or before any threat or step on his part indicating an intention to levy under the warrant, is voluntary. Raisler v. City of Athens, 66 Ala. 194, 198 (citing Cooley, Tax'n, 569, note 3; 2 Dill. Mun. Cor. 751; Union Bank v. City of New York [N. Y.] 51 Barb. 159).

VOLUNTARY RETURN.

Pasch. Dig. art. 2397, providing that, if stolen property be voluntarily returned before any prosecution, the punishment shall be reduced, means that the return must not be induced by threats and fear of prosecution; and where the thief makes no effort to return it until he is found in possession, and then hastens to return it to secure immunity from punishment, it is not a voluntary return. Stephenson v. State, 4 Tex. App. 591, 592.

Where a cow was driven 30 miles from its ranch, and the person in whose possession it was found promises, when overtaken, to drive it back, and did drive it back the greater part of the way, where it was turned loose, the property will not be deemed to have been voluntarily returned, within the Code. Brill v. State, 1 Tex. App. 572.

The return of stolen property may be voluntary, notwithstanding it was superinduced by the fear of detection and punishment, as well as the spirit of repentance and restitution, within Code, art. 738, providing that, if property taken under such circumstances as to constitute theft "be voluntarily returned within a reasonable time," the punishment shall be by fine not exceeding $1,000. Allen v. State, 12 Tex. App. 190.

VOLUNTARY SACRIFICE.

Where property has been displaced by a storm, though valuable and capable of being saved if the storm abates, is from its position an especial source of danger to the vessel, its sacrifice in order to save the vessel is a voluntary sacrifice, and its loss the subject of general average. Arn. Ins. (2d Ed.) 906, says: "If the will of a man was in any way, even the least degree, contributory to the loss, that is all that is required to make it a voluntary sacrifice." It makes no difference that the pressure of circumstances was such as to prevent that will from being exerted, except in one way. The Margarethe Blanca (U. S.) 12 Fed. 728, 780.

VOLUNTARY SEPARATION.

In construing a statute of Alabama which authorizes the court, if a voluntary separation occur between husband and wife, to permit either of the parties to have the custody and control of the children, the court said: "It is urged that in the present case the separation was not voluntary; that the appellant did not assent to it, but the appellee, without cause, willfully abandoned him. The statute is in terms limited to a voluntary separation, but we do not suppose each party should, in words, express assent to it. The assent may be implied, as it is often implied in reference to contracts and agreements. A husband may pursue towards the wife, or the wife towards the husband, a course of conduct compelling a separation; and it would be idle to say such was not the result anticipated or intended. Continuous accusations against the virtue of the wife may be made, wounding her pride, chilling her affections, blighting her hopes, embittering every hour of her life, until, if all self-respect is not crushed, she must abandon the society of her husband, and seek relief from the tortures he inflicts. It would be vain for him to say that his wife's abandonment was voluntary on her part, and involuntary as to himself. When such a case occurs, it will be a voluntary separation, within the meaning of this statute. The wife chooses separation as her only hope of peace, and the only mode of maintaining her self-respect and reputation, and the husband must intend and assent to the natural consequences of his misconduct." Anonymous, 55 Ala. 428, 431.

VOLUNTARY SERVICE.

"Voluntary service," as used in 1 Rev. St. 1876, p. 63, § 7, providing that the board of commissioners may make allowances at their discretion, but declaring it to be their duty to avoid, as much as possible, the necessity for making any allowances for voluntary service, means services rendered without any contract therefor. Carroll County v. Richardson, 54 Ind. 153, 156.

VOLUNTARY SETTLEMENT.

A deed will not be regarded as a voluntary settlement if there are other circumstances besides the retention of the deed by the grantor showing that he did not intend it to operate immediately, or that he had an intention contrary to that appearing on the face of the deed. Rodemeler v. Brown, 48 N. E. 468, 471, 169 Ill. 347, 61 Am. St. Rep. 176 (citing Shovers v. Warrick, 152 Ill. 355, 38 N. E. 792).

VOLUNTARY STRANDING.

Where a ship and cargo are exposed at a particular place to a common peril of sinking and becoming submerged in deep water, and the expense of raising and saving them in that place would be greater than if stranded in shoal water, and the master, to save them from such increased expenses, runs the ship on flats near by and strands her in shoal water, and thereby increases the peril to the ship and diminishes the damages and expenses of saving her and her cargo, then there is a "voluntary stranding," within the meaning of the law entitling the owners of the vessel to recover, as general average, their just proportion of such damages and expenses. Fowler v. Rathbone, 79 U. S. (12 Wall.) 102, 118, 20 L. Ed. 281.

VOLUNTARY SUICIDE.

The term "voluntary suicide" in a life policy excepting the insurer from liability for suicide, voluntary or involuntary, does not characterize death resulting from the taking of poison, unless it is taken with knowledge that it is poison. Edwards v. Travelers' Life Ins. Co. (U. S.) 20 Fed. 661, 662.

VOLUNTARY TRANSFER.

The words "voluntary transfer," as used in speaking of a transfer by a debtor of all, or substantially all, of his property, subject to the payment of his debts, are expressive of the true character of the transfer—that it is the act, and proceeds from the volition, of the debtor. And the expression "voluntary transfer" is not employed in the sense in which it is frequently used—that of not being supported by a valuable consideration. Bell v. Goetter, 17 South. 709, 711, 106 Ala. 462.

VOLUNTARY TRUST.

Gift distinguished, see "Gift."

A "voluntary trust" is an equitable gift, and, like a gift inter vivos, must be complete. Bath Sav. Inst. v. Hathorn, 33 Atl. 836, 837, 88 Me. 122, 32 L. R. A. 377, 51 Am. St. Rep. 382.

Code, § 2956, declares that a voluntary trust is created by any words or acts of the trustor indicating with reasonable certainty an intention on the part of the trustor to create a trust. McDonald v. American Nat. Bank, 65 Pac. 896, 911, 25 Mont. 456.

A voluntary trust is an obligation arising out of a personal confidence reposed in, and voluntarily accepted by, one for the benefit of another. Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 2216; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 4255; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 1607; Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 2951.

VOLUNTARY UNINCORPORATED ASSOCIATION.

As partnership, see "Partnership."

VOLUNTARY VALIDITY.

By the "voluntary validity" of a treaty is meant that validity which a treaty, become voidable because of violations, afterwards continues to retain by the silent volition and acquiescence of the nation. It is called "voluntary" because it entirely depends on the will of the nation either to let it continue to operate or to annul and extinguish it. To this head such questions as these relate; that is: Has the treaty been so violated as justly to become voidable by the injured nation? Is it advisable immediately to declare it void? Would such a measure probably produce a war? Would it be more prudent first to remonstrate and demand reparation, or to direct reprisals? Are we in condition for war? Ought we at this juncture to risk it, or shall we postpone this risk until we can be better prepared for it? Shall we at this moment take measures, or would it be more prudent to remain silent, and let the treaty go on and continue to operate as if nothing had happened? Jones v. Walker (U. S.) 18 Fed. Cas. 1059, 1062.

VOLUNTARY WASTE.

See "Commissive Waste."

VOLUNTARY WITHDRAWAL.

"Voluntary withdrawal," as used in a law chartering a corporation, which provides that membership may be terminated by death, voluntary withdrawal, or expulsion, means a withdrawal entirely by the member's own free and voluntary act. New York Protective Ass'n v. McGrath, 5 N. Y. Supp. 8, 10.

VOLUNTARILY.

"Voluntarily," as used in a certificate of a wife's separate acknowledgment of a mortgage, reciting that she executed such mortgage voluntarily, is of equivalent import and meaning with the expression "of her own free will and accord," as used in Code 1876, § 2822, providing that a wife shall acknowledge that she signed any conveyance of land of her own free will and accord. A voluntary act proceeds from one's own free will; done by choice or by one's own accord; unconstrained by external interference, force, or influence; not prompted or suggested by another. "Voluntarily" expresses, by the use of one word, all the force and meaning of the phrase "of her own free will and accord." Gates v. Hester, 1 South. 848, 850, 81 Ala. 357.

"Voluntarily," as used in an instruction in an action by a wife against a person for selling intoxicating liquors to her husband, stating that if the husband was in the habit of getting intoxicated, and the wife, knowing this habit, voluntarily drank intoxicating liquors with him at the bar of the defendant, this would not only be encouraging the husband in his intemperate habits; but would be an apparent sanctioning on her part of the sales of liquor to him, means spontaneously, of one's own will, without being moved, influenced, or impelled by others. Kearney v. Fitzgerald, 43 Iowa, 580, 585.

"Voluntarily leave," as used in a statute authorizing the granting of a divorce if a wife "voluntarily leave" her husband's house, means a leaving of her own free choice. Hardin v. Hardin, 17 Ala. 250, 253, 52 Am. Dec. 170.

"Voluntarily and unnecessarily," as used in an instruction, in an action for personal injuries, that if plaintiff voluntarily and unnecessarily placed himself in a certain position, whereby his injury was made possible, then he could not recover, characterizes the act to which they are applied as needless, not required by the circumstances of the case, and one which, if it involved danger to life or limb, was unreasonable, and, in the nature of things, negligent. Tanner v. Buffalo Ry. Co., 25 N. Y. Supp. 242, 243, 72 Hun, 465.

Where there is a parol exchange of coal lands, one of the parties, who proceeds to mine the land received by him, does not voluntarily abandon possession by temporarily stopping the extension of his operations on a notice from the other disputing his rights. Jermyn v. Elliott, 45 Atl. 938, 951, 195 Pa. 245.

The word "voluntarily," in the Indiana statute providing that if any person shall unlawfully kill any human being without malice, express or implied, either voluntarily upon a sudden heat of passion, or involuntarily and in the commission of some unlawful act, such person shall be deemed guilty of manslaughter, means by the free exercise of the will; done by design; purposely. Murphy v. State, 31 Ind. 511, 513.

Where a person, of his own motion, goes upon a railroad track to walk there, he is voluntarily there, if he is run over by a train, though just before the accident he may have fallen down and have been unable to move on account of causes beyond his control. Weinschenk v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 67 N. E. 242, 243, 183 Mass. 312.

As without contract.

"Voluntarily," as used in 1 Rev. St. 1876, p. 63, § 7, providing that the board of commissioners may make allowances at their discretion, but declaring it to be their duty to avoid, as much as possible, the necessity for making any allowances for things voluntarily furnished, means things furnished without any contract therefor. Carroll County v. Richardson, 54 Ind. 153, 156.

As without fear or coercion.

A certificate of acknowledgment of a deed by a married woman, that she did so freely and voluntarily, shows that she must necessarily have been without fear. It is possible that fear may exist without threats, but it is not very easy to suppose there can be fear if there be no compulsion. Hadley v. Geiger, 9 N. J. Law (4 Halst.) 225, 233.

"Voluntarily," as used in acknowledgment of a deed by a married woman that she executed it voluntarily, implies the absence of fear or coercion. Brown v. Faran, 8 Ohio (3 Ham.) 140, 155.

As knowingly.

"Voluntarily," as used in an instruction, in an action for personal injuries, that to prevent recovery plaintiff must have gone into the danger voluntarily, assuming the risk by stepping into the danger there apparent, should be construed to mean "knowingly." Munger v. City of Marshalltown, 9 N. W. 192, 56 Iowa, 216.

Act Cong. May 10, 1800, prohibiting the carrying on of the slave trade from the United States to any foreign place or country, and making it an offense for any seaman to serve "voluntarily" on any vessel engaged in the trade, meant serve with knowledge of the business in which she was employed. United States v. Morris, 39 U. S. (14 Pet.) 464, 476, 10 L. Ed. 543.

As willfully.

The cases and text-writers seem to use interchangeably the words "willfully," "intentionally," and "voluntarily" as synonymous terms in discussing the question of the making of declarations or performing acts from which it is alleged an estoppel arises. Gillett v. Willey, 19 N. E. 287, 290, 126 Ill. 310, 9 Am. St. Rep. 587.

As unlawfully.

In an indictment charging that the defendant "feloniously, voluntarily, and maliciously" committed the offense, was not equivalent to stating that it was "unlawfully" committed. Rex v. Reader, 4 Car. & P. 245.

VOLUNTEER.

A volunteer is one who has no interest in the work, but nevertheless undertakes to assist therein. Welch v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 30 Atl. 116, 117, 86 Me. 552, 25 L. R. A. 658.

A volunteer, within the rule that no one officiously paying the debts of another can maintain an action to recover from the debtor the money so paid, is one who has paid the debts of another without request, when he was not legally or morally bound so to do, and when he had no interest to protect in making such payment. One who pays the debt of another under such circumstances officiously intrudes himself into business which does not concern him, and his right to compel reimbursement is not recognized by law, in the absence of a subsequent promise on the part of the debtor to repay. Irvine v. Angus (U. S.) 93 Fed. 629, 633, 35 C. C. A. 501.

In Arnold v. Green, 116 N. Y. 566, 23 N. E. 1, it is said that the terms "stranger" and "volunteer," as used with reference to the subject of subrogation, mean one who in no event, resulting from the existing state of affairs, can become liable for the debt, and whose property is not charged for the payment thereof and cannot be sold therefor. The payment by one who is liable to be compelled to make it or lose his property will not be regarded as made by a stranger. When the person paying has an interest to protect, he is not a stranger. Durante v. Eannaco, 72 N. Y. Supp. 1043, 1051, 65 App. Div. 435.

In reference to the rule of subrogation, a stranger has been said to be not necessarily one who has nothing to do with the transaction out of which the debt grew. Any one who is under no legal obligation or liability to pay the debt is a stranger, and, if he pays the debt, a mere volunteer; so that, where agents employed to invest money for a mortgagee, on failure of the mortgagor to pay the interest, remitted the amount of the interest coupons without the knowledge of the mortgagor or mortgagee, they were mere volunteers. Bennett v. Chandler, 64 N. E. 1052, 1055, 199 Ill. 97.

A person who may be compelled to pay a debt, or the protection of whose interest requires that he pay it, is not a mere volunteer. Davis v. Schlemmer, 150 Ind. 472, 50 N. E. 373. Nor is he who pays a debt or advances money for the purpose at the request of the debtor a mere volunteer. Warford v. Hankins, 50 N. E. 468, 470, 150 Ind. 489 (citing Shattuck v. Cox, 128 Ind. 293, 27 N. E. 609; Trible v. Nichols, 53 Ark. 271, 13 S. W. 796, 22 Am. St. Rep. 190).

The term "volunteer," when used in the sense of a person doing a thing which he is not legally bound to do, includes the purchaser of real estate at a tax sale, he not being under obligations to pay the taxes, or to purchase at the sale; and in general he buys without warrant or covenant, at a price which he considers the venture worth, and, where there is no fraud or misrepresentation and no mistake of the facts, he is without remedy in case of a failure of title. Pennock v. Douglas County, 58 N. W. 117, 121, 39 Neb. 293, 27 L. R. A. 121, 42 Am. St. Rep. 579.

In an action by a donor to reform the deed to the donee, in which the donor claimed that by a mistake in the lines he had unintentionally included the dwelling house and the grounds surrounding it, the court said, "Volunteers in contracts are defined to be persons who receive a voluntary conveyance" (2 Bouv. Law Dict. 636), and held that, though a court of equity could not relieve the donees, who are volunteers, if they were applying for a reformation of the contract, such relief would be granted to the donor if a proper case was made by him. Mitchell v. Mitchell, 40 Ga. 11, 16.

In military law.

"Volunteer," as used in Sess. Laws 1864, p. 25, c. 8, § 22, authorizing the board of county supervisors to provide for raising money upon the credit of the county for the use of the county for the purpose of paying volunteers in the military or naval service of the United States during the war, should be construed to include one who freely enlists in the place of another who has been drafted, and becomes his substitute of his own free will and accord. Magee v. Cutler (N. Y.) 43 Barb. 239, 249.

"Volunteers," as used in Sess. Laws 1863, p. 60, Laws 1864, p. 53, and Laws 1865, p. 29, providing for the payment of bounties to volunteers, applies only to volunteers as the people ordinarily understand the term, and not to one who enters the service in the place of another as a substitute for hire. People v. Quartermaster General, 25 Mich. 340, 343.

The act of volunteering or enlisting contemplated by the provision of Gen. St. c. 63, § 20, includes the whole transaction by which a person not before in the military service would get into it, and would embrace the muster of a troop as well as the signing of the contract and enlistment by him. Wood v. Town of Springfield, 43 Vt. 617, 624.

VOTE.

See "By Vote"; "Casting Vote"; "Legal Votes"; "True Vote."
Written votes, see "Written Ballots."

"Vote" is defined by Worcester to be "suffrage, voice, or opinion of a person in some matter which is commonly to be determined by a majority of voices or opinions of persons who are empowered to give them; the wish of an individual in regard to any question, measure, or choice, expressed by word of mouth, by ballot or otherwise; that by which the will, preference, or opinion of a person is expressed; a ballot." Maynard v. Board of Canvassers, 47 N. W. 756, 759, 84 Mich. 228, 11 L. R. A. 332.

A "vote" is an expression of the choice of the voter for or against any measure, any law, or the election of any person to office. It is but the expression of the will of a voter; and, whether the formula to give expression to such will be a ballot or viva voce, the result is the same; either is a vote. Gillespie v. Palmer, 20 Wis. 544, 546; State v. Green, 37 Ohio St. 227, 230; People v. Pease, 27 N. Y. 45, 57, 84 Am. Dec. 242; State v. Roper, 68 N. W. 539, 540, 47 Neb. 417; State v. Barden, 46 N. W. 899, 900, 77 Wis. 601, 10 L. R. A. 155.

"Vote," as used in the Constitution of Vermont and the Acts of the General Assembly, is sometimes used to signify the opinion of the individual as expressed by ballot, sometimes as expressed viva voce, and sometimes for the collective opinion of a body of men; and no technical definition of the term can be given. Temple v. Mead, 4 Vt. 535, 541.

A party rule provided that the city executive committee, by a vote of two-thirds of its members, might suspend the rules temporarily only in so far as they relate to the time of holding elections and conventions, and that the city executive committee might suspend the rules by changing the time of holding the primary elections for delegates without a vote of two-thirds of the 39 possible members of the committee. Held, that the term "a vote of two-thirds of its members" means members present doing business, providing there shall be a quorum. Doyle's Nomination, 24 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 27, 32.

As appropriate.

In Pub. St. c. 40, § 4, providing that towns may vote such sums as they judge necessary to light streets, "vote" and "appropriate" have the same meaning. Childs v. Hillsborough Electric Light & Power Co., 47 Atl. 271, 272, 70 N. H. 318.

Ballot distinguished.

While the terms "ballot" and "vote" are sometimes confused, and while they sometimes may be used as synonymous, the ballot is, in fact, under our form of voting, the instrument by which the voter expresses his choice between two candidates or propositions, and his vote is his choice or election between the two, as expressed by his ballot; and when his ballot makes no choice between two candidates, or on any question, then he casts no vote for either of these candidates or on the question. Davis v. Brown, 34 S. E. 839, 841, 46 W. Va. 716.

In Laws 1849, c. 137, § 1, providing that the act was to become a law only upon condition that the majority of all the votes cast in such election should be in favor thereof, the word "votes" is not synonymous with the word "ballots." "And although these words are sometimes used one for the other, they are not, strictly speaking, synonymous words. They certainly do not mean the same thing. The word 'vote' means suffrage, expression of the will, while the word 'ballot' signifies that by which the right of suffrage is exercised; it is the means by which the will is expressed. One elector can exercise the right of suffrage or vote but once at a general election, although in doing so he may be allowed to deposit several ballots." Gillespie v. Palmer, 20 Wis. 544, 546.

As majority vote.

The word "vote," as used in Sp. Laws 1869, c. 92, providing for the support and better regulation of common schools in the town of Sauk Centre, and authorizing the issuance of bonds in pursuance of a vote of electors at any annual or duly called meeting, means a majority vote. Town of Sauk Centre v. Moore, 17 Minn. 412, 418 (Gil. 391, 396).

Comp. St. 1895, p. 208, c. 13a, art. 1, § 67, subd. 21, authorizing a city to issue bonds for funding indebtedness when the same shall have been authorized by a vote of the people, means authorized by a majority of the votes. Bryan v. City of Lincoln, 70 N. W. 252, 50 Neb. 620, 35 L. R. A. 752.

The word "voted" in a town clerk's record of the doings at a town meeting, which, after mentioning the state of the vote upon the proposition to aid in the construction of a railroad to the amount indicated, declares that it was voted that such sum be hired and appropriated to pay for a specified number of shares, without saying by what majority the vote was carried, raises no implication of law that the proportion of legal voters present and voting upon the proposition necessary for its adoption by the meeting were in its favor. Portland & O. R. Co. v. Inhabitants of Standish, 65 Me. 63, 68.

VOTE OF THE MAJORITY.

See "Majority."

VOTE OF THE PEOPLE.

The phrase "vote of the people," in an order issued in proceedings under St. 1883,

p. 311, § 37, requiring the question of a county bond issue to be submitted to the qualified electors, which order recites that the question is to be submitted to the "vote of the people of this county," means the vote only of those people who are qualified voters or electors. People v. Counts, 26 Pac. 612, 614, 89 Cal. 15.

Comp. St. c. 26, § 70, provides that the district courts of the respective counties shall try and determine contests of the election of county judges, etc., and in regard to any other subject which may by law be submitted to the vote of the people of the county. In construing this statute the court say: "The people of a municipal corporation within the territorial limits of the county cannot be called the 'people of the county' in the sense of a political body or organization, and yet I think that the Legislature used the words 'the vote by the people of the county' as the equivalent of the words 'a popular election of the county.'" Foxworthy v. Lincoln & F. R. Co., 14 N. W. 394, 395, 13 Neb. 308.

VOTE TO PAY MONEY.

A vote by the inhabitants of Boston accepting the provision of St. 1894, c. 548, which provides for the construction of a subway for railroad tracks, after the act is accepted by a majority of the voters, is a "vote to pay money," within Pub. St. c. 27, § 129, directing that a town which shall vote to pay money from its treasury for an illegal purpose may be restrained. Prince v. Crocker, 44 N. E. 446, 166 Masa. 347, 32 L. R. A. 610.

VOTER.

See "Legal Voter"; "Loyal Voters"; "Qualified Voters."

The word "voters" has two meanings—persons who perform the act of voting, and persons who have the qualifications entitling them to vote. In re Denny, 59 N. E. 359, 361, 156 Ind. 104, 51 L. R. A. 722.

In Carroll County v. Smith, 111 U. S. 556, 4 Sup. Ct. 539, 28 L. Ed. 517, the Supreme Court of the United States overruled the case of Hawkins v. Carroll County Sup'rs, 50 Miss. 735, and held, in construing a clause of the Constitution of Mississippi prohibiting the Legislature from authorizing any county to aid any railroad company unless two-thirds of the qualified voters at a special or regular election of such county should assent thereto, that the term "voter," in such connection, means one who votes, not one who, though qualified to vote, does not vote. This decision of the Supreme Court but follows its earlier decision in similar cases, viz., St. Joseph Tp. v. Rogers, 83 U. S. (16 Wall.) 644, 21 L. Ed. 328, and Cass County

v. Johnston, 95 U. S. 360, 24 L. Ed. 416. Thus, the term in Const. art. 8, § 6, fixing the limit of municipal indebtedness, but giving permission to increase indebtedness to a certain amount on the assent of three-fifths of the qualified voters therein, voting at an election to be held for that purpose, is to be construed as only requiring a three-fifths majority of the electors actually voting, and not three-fifths of all persons entitled to vote at such election. Metcalf v. City of Seattle, 25 Pac. 1010, 1013, 1 Wash. St. 297.

The phrase "if three-fifths of the voters shall vote," as used in an ordinance authorizing the construction of a water and sewerage system if three-fifths of the voters of said city shall, at such election, vote in its favor, should be construed as equivalent to the phrase "if three-fifths of the qualified voters voting vote"; and hence such improvements are authorized if three-fifths of the voters who vote at such election vote in favor thereof. Yesler v. City of Seattle, 25 Pac. 1014, 1016, 1 Wash. St. 303.

The word "voters" does not mean the same thing as the word "votes," in Const. art. 3, § 1, providing that the Legislature may at any time extend by law the right of suffrage to persons not enumerated therein, and no such law will be enforced until it shall have been submitted to a vote of the people at a general election, and approved by a majority of all the votes cast at such election. These are two words which mean very different things—are never used as synonyms even in the loosest conversation; but although these words are not synonyms, yet, by a figure of speech, the thing done is sometimes put for the doer. This is, however, seldom or never done in such instruments as state constitutions, which are formed with deliberation and care, and in which language is used literally, and with great precision. A vote is an expression of the choice of the people for or against any measure, any law, or the election of any person to office. The expression of the choice of the voter in favor of any candidate for office by depositing a ballot for him is a vote for such candidate. The same voter, at an election where the extension of the right of suffrage was voted on, might cast one vote in favor of that measure, and if there were ten candidates for as many different offices, state and county, voted for at such election, cast a vote for each of such candidates. Gillespie v. Palmer, 20 Wis. 544, 553.

"A majority of the adult residents and voters" of a township, as used in a petition for the revocation of an order prohibiting the sale of liquor, means the body of persons residing in the township who have the elective franchise; hence such petition is of no power under a statute authorizing such order by a petition of the adult residents, which includes females as well as males. Concurring opinion in Wilson v. State, 35 Ark. 414, 421.

In statutes relative to elections, the term "voter" shall mean a registered male voter. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 105, c. 11, § 1.

Elector distinguished.

In the case of Sanford v. Prentice, 28 Wis. 358, 362, it is said: "There is a difference between an 'elector,' or person legally qualified to vote, and a 'voter.' In common parlance they may be used indiscriminately, but, strictly speaking, they are not the same. The voter is the elector who votes—the elector in the exercise of his franchise or privilege of voting—and not he who does not vote." Bergevin v. Curtz, 59 Pac. 312, 313, 127 Cal. 86.

VOTERS PRESENT AND VOTING.

See "Qualified Voters Voting."

Const. art. 14, § 1, requiring an amendment to the Constitution to be ratified by a majority of the voters present and voting, requires a majority of the voters who are present and voting upon the proposition for the amendment, without respect to those who are present and voting for other purposes at such election, since the persons so voting are not to be regarded as present and voting as far as respects the proposed amendment. Dayton v. City of St. Paul, 22 Minn. 400, 402.

VOTES CAST.

Act March 22, 1849, § 2, providing that the act should become a law only on condition that it should be approved by a majority of all the votes cast at the election in 1849, does not mean that it must be approved by a majority of all the votes cast at such election, but only by a majority of all the votes cast on that subject at such election. Gillespie v. Palmer, 20 Wis. 544, 554.

"Votes cast," within the meaning of Comp. St. c. 18, art. 1, § 30, requiring two-thirds of the votes cast to be in favor of a proposition for selling public grounds in order to authorize such sale, means the votes cast at the polls of the general election at which the question was submitted to the electors, and cannot be limited to mean only the votes cast upon the proposition in question. State v. Anderson, 42 N. W. 421, 422, 26 Neb. 517.

In Comp. St. 1893, art. 3, § 1, relating to elections for the purpose of relocating county seats, which provides that any place receiving three-fifths of all the votes cast shall become and remain the county seat of such county, "votes cast" means the names registered on the pollbook, and not the ballots accounted for, as it will be presumed that every elector whose name appears on the pollbooks was present and voted at the election. State v. Roper, 61 N. W. 753, 754, 46 Neb. 724.

The term "votes cast," in the statute relating to the change of county seats at a special election held for such purpose, and requiring that the proposition for a change should receive 55 per cent. of the votes cast, was held in Smith v. Renville County Com'rs, 64 Minn. 16, 65 N. W. 956, to have been used as an equivalent of "ballots cast." Hopkins v. City of Duluth, 83 N. W. 536, 538, 81 Minn. 189.

VOTES POLLED.

"Votes polled," as used in Comp. Laws, § 565, relating to elections of county seats, providing that, if any place has two-thirds of the votes polled, such place shall be the county seat, means the votes polled on the particular question, and not the votes cast at the election. State v. Langlie, 67 N. W. 958, 959, 5 N. D. 594, 32 L. R. A. 723.

VOTING.

"Voting" and "giving a vote" are precisely synonymous terms. Giving the vote is voting, not offering to vote. State v. Moore, 27 N. J. Law (8 Dutch.) 105, 107.

The words "electors voting," in Const. art. 15, § 1, providing for the submission of amendments to the Constitution to the electors for approval or rejection, and providing that, if a majority of the electors voting at such election adopt such amendments, the same shall become a part of the Constitution, have been considered and construed in State v. Babcock, 17 Neb. 188, 22 N. W. 372, where the court held that, the number of votes for the amendment being less than a majority of the votes for Senators and Representatives, the proposed amendment failed of adoption. State v. Anderson, 42 N. W. 421, 422, 26 Neb. 517.

As actually voting.

Const. art. 8, § 6, providing that no municipal corporation shall become indebted beyond $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of its taxable property "without the assent of three-fifths of the voters therein voting at an election to be held for that purpose," means three-fifths of the voters actually exercising their right to vote, and not three-fifths of those entitled to vote. Metcalf v. City of Seattle, 25 Pac. 1010, 1012, 1 Wash. St. 297.

As legally voting.

The term "electors voting thereon," in a constitutional provision requiring a constitutional amendment to be approved and ratified by a majority of the electors qualified to vote for members of the Legislature voting thereon, means the electors who exercise the right of suffrage in such a manner that their votes shall, under the law, be counted for or against the proposition submitted. And although the number of names on the poll lists may represent the number of qualified electors who attempted to vote, and the rejected ballots may all have been official ballots cast by some of these qualified electors, still it may be that not all of those qualified electors voted, in the constitutional sense, and that the rejected ballots were not votes. Bott v. Wurts, 43 Atl. 744, 748, 63 N. J. Law, 289, 45 L. R. A. 251.

"Voting is not the mere physical act of depositing a piece of paper in the box. The physical act must be performed under certain conditions and with certain concomitants to render it voting. There must be an election held under some authority of law. The time and place must in some way be legally designated. Election officers acting under a legal warrant must be present to receive the votes and decide upon the qualifications of the voters. The question to be decided or the offices to be filled must be named by law." Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jefferson County, 17 Kan. 29, 39.

VOTING BY BALLOT.

A "vote by ballot" ex vi termini implies a secret ballot. Pearson v. Brunswick County Sup'rs, 91 Va. 322, 334, 21 S. E. 483.

Voting by ballot is depositing in a box provided for that purpose a paper on which is the name of the person intended for the office. The principal object of this mode of voting is to enable the elector to express his opinion secretly, without being subject to be overawed, or to any ill will or prosecution on account of his vote. The method of voting by tablets in Rome was an example of this manner of voting. Temple v. Mead, 4 Vt. 535, 541.

"As applied to elections of public officers, 'voting by ballot' signifies a mode of designating an elector's choice of a person for office by the deposit of a ticket bearing the name of such person in a receptacle provided for that purpose, in such a way as to secure to the elector the privilege of complete and inviolable secrecy in regard to the person voted for. This privilege of secrecy may probably be regarded as the distinguishing feature of ballot voting as compared with open voting; as, for instance, voting viva voce. The object of the privilege is the independence of a voter." And hence a statute (Laws 1878, c. 84, § 8) providing for the numbering of tickets to correspond with the number of the voters upon the poll lists was held in violation of Const. art. 7, § 6, declaring that all elections shall be by ballot. Brisbin v. Cleary, 1 N. W. 825, 826, 28 Minn. 107.

VOTING PRECINCT.

As used in the supplement of the act to regulate elections, approved March 28, 1890 (P. L. p. 361) § 52, providing that whenever, within 20 days next succeeding any election in any election district or voting precinct in any county of the state, a petition should be presented, signed by at least 25 voters resident in such election district or voting precinct, and, certain matters being made to appear, directing the justice to set aside such election, "election district" is synonymous with "voting precinct," and cannot be construed to embrace a city comprising many voting precincts. In re Swain, 23 Atl. 421, 54 N. J. Law (25 Vroom) 82.

VOTING THEREAT.

St. Louis City Charter, § 22, provides that the charter may be amended by proposals therefor, submitted by the lawmaking authorities of the city to the qualified voters thereof at a general or special election held at least 60 days after the publication of such proposal, and "accepted by at least three-fifths of the qualified voters voting thereat." Such provision is free from ambiguity, giving to the words employed their natural and usual signification. It is clear that, before any amendment can be adopted or made, such amendment must be accepted; that is, voted for by three-fifths of the qualified voters voting, be there a general or special election. If the framers of the Constitution intended that an acceptance by three-fifths of the qualified voters voting at such election on the proposed amendment would be sufficient to adopt it, they would have used the word "thereon" instead of "thereat." State ex rel. Allen v. City of St. Louis, 73 Mo. 435, 437.

VOUCH.

A statute requiring that notes shall be "vouched" by two witnesses, in order to give the county court jurisdiction of actions thereon, means testified to by witnesses called into court. "A note subscribed by two witnesses as and for witnesses cannot be said to be vouched by two witnesses until those persons are vouched and called and do testify before the court respecting it." Barker v. Colt (Conn.) 1 Root, 224, 225.

VOUCHER.

Laws 1870, c. 190, provided that all moneys drawn from the treasury of New York for county expenditures should be upon vouchers examined and allowed by the auditor, and approved by the comptroller. It was held that the auditor and comptroller were not authorized to examine and pass upon the claims themselves, but upon the vouchers only. "The word 'vouchers,'" said the court, "would seem to mean the evidence, written or otherwise, of the truth of the fact that the service had been performed or the expense paid or incurred, not evidence of the legal conclusion on the question whether the services or expenses, assuming the services or expenses have been in fact performed, paid, or incurred, are properly county charges, or are properly allowable, when the account for them is presented for allowance. The vouchers to be presented, examined, and allowed by the auditor are accounts in proper form, verified, the resolution of the board of supervisors allowing it, and the acquittance or discharge to be signed on payment being made." People v. Green (N. Y.) 2 Thomp. & C. 18, 20, 5 Daly, 194, 199; People v. Haws (N. Y.) 12 Abb. Prac. 192, 202, 21 How. Prac. 117, 128.

The word "voucher," as used in Hill's Ann. Laws, § 1172, providing that, if the estate of a decedent is fully settled, it shall be the duty of the executor or administrator to file his final account, which shall contain a detailed statement of the amount of money received and expended by him, from whom received, and to whom paid, and refer to the vouchers of such payment, a receipt from a party to whom money is paid, showing for what the payment was made, would undoubtedly constitute a proper voucher, when applied to the ordinary expenses incurred in the settlement of an estate; but the receipt alone could not be said to be a sufficient voucher for money paid out of a claim arising out of an action with the decedent, as the court might not approve the payment on the receipt alone, while it could and would ordinarily if accompanied by a verified claim; so that it would seem that a verified claim and receipt showing the payment, whether in whole or in part, would constitute a proper voucher in such a case. Willis v. Marks, 45 Pac. 298, 296, 29 Or. 493.

In considering an indictment charging the theft of "one voucher of the value of $50.00, the property of Robert Lake, in the words, letters, and figures following, viz.: 'Davis Wharf, April 18, 1825. Captain Robert Lake landed 22½ cords of oak wood, and ¼ cord of pine wood, all left for sale. To cash paid Robert Lake on account $25.00. Samuel Davis'"—the court said: "The instrument is correctly styled a 'voucher.' It attests, warrants, maintains, bears witness." State v. Hickman, 8 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 299, 301.

"Voucher," as used in Rev. St. c. 96, § 25, which provides that when a cause is at issue, and it appears that the trial will require investigation of accounts or an examination of vouchers by the jury, the court may appoint one or more auditors, etc., is construed to mean "an account book in which charges and acquittances are entered; and it signifies also any acquittance or receipt charging a person or being evidence of payment." Whitwell v. Willard, 42 Mass. (1 Metc.) 216, 218 (citing Jacob, Law Dict.).

The term "voucher," when used in connection with the disbursement of moneys, implies some written or printed instrument in the nature of a receipt, note, account, bill of particulars, or something of that character, which shows on what account or by what authority a particular payment has been made, and which may be kept or filed away by the party receiving it for his own convenience or protection or that of the public. People v. Swigert, 107 Ill. 494, 504 (cited and approved in State v. Moore, 36 Neb. 579, 54 N. W. 866; Moore v. Graneau, 39 Neb. 511, 58 N. W. 179, 180).

VOWEL

A vowel is a letter of the alphabet which is vocals or sonans, and can be uttered by itself, without the addition of other letters, and the same may be a Christian name. Kinnersley v. Knott, 7 Man., G. & S. 980, 987.

VOYAGE

See "Foreign Voyage"; "Trading Voyage"; "Whaling Voyage."

See "During the Voyage"; "On a Voyage."

A "voyage" is the sailing of a vessel from one port or place to another port or place. Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co., 126 Mass. 70, 77, 30 Am. Rep. 654.

The word "voyage," as used in Act Cong. July, 1790, c. 29, providing that every vessel of 150 tons burden or more, bound on a voyage across the Atlantic, shall, on leaving her last port, have on board a specified number of pounds of meat and a designated quantity of other provisions, is used in its ordinary sense—that is, a transit from one place or port to another—and the object of the Legislature in requiring a proportionate amount of provisions was to prevent a famine at sea. The John L. Dummick (U. S.) 13 Fed. Cas. 690, 691, 692.

"A voyage is the passage of a ship over and upon the seas from one port to another or to several ports." Warn v. Easton & McMahon Transit Co., 2 N. Y. Supp. 620, 622 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict. 793).

"Voyage," as used in a marine insurance policy, providing that no vessel should sail from the harbor of Gloucester on any voyage east of Cape Sable after a certain date, nor should any vessel sail upon any voyage whatever after a certain date at the risk of the insurer, means the enterprise entered upon, and not merely the route. Friend v. Gloucester Mut. Fishing Ins. Co., 118 Mass. 326, 332.

Insurance on a ship for the voyage does not include detentions, and the underwriters are not liable while the ship is not proceeding. Brough v. Whitmore, 4 Term R. 206, 209.

Where the United States chartered a vessel for a "voyage or voyages" at a stipulated price per diem for every day when so employed, the words of the contract only embrace the employment of the vessel when on such voyage or voyages, and do not extend to demurrage. Mitchell v. United States, 96 U. S. 162, 24 L. Ed. 702.

A "voyage" is not limited to the passage of a vessel from one port to another, but it may include several ports. In re Moncan (U. S.) 14 Fed. 44, 46 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.; 1 Pars. Shipp. & Adm. 307).

As imparting definite commencement and termination.

"Voyage" is a technical phrase, and always imports a definite commencement and end. Brown v. Jones (U. S.) 4 Fed. Cas. 404, 405.

"The term 'voyage' is frequently applied to the passage of a ship from one defined port to another; but it is also sometimes used with a more obscure reference to the place, and with a direct limitation of time. Its boundaries may be defined by local limits, or by artificial time, or by both combined. It imports a definite place of commencement and termination, unless that construction be repelled by the context." The Brutus (U. S.) 4 Fed. Cas. 490, 494.

As commencing from sailing.

"Voyage," as used in a policy of insurance covering the cargo of a ship while on a whaling voyage, means the whole voyage from its commencement—that is, from the sailing of the ship, and not from the date of the policy; and where a policy was on a cargo lost or not lost on board of a ship now on a whaling voyage, it relates back to the commencement of the voyage so as to cover a loss which happened at a time anterior to the date of the policy. Paddock v. Franklin Ins. Co., 28 Mass. (11 Pick.) 227, 230.

"Voyage" has received a construction in cases of insurance, where it has been held to be reckoned from the time the vessel breaks ground. Such construction is applicable to a charter party by which it was agreed that a ship then lying at Genoa should sail on or before July 30th to Monte Video, and then to Callao; and further providing that, should the vessel be unnecessarily detained at any other period of the "voyage," such detention to be paid for by the party delinquent, at a named rate of demurrage, therefore the detention of the vessel at Genoa until the 8th of September was not a detention of the vessel during the "voyage," within the meaning of the penalty clause. Valente v. Gibbs, 6 O. B. (N. S.) 270, 284.

When a vessel quits her moorings in complete readiness for sea, and it is the actual and real intention of the master to proceed on the voyage, and she is afterwards stopped by head winds, and comes to anchor still intending to proceed as soon as wind and weather will permit, this is a sailing on the voyage, within the meaning of a policy of insurance. Bowen v. Hope Ins. Co., 37 Mass. (20 Pick.) 275, 278, 32 Am. Dec. 213 (citing Bond v. Nutt, Cowp. 601; Lang v. Anderson, 3 Barn. & C. 495; Pettigrew v. Pringle, 3 Barn. & Adol. 523).

As ending on reaching port of discharge.

A "voyage" is the transit of a vessel, and ends when the vessel is safely moored at her last port of discharge. The Martha (U. S.) 16 Fed. Cas. 860, 861.

A "voyage" is a transit at sea from one terminus to another. Cohen, Adm. Law, p. 235. In the Standard Dictionary the word is defined as "the outward and homeward passages of a vessel taken together; the whole course of a vessel before reaching her home port." In The Martha, 16 Fed. Cas. 860, 861, it was said that a "voyage" denotes the transit to be performed by the seamen, and that it is in this sense that the term is used in the law maritime. A voyage is ended when the vessel is safely moored at her last port of discharge, after a circuitous voyage. The Mary Adelaide Randall (U. S.) 93 Fed. 222, 225.

"Voyage," as used in a charter party for as many voyages between given points as can be made between the date of the charter and a future date, and containing stipulations for lay days in loading and discharging, for customary dispatch, and for the payment of wharfage by the charterer, is not used in a strict sense, signifying the actual transit of the vessel from port to port, but denotes that the voyages are those in which receiving and discharging cargo and lying at the wharf are incidents. The Mary Adelaide Randall (U. S.) 93 Fed. 895, 896, 39 O. C. A. 335.

The phrase "end of voyage," when construed literally, means the arrival of the vessel; but as used in the following order, "Please pay William Bradford or his order $24.90 at the 'end of my voyage' in the Schooner Columbus on a fish voyage, if I make enough to pay, after taking out $10 I now owe you," it refers to the time when the fish caught on such voyage are sold and converted into money. Bradford v. Drew, 46 Mass. (5 Metc.) 188, 190.

As applicable to trip of tug.

The term "voyage," as applied to vessels engaged in foreign and interstate commerce, within the meaning of the maritime law, is not applicable to a tug making short trips, not from port to port, but from one body of water to another, merely furnishing the motive power to other vessels. It would be a misnomer to apply the term "voyage," in the sense of the maritime law, to such trips. The John Martin (U. S.) 18 Fed. Cas. 694, 697.

A trip of a steam tug while towing a ship from port to sea is a "voyage," within the meaning of the statute prohibiting the district court of New York City from taking cognizance of an action brought by any seaman against the owner of a ship for breach of contract for services on board ship during any voyage performed by such ship. Roche v. McOaldin, 20 N. Y. Supp. 688, 689, 1 Misc. Rep. 165.

VOYAGE POLICY.

A "voyage policy" is a policy insuring a vessel for a voyage "from a terminus a quo to the terminus ad quem in a prescribed course, which, though seldom set out in the policy, forms part of it, and is as binding on the insured as though mutually detailed." Wilkins v. Tobacco Ins. Co., 30 Ohio St. 317, 339, 27 Am. Rep. 455.

VS.

See "V.—Vs."

VUG.

"Vug" is defined by Webster to be "a cavity in a lode or vein," which would imply that such cavities were in veins. Cheesman v. Sheeve (U. S.) 40 Fed. 787, 794.

VULGAR LANGUAGE.

"Vulgar and obscene language," within the meaning of a statute forbidding such language in the presence of a female, includes the language of a man in asking a female to go to bed with him. Dillard v. State, 41 Ga. 278, 282.

W

W.

In a notice to the "Chicago W. Div. R. R. Co.," the letter "W." will be understood as an abbreviation of the word West, where the name of the railroad was the Chicago West Division Railway Company. West Chicago St. R. Co. v. People, 40 N. E. 599, 600, 155 Ill. 299.

W. D.

In an application for insurance the property was described as a dwelling house, and in answer to the question whether the title was a warranty deed or bond the answer was "W. D.," and to the question, "Is your property incumbered?" the answer was "None." These were the only expressions in the application in reference to title, and the court fails to find by the application of the meaning attached to the words that insured represented herself as holding any particular kind of title. The words dwelling house did not import title of any kind. The letters "W. D." have no such meaning, nor does the question, "Is your property incumbered?" If the letters "W. D." mean a warranty deed, it must appear from extrinsic evidence, if such could be received. They have no such fixed and definite meaning in the law, nor in common use, nor even in the connection in which they are employed. That may be their meaning, but it is not apparent. But if it was considered that they mean her title was a warranty deed, still that is not an assertion that such a title is a fee. No member of the profession, we presume, would say that it was. All know that a warranty deed may pass a term of years, a life estate, a fee or less estate, or it may pass no estate whatever. It conveys, as all know, only the estate of the grantor, whatever it may be. If he has none, it can pass none to the grantee. Rockford Ins. Co. v. Nelson, 65 Ill. 415, 419.

WAGE-EARNER.

A "wage-earner," within the bankruptcy act, is an individual who works for wages, salary or hire, at a rate of compensation not exceeding $1,500 per year. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3420; In re Pilger (U. S.) 118 Fed. 206.

WAGER—WAGERING CONTRACT.

See, also, "Bet."

Bouvier defines a "wager" as follows: "Wager. A bet; a contract by which two persons or more agree that a certain sum of money or other thing shall be paid or delivered to one of them on the happening or not happening of an uncertain event." Dunn v. Bell, 4 S. W. 41, 43, 85 Tenn. (1 Pickle) 581; Mitchell v. Orr, 64 S. W. 476, 107 Tenn. 534; McGrew v. City Produce Exchange, 4 S. W. 38, 40, 85 Tenn. (1 Pickle) 572, 4 Am. St. Rep. 771; Comly v. Hillegass, 94 Pa. 132, 133, 39 Am. Rep. 774; In re Chandler (U. S.) 5 Fed. Cas. 443, 447; Ex parte Young (U. S.) 30 Fed. Cas. 823, 831; Merchants' Savings Loan & Trust Co. v. Goodrich, 75 Ill. 554, 560; Jacobus v. Hazlett, 78 Ill. App. 239; Thornhill v. O'Rear, 19 South. 882, 883, 108 Ala. 299, 31 L. R. A. 792; Treacy v. Chinn, 79 Mo. App. 648, 651. This definition implies that to every wager there must be two or more contracting parties, having mutual or reciprocal rights in respect to the money or other things that are wagered, and usually called the stakes of the bet or wager, and that each of the parties shall jeopardize something, and have the chance to make something or to recover the stakes or thing bet or wagered upon the determining of the contingent or uncertain event in his favor. Jordan v. Kent (N. Y.) 44 How. Prac. 206, 207; Treacy v. Chinn, 79 Mo. App. 648, 651.

A "wager" is defined as a contract in which the parties stipulate that they shall gain or lose upon the happening of an uncertain event in which they have no interest, except that arising from the possibility of such gain or loss. Fareira v. Gabell, 89 Pa. 89, 90; Kitchen v. Loudonback, 26 N. E. 979, 980, 48 Ohio St. 177, 29 Am. St. Rep. 540.

A "bet" or "wager" is ordinarily an agreement between two or more that a sum of money or some valuable thing, in contributing which all agree to take part, shall become the property of one or some of them on the happening in the future of an event at the present uncertain, or upon the ascertainment of a fact in dispute. This definition, though not exhaustive, sufficiently expresses what is meant by a wager. The essential elements of an ordinary wagering contract are (1) an agreement by one party to pay another a sum of money, or give something of value, if a certain event happens; (2) a reciprocal agreement by the second party to pay the first a sum of money, or give something of value, if a contrary event happens; and (3) that the event contemplated in the agreement shall be something other than the passing of a consideration between the parties. Winward v. Lincoln, 51 Atl. 103, 112, 23 R. I. 476, 64 L. R. A. 160.

A "wager" is something hazarded on the issue of some uncertain event. Cassard v. Hilmnan, 14 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Bosw.) 207, 213.

A "wager," in ordinary acceptation, is the placing of something valuable belonging in part to each of two individuals in such a position that it is to become the sole property of one upon the result of some unsettled question. Each of the parties risks something which he may lose, and each may gain something beyond what he risks. If he merely hazards the loss of something without any expectation in any event of having more in return than he ventures, it would not seem to be a wager; and where a physician treats a pauper patient under an agreement with the town that he shall receive compensation if the town is able to recover the same from the town in which the pauper has a settlement, it is not a wager contract. Edson v. Town of Pawlet, 22 Vt. 291, 293.

Any contract or agreement for the purchase, sale, loan, payment, or use of any property, real or personal, the terms of which are made to depend upon or are to be varied and affected by any uncertain event in which the parties have no interest, except that created by such contract or agreement, shall be deemed a bet or a wager. Pub. St. N. H. 1901, p. 818, c. 270, § 18.

All wagers are not void at common law. It is only those that are contrary to public policy. Merchants' Sav. Loan & Trust Co. v. Goodrich, 75 Ill. 554, 560.

A "wager" is nothing more than a bet. Thornhill v. O'Rear, 19 South. 382, 383, 108 Ala. 299, 31 L. R. A. 792.

"A wager is the bet or stake laid upon the result of a game, or upon acts to be done, events to happen, or facts existing or to exist. 'Bet' and 'wager' are synonymous terms, and are applied both to the contract of betting and wagering and to the thing or sum bet or wagered. For example, one bets or wagers or lays a bet or wager of so much upon a certain result. But these terms cannot properly be applied to the act to be done or event to happen upon which the bet or wager is laid. The bets or wagers may be illegal, and the acts, events, or facts upon which they are laid may not be. Everything upon which a bet or wager may be laid is not a game." Woodcock v. McQueen, 11 Ind. 14, 15.

A "bet" is a "wager," and the betting is complete when the offer to bet is accepted. The placing of the money or its representative on the gambling table is such an offer, and where no objection is made by the player or the owner of the table or bank it is an acceptance of the offer, and the offense of betting against the statute is complete. State v. Welch (Ala.) 7 Port. 463, 465.

The words "wagering," "playing," "gambling," and "betting," though each have a meaning more or less different from the other, are often used one for the other. Thrower v. State, 45 S. E. 126, 127, 117 Ga. 753.

As the subject of a bet.

A wager is the contract by which a bet is made, and it is applied also to the thing or amount bet. Woodcock v. McQueen, 11 Ind. 14; Bouv. Law Dict. tit. "Wager"; also the same in Tomlin, Burrill, and Wharton. We have no law authority that makes it mean the subject on which a bet is laid. It seems that it was used in such a sense by Sidney. See Webster and Worcester. But a bet or wager may be the subject of another bet or wager. One may bet that the bet of another person may be won or lost by such person. Smoot v. State, 18 Ind. 18, 19.

Dealing in futures.

A "wager" is a contract by which two or more parties agree that a certain sum of money or other valuable thing shall be paid or delivered to one of them on the happening of a certain event. A contract between parties that one would reimburse the other for any losses they might sustain in optional or gambling contracts made on the board of trade, in consideration that if any gains should be made in such dealing such party would pay the sum to the other, and would receive a commission for his services, is a wager. Pearce v. Foote, 113 Ill. 228, 239, 55 Am. Rep. 414.

Where there is no real transaction—no real contract for purchase or sale—but only a bet upon the rise or fall of the price of a stock or article of merchandise in the exchange or market, one party agreeing to pay if there is a rise and the other party agreeing to pay if there is a fall in price, the agreement is a pure wager. No business is done—nothing is bought or sold or contracted for; there is only a bet. Dillaway v. Alden, 33 Atl. 981, 982, 88 Me. 230.

A person may contract for the sale of personal property for future delivery which he has not got. Merchants and traders often do this. A contract for the sale of personalty which the vendor does not own or possess, but expects to obtain by purchase or otherwise, is binding, for an actual transfer of property is contemplated. If, however, at the time of entering into a contract for the sale of personal property for future delivery, it is contemplated by both parties that at the time fixed for delivering the purchaser shall merely receive or pay the difference between the contract and the purchase price, the contract is a "wager," and nothing more, and it makes no difference that a bet or wager is made to assume the form of a contract. Irwin v. Williar, 4 Sup. Ct. 160, 165, 119 U. S. 499, 23 L. Ed. 225.

It was said by Judge Gresham in Williar v. Irwin (U. S.) 20 Fed. Cas. 38, that a transaction which on its face is legitimate cannot be held void as a wagering contract by showing that one party only so understood and meant it to be. The proof must go further, and show that this understanding was mutual, and that both parties so understood the transaction. Ward v. Vosburgh (U. S.) 31 Fed. 12, 13.

In a wagering contract on the price of stock both parties assume the risk of either gaining or losing. In a legitimate transaction through an agent or broker the agent or broker assumes no risk, except that the principal may not be able to carry out his agreement. In Wagner v. Hildebrand, 41 Atl. 34, 36, 187 Pa. 136, the court says: "A purchase of stock on margin for speculation is not necessarily a gambling transaction. If it is the intention of the parties that a real purchase shall be made by the broker, although the delivery may be postponed or made to depend upon future conditions, the transaction is legal." Winward v. Lincoln, 51 Atl. 106, 112, 23 R. I. 476, 64 L. R. A. 160.

"Contracts of wager" are contracts depending upon a chance or casualty. "All contracts for speculation in stocks upon margins, when the broker and customer do not contemplate or intend that the stock purchased or sold shall become or be treated as the stock of the customer, but the real transaction is the mere dealing in differences between prices—that is, in payment of future profits or losses, as the event may be—are contracts of wager." In re Hunt (U. S.) 26 Fed. 739, 740; Waugh v. Beck, 6 Atl. 922, 924, 114 Pa. 422, 60 Am. Rep. 354; Tantum v. Arnold, 6 Atl. 316, 318, 42 N. J. Eq. 60.

The term "wagers" includes an option contract by which one party purports to sell commodities to another, to be delivered at a future date, the understanding being that the rise or decrease in price is to be settled between the parties by the losing party paying the difference. Waterman v. Buckland, 1 Mo. App. 45, 47; McGrew v. City Produce Exchange, 4 S. W. 38, 40, 85 Tenn. (1 Pickle) 572, 4 Am. St. Rep. 771; People v. Wade, 59 N. Y. Supp. 846, 848; Ex parte Young (U. S.) 30 Fed. Cas. 828, 831; Ward v. Vosburgh (U. S.) 31 Fed. 12, 13; Williar v. Irwin (U. S.) 30 Fed. Cas. 38, 39.

A speculative option, where the object of the parties is not a sale and delivery of the goods, but a settlement in money on differences commonly called a "put," is a wagering contract. In re Chandler (U. S.) 5 Fed. Cas. 443, 444.

An agreement by which it is understood by the parties at the time that there shall be no delivery of the commodity sold, but instead thereof a settlement of differences according to the market fluctuations, is a wager and void. Kent v. Miltenberger, 13 Mo. App. 503, 504.

All bargains for the purchase and sale of things where it is the understanding of the parties, whether expressed or not, that the things are not to be delivered, but at the agreed time the differences between the market values at the two periods are to be adjusted, constitute wagers or gambling contracts. Lester v. Buel, 49 Ohio St. 240, 255, 30 N. E. 821, 34 Am. St. Rep. 556.

If two men agree that if coffee rises in price one of them shall pay a sum of money to the other, it is a "wager," if they have no other interest in the coffee than that growing out of the contingency about which they stipulate. Fareira v. Gabell, 89 Pa. 89, 90.

Where a person sold certain seed wheat at a fixed sum per bushel, and further agreed to sell the wheat to be grown by the purchaser from the wheat sold at the same price, although there were elements of uncertainty in the transaction it did not constitute a "wager" in the contract. Kitchen v. Loudenback, 26 N. E. 979, 980, 48 Ohio St. 177, 29 Am. St. Rep. 540.

Election bet.

The term "wager" is a comprehensive one, and includes every description of betting. A bet on an election is embraced by it. Lyons v. Hodgen & Miller, 10 Ky. Law Rep. 271, 273 (citing Conner v. Ragland, 54 Ky. [15 B. Mon.] 634, 635).

A wager may be based upon something not instituted, created, or brought about for wagering purposes—upon something made necessary by law, the result of which is doubtful. So it is held that the hazard of money on the result of a primary election was a wager within Shannon's Code, § 8161, declaring that any one who has lost money on any wager may recover the same by action. Mitchell v. Orr, 64 S. W. 476, 107 Tenn. 534.

Within the meaning of the statute declaring all bets and wagers to be illegal, an agreement during the pendency of the election of President, by which one of the parties sold and delivered to the other certain property, the purchaser agreeing to pay therefor double the then market price when a certain named candidate for the presidency was elected, was a wagering contract, and invalid. Lucas v. Harper, 24 Ohio St. 328. See, also, Somers v. State, 37 Tenn. (5 Sneed) 438, 439.

The term "game" or "wager" in Gen. St. c. 47, art. 1, § 11, providing a penalty for betting at any game or wager, includes betting on a primary election. Commonwealth v. Helm, 9 Ky. Law Rep. 532.

In order to constitute a "wager" there must be a risk by both parties; and where one sells another certain merchandise, to be paid for when Henry Clay should be elected President of the United States, it does not constitute a wager, as the purchasing party loses nothing. If he lost he was to pay for the value of the goods, if he won he was to pay nothing, and the risk was all on one side. Quarles v. State, 24 Tenn. (5 Humph.) 561, 565.

Fee to enter a race.

The paying of an entrance fee to a driving association for the purpose of entering the horse of the payor in certain races is not a "wager," as the driving association does not jeopardize anything. Jordan v. Kent (N. Y.) 44 How. Prac. 206, 207.

The giving of a check to an agricultural society to pay the entrance fee of a horse entered to compete in the races was construed to be a wager. Comly v. Hillegass, 94 Pa. 132, 133, 39 Am. Rep. 774.

Pool-selling.

Pool-selling is neither a wager nor a game within the statutes relating to gaming. Smith v. Commonwealth, 3 Ky. Law Rep. 248.

Premium, purse, or stake distinguished.

The distinction between a bet or wager and a premium or purse is thus given in Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 532: "A bet or wager is ordinarily an agreement between two or more that a sum of money or some valuable thing, in contributing which all agreeing take part, shall become the property of one or some one of them on the happening in the future of an event at the present uncertain, and the stake is the money or thing thus put on the chance. There is in that this element that does not enter into a modern purse, prize, or premium, viz., that each party to the former gets a chance of gain from the others and takes a risk of loss of his own to them. The purse, prize, or premium is ordinarily some valuable thing offered by a person for the doing of something by others, into the strife for which he does not enter. He has not a chance of gaining the thing offered, and, if he abide by his offer, that he must lose it and give it over to some of those contending for it is reasonably certain." Competing for premiums offered by an association of horse races is not competing for bets or wagers, and therefore an agreement between two owners of horses to pool all premiums and stake moneys awarded on their horses and to divide the same equally is valid. Hankins v. Ottinger, 47 Pac. 254, 255, 115 Cal. 454, 40 L. R. A. 76.

In a "wager" or bet there must be two parties, and it is known, before the chance or uncertain event on which it is laid is accomplished, who are the parties who must either lose or win. In a premium or reward there is but one party until the act or thing or purpose for which it is offered has been accomplished. A premium is a reward or recompense for some act done; a wager is a stake on an uncertain event. In a premium it is known who is to give before the event; in a wager it is not known until after the event. Alvord v. Smith, 63 Ind. 58, 62 (cited in Treacey v. Chinn, 79 Mo. App. 648, 651).

A wager is a bet which is a pledge as of money to be paid to another in a certain event, the other pledging to pay a forfeit in the contrary event. Trotting for a purse or stake is not a transaction of that kind, but more properly belongs to the class of no cure no pay cases. Ballard v. Brown, 32 Atl. 485, 67 Vt. 586.

Bouvier's definition implies that there must be at least two parties to every wager, in which one stands to win and the other to lose some valuable thing upon the certain result of a particular event. In such a case each party jeopardizes something, and each has a chance to win something. It is clear that no such conditions exist where an association offers a price or premium to be contested for by the owners of horses. Therefore a note given in consideration for a horse, payable on demand after the horse has won a race, is not illegal, as being a contract against public policy based on a wager, as winning a horse race did not necessarily imply a horse race involving a wager. Treacy v. Chinn, 79 Mo. App. 648, 651.

WAGER ON AN ELECTION.

The term "wager on an election," within the meaning of a statute prohibiting wagers on elections, includes a bet upon the vote of a county in a general election, or of a precinct in a district or county election. Commonwealth v. Kennedy, 54 Ky. (15 B. Mon.) 531, 533.

WAGER POLICY.

Interest policy distinguished, see "Interest Policy."

A wager policy is one which shows on the face of it that the contract it embodies is really not an insurance, but a wager; a pretended insurance founded on an ideal risk, where the assured has no interest in the thing insured. Sawyer v. Dodge County Mut. Ins. Co., 37 Wis. 503, 539.

A policy of insurance obtained by a party who has no interest in the subject of insurance is a mere wager policy. Embler v. Hartford Steam Boiler Insp. & Ins. Co., 40 N. Y. Supp. 450, 452, 8 App. Div. 188.

A wager policy is a policy in which the insured has no interest, and which is in effect a mere betting on the chances of a ship's safe arrival. Cassard v. Hinman, 1 Bosw. (14 N. Y. Super. Ct.) 207, 212.

In the law of insurance a wager policy is one in which the party assured has no interest in the thing insured, and could sustain no possible loss by the event insured against if he had not made such wager. Amory v. Gilman, 2 Mass. 1, 7.

In Gambs v. Covenant Mut. Ins. Co., 50 Mo. 44, it was said gambling and wager policies are those where the persons for whose use they issue have no pecuniary interest in the life insured. In Lord v. Dall, 12 Mass. 115, 7 Am. Dec. 38, it was held that unless the insured had an interest in the life insured it would be a mere wager policy, contrary to the law, and therefore void. Singleton v. St. Louis Mut. Ins. Co., 68 Mo. 63, 73, 27 Am. Rep. 321.

A wager policy is one where the person for whose use the policy is issued has no pecuniary interest in the life insured, and does not apply to a policy of a wife on the life of her husband, as the law requires him to support her, and in most cases she is actually dependent upon him for support. Gambs v. Covenant Mut. Life Ins. Co., 50 Mo. 44, 47.

A wager policy does not include a case where insurance is underwritten on merchandise on board a ship free of salvage and average, and the policy is to be the only proof of interest required, insured having property on board, and neither he nor the underwriters intending to insure on a wager policy. Alsop v. Commercial Ins. Co. (U. S.) 1 Fed. Cas. 564.

If one takes out a policy of insurance upon the life of another in which he has no interest, the policy is a pure wager policy and void. But where one takes out a policy on his own life, it is a valid contract, and becomes operative just as soon as it is perfect. It is practically a promise on the part of the insurer to pay a sum of money to the insured upon the happening of a condition. As such it is a valid contract, properly a subject of sale, and is valid in the hands of any person to whom it is assigned for value. Steinback v. Diepenbrock, 37 N. Y. Supp. 279, 280, 1 App. Div. 417.

WAGES.

See "Current Wages"; "Full Wages"; "Prevailing Rate of Wages."

"Wages" is defined to mean a compensation given to a hired person for his or her services. First Nat. Bank of Cleburne v. Graham (Tex.) 22 S. W. 1101, 1102 (quoting Webster); Dempsey v. McKennell, 23 S. W. 525, 526, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 284; Fidelity Ins., Trust & Safe-Deposit Co. v. Shenandoah Valley R. Co., 9 S. E. 759, 761, 86 Va. 1, 19 Am. St. Rep. 858; Fidelity Ins. & Safe-De- posit Co. v. Shenandoah Iron Co. (U. S.) 42 Fed. 372, 376.

The word "wages" is usually employed in ordinary language to designate the sums paid to persons hired to perform manual labor. State v. Haun, 54 Pac. 130, 132, 7 Kan. App. 509 (quoting Worcester).

Wages are the compensations paid or to be paid for services by the day, week, etc., as of laborers, commissioners, etc. Seiler v. State, 65 N. E. 922, 927, 160 Ind. 605; Cowdin v. Huff, 10 Ind. 83, 85; Indianapolis School Com'rs v. Wasson, 74 Ind. 133, 142.

"Wages" are defined to be "the compensation paid or to be paid for services by the day, week, or month (Anderson's Law Dict.); or a compensation given to a hired person for his or her services (Bouv. Law Dict.). They are only delivered as the result of a hiring or employment, and involve the relation of master and servant, or employer and employé. * * * But while wages are the reward of work and labor, it by no means follows that every claim for work and labor done is a claim for wages." Where the proofs on the trial show merely work and labor done in pursuance of a special contract, it does not amount to a claim for wages, and the plaintiff, having declared for wages for manual labor, cannot recover. Henry v. Fisher, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 71.

Wages are the reward of labor, and always come of contract, express or implied. Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Costello, 33 Pa. 241, 244.

The term "wages," in its legal as well as in its popular sense, means compensation given by a master or employer to a hired person or employé. The law contemplates a hiring. The word "wages" as used in Act April 9, 1872, relating to liens for wages, implies a hiring and the relation of employer and employé, and the preference given by the act cannot inure to the benefit of the contractor who employs others to do the actual work. Diller v. Frantz, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 306, 308.

There is nothing ambiguous about the use of the word "wages" in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, § 64b, c. 541, 30 Stat. 563 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3447], providing for priority of wage-earners. It means the agreed compensation for services rendered by the workmen, clerks, or servants of the bankrupt—those who have served him in a subordinate or menial capacity, and who are supposed to be dependent on their earnings for their present support. Whether their employer has agreed to pay them by the hour, day, week, or month, or by the job or piece, is wholly immaterial. In re Gurewitz, 121 Fed. 982, 983, 58 C. C. A. 320.

"Wages and earnings" of a debtor, within the meaning of the exemption statute, includes such wages and earnings as long as they can be identified, and they do not lose their character by the mere fact of their being paid to the debtor. Rutter v. Schumway, 26 Pac. 321, 322, 16 Colo. 95.

"Wages," as used in Rev. St. art. 2335, exempting from execution or attachment all current wages, means compensation given to a hired person for his services. Neither the amount of compensation nor the time of payment need be fixed. Dempsey v. McKennell, 23 S. W. 525, 526, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 284.

"Wages due workmen, clerks, or servants," which have been earned within three months, given priority by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 563, § 64b (4) [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3447], means wages which are owing at the time of the bankruptcy, although they may not then be due in the sense of being immediately payable. In re P. H. Glading Co. (U. S.) 120 Fed. 709, 710.

The compensation of bookkeepers or persons employed to make sales of merchandise or of property manufactured constitutes "wages" within the meaning of Laws 1885, c. 376, providing that, where a receiver of a corporation is appointed, the wages of its employes, operatives, and laborers shall be preferred in the distribution of assets. Palmer v. Van Santvoord, 47 N. E. 915, 917, 153 N. Y. 612, 38 L. R. A. 402.

The word "wages," in maritime law, is defined to be the compensation allowed to seamen for their services on board a vessel during a voyage. Abb. on Shipping, 615; 3 Kent, 185. Rev. St. U. S. § 4251 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2929], providing that "no canal boat without masts or steam power which is required to be registered, licensed * * * shall be subject to be liable * * * for the wages of any person who may be employed on board thereof or in navigating the same," does not apply to a claim for towing such canal boat, made by a corporation. Ryan v. Hook (N. Y.) 34 Hun, 185, 191.

Commissions.

The term "wages" includes the compensation paid to one who, under a contract, is required to purchase materials and employ the requisite laborers for constructing certain buildings, the cost thereof to be paid by the other party, who is also required to pay the first party a certain per cent. of the entire cost of the building for his services in supervising and executing the work. Howell v. McDowell, 47 N. J. Law (18 Vroom) 359, 360, 1 Atl. 474; Moore v. Heaney, 14 Md. 558, 562.

A claim against a bankrupt merchant by one who acted as his agent in making sales of his goods on a stipulated commission is not entitled to priority of payment out of the bankrupt estate, such commissions not being included in the language of Bankr.

Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b, cl. 4, 30 Stat. 563 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3448], giving priority to wages due workmen, clerks, or servants. In re Mayer (U. S.) 101 Fed. 227, 4 Am. Bankr. R. 202.

"Wages," as used in Act April 15, 1845, providing that the "wages" of any laborer, or the salary of any person in public or private employment, shall not be liable to attachment in the hands of the employer, does not include a factor's or broker's commissions. Hamberger v. Marcus, 27 Atl. 681, 682, 157 Pa. 133, 37 Am. St. Rep. 719.

Act April 15, 1845, providing that the wages of any laborer, or the salary of any person in public or private employment, shall not be liable to attachment in the hands of the employer, includes the commissions owing to a traveling salesman from his employer for goods sold by him, and constituting the compensation of the salesman for services performed by him. Hamberger v. Marcus, 27 Atl. 681, 682, 157 Pa. 133, 37 Am. St. Rep. 719.

"Wages," as used in Laws 1885, c. 376, referring to a preference on claims against corporations for "wages" where a receiver is appointed, will include commissions earned by one employed in selling pianos under an agreement to pay him a fixed salary of so much per week and a per cent. on sales, together approximating what his services were reasonably worth. In re Luxton & Black Co., 54 N. Y. Supp. 778, 779, 35 App. Div. 243.

Compensation of employer of others.

In ordinary language the term "wages" is usually restricted to sums paid as rewards to artisans, to domestic servants, to laborers employed in manufactures, in agriculture, mines, and other manual occupations, and does not include the compensation of a contractor engaged to build a house for a fixed price, although he does part of the work himself. Heard v. Crum, 18 South. 934, 935, 73 Miss. 157, 55 Am. St. Rep. 520.

"Wages," as used in Laws 1885, c. 48, § 2, providing that in every voluntary assignment made for the benefit of creditors the claims of all servants, clerks, or laborers for personal service or "wages" owing from the assignor for services or labor performed for three months preceding the assignment should be preferred over the claims of all other creditors, cannot be construed to include the money due from an assignor to a firm operating a steam wood factory for sawing and working up rough planks according to the directions of the assignor, and to be paid therefor a certain sum per thousand feet at the rate of a certain sum per month. Webster defines the word "wages" as a compensation given to a hired person for his or her services. In the Imperial Dictionary

It is defined as follows: "In ordinary language, the term 'wages' is usually restricted to sums paid as rewards to artisans, to domestic servants, to laborers employed in manufactures, in agriculture, mines, and other manual occupations." Worcester says: "In ordinary language, the term 'wages' is usually employed to designate the sums paid persons hired to perform manual labor." Lang v. Simmons, 25 N. W. 650, 651, 64 Wis. 525; Campfield v. Lang (U. S.) 25 Fed. 128, 131.

"Wages of laborers," as used in Act June 16, 1836, providing that the "wages of laborers" to a certain amount are exempt from attachment, means "earnings of the laborer by his personal manual toil, and not the profits which a contractor derives from the labor of others." "The distinction between the two kinds of gains or rewards is the difference between the sale of your own labor and a sale of another man's labor at something more than you pay for it. What is received for another's labor over and above what is paid for it is called 'profit,' and such profits are not within the protection of the statute." Smith v. Brooke, 49 Pa. (13 Wright) 147, 150.

Within the meaning of a statute exempting the "wages" of any laborers or the salary of any person in public or private employment, the word includes the compensation of a miner who by his own labor mines coal at a certain price per ton, although he employs a common laborer to assist him at so much per day. Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Costello, 33 Pa. (9 Casey) 241, 244.

Debts synonymous.

"Wages" means a compensation for labor or services, and they are usually paid at short intervals. As used in Corporation Act, § 63 (Rev. 188), which provides that in case of the insolvency of any corporation the laborers in the employ thereof shall have a lien upon the assets thereof for the amount of "wages" due to them respectively, the word is used synonymously with "debts." Delaware, L. & W. Ry. Co. v. Oxford Iron Co., 33 N. J. Eq. (6 Stew.) 192, 195.

Debts due for labor in independent business.

Debts due by customers to a blacksmith for work done by him in carrying on an independent business for himself as the proprietor of a blacksmith shop are not exempt from garnishment as "wages." Tatum v. Zachry, 12 S. E. 940, 86 Ga. 573.

Fees or salary.

"Salary" and "wages" are synonymous, and both mean a sum of money periodically paid for services rendered. Morse v. Robertson, 9 Hawaii, 195, 197.

"Wages" is defined as a compensation given to a hired person for his or her services; that for which one labors; stipulated payment for service performed. The word is synonymous with "hire," "reward," "stipend," "salary," "compensation," "remuneration." So it is held that the word "wages" in an exemption statute includes salary. Bovard v. Ford, 83 Mo. App. 498, 501.

According to most lexicographers, the words "wages" and "salary" are synonymous; they both mean one and the same thing—a sum of money periodically paid for services rendered. Commonwealth v. Butler, 99 Pa. 535, 542.

There is no substantial difference, says Mr. Freeman in his work on Executions, between the terms "wages" and "salary," when they are applied to the subject here under consideration. The former term is commonly used to denote the compensation of laborers, and the latter that of other persons of more permanent employment and more elevated stations. The term "earnings" is more comprehensive than either of the others. It implies, as they do, that the sum due shall be claimed for the personal services of the claimant, and that it shall not include, to any substantial extent, recompense for materials furnished; but earnings need not result from work done under the direction of another, nor from manual labor. Dayton v. Ewart, 72 Pac. 420, 421, 28 Mont. 153, 98 Am. St. Rep. 549.

It is true that in a certain sense it may be said that the word "wages" includes the salaries of public officers and clerks, and the fees of lawyers, physicians, and other professional men; but that is not the ordinary meaning of the word. Officers and clerks of the city of New York who receive salaries are not within the provisions of the weekly payment law (Laws 1890, c. 388) requiring the weekly payment of wages, and such act does not repeal the provisions of the consolidation act as to the payment of salaries, and applies only to laborers and others receiving wages. People ex rel. Van Valkenburgh v. Myers, 11 N. Y. Supp. 217.

A tax on salary has been held to be a tax on "wages." Commonwealth v. Cuyler (Pa.) 5 Watts & S. 275, 278.

"Wages," as used in Const. art. 16, § 28, and Rev. St. art. 218, providing that no current "wages" for personal services shall ever be subject to garnishment, means the compensation given to a hired person for services, and the same is true of salary. The words seem to be synonymous, convertible terms, though use and general acceptance have given to the word "salary" a significance somewhat different from the word "wages," in this: that the former is understood to relate to position or office, to be the compensation given for official or other service, as distinguished from "wages," the compensation for labor. Bell v. Indian Live Stock Co. (Tex.) 11 S. W. 344, 348, 3 L. R. A. 642.

The term "wages" indicates inconsiderable pay received from a lower degree of employment than that denoted by the word "salary," which is suggestive of a larger compensation for more important services. Meyers v. City of New York, 69 Hun, 291, 23 N. Y. Supp. 484, 486; People v. Brookfield, 34 N. Y. Supp. 674, 13 Misc. Rep. 566.

"Wages" is compensation given to a hired person for services rendered, and is applied to designate the sums paid to persons hired to perform manual labor, and is distinguished from "salary," which ordinarily means natural or periodical recompense or pay, and applies to those holding official positions. Cane v. Mayor, 34 N. Y. Supp. 675; Sullivan v. Gilroy, 55 Hun, 285, 8 N. Y. Supp. 401; People v. Myers, 11 N. Y. Supp. 217, 218, 25 Abb. N. C. 368; Gordon v. Jennings, 9 Q. B. Div. 45, 46.

The word "wages," as applied in common parlance specifically to the payment made for manual labor or other labor of menial or mechanical kind, is distinguished from "salary" and from "fee," which denotes compensation paid to professional men; and hence under Laws 1885, c. 376, providing that claims of employes, operatives, and laborers of an insolvent corporation for "wages" shall be first paid out of funds in the hands of a receiver, unpaid salaries of bookkeepers, foremen, superintendents, and draftsmen employed on monthly salaries are not entitled to preference. In re Stryker, 53 N. E. 525, 158 N. Y. 526, 70 Am. St. Rep. 489; Cochran v. A. S. Baker Co., 61 N. Y. Supp. 724, 725, 30 Misc. Rep. 48.

Acts 1885, c. 376, provides that, where a receiver of a corporation of the state shall be appointed, the "wages" of employes, operatives, and laborers thereof shall be preferred to every other debt of the corporation. Held, that the word "wages" did not embrace compensation paid the superintendent and the attorney for the corporation. People v. Remington, 45 Hun, 329, 338.

Under Act April 15, 1845 (P. L. 459), providing that the wages of any laborers, or the salary of any person in public or private employment, shall not be liable to attachment in the hands of the employer, compensation due for services rendered "to hunt up witnesses and testimony to defeat a recovery on a forged note" is nonattachable. "Wages" is defined to be a compensation given to the hired person for his or her services. Bouv. Law Dict. "Salary" is said to be a reward or recompense for services performed. Id. In the common use of those terms the word "salary" is employed in referring to a stated allowance for services of a superior grade or for longer than a daily period, while the word "wages" seems to be applied generally to compensation for short periods or for smaller sums. Taken together, they are broad enough to cover all compensation for services rendered, in whatever occupation or capacity, no matter how extended or short the period of employment, or how large or small the amount. In Commonwealth v. Butler, 99 Pa. 535, the court said: "According to the most approved lexicographers, the words 'wages' and 'salary' are synonymous. They both mean one and the same thing: a sum of money periodically paid for services rendered. The truth is, and these lexicographers seem to hold, that, if there is any difference in the popular sense between 'salary' and 'wages,' it is only in the application of them to more or less honorable services." Hartman v. Mitzel, 8 Pa. Super. Ct. 22, 24, 25.

Salaries of public officers are not exempt from garnishment under statutes exempting wages. McLellan v. Young, 54 Ga. 399, 400, 21 Am. Rep. 276.

Interest on wages due.

The term "wages," in a statute giving employes a lien for the amount of wages due them, does not include interest on wages due, although it appeared that the term "wages" was used as synonymous with "debt." Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Oxford Iron Co., 33 N. J. Eq. (6 Stew.) 192, 199.

Manner of payment.

"Wages" means the compensation paid to a hired person for his services. This compensation to the laborer may be a specified sum for a given time of service, or a fixed sum for a specified work; that is, payment may be made by the job. The word "wages" does not imply that the compensation is to be determined wholly upon the basis of time spent in service, but it may be determined by the work done. The compensation to a laborer in a factory of so many cents per "hank" for every hank made, payable bi-weekly, is "wages," and as such exempt from the process of garnishment. Swift Mfg. Co. v. Henderson, 25 S. E. 27, 99 Ga. 136 (citing Ford v. St. L. & N. W. R. Co., 7 N. W. 126, 54 Iowa, 728; Appeal of Selders, 46 Pa. [10 Wright] 57; Hamberger v. Marcus, 27 Atl. 681, 157 Pa. 136, 137, 37 Am. St. Rep. 719).

Payment in property.

The term "wages," within the meaning of the exemption statute, includes compensation for labor performed under a contract by which the laborer is to have the price of his services applied on a lot of ground which his employer contracts to sell to him, although the contract is broken by the employer. Scott v. Watson, 36 Pa. (12 Casey) 342, 346.

Price of supplies furnished.

"Wages" are defined to be a compensation given to a hired person for his or her services. The idea of personal employment and rendition of personal service seems to be regarded as indispensable requisites to the payment of wages; so it is held that where an act was entitled "An act to secure payment of wages or salary to certain employes of a railway corporation," and declared that persons furnishing certain supplies to such corporation, including engines and cars, shall have a lien on the property of the corporation, the act was repugnant to a constitutional provision requiring the object of a law to be expressed in its title. Fidelity Ins., Trust & Safe-Deposit Co. v. Shenandoah Valley R. Co., 9 S. E. 759, 761, 86 Va. 1, 19 Am. St. Rep. 858; Fidelity Ins. & Safe-Deposit Co. v. Shenandoah Iron Co. (U. S.) 42 Fed. 372, 376.

Subordinate occupation implied.

"Wages" are defined to be the compensation paid by the day, week, month, etc., for the services of laborers or other subordinate or menial employes. Adcock v. Smith, 37 S. W. 91, 92, 97 Tenn. (13 Pickle) 373, 56 Am. St. Rep. 810 (citing And. Law Dict.).

"Wages" has a less extensive meaning and embraces a smaller class of credits than "earnings," and, as used in its application to laborers and employes, conveys the idea of a subordinate occupation which is not very remunerative, one of not much independent responsibility, but rather to immediate supervision (Railroad Co. v. Falkner, 49 Ala. 115); and such is its use in Laws 1885, c. 376, providing that wages of employes of an insolvent corporation shall be preferred to other creditors. In re New York Locomotive Works, 28 N. Y. Supp. 209, 212, 73 Hun. 327.

The term "wages" applies to payment of laborers, mechanics, and domestic servants, and is not applied to the remuneration of a high and important officer of the state. Greenberg v. Laeov, 84 N. Y. Supp. 930, 932.

In the sense of the exempting statutes, "wages" are held to be such as are earned by the hands and labor of the individual himself and his family under his direction, and do not extend to what he earns as superintendent or master of other laborers. The compensation of the person who is employed by an iron company to puddle iron at a fixed rate per ton, who receives his pay monthly on a particular day, and who is required to begin and quit work at certain hours, is "wages" within Mill. & V. Code, § 2931, exempting from execution or attachment a certain amount of the wages of every mechanic or laboring man. Adcock v. Smith, 37 S. W. 91, 92, 97 Tenn. (13 Pickle) 373, 56 Am. St. Rep. 810.

WAGES OF HER PERSONAL LABOR.

"Wages of her personal labor," as used in Code Iowa, § 2211, providing that a wife may maintain an action in her own name for "wages of her personal labor," means her earnings while in the employ of another than her husband, or while engaged in an independent occupation of her own. Her husband is entitled to her labor and assistance in the discharge of those duties and obligations which arise out of the marriage relation. Hence a husband may maintain an action against a physician for malpractice in the treatment of his wife, whereby he has been deprived of her labor and assistance. Mewhirter v. Hatten, 42 Iowa, 288, 291, 20 Am. Rep. 618; Omaha & R. V. R. Co. v. Chollete, 59 N. W. 921, 923, 41 Neb. 578.

WAGON.

See "Broad-Tired Wagon"; "Lumber Wagon"; "Narrow-Tired Wagon"; "Truck Wagon."

A wagon is a wheeled carriage, a vehicle on four wheels, and usually drawn by horses, especially one used for carrying freight and merchandise. Hamilton v. State, 52 N. E. 419, 420, 22 Ind. App. 479; Spikes v. Burgess, 27 N. W. 184, 65 Wis. 428.

"Wagon," as used in a statute exempting wagons from execution, "is intended to mean a common vehicle for the transportation of goods, wares, and merchandise of all descriptions." Quigler v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 413, 63 Am. Dec. 139.

"Wagon," as used in Sess. Acts 1866, 160, exempting from levy and sale on execution the horse and wagon of certain judgment debtors, should be construed in its general sense to include all four-wheeled vehicles, for whatever use employed, whether covered or placed upon springs. Rodgers v. Ferguson, 32 Tex. 533, 534.

Buggy or carriage.

As carriage, see "Carriage."

The word "wagon" is a generic term, and includes every other species of vehicle, by whatever other name the same may be called, but in a statute exempting from execution wagons, carts, or drays and other farm utensils, does not include a buggy adopted and designated for the carrying of persons only, as the term "wagon" is used in a limited sense; the clause being obviously for the protection of the farmer, and to secure to him his instruments of husbandry. Gordon v. Shields, 7 Kan. 320-325. See, also, Dingman v. Raymond, 8 N. W. 597, 27 Minn. 507.

The term "wagon," as used in a statute of exemptions declaring that one wagon shall be exempt to a debtor from execution, includes a buggy; and hence, where the only conveyance which a debtor possessed was a light open buggy with side springs, such buggy was within the meaning of the term "wagon" as so used, and was therefore exempt. Allen v. Coates, 11 N. W. 132, 133, 29 Minn. 46.

"Wagon," as used in Ohio Laws 1878, § 59, p. 692, exempting from execution to every head of a family engaged in agriculture "one horse, or one yoke of cattle, with the necessary gearing for the same and one 'wagon,'" does not include a buggy, as the term applies to vehicles in the use of which the farmer would be enabled to prosecute his business of farming, in the usual and ordinary sense of the word. Dulgar v. Harbmeyer, 8 Am. Law Rec. 15, 20, 6 Ohio Dec. 762.

"Wagons," as used in a bill of sale purporting to convey all of the grantor's stock and farming implements and "farming utensils," "wagons," etc., should be construed to include a hack and a buggy used on the farm. Royston v. McCulley (Tenn.) 59 S. W. 725, 730, 52 L. R. A. 899.

"Wagon," as used in a statute exempting a wagon from execution, includes a two-seated upholstered one-horse carriage built and used for easy riding only. Kimball v. Jones, 43 N. W. 74, 41 Minn. 818.

In an action to recover for injuries caused by a collision between teams, it was alleged that the plaintiff was driving in a wagon, and that defendant was driving in another wagon on the same side of the same highway, so that the team of said defendant was approaching that of the plaintiff from the opposite direction, and that the teams of defendant and plaintiff would have to meet, and that treble damages were sought to be recovered under a statute which provides that the driver of any vehicles, for the conveyance of persons, meeting each other on the highway, who shall fail to turn to the right and slacken speed, shall pay to the party injured treble damages for driving against the other vehicle. It was held that the word "wagon" and "team" might as properly be used to designate a vehicle for the carriage of goods as one for the conveyance of persons. Neither of them, nor both of them, constitute a sufficiently specific description of the vehicle named in the statute to entitle the recovery of treble damages. Rowell v. Crothers, 52 Atl. 818, 75 Conn. 124.

Coach or hearse.

The term "wagon," in an exemption statute, does not include a hackney coach. Quigley v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 418, 63 Am. Dec. 139.

Rev. St. § 2982, subsec. 6, as amended by Laws 1882, c. 117, exempting one wagon from execution, includes a hearse. Spikes v. Burgess, 27 N. W. 184, 65 Wis. 428.

Oil wagon.

As used in Rev. St. 1894, § 2047, prohibiting hauling a load of more than 2,500 pounds on a broad-tired wagon over graveled roads when they are thawing, etc., the word "wagon" should be construed so that where an oil wagon had the front and rear wheels held together by side bars between which rested an iron tank bolted permanently to the side bars by iron straps, there being no coupling bolt to the wagon, the tank would be construed as a part of the load and not of the wagon. Hamilton v. State, 52 N. E. 419, 420, 22 Ind. App. 479.

WAGON CROSSING.

Laws 1876, c. 24, amended by Laws 1877, c. 73 (Gen. St. 1878, c. 34, § 5457), requiring all railroads to build and maintain good and sufficient cattle guards at all "wagon crossings," and good and substantial fences on each side of such road, refers to crossings for public travel on roads, highways, or streets. It means established wagon roads intersecting railroads, and does not include private ways or farm crossings, so called. Sather v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 41 N. W. 458, 40 Minn. 91.

WAGON WORK.

In a written instrument promising to pay a certain number of dollars in "wagon work" for value received, the words "wagon work" do not mean labor, as hauling or otherwise, with a wagon or wagons, nor do they mean simply labor or work to be performed by the maker of the note in the construction of wagons, but they mean wagons, or perhaps parts of wagons—wagons, either complete or incomplete, including both the materials and the labor bestowed upon them. Johnson v. Seymour, 19 Ind. 24, 25.

WALF.

Walfs are goods thrown away by a thief in his flight. People v. Kaatz (N. Y.) 3 Parker, Cr. R. 129, 138.

A stolen horse left by the thief in his flight is a walf. Hall v. Gildersleeve, 86 N. J. Law (7 Vroom) 235, 237.

See "Await."

The word "wait," as used in a promise to wait for the payment of a debt, and used without any adjunct whatever in a popular sense means precisely the same thing as the word "forbear," which, when unqualified by terms of restriction, has regard to a general forbearance. Downing v. Funk (Pa.) 5 Rawle, 69, 73.

WAIVE.

The meaning of the word "waive" is to put off, to put aside for the present, or to omit to pursue. Webst. Dict. To waive for an unspecified term does mean to abandon or forsake, but to waive for a specified time means always to omit to pursue for the time specified, and no longer. Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Aiken, 82 Va. 424, 428.

"To waive" is defined by Webster as being "to throw away; to relinquish voluntarily; as a right which one may enforce if he chooses." This does not imply that one may not relinquish a thing to which he has no right, and an example might be given of such relinquishment of a claim to something without right. Anglo-Nevada Assur. Corp. v. Nadeau, 90 Cal. 393, 395, 27 Pac. 302.

"Waive," as used in a statute providing that the time for bringing a suit on a promissory note may be extended or waived by consent of the indorsers, does not mean that the suit is waived, but only the time for bringing it. The suit must still be brought during the running of the statute of limitations. Walker v. Wigginton's Adm'r, 50 Ala. 579, 582.

WAIVER.

See "Implied Waiver."

A waiver is an intentional abandonment or relinquishment of a known right. Christenson v. Carleton, 37 Atl. 226, 227, 69 Vt. 91; Donahue v. Windsor County Ins. Co., 56 Vt. 374, 382; Ward v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 33 Atl. 902, 904, 66 Conn. 227, 50 Am. St. Rep. 80; Hoxie v. Home Ins. Co., 32 Conn. 21, 40; Fitzgerald v. Hartford Life & Annuity Ins. Co., 56 Conn. 116, 134, 17 Atl. 411, 7 Am. St. Rep. 288; Lewis v. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co., 44 Conn. 72, 91; State v. Hartley, 52 Atl. 615, 617, 75 Conn. 104; First Nat. Bank v. Hartford L. & A. Ins. Co., 45 Conn. 22, 44; Johnson v. Schar, 70 N. W. 838, 839, 9 S. D. 536; Corey v. Bolton, 63 N. Y. Supp. 915, 917, 31 Misc. Rep. 138; Masons' Supply Co. v. Jones, 68 N. Y. Supp. 806, 809, 58 App. Div. 231; Monroe Waterworks Co. v. City of Monroe, 85 N. W. 685, 688, 110 Wis. 11; Fraser v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 90 N. W. 476, 481, 114 Wis. 510; Cedar Rapids Water Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 90 N. W. 746, 749, 117 Iowa, 250; Kennedy v. Roberts, 75 N. W. 363, 366, 105 Iowa, 521; Shaw v. Spencer, 100 Mass. 382, 395, 97 Am. Dec. 107, 1 Am. Rep. 115; West v. Platt, 127 Mass. 367, 372; Fulkerson v. Lynn, 64 Mo. App. 649, 653; Michigan Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Missouri, K. & T. Trust Co., 73 Mo. App. 161, 165; Perin v. Parker, 18 N. E. 747, 748, 126 Ill. 201, 2 L. R. A. 336, 9 Am. St. Rep. 571; Keller v. Robinson Co., 38 N. E. 1072, 1075, 153 Ill. 458; Star Brewery Co. v. Primas, 45 N. E. 145, 148, 163 Ill. 652; United Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Thomas (U. S.) 82 Fed. 406, 408, 27 C. C. A. 42, 47 L. R. A. 450; Rice v. Deposit Co. (U. S.) 103 Fed. 427, 43 C. C. A. 270; Sidway v. Missouri Land & Live Stock Co. (U. S.) 116 Fed. 381, 395; Cable v. United States Life Ins. Co. (U. S.) 111 Fed. 19, 81, 49 C. C. A. 216; Peninsular Land Transp., etc., Co. v. Franklin Ins. Co., 35 W. Va. 666, 676, 14 S. E. 237; Dey v. Martin, 78 Va. 1, 7; Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. v. T. M. Richardson Lumber Co., 69 Pac. 938, 951, 11 Okl. 585; Livesey v. Omaha Hotel, 5 Neb. 50, 69; Cutler v. Roberts, 7 Neb. 4, 14, 29 Am. Rep. 371; Warren v. Crane, 50 Mich. 300, 301, 15 N. W. 465; Portland & F. R. Co. v. Spillman, 23 Or. 587, 592, 32 Pac. 688, 689; First Nat. Bank v. Maxwell, 55 Pac. 980, 982, 123 Cal. 360, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17; Robinson v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co., 38 Atl. 320, 322, 90 Me. 385; Reed v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 61 Pac. 21, 21 Utah, 295; Dale v. Continental Ins. Co., 31 S. W. 266, 269, 95 Tenn. 38; Supreme Lodge K. P. v. Quinn, 29 South. 826, 827, 78 Miss. 525; Bucklen v. Johnson, 49 N. E. 612, 617, 19 Ind. App. 406.

A "waiver" is defined by Bouvier to be the relinquishment of or refusal to accept a right. Kervan v. Townsend, 49 N. Y. Supp. 137, 141, 25 App. Div. 256; Hecht v. Brandus, 23 N. Y. Supp. 1004, 1006, 4 Misc. Rep. 58; In re Auerbach's Estate, 65 Pac. 488, 491, 23 Utah, 529; Bennecke v. Insurance Co., 105 U. S. 355, 26 L. Ed. 990; Cole v. Dial, 12 Tex. 100, 102.

Waiver is really implied consent by a failure to object. Roseberry v. Valley Building & Loan Ass'n, 68 Pac. 1063, 17 Colo. App. 448.

Waiver is the renunciation of some rule which invalidates a contract, but which, having been introduced for the benefit of the contracting party, may be dispensed with at his pleasure. Reid v. Field, 1 S. E. 395, 399, 83 Va. 26.

A waiver, in the general sense, is the voluntary and intentional abandonment, renunciation, or relinquishment of a known legal right. To waive is to give up; to abandon and relinquish. It leaves the thing abandoned as though it had never been. Caulfield v. Finnegan, 114 Ala. 39, 48, 21 South. 484.

A waiver is but a neglect or omission to insist upon a matter of which a party may take advantage at the time when it ought to be done, so that it must operate as a trap to the other party to insist upon it afterwards. Lyman v. Littleton, 50 N. H. 42, 54; Lisbon v. Bath, 23 N. H. (3 Fost.) 9.

A waiver is a relinquishment of, or a refusal to accept, a right. The waiver of one of several remedies, or the waiver of a remedy as against one of several parties, does not extinguish the right. Thus, it is said, a party in seeking his remedy may waive a part of his right and sue for another part. White v. Nashville & N. W. R. Co., 54 Tenn. (7 Heisk.) 518, 534 (citing 1 Chitty, Pl. 90).

Waiver is where one in possession of any right, whether conferred by law or by contract, and of full knowledge of the material facts, does or forbears the doing of something inconsistent with the existence of the right or of his intention to rely upon it. Thereupon he is said to have waived it, and he is precluded from claiming anything by reason of it afterwards. Smiley v. Barker, 83 Fed. 684, 687, 28 C. C. A. 9.

It is required of every one to take advantage of his rights at a proper time, and the neglect to do so will be considered a waiver. Browning v. Smith, 139 Ind. 280, 293, 37 N. E. 540 (quoting Bouvier, Law Dict.).

A waiver of the right to rescind, or an election not to rescind, is either a matter of express declaration, or, as is more frequently the case, arises as a matter of necessary inference from the acts or conduct of the person against whom it is asserted. Where, after the discovery of the fraud, the person claiming the right to rescind continues to deal with the property as if he were the owner, and does acts which are consistent only with an affirmation of the transaction attacked, he must be held to have elected not to rescind. Hallahan v. Webber, 37 N. Y. Supp. 618, 615, 15 Misc. Rep. 327.

It is a rule of the civil law, consonant with reason, that any one may renounce or waive that which was established in his favor. The same rule obtains at the common law. In practice it is required of every one to take advantage of his rights at a proper time, and neglecting to do so will be considered a waiver. Cole v. Dial, 12 Tex. 100, 102.

Bishop, in his work on Contracts (section 792), defines waiver as "where one in possession of any right, whether conferred by law or by contract, and a full knowledge of the material facts, does or forbears the doing of something inconsistent with the exercise of his right or of his intention to rely on it. Thereupon he is said to have waived it, and he is precluded from claiming anything by reason of it afterwards." Pokegama Sugar-Pine Lumber Co. v. Klamath River Lumber & Imp. Co. (U. S.) 96 Fed. 34, 35; Smiley v. Barker (U. S.) 83 Fed. 684, 687, 28 C. C. A. 9; Cable v. United States Life Ins. Co., 111 Fed. 19, 31, 49 C. C. A. 216; United Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 27 C. C. A. 42, 82 Fed. 407, 47 L. R. A. 450; Burnham v. Interstate Casualty Co., 75 N. W. 445, 449, 117 Mich. 142; Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. v. T. M. Richardson Lumber Co., 69 Pac. 938, 951, 11 Okl. 585.

Where a person passively encourages an act to be done, he cannot afterwards exercise his legal right in opposition to such consent if his conduct or acts of encouragement induced the other party to change his position, so that he will be peculiarly prejudiced by the assertion of such adverse claim. Pokegama Sugar-Pine Lumber Co. v. Klamath River Lumber & Imp. Co. (U. S.) 96 Fed. 34, 35 (citing Swain v. Seamens, 76 U. S. (9 Wall.) 254, 274, 19 L. Ed. 554).

By "waiver" is meant an act done showing impliedly or expressly that the party agreed to rely on some security other than the estate mortgaged for the purchase money, or, without any security, to rely upon the personal responsibility of the vendee alone. The taking by a vendor of a mortgage to secure the payment of the purchase money of land sold does not operate as a waiver of his right to an equitable lien for such purchase price. Boos v. Ewing, 17 Ohio, 500, 523, 49 Am. Dec. 478.

Based on acts or words.

A waiver is an intentional relinquishment of a known right, or such conduct as warrants an inference of such intent. Dale v. Continental Ins. Co., 31 S. W. 266, 269, 95 Tenn. (11 Pickle) 38. This intention may be shown by conduct, as well as by express agreement. Fraser v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 90 N. W. 476, 481, 114 Wis. 510.

To make out a case of waiver of a legal right there must be a fair, unequivocal, and decisive act of the party showing such a purpose, or acts amounting to an estoppel on his part. First Nat. Bank v. Maxwell, 55 Pac. 980, 982, 123 Cal. 360, 69 Am. St. Rep. 64 (citing Roso v. Swan, 75 Tenn. [7 Lea] 467).

A waiver of an existing right, to be effectual, must be made intentionally, and, when there is no express agreement to surrender a right, the mere action of a person, to have that effect, must be such as to evince clearly an intention in the mind of the actor to make the surrender. Balfour v. Parkinson (U. S.) 84 Fed. 855, 861.

Waiver is a matter of intention, outwardly manifested in some unequivocal manner; and the fact that in an action against a city for personal injuries it suffered a default is not a waiver of any defect in the notice of the injury, required by statute to be given to the city. Gardner v. City of New London, 28 Atl. 42, 46, 63 Conn. 267.

Mere silence at a time when there was no requirement to speak is not a waiver, nor evidence from which waiver may be inferred (Armstrong v. Insurance Co., 180 N. Y. 560, 29 N. E. 991); so that the mere retention of proofs served after the time limited for their service is not a waiver of performance of the conditions precedent. Rademacher v. Greenwich Ins. Co., 27 N. Y. Supp. 155, 158, 75 Hun, 83.

A waiver implies the idea that one has a right, and, with knowledge of his rights and that which might defeat his rights, does an act by which he waives the right to stand upon his legal position or his legal right. Hollings v. Bankers' Union of the World, 41 S. E. 90, 92, 63 S. C. 192.

Waiver is the giving up, relinquishing, or surrendering some known right, and may be found to exist if one acts in such a way that his conduct implies that he has waived his right, and amounts to a bar or obstruction only when established, and may be said to be an estoppel. Crosswell v. Connecticut Indemnity Ass'n, 29 S. E. 236, 239, 51 S. C. 469.

Waiver of defects in machinery consists in retaining it after knowledge, without objection and without promise of amendment. Ford v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 75 N. W. 650, 651, 106 Iowa, 85.

A waiver takes place where a man dispenses with the performance of something which he has a right to exact. A man may do that, not only by saying that he dispenses with it—that he excuses the performance—or he may do it as effectually by conduct which naturally and justly leads the other party to believe that he dispenses with it. There can be no waiver unless so intended by one party and so understood by the other, or one party has so acted as to mislead the other. Thompson v. Gorner (Cal.) 36 Pac. 434, 435 (citing 2 Herm. Estop. § 825).

There is no ground for a satisfactory distinction between a waiver by word and a waiver by an act. Each is evidence of a new promise, sufficient to take the case out of the statute of limitations, and operative only as such; and, while the cause of action is the old promise, the measure of the liability is determined by the new one. The waiver in either case must be taken as it is—absolute, if absolute; conditional, if conditional. Gillingham v. Brown, 60 N. E. 122, 124, 178 Mass. 417, 55 L. R. A. 320.

Based on estoppel.

A waiver may be created by acts, conduct, or declarations insufficient to create a technical estoppel. Supreme Tribe of Ben Hur v. Hall, 56 N. E. 780, 783, 24 Ind. App. 316, 79 Am. St. Rep. 262 (citing Queen Ins. Co. v. Young, 86 Ala. 424, 5 South. 116, 11 Am. St. Rep. 51; Titus v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 81 N. Y. 410); Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. McAdoo (Tenn.) 57 S. W. 409, 411.

There need be no direct and specific agreement to waive the forfeiture in an insurance policy. A waiver may be implied by the acts and conduct of the party. It is now settled, says the court in Titus v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 81 N. Y. 419, that such a waiver need not be based on any new agreement or an estoppel. Joyce says (section 1370), as a general rule, if the company has treated the policy as valid, and has sought to enforce payment of the premium, and has otherwise with knowledge recognized by its own acts or declarations or those of its agents the policy as still subsisting, it waives thereby prior forfeitures. Knarston v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 56 Pac. 773, 774, 124 Cal. 74 (citing Robinson v. Pacific Fire Ins. Co. [N. Y.] 18 Hun, 395; Murray v. Home Ben. Life Ass'n, 90 Cal. 406, 27 Pac. 309, 25 Am. St. Rep. 133).

While a waiver of a condition of forfeiture need not be based upon a technical estoppel, yet, in the absence of an express waiver, some of the elements of an estoppel must exist—the insured must have been misled by some action of the company which caused the omission to comply with the condition, which could only be done by virtue of the policy. Armstrong v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 130 N. Y. 560, 29 N. E. 991, 992; Ronald v. Mutual Reserve Life Ass'n, 30 N. E. 739, 740, 132 N. Y. 378; Rademacher v. Greenwich Ins. Co., 27 N. Y. Supp. 155, 158, 75 Hun, 83.

In Weed v. London & Lancashire Ins. Co., 116 N. Y. 106, 22 N. E. 229, it was decided that, to establish a waiver of a forfeiture in a policy of insurance, the proof must show a distinct recognition of the validity of the policy after knowledge of the forfeiture by the person by whom it is claimed such forfeiture was waived. In the absence of an express waiver, some of the elements of estoppel must exist. The insured must have been misled by some act of the insurer, or it must, after knowledge of a breach, have done something which would only have been done by virtue of the policy, or have required something of the assured which he was bound to do only under a valid policy, or have exercised a right which he had only by virtue of the policy. Gibson Electric Co. v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 54 N. E. 23, 25, 159 N. Y. 418.

It is not necessary, in order to constitute a waiver, that the facts shall be such as would support a plea of estoppel. A waiver of conditions in a fire policy is in fact an election not to take charge of a technical defense in the nature of a forfeiture, and should be looked upon with liberality rather than with strictness. Corson v. Anchor Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 85 N. W. 806, 807, 113 Iowa, 641.

The doctrine of waiver is not necessarily predicated upon an estoppel. While an estoppel carries with it a waiver, the latter may arise where, strictly speaking, on the same state of facts, an estoppel would not. Cassimus v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co., 33 South. 163, 167, 135 Ala. 256.

Capacity of parties.

A waiver must be by one capable of binding himself (Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 525), and so cannot be made by an infant personally, for he has a right to be protected against his own imprudence. Corey v. Bolton, 63 N. Y. Supp. 915, 917, 81 Misc. Rep. 138.

Consideration.

A waiver, being merely a voluntary relinquishment of a right, cannot be regarded as a contract, and does not require a new consideration to support it. Schwartz v. Wilmer, 44 Atl. 1059, 1061, 90 Md. 136. To constitute a waiver, it must be founded on a consideration. Linwood Park Co. v. Van Dusen, 58 N. E. 576, 580, 63 Ohio St. 183.

A waiver, to be binding, must operate by way of estoppel, or amount to a promise supported by a valuable consideration. One does not waive the defense that he is a surety, and as such discharged by the neglect of the payee, by merely writing the payee that he is going to try to have the note settled, and asking whether, in case he had to pay it all himself, he could pay it in installments; the payee not having by reason thereof done, or omitted to do, anything to his prejudice. Crandall v. Moston, 50 N. Y. Supp. 145, 147, 24 App. Div. 547.

A waiver, to be operative, must be supported by an agreement founded on valuable consideration, or the act relied on as a waiver must be such as to estop the party from insisting on performance of a contract or forfeiture of the consideration. Ripley v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 30 N. Y. 138, 164, 86 Am. Dec. 362; Decker v. Sexton, 43 N. Y. Supp. 167, 171, 19 Misc. Rep. 59.

Election to forego advantage.

A waiver implies an election of the party to forego some advantage which he might have had. Supreme Lodge K. P. v. Quinn, 29 South. 826, 827, 78 Miss. 525.

A waiver is an election by one to dispense with something of value, or to forego some advantage he might have taken or insisted upon. Warren v. Crane, 15 N. W. 465, 50 Mich. 300; Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. v. T. M. Richardson Lumber Co., 69 Pac. 938, 951, 11 Okl. 585; Cable v. United States Life

Ins. Co. (U. S.) 111 Fed. 19, 81, 49 C. C. A. 216; United Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Thomas (U. S.) 82 Fed. 406, 408, 27 C. C. A. 42, 47 L. R. A. 450; Decker v. Sexton, 43 N. Y. Supp. 167, 171, 19 Misc. Rep. 59; Oedar Rapids Water Co. v. City of Cedar Rapids, 90 N. W. 746, 749, 117 Iowa, 250.

A waiver implies an election of a party to dispose of some advantage which he might at his option demand or insist upon, and it is applied on the principle that, when a party whose right it is to object takes no objection to the proceedings or the power of the court to hear the case, he is held to have waived all objections to formal and technical defects. French v. Seamans, 48 N. Y. Supp. 9, 13, 21 Misc. Rep. 722; Cowenhoven v. Ball, 118 N. Y. 231, 234, 23 N. E. 470, 471.

Equitable estoppel distinguished.

Equitable estoppel arises when the purpose or natural consequence of a person's representations or conduct is such as to induce another person to do or omit some act, the doing or omission of which would turn out to his detriment and to the inducing party's benefit, if the latter were permitted to take advantage of it; and such an estoppel more often carries the implication of fraud than waiver does. Bales v. Perry, 51 Mo. 449. Waiver depends on what one intended to do himself; estoppel rather on what he caused his adversary to do. There may be a valid waiver of rights of a certain kind—that is, formal as distinguished from substantial rights—without consideration, showing that waiver differs from contract. But where rights are involved we apprehend that a waiver must be supported by a consideration, to be valid. Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. Baskett, 71 S. W. 1113, 1116, 98 Mo. App. 53.

As estoppel.

"Waiver" belongs to the family of "estoppel" and often they are convertible terms. Maloney v. Northwestern Masonic Aid Ass'n, 40 N. Y. Supp. 918, 921, 8 App. Div. 575.

A waiver or dispensation is not in the nature of a contract, which requires the support of a consideration, but rather of an estoppel, whereby on account of acts or admissions, either recognizing a contract as of binding force after a forfeiture, or holding out that performance of some condition is dispensed with, the validity of the contract may not be denied. Knartson v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 73 Pac. 740, 742, 140 Cal. 57.

In strictness, the term "waiver" is used to designate the acts, or consequences of the acts, on one side only, while the term "estoppel" (in pairs) is applicable where the conduct of one side has induced the other to take such a position that he will be injured if the first be permitted to repudiate his act; but in laws of insurance the terms are ordinarily used indiscriminately. McCormick v. Orient Ins. Co., 24 Pac. 1003, 1004, 86 Cal. 260. And such is the rule in quo warranto proceedings to determine the validity of corporations. State v. School Dist. No. 108, 88 N. W. 751, 753, 85 Minn. 230.

In May, Ins. § 505, cited with approval in 2 Bac. Ben. Soc. § 42, it is stated that the terms "estoppel" and "waiver," though not technically identical are so near allied, as applied to the law of insurance, and so like in the consequences which follow their application, that they are used indiscriminately by the courts. In Diehl v. Adams County Ins. Co., 58 Pa. (8 P. F. Smith) 443, 98 Am. Dec. 302, it is said that a waiver of a breach or condition never occurs unless intended, or where the act, if relied on in equity, ought to estop the party from denying it. The doctrine of waiver by estoppel is stated in Cannon v. Home Ins. Company, 53 Wis. 585, 593, 11 N. W. 11, to be that a party cannot occupy inconsistent grounds or positions; that one who relies on the forfeiture of the contract cannot at the same time treat the contract as an existing valid one, nor call upon the other party to the contract to do anything required by it. Several former cases in this court were cited in support of this proposition, and it was said that "they certainly settled the rule of law for this state." Kidder v. Knights Templars & Masons Life Indemnity Co., 69 N. W. 364, 367, 94 Wis. 538.

In considering whether there has been a waiver or estoppel, the difference between waiver and estoppel is that in the former the result is voluntary, while in the latter the conduct of the party may have been voluntary, but with intention not to lose any existing rights, yet, if such conduct mislead, then estoppel arises. One is the voluntary surrendering of a right (Hoxie v. Home Ins. Co., 32 Conn. 21, 85 Am. Dec. 240), and the other is the inhibition to assert it from the mischief that has followed (Shaw v. Spencer, 100 Mass. 382, 395, 97 Am. Dec. 107, 1 Am. Rep. 115). Libby v. Haley, 39 Atl. 1004, 1005, 91 Me. 331.

In an action on an insurance policy, brought after the time limited by the terms of the policy, plaintiff excused the delay, alleging negotiations with defendant's agents to settle the loss without litigation, and their request not to bring suit, and promising to pay without; and the defendant set up the provision of the policy that no officer or agent should have power to waive any provision therein contained. Discussing this, the court said: "As this clause, in its terms, applies only to matters constituting a waiver, it is clear that it can have no application to facts creating an estoppel; for, though the terms 'estoppel' and 'waiver' may sometimes loosely be used interchangeably, there is a clear distinction between them. A waiver arises by the intentional relinquishment of a right by a person or party, or by his neglect to insist upon his right at the proper time, and does not imply any conduct or dealing with another by which that other is induced to act, or forbear to act, to his disadvantage; while an estoppel necessarily presupposes some such conduct or dealing with another. The matters set up by the plaintiff are matters operating by way of estoppel, and not as a waiver." Metcalf v. Phenix Ins. Co., 43 Atl. 541, 542, 21 R. I. 307.

Where it appears that an insurance company refused to pay a claim for loss on other grounds than that of insufficient proofs, they are deemed to have waived a failure to furnish sufficient proof; but such waiver is not avoided by a provision in the policy providing that no waiver of the policy shall be effectual unless indorsed thereon, since such facts constitute an estoppel in pais, though called a "waiver." Roberts v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co., 62 N. W. 1048, 1050, 90 Wis. 210.

Existing right.

There can be no waiver of a nonexisting right. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. v. T. M. Richardson Lumber Co., 69 Pac. 938, 951, 11 Okl. 585.

The word "waiver" implies the abandonment of a right which can be enforced, or of a privilege which can be exercised; and there can be no waiver unless at the time there is some right or privilege in existence. San Bernardino Inv. Co. v. Merrill, 41 Pac. 487, 488, 108 Cal. 490.

Knowledge and intention.

To constitute a waiver, it must fairly appear that there was an intent to waive the right. Linwood Park Co. v. Van Dusen, 58 N. E. 576, 580, 63 Ohio St. 183.

To constitute a waiver there must be both knowledge of the existence of the right and an intention to relinquish it. Portland & F. R. Co. v. Spillman, 23 Or. 587, 592, 32 Pac. 688, 689; Cutler v. Roberts, 7 Neb. 4, 14, 29 Am. Rep. 371; Livesey v. Omaha Hotel Co., 5 Neb. 50, 69; Dey v. Martin, 78 Va. 1, 7; Hoxie v. Home Ins. Co., 32 Conn. 21, 40, 85 Am. Dec. 240; Supreme Lodge K. P. v. Quinn, 29 South. 826, 827, 78 Miss. 525; Reed v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. of Cincinnati, 61 Pac. 21, 21 Utah, 295; Star Brewery Co. v. Primas, 45 N. E. 145, 148, 163 Ill. 652; Perin v. Parker, 18 N. E. 747, 748, 126 Ill. 201, 2 L. R. A. 336, 9 Am. St. Rep. 571. The intention courts often find from conduct that is inconsistent with an intent to insist upon the right, but the right relinquished must be one that is actually known to the party making the waiver. Fitzgerald v. Hartford Life & Annuity Ins. Co., 56 Conn. 116, 134, 17 Atl. 411, 7 Am. St. Rep. 288.

A person cannot be bound by a waiver of his rights unless such waiver is made distinctly, and with a full knowledge of the rights which he intends to waive. In some cases it has been held that a waiver must be an intentional act with knowledge of the facts. Bucklen v. Johnson, 49 N. E. 612, 617, 19 Ind. App. 406.

A waiver is effective only when it is made intentionally and with knowledge of the circumstances. In re Auerbach's Estate, 65 Pac. 488, 491, 23 Utah, 529 (citing Ben-neck v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 105 U. S. 355, 28 L. Ed. 990).

Waiver is essentially a matter of intention, and cannot arise out of acts done in ignorance of material facts. Freedman v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 82 Atl. 89, 40, 168 Pa. 249.

A waiver, to be binding, must be made with full knowledge of the right which the party intends to waive. Johnson v. Schar, 70 N. W. 838, 839, 9 S. D. 536.

To constitute a waiver, the party upon whom it operates must have full knowledge of all the essential or material facts of the acts or conduct of the other party, and with such knowledge consent to proceed notwithstanding; and the party relying upon such waiver assumes the burden of proof as to the knowledge of the party making the waiver. St. Louis Electric Light & Power Co. v. Edison General Electric Co. (U. S.) 64 Fed. 997, 1001.

Waiver must be by one in possession of full knowledge of the material facts and with intent to waive. Decker v. Sexton, 43 N. Y. Supp. 167, 171, 19 Misc. Rep. 59.

Where it does not appear that the parties to an action knew of the disqualification of a judge, such disqualification was not waived by the parties by merely proceeding to trial. State v. Hartley, 52 Atl. 615, 617, 75 Conn. 104.

Waiver, it has been said, is a question of intention, to be determined as a fact. Conduct or consent, therefore, to show a waiver, should be inconsistent with an intention to claim exemptions. State v. Gardner, 73 Pac. 690, 691, 32 Wash. 550, 98 Am. St. Rep. 858.

Waiver by a party of any contractual right is a matter of intention. Sullivan v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 65 N. E. 268, 269, 172 N. Y. 482.

A waiver presupposes a knowledge of the thing to be waived. Callies v. Modern Woodmen of America, 72 S. W. 718, 714, 98 Mo. App. 521.

A waiver is an intentional relinquishment of a known right, or such conduct as warrants an inference of the waiver of such rights. But where it appears that there was no such intent in fact, there is no waiver. Peninsular Land Transp. & Mfg. Co. v. Franklin Ins. Co., 35 W. Va. 666, 676, 14 S. E. 237.

A waiver involves the idea of assent, and assent is primarily an act of the understanding. Jewell v. Jewell, 84 Me. 304, 307, 24 Atl. 858, 18 L. R. A. 473.

Waiver involves the notion of an intention entertained by the holder of some right to abandon or relinquish, instead of insisting on the right. Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. Baskett, 71 S. W. 1113, 1116, 98 Mo. App. 53 (citing Stiepel v. German-American Mut. Life Ass'n, 55 Mo. App. 224).

"To make a case of abandonment or waiver of a legal right, there must be a clear, unequivocal, and decisive act of the party, showing such a purpose, or acts amounting to estoppel on his part." In Stiepel v. Life Ass'n, 55 Mo. App. 224, it is said that "waiver depends solely upon the intention of the party against whom it is invoked, and it is in that respect different from estoppel." It is not meant by this, however, that one's secret understanding is to control, for a party's intent will be construed from his acts or what he may do or write. Michigan Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Missouri, K. & T. Trust Co., 73 Mo. App. 161, 165.

It is said, in West v. Platt, 127 Mass. 367, 372: "A waiver is indeed the intentional relinquishment of a known right; but the best evidence of intention is to be found in the language used by the parties. The true inquiry is, what was said or written, and whether what was said indicated the alleged intention. The secret understanding or intent of the defendants or their agents could not affect his [plaintiff's] rights." A waiver may be made by an agreement, but it may also be made without an agreement. It depends altogether on the nature of the matter to which the waiver pertains. Fulkerson v. Lynn, 64 Mo. App. 649, 653.

Voluntary act.

Waiver is the voluntary relinquishment of a right. Gandy v. Orient Ins. Co., 29 S. E. 655, 656, 52 S. C. 224; French v. Seamans, 48 N. Y. Supp. 9, 13, 21 Misc. Rep. 722.

Waiver is the voluntary relinquishment of some known right, benefit, or advantage which, except for such waiver, the party otherwise would have enjoyed. Peabody v. Maguire, 79 Me. 572, 585, 12 Atl. 630.

A waiver is a voluntary relinquishment of some right which, but for such waiver, the party would have enjoyed. Austin v. Welch, 72 S. W. 881, 883, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 526; Stewart v. Crosby, 50 Me. 130, 134; Dalley v. Kennedy, 81 N. W. 125, 128, 64 Mich. 208; Warren v. Crane, 15 N. W. 465, 50 Mich. 300; Cowenhoven v. Ball, 28 N. Y. St. Rep. 870, 872; Id., 118 N. Y. 231, 234, 23 N. E. 470, 471. Hence voluntary choice is of the essence of waiver, and not mere negligence, though from such negligence, unexplained, such intention may be inferred. Fishback v. Van Dusen, 22 N. W. 244, 245, 33 Minn. 111; Moore v. Order of Railway Conductors of America, 57 N. W. 623, 625, 90 Iowa, 721; Kilpatrick v. Kansas City & B. R. Co., 57 N. W. 664, 671, 38 Neb. 620, 41 Am. St. Rep. 741. But that action is in no sense voluntary which a party cannot decline to take at the peril of life or property. Warren v. Crane, 15 N. W. 465, 50 Mich. 800; Dailey v. Kennedy, 64 Mich. 208, 214, 31 N. W. 125, 128.

The very term "waiver" imports a voluntary act, and an act cannot be thus denominated when performed under conditions of practical compulsion. State v. Davis, 66 Mo. 684, 686, 27 Am. Rep. 387 (cited in State v. Bell, 65 S. W. 736, 166 Mo. 106).

WAIVER BY ELECTION.

The defense of "waiver by election" arises where the remedies are inconsistent, as where one action is founded on an affirmation, and the other upon the disaffirmance of a voidable contract or sale of property. In such cases any decisive act of affirmation or disaffirmance, if done with knowledge of the facts, determines the legal rights of the parties once for all. The institution of a suit is such a decisive act. Any decisive act by a party with knowledge of his rights and of the facts determines his election in the case of inconsistent remedies. Robb v. Vos, 15 Sup. Ct. 4, 14, 155 U. S. 13, 39 L. Ed. 52.

WAIVER OF EXEMPTION.

A covenant in a lease, by which the lessee agreed "that all the personal property on the premises shall be liable to distress, and also all the personal property, if removed therefrom, * * * hereby waiving all right to the benefit of any laws now made or hereafter to be made exempting personal property from levy and sale for arrears of rent," waived the exemption only to the extent of the personal property on the premises, and the exemption does not extend to the debt for the rent. Hence, where the lessee gave notes for the rent, without waiver, and afterwards a judgment for the amount of the notes was recovered, the lessee was entitled to claim his exemption in a chose of action levied on. Mitchell v. Coates, 47 Pa. (11 Wright) 202, 203.

Exempted property is a personal privilege of the debtor. He may waive it, and certainly does waive it when he conveys it to another. His interest in the property is then gone. He cannot reclaim it or recover it. If the conveyance works a fraudulent preference under the insolvent law, the assignee may recover the property or its value. Wyman v. Gay, 37 Atl. 325, 326, 90 Me. 36, 60 Am. St. Rep. 238 (citing Nason v. Hobbs, 75 Me. 396).

A waiver, by an obligor in a bond, of "the benefits of every law made or to be made to exempt the premises described in the accompanying mortgage, or any other premises whatsoever, from levy and sale under execution, or any part of the proceeds arising from the sale thereof from the payment of the moneys secured by the bond," is confined to the obligor's real estate, and does not waive his exemption of a judgment recovered by him. Howard Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Philadelphia & Reading R. Co., 102 Pa. 220, 223.

WAIVER OF PROTEST.

Whether waiver of protest amounts to a waiver of demand and notice must be determined without reference to the Code as direct authority in the case of a nonnegotiable note. Neither the Code nor the law merchant requires protest in such a case, but neither is it required in the case of an inland bill. In Daniel on Negotiable Instruments it is said on this point: "But the word 'protest' has by general usage acquired a more extensive signification than the mere formal declaration of a notary. Inland bills and promissory notes may be protested by statutory enactment in many states, and the protest is accorded the same weight to them when it is made, though it be not necessary to make it. And the weight, as well as the number, of authorities, predominate in favor of construing a waiver of protest to signify as much when applied to inland bills and notes as when used in respect to a foreign bill." The expression "waiver of protest," when applied to paper which cannot or is not required to be protested, acquires the meaning of waiver of demand and notice of nonpayment. First Nat. Bank of San Diego v. Falkenhan, 29 Pac. 866, 867, 94 Cal. 141.

Where an indorser of a note, before its maturity, wrote to the holder, "Please do not protest and I will waive the necessity of a protest," it dispensed with a demand of the maker and notice to the indorser. Codrington v. Davis, 1 N. Y. (1 Comst.) 186, 190.

WAIVING DEMAND AND NOTICE.

The words "waiving demand and notice" are apt words to use in indorsing a note to waive the rights of technical indorsers. Jackson Bank v. Irons, 30 Atl. 420, 421, 18 R. I. 718.

It is held that the use of the words "waiving demand and notice" in a note does not weaken the effect of the presumption that when one not a party to a note, either as payee or indorsee, has put his name upon it, he thereby becomes the original promisor. These words, says the court, "are applicable to an indorser, and not to an original promisor, or one primarily liable by presumption of law or in fact, and are therefore mere surplusage." Bradford v. Prescott, 27 Atl. 461, 462, 85 Me. 482.

Where an indorser indorsed a note before its indorsement by the payee, the fact that the words "waiving demand and notice" were written above the name of such indorser could not be construed to restrain his relation as accommodation indorser or joint maker. Pearson v. Stoddard, 75 Mass. (9 Gray) 199, 201.

WALK.

See "Cross-Walk."

A Sunday statute operating as a prohibition against walking on Sunday is to be construed as meaning unnecessary walking only, and not to interfere with the comfort and conduct of individuals in walking when necessary for the promotion of health. Sullivan v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 19 Atl. 169, 82 Me. 196, 8 L. R. A. 427.

On roadbed.

"Standing or walking on the roadbed of any railway," within the meaning of an accident policy exempting the company from liability for injuries while standing or walking on the roadbed of any railway, does not include the mere crossing of railroad tracks for the purpose of reaching the railroad station. To stand or walk on a roadbed implies some sensible duration of the act, and does not describe the mere crossing, made for a justifiable purpose, such as reaching the station. Common language distinguishes between standing, walking, and crossing. Duncan v. Preferred Mut. Acc. Ass'n of New York, 18 N. Y. Supp. 620, 621, 59 N. Y. Super. Ct. 145. And this is so especially where the crossing is made at a well-recognized place of crossing. Payne v. Fraternal Acc. Ass'n, 93 N. W. 361, 363, 119 Iowa, 342; Dougherty v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 25 Atl. 739, 154 Pa. 385; Traders' & Travelers' Acc. Co. v. Wagley (U. S.) 74 Fed. 457, 20 C. C. A. 588. Contra, Keene v. New England Mut. Accident Ass'n, 41 N. E. 203, 164 Mass. 170.

WALK OUT OF BOUNDS.

A statute relating to prison bounds, and providing that, if a prisoner "walk out of bounds," the bond should be forfeited, means no other than such walking out as before the passing of the act would have been an escape—a walking out by which the plaintiffs would have been damnified, for which they would have had their action against the sheriff, and he against the prisoner. The words "walking out," etc., mean an escape—an escape as understood in law language. A prisoner stepping by mistake a few feet over the prison limits, and instantly returning, did not "walk out of bounds," within the meaning of the statute. Howard v. Blackford, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 777, 785.

WALL.

See "At the Wall."

As building, see "Building"; "Building (In Lien Laws)."

A wall is but a portion of a house, and the one is valueless without the other. Hoffman v. Kuhn, 57 Miss. 746, 751, 34 Am. Rep. 491.

Code 1873, § 2019, which provides that the owner of a city lot, who is about to build contiguous to the land of his neighbor, may, if there be no "wall" on the line between them, build a brick or stone wall, and rest one-half of the same on his neighbor's land, is not to be limited in meaning to a wall of a building erected on the line, but includes any part of a building thereon; and hence the statute does not authorize the person building on the contiguous lot to erect a wall which will destroy a stairway on the adjoining land. Cornell v. Bickley, 52 N. W. 192, 85 Iowa, 219.

WALL COUNT SOLID MEASURE.

A building contract provided that the building was to be erected of bricks at $2.40 per 1,000, "wall count solid measure." Held, that evidence was competent to show that these words were expressly understood among brick masons and contractors to mean that the space occupied by doors and windows was to be included in the estimate as if built up with brick. Long v. Davidson, 7 S. E. 758, 759, 101 N. C. 170.

WANDERING.

"Wandering," as used in the definition of an estray as being a wandering beast, etc., means "free from the care, control, and custody of the owner, or where no one seeks, follows, or claims." Robert v. Burns, 27 Wis. 422, 425.

WANT.

See "When Wanted."

The word "want" is an apt word to be used in a will to show testator's intent to make a will. It was so said in a case in which testator wrote his lawyer that he wanted his will changed, which letter was held to be a valid holographic will. Barney v. Hayes, 29 Pac. 282, 284, 11 Mont. 571, 28 Am. St. Rep. 495.

Acceptance of a written proposal to furnish for a given period all the goods of a specified character which the promisee might "want" does not bind the promisor to furnish or the promisee to order any of the goods so specified. McCaw Mfg. Co. v. Felder, 41 S. E. 664, 666, 115 Ga. 408.

As need or require.

"Want," as used in a will, giving all of testatrix's estate to her husband to use and improve during his natural life, and, if he should want for his support, to sell any part or the whole of it for his maintenance, means "necessity." The term in itself is ambiguous, being very commonly used to mean wish or desire, and as frequently in the sense of need or require. Hull v. Culver, 84 Conn. 403, 405.

In a guaranty whereby the promisor became liable to a certain amount for what stock a shoemaker "has had or may want thereafter," the words "may want" are significant as to the character of future dealings in contemplation, and mean the same thing as "may need or require," or "may have occasion for." Gates v. McKee, 13 N. Y. (3 Kern.) 232, 234, 64 Am. Dec. 545.

Where a statute provided that the president and directors, or a majority of them, might agree with the owners of land which may be wanted for the construction or repair of a road for the purchase in fee simple, and, if they could not agree, the land might be acquired by condemnation proceedings, the word "wanted" is not synonymous with "desired," but was used by the Legislature in the sense of "necessary"; and therefore land could not be acquired by the exercise of the power of eminent domain, unless its use and occupation was "required" by the company. Tracy v. Elizabethtown, L. & B. S. R. Co., 80 Ky. 259, 267.

St. 6 Geo. IV, c. 125, § 72, requiring a pilot, not having a lawful excuse, to take charge of any ship "wanting a pilot," does not refer merely to such vessels as are by the provisions of the act bound to take a pilot, but means any vessel, the master or owner of which thinks fit to require one. Lucey v. Ingram, 8 Mees. & W. 302, 312.

WANT OF CARE.

See "Care."

"Want of care" is the absence of such caution as a man of common prudence—that is, the average man—takes when it concerns him to be vigilant, sufficient to protect himself from apparent or suspected danger.

Jones v. Carey (Del.) 31 Atl. 976, 977, 9 Houst. 214.

In an action on the case against the bailee of hogs taken to be fed, for a loss through negligence, in an instruction that, if the hogs were lost by the negligence and want of care of defendant, he was liable, it was held that the words "want of care" meant a want of reasonable and ordinary care, and were not calculated to mislead the jury. Warner v. Dunnavan, 23 Ill. (13 Peck) 324.

WANT OF FORM.

See "Form."

WANT OF INTEGRITY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1350, providing that no person shall be competent to serve as an executor in whom there is a "want of integrity," cannot be construed to include a simple conflict of interest in regard to the estate between the executor named in the will and the other legatees. The fact that an executor claims property as her own, which the other legatees insist belongs to the estate, does not of itself, without reference to the honesty of the claim, show want of integrity. In re Bauquier's Estate, 26 Pac. 178, 180, 88 Cal. 302.

WANT OF ISSUE.

See "For Want of Issue."

The words "want of any issue," unexplained by any context, are held to mean a failure of issue generally. Hertz v. Abrahams, 36 S. E. 409, 413, 110 Ga. 707, 50 L. R. A. 361 (citing Goodrich v. Cornish, 4 Mod. 256, 258; Boehm v. Clarke, 9 Ves. 580).

WANT OF ORDINARY CARE.

See "Ordinary Care."

"Want of ordinary care" means nothing more than the failure to use those precautions which a just regard to the persons and property of others demands should be used under the circumstances of the particular case. Smith v. Day (U. S.) 86 Fed. 62, 64 (citing The Farmer v. McCraw, 26 Ala. 189, 72 Am. Dec. 718).

"Want of ordinary care," as used with reference to "negligence," means want of ordinary attention to the rights of others. White v. Dresser, 135 Mass. 150, 152, 46 Am. Rep. 454.

The words "want of ordinary care and skill," as used in a policy insuring the owner of a tug against loss or damage, containing the stipulation to the effect that the insured warrants that the tug shall not be damaged from the want of ordinary care and skill, must be construed as meaning that the master of the tug shall be a person possessing the necessary qualifications of ordinary care and skill, and that the assured warrants against loss arising from the want of those general qualifications, but not that the master and pilot shall never be remiss in a particular instance. The most intelligent and the most careful and skillful may at times be remiss, and it was this liability that the policy was designed to cover, provided that the master and pilot were persons of known care and skill. Egbert v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (U. S.) 71 Fed. 739, 741.

WANT OF PROBABLE CAUSE.

See "Probable Cause."

"Want of probable cause" means an absence of rational ground of suspicion, supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant a cautious and reasonable man in the belief that the person accused is guilty of the crime. Davie v. Wisher, 72 Ill. 262, 264.

WANT OF PROSECUTION.

See "For Want of Prosecution."

WANT OF UNDERSTANDING.

"Want of understanding," sufficient as a disqualification from receiving letters of administration, is a phrase the meaning of which has been well settled and ascertained. It does not refer to a want of understanding of the law, but means a lack of intelligence, which is not to be presumed from mere lack of information upon legal subjects or business matters. In re Shilton's Goods (N. Y.) 1 Tuck. 73, 74; In re Manley's Estate, 34 N. Y. Supp. 258, 259, 12 Misc. Rep. 472.

WANTON.

"Wanton" means without regard to the rights of others. Tatum v. State, 66 Ala. 465, 467.

The word "wanton," as applied to the case of one person injuring another, is somewhat indefinite in its meaning. It may apply to a case in which the defendant sees the danger of the plaintiff in time to prevent his injury and takes no steps to prevent it. McDonald v. International & G. N. R. Co., 22 S. W. 939, 945, 86 Tex. 1, 40 Am. St. Rep. 803.

A wanton act is an illegal act done when it is needless for any rightful purpose, without adequate legal provocation, and manifests a reckless indifference to the interests and rights of others. Everett v. Receivers of Richmond & D. R. Co., 27 S. E. 991, 992, 121 N. C. 519 (citing State v. Brigman, 94 N. C. 888).

In the Century Dictionary and Encyclopedia "wanton" is defined as follows: "Characterized by extreme recklessness, foolhardiness, or heartlessness; malicious; recklessly disregarding of the right or of consequences." An allegation in a complaint that the plaintiff fell into a cut and was injured by reason of the wanton and reckless carelessness and negligence of the defendant in not properly guarding and protecting said excavation was sufficient to warrant a charge in reference to exemplary damages. Brasington v. South Bound R. Co., 40 S. E. 665, 667, 62 S. C. 325, 89 Am. St. Rep. 906; Watts v. South Bound R. Co., 38 S. E. 240, 242, 60 S. C. 67.

Gross carelessness or negligence constitutes wanton misconduct. Welch v. Durand, 36 Conn. 182, 184, 4 Am. Rep. 55.

On a prosecution for wantonly killing a horse, it appeared that the horse was a bad fence breaker, and that on the day before the horse was killed defendant loaded his gun and swore that if the horse came in his field he would "fix him." The next day the horse came in, and defendant drove him out; he came in in the afternoon, and was driven out again; and entering again later in that day, defendant shot him. Held, that the facts did not show a wanton killing. Davis v. State, 12 Tex. App. 11, 14.

Malicious intent.

To make the killing of a sheep a wanton act, it must have been committed, regardless of the loss of the owner of the sheep, in reckless sport or under such circumstances as evinced a wicked or malicious intent, and without excuse. It is not every intentional act that is a wanton act. Thomas v. State, 14 Tex. App. 200, 206.

Willful distinguished.

The word "wanton" does not mean willful. It is defined by Webster as follows: "Wandering or roving in gayety or sport; licentious; lewd; extravagant," etc. The word adds no force to the charge that the act was done in a careless manner. The words "reckless and wanton" do not mean willful, and express nothing more than negligence. Lafayette & I. R. Co. v. Huffman, 28 Ind. 287, 288, 92 Am. Dec. 318 (quoted in Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Graham, 95 Ind. 286, 296, 298, 48 Am. Rep. 719).

"Wanton," as used in a complaint characterizing an alleged trespass as a wanton act, does not make the trespass willful. Durkee v. City of Kenosha, 17 N. W. 677, 679, 59 Wis. 123, 48 Am. Rep. 480.

The word "wanton," as used in characterizing the degree or kind of negligence, does not imply the same thing as willful or intentional, but means something less than willfulness and nothing more than negligence. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Tartt (U. S.) 64 Fed. 823, 825, 12 O. C. A. 618.

The word "wanton," in a statute making the willful and wanton killing of animals criminal, imports that the act is directed toward the animal itself, as distinguished from a willful killing with intent to injure the owner. The act must be done intentionally, by design, without excuse, and under circumstances evincing a lawless and destructive spirit. Jones v. State, 8 Tex. App. 223, 230.

WANTON AND OBSCENE LANGUAGE.

An ordinance prohibiting the use of wanton or obscene language should be so construed as not to include opprobrious and insulting language, which, although tending to a breach of the peace, is not lewd or lascivious. Sutton v. McConnell, 50 N. W. 414, 46 Wis. 269.

WANTON NEGLECT.

Gen. St. c. 107, § 9, authorizing a divorce where the husband has been guilty of "wanton and cruel neglect" of the wife, means something more than mere desertion, and requires that the wife should actually have been permitted to suffer by reason of the husband's failure to provide her with necessities; and if the wife had supported herself and children for 15 years, and neither she nor her children had suffered or been in danger of suffering for want of support, though there might have been neglect, there was no wanton and cruel neglect, within the statute. Peabody v. Peabody, 104 Mass. 195, 197.

WANTON NEGLIGENCE.

In "wanton negligence," the party doing the act or failing to act is conscious of his conduct, and, without having the intent to injure, is conscious, from his knowledge of existing circumstances and conditions, that his conduct will naturally or probably result in injury. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Webb, 12 South. 374, 375, 97 Ala. 308; Stringer v. Alabama Mineral R. Co., 13 South. 75, 79, 99 Ala. 397; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Vance, 9 South. 574, 576, 93 Ala. 149, 80 Am. St. Rep. 41; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Richards, 13 South. 944, 945, 100 Ala. 365; Birmingham Railway & Electric Co. v. Bowers, 20 South. 345, 346, 110 Ala. 328; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Anchors, 22 South. 279, 281, 114 Ala. 492, 62 Am. St. Rep. 116.

Before one can be held guilty of wanton and reckless negligence, the facts must show either that the party knew his conduct would inflict injury or the facts must show that on account of the attending circumstances, which were known to him, or knowledge of which he was chargeable with, the inevitable or probable consequences of his conduct would be the infliction of injury, or with reckless indifference to the consequences he committed the act or omitted to perform his duty. Evidence that a freight train at the time of an accident was being run at the rate of 40 miles per hour, supported by the statement of an expert that such speed is dangerous, but that freight trains are often run at that speed without accident, is not sufficient to show wanton and reckless negligence. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Hall, 17 South. 176, 179, 105 Ala. 599.

In construing a charge in an action for personal injuries the court said: "All that is meant in this case by wanton, willful, or intentional negligence is the conscious failure on the part of the defendant to use reasonable care under the circumstances to avoid the injury, after discovering the danger of the child, if the jury finds from the evidence that there was such failure and that the injury resulted therefrom." Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Burgess, 25 South. 251, 254, 119 Ala. 555, 72 Am. St. Rep. 943 (quoting Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Burgess, 22 South. 913, 116 Ala. 509).

In an action against a railroad company for injury to a team at a crossing, where the evidence shows no more than that defendant's servants failed to give the signals required by statute, it is error to submit to the jury the question of wanton negligence. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Linn, 15 South. 508, 510, 103 Ala. 134.

WANTONLY.

"Wantonly" means not having a reasonable cause. Everett v. Receivers of Richmond & D. R. Co., 27 S. E. 991, 992, 121 N. C. 519 (citing Clarke v. Hoggins, 103 E. C. L. 543).

The term "wantonly" implies turpitude; that the act done is of willful, wicked purpose. North Carolina v. Vanderford (U. S.) 35 Fed. 282, 287; State v. Massey, 2 S. E. 445, 446, 97 N. C. 465.

An act, to be done "wantonly," must be done intentionally and by design, and without excuse, and under circumstances evincing a lawless and destructive spirit. Branch v. State, 41 Tex. 622, 625.

A person may be regarded as acting "wantonly" who acts without regard to propriety or the rights of others, or is careless of consequences, and yet without settled malice. National Folding Box & Paper Co. v. Robertson's Estate (U. S.) 125 Fed. 524, 525.

The term "wantonly," when applied to the commission of an act, implies that the act was done with a purpose to injure or destroy without cause and without reference to any particular person. Ann. Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 2182.

As felonious.

"Wantonly" is not synonymous with "feloniously." State v. Morgan, 3 S. E. 927, 928, 98 N. C. 641.

As intentional disregard of right.

"Wantonly" is the licentious acting by one man toward the person of another without regard to his rights, and may include the element of recklessness. As used in an instruction, in an action to recover possession of personal property seized under a chattel mortgage, that plaintiffs, in knowingly and wantonly allowing and permitting H. to represent himself as owner of the property, etc., "wantonly" is used in a passive, rather than an active, sense. Harward v. Davenport, 75 N. W. 487, 489, 105 Iowa, 592.

If one intentionally does a wrongful act, and knows at the time that it is wrongful, then he does it "wantonly," by which is meant without restraint and in reckless disregard of the rights of others. Trauerman v. Lippincott, 39 Mo. App. 478, 488.

As used in an instruction, in an action for killing a dog, that if the jury find that defendant intentionally and "wantonly" shot the dog they might render certain damages, etc., "wantonly" should be construed as synonymous with purposely and recklessly, or without proper regard for the rights of the plaintiff. Wright v. Clark, 50 Vt. 130, 136, 28 Am. Rep. 496.

"Wantonly," when used conjunctively with "recklessly," always means more than "negligently." The two words, used together, never import less than such conscious disregard of and indifference to the probable consequences of the act to which they refer as is the legal equivalent of willful misconduct and intentional wrong. Highland Ave. & B. R. Co. v. Robinson, 28 South. 28, 30, 125 Ala. 483.

Maliciously.

"Wantonly," as used in an instruction that, to entitle plaintiff to recover in an action for assault, the jury must find that he was wantonly assaulted, means willfully and intentionally, and not maliciously. Brantz v. Marcus, 73 Iowa, 64, 35 N. W. 115.

"Wantonly," in a criminal sense, implies that the act was done of a licentious spirit, perversely, recklessly, without regard to propriety or the rights of others, careless of consequences, and yet without settled malice. State v. Morgan, 3 S. E. 927, 928, 98 N. C. 641; State v. Gilligan, 50 Atl. 844, 847, 23 R. I. 400.

Unlawfully distinguished.

The word "wantonly," required to be used in charging an offense, is not supplied in substance by the words "unlawfully and maliciously." The term "unlawfully" implies that an act is done or not done as the law allows or requires, but the term "wantonly" implies turpitude; that the act done is of willful, wicked purpose. State v. Massey, 2 S. E. 445, 446, 97 N. C. 465. See, also, State v. Harwell, 40 S. E. 48, 129 N. C. 550.

WANTONLY BEAT.

"Wantonly and cruelly beat," within the meaning of the statute making it criminal for any person to wantonly or cruelly beat, torture, kill, or maim any horse or other domestic animal, does not import that the beating is serious enough to kill the animal, although the crime is aggravated if such result follows. Commonwealth v. Miller (Pa.) 3 Lanc. Law Rev. 175.

WANTONNESS.

"Wantonness" is action without regard to the rights of others. Everett v. Receivers of Richmond & D. R. Co., 27 S. E. 991, 992, 121 N. C. 519; Welch v. Durand, 36 Conn. 182, 184.

"Wantonness" is defined by Bouvier to be a licentious act of one man toward the person of another, without regard to his rights. State v. Brigman, 94 N. C. 888, 889.

"Wantonness" is reckless sport, willful, unrestrained action, or running immoderately into excess. Cobb v. Bennett, 75 Pa. (25 P. F. Smith) 328, 330, 15 Am. Rep. 752; Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Whipple, 18 Pac. 730, 735, 39 Kan. 531.

That degree of recklessness, with a conscious knowledge of its probable harmful consequences, constitutes that wantonness which in law finds its equivalent in willful or intentional wrong. Birmingham Southern Ry. Co. v. Powell, 33 South. 875, 878, 136 Ala. 232.

"Wantonness," is defined as the conscious failure by one charged with a duty to exercise due care and diligence to prevent injury after the discovery of a peril, or under circumstances where he is charged with the knowledge of such peril and being conscious of the inevitable or probable results of such a failure. Birmingham Ry. & Electric Co. v. Pinckard, 26 South. 880, 881, 124 Ala. 372 (citing Birmingham Ry. & Electric Co. v. Bowers, 20 South. 345, 110 Ala. 328; Railway Co. v. Lee, 9 South. 230, 92 Ala. 262; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Webb, 12 South. 374, 97 Ala. 308; Highland Ave. & B. R. Co. v. Sampson, 8 South. 778, 91 Ala. 560; Kansas City, M. & B. Ry. Co. v. Crocker, 11 South. 262, 95 Ala. 412; Louisville & N. R.

Co. v. Markee, 15 South. 511, 103 Ala. 160, 49 Am. St. Rep. 21).

In popular use "wantonness" is a stronger term than mere or ordinary negligence. Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Whipple, 18 Pac. 730, 735, 39 Kan. 531.

"Wantonness," as authorizing exemplary damages, does not mean necessarily malice, but a reckless disregard of the rights of others. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Lawson, 72 Pac. 283, 284, 66 Kan. 660.

WANTS.

See "Artificial Wants"; "Natural Want."

The term "wants," as used in a conveyance in trust for the support of the grantors during their lives, and, in case the income should prove insufficient to supply the wants and necessities of the grantors, the trustee should sell or mortgage a portion or all of the real estate for that purpose, includes both shelter and occupation. Taylor's Appeal (Pa.) 11 Atl. 307, 310.

WAR.

See "Civil War"; "Imperfect War"; "Mixed War"; "Perfect War"; "Private War"; "Public War"; "Solemn War."

"War," in its legal sense, has been aptly defined to be "the state of nations among whom there is an interruption of all pacific relations and a general contestation of arms authorized by the sovereign." There can be no war by its government of which the court can take judicial knowledge until there has been some act or declaration creating or recognizing its existence by that department of the government clothed with the war-making power. War does not exist merely on the suspension of the usual relations of peace. Commerce may be interdicted without producing it. Reprisals and embargoes are forcible measures of redress, but do not per se constitute war. Hostile attacks and armed invasions of the territory or jurisdiction of a nation, accompanied by the destruction of life and property, by officers acting under the sanction and authority of their governments, however great and flagrant provocations to war, are often atoned for and adjusted without its ensuing. Bishop v. Jones, 28 Tex. 294, 319.

Vattel lays it down (Lib. 3, p. 267, c. 1, § 1) that "war is that state in which a nation procures its rights by force of arms." Robson v. Wall (S. C.) 2 Nott & McC. 497, 501, 10 Am. Dec. 623.

War is an armed contest between different states on a question of public right.

8 Wds. & P.—38

Brown v. Hiatt (U. S.) 4 Fed. Cas. 384, 388 (citing Bluntschli's Code Internat. Law, 270).

War is the exercise of force by bodies politic against each other for the purpose of coercion. Lewis v. Ludwick, 46 Tenn. (6 Cold.) 368, 373, 98 Am. Dec. 454.

A "time of war," as defined by Lord Coke, is when by invasion, insurrection, rebellions, or such like the peaceable course of justice is disturbed and stopped, so that the courts be, as it were, shut up. Skeen v. Monkeimer, 21 Ind. 1, 3.

"War" has been defined to be that state in which a nation prosecutes its right by force. Parties belligerent in a war are independent nations, but it is not necessary to constitute war that both parties should be acknowledged as independent nations or sovereign states. War may exist where one of the belligerents claims sovereign rights against the other. Where the parties in rebellion occupy and hold in a hostile manner a certain portion of territory, have declared their independence, have cast off their allegiance, have organized armies, have commenced hostilities against their former sovereign, the world acknowledges them as belligerents, and the contest a war. It is none the less a civil war because one side may call it an insurrection. Prize Cases, 67 U. S. (2 Black) 635, 666, 17 L. Ed. 459; The Chapman (U. S.) 5 Fed. Cas. 471, 475; Hubbard v. Harnden Express Co., 10 R. I. 244, 249.

As used in an insurance policy, which provided that there should be no liability on the part of the insurer in case of "death from any of the casualties or consequences of war or rebellion" or other belligerent forces, such phrase meant death as a consequence of war or rebellion carried on by authority of some de facto government; and hence, where the insured, while engaged in building a bridge under the direction of the military authorities of the United States about 30 miles from the rear of the Federal army and still further from the Confederate forces, was killed by two of a party of men not in uniform, the insurer was liable. Welts v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 48 N. Y. 34, 40, 8 Am. Rep. 518.

War means and intends the destruction of life and property. The Ambrose Light (U. S.) 25 Fed. 408, 412, 427.

A charter party by which, in case of war having commenced previous to and continuing on the ship's arrival at Constantinople, the merchant was bound to load the ship at that port at a reduced rate of freight, meant such a war as would render the voyage of an English ship from that port unlawful, and which without this clause would have dissolved the contract. It cannot extend to any war in any part of the world, nor even to a war that would render the adventure more perilous and probably raise the rate of insurance. Avery v. Bowden, 5 Bl. & Bl. 714, 724.

Every contention by force between two nations in external matters under authority of their respective governments is war. If it be declared in form, it is called "solemn," and is of the perfect kind, because one whole nation is at war with another whole nation, and all the members of the nation declaring war are authorized to commit hostilities against all the members of the other in every place and under every circumstance. In such a war all the members act under general authority, and all the rights and consequences of war attach to their condition. But hostilities may exist between two nations, more confined in their nature and extent, being limited as to places, persons, and things; and this is more properly termed "imperfect war," because not solemn, and because those who are authorized to commit hostilities acted under special authority and can go no further than the extent of their commission. Still, however, it is a public war, because it is an external contention by force between some of the members of the two nations, authorized by the legitimate powers. Bas v. Tingy, 4 U. S. (4 Dall.) 37, 38, 42, 1 L. Ed. 781.

WAR CLAIM.

A claim for cotton taken from a citizen during the war, so long as it remained in an unliquidated condition, was a "war claim"; but after it has been passed on by the commission, and adjudicated in the claimant's favor, it was no longer a "war claim." Bodemueller v. United States (U. S.) 39 Fed. 437, 438.

WAR DEBT.

Within the meaning of Ordinance No. 37 of the Convention of 1867, declaring the "war debt" of Alabama void, a war debt is a debt contracted to feed or provide for the support of the families of Confederate soldiers, as if contracted to feed and provide for the soldiers themselves. Such a debt can be held to have been contracted to aid and promote the Rebellion, and therefore contracted in violation of the laws and public policy of the United States. Bibb v. Court of County Com'rs, 44 Ala. 119, 121.

WAR RISK.

The term "war risk," in a charter party to which the United States government was a party, which provided that the marine risk should be borne by the owners and the war risk by the United States, was construed to mean some risk resulting directly or approximately at least from some act or operation of the public enemy. In re Morgan (U. S.) 5 Ct. Cl. 182, 189.

WARD.

As town, see "Town."

As township, see "Township."

The person over whom or over whose property a guardian is appointed is called his "ward." Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 237; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 2808; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 140; Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 331; Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 3809.

The use in the Penal Code of any word expressive of "relationship," "state," "condition," "office," or "trust," of any person, as the "parent," "child," "ascendant," "descendant," "minor," "infant," "ward," "guardian," or the like, or of the relative pronouns "he" or "they," in reference thereto, includes both males and females. Pen. Code Tex. 1895, art. 22.

WARD CLERKS.

The words "ward clerks" may be construed to include clerks of election districts. Pub. St. R. I. 1852, p. 77, c. 24, § 8.

WARE.

See "Cabinet Ware."

Webster defines "ware" to be an article of merchandise, especially in the plural; goods. Commonwealth v. Keller, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 253, 255.

"The word 'wares' is defined for the first time in Cotgrave's Dictionary of 1632 as merchandise, and in Phillip's New World of Words, as merchandise, or commodities; and this is the definition successively given to it down to the time of Johnson, showing that down to the middle of the last century it was regarded as having exactly the same meaning as merchandise; and, indeed, such seems to have been the understanding of Johnson, who defines it, commonly, something to be sold." Passaic Mfg. Co. v. Hoffman (N. Y.) 3 Daly, 495, 512.

The words "goods, wares, chattels, implements, fixtures, tools, and other personal property," in a chattel mortgage so describing the mortgaged property, is insufficient in failing to identify any particular property, so that it can be known as to what it is intended to apply. Buskirk v. Cleveland (N. Y.) 41 Barb. 610, 611.

The term "wares," as used in a lease providing that the lease shall be a lien on all goods, wares, and merchandise in and about such building, cannot be properly so construed as to include the horses, harnesses, and wagons employed in delivering the goods, kept in a barn about three blocks from the building. Van Patten v. Leonard, 8 N. W. 334, 337, 55 Iowa, 520.

WAREHOUSE.

See "Bonded Warehouse"; "Distillery Warehouse"; "Public Warehouse."

A warehouse is a building in which goods are stored or deposited. State v. Huffman, 37 S. W. 797, 798, 136 Mo. 58.

"Warehouse" is defined as a building or place adapted to the reception and storage of goods and merchandise; but the kind of goods, produce, or commodity for which it is kept is not within the intentment of such definition. State v. Koshland, 35 Pac. 32, 34, 25 Or. 178.

"Warehouse" is a house in which wares or goods are kept; a storehouse; "a store for the sale of goods at wholesale; also, often, a large retail establishment." Where an indictment charges one with committing a burglary and larceny in a storehouse, and the evidence shows that it was a warehouse, there is no variance; the two terms being synonymous. State v. Sprague, 50 S. W. 901, 903, 149 Mo. 409.

"Warehouse," in the sense in which the word is used in relation to the seizure of property deposited in a warehouse by distress for rent, is a building or an apartment in a building used and appropriated by the occupant, not for the deposit and safe-keeping or selling of his own goods, but for the purpose of storing the goods of others placed there in the regular course of commercial dealing and trade, to be again removed or reshipped. Owen v. Boyle, 22 Me. (9 Shep.) 47, 60, 64.

A "warehouse" is a building in which any kind of goods, wares, or merchandise is kept and stored. In a more limited sense it is the building or place in which a warehouseman deposits the goods of others in the course of his business, but in common discourse it is applied to buildings used for the temporary storage of merchandise before it is put into market for sale, or put in the course of transportation by sea or land to another place, though the buildings may not belong to a warehouseman, but to the owners of the goods. Such are the buildings in which manufacturers keep their goods for a time before they put them into market for sale or send them abroad. State v. Wilson, 47 N. H. 101, 104.

A house used exclusively for storing goods is a "warehouse," within the meaning of Crimes Act March 7, 1835, § 12, making it an indictable offense to burn a warehouse. Allen v. State, 10 Ohio St. 287, 304.

"Warehouse," as used in Ky. St. § 1164, providing for the punishment of any person who shall break a "warehouse" with intent to steal therefrom, means any house not an office or a shop, or a room on a steam or other boat, in which goods, wares, and merchandise are usually deposited for safe-keeping or for sale. Hunter v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 48 S. W. 1077; Ray v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 12 Bush, 397, 398.

The word "warehouse" is sometimes used in a very strict sense, as a somewhat technical term, in commercial language, and it is not infrequently in law confined to this restrictive sense; but the word "warehouse" is one of much more comprehensive import. A house used exclusively for storing goods is a warehouse, within the meaning of Crimes Act March 7, 1835, making it an offense to procure another to burn a warehouse, although the building had been constructed and formerly used for another purpose. Allen v. State, 10 Ohio St. 287, 304.

The word "warehouse," in 2 Hill's Code, p. 662, § 46, which defines burglary as an unlawful entry with intent to commit a felony of an office, shop, store, warehouse, malthouse, stillhouse, mill, factory, bank, church, schoolhouse, railroad car, barn, stable, ship, steamboat, and water craft, or any building in which goods, merchandise, or valuable things are kept for use, sale, or deposit, means any warehouse, without regard whether any valuable things are kept therein or not, as the latter clause of the statute only refers to buildings not specifically designated. State v. Sufferin, 32 Pac. 1021, 6 Wash. 107.

On trial of a mill company's manager for shipping wheat stored in the company's warehouse without written assent of the holder of the receipt therefor, it appeared that according to its usual course of business, known to the person whose wheat was shipped, all wheat received became a part of the consumable stock of the mill, was manufactured into flour and other mill products, and was sold; that it satisfied its obligation to the depositors by paying them the market price when demanded, or by returning a like quantity and quality of other wheat; that in the former case no storage was charged, but in the latter a charge of 8 cents a bushel was made. Held, that the company was not engaged in the warehouse business, and the wheat was not received for storage, within Hill's Ann. Laws, § 4201 et seq. State v. Stockman, 46 Pac. 851, 852, 30 Or. 86.

Bank.

A banking house is a "store, shop, or warehouse," within the meaning of St. 1854, p. 812, making it a crime to break and enter in the night season a store, shop, or warehouse of another, wherein goods, wares, or merchandise are deposited, with intent to commit theft. Wilson v. State, 24 Conn. 57, 70.

Buggy or toolhouse.

A warehouse is a storehouse for goods, and includes a buggy house, in which goods, wares, and merchandise and other valuable things are kept and deposited. State v. Garrison, 34 Pac. 751, 52 Kan. 180.

A building 21 feet by 15, placed on a market garden, and used for storing the tools and agricultural implements and seeds and manures employed in the garden, will not be deemed a "warehouse," nor a granary, within the meaning of the New Hampshire statute punishing as a distinct offense stealing in a warehouse or granary after entering in the nighttime. State v. Wilson, 47 N. H. 101, 104.

A granary, built and used for keeping and preserving farm utensils, etc., is a warehouse. Ray v. Commonwealth, 75 Ky. (12 Bush) 397, 398.

A building used only by the owner in storing therein the tools and materials used by him in his personal business is a "warehouse," within the meaning of Pub. St. c. 203, §§ 2, 4, providing punishments for whoever shall burn a warehouse. Commonwealth v. Uhrig, 45 N. E. 1047, 1048, 167 Mass. 420.

Depot.

In its popular acceptance, "warehouse" signifies an apartment or building for the temporary reception and storing of goods and merchandise. Lynch v. State (Ala.) 7 South, 829; Bishop, Stat. Crimes, § 293. Hence evidence that money taken from a safe in an office in a building one room of which is used for storage of freight, two for waiting rooms, and one for the office, was admissible under a charge for stealing money from a warehouse. Andrews v. State, 26 South, 522, 123 Ala. 42.

A railroad depot is a "warehouse," within Gen. St. c. 113, § 7, relating to the breaking and entering of warehouses in the nighttime with intent to commit larceny or burglary. State v. Bishop, 51 Vt. 287, 290, 31 Am. Rep. 690.

Floating dock.

A float belonging to barge owners, which was kept in the basin of a river for the purpose of receiving goods brought by their barges and transferring them to canal boats, which came alongside, is not a "warehouse." Goold v. Chapin (N. Y.) 10 Barb. 612, 616.

Inclosure.

"Warehouse," as used in Code Ala. 1886, § 3789, making it larceny to steal from a warehouse, implies an inclosure of some sort, some kind of structural barrier to the ingress of the public, designed to afford protection to the goods deposited therein and to contribute to their safe-keeping; and a trunk near the door of a baggage room, on a platform covered by the same roof, but not inclosed, which is used as a common passageway by all going about the depot, is not in a warehouse. Lynch v. State, 7 South, 829, 830, 89 Ala. 18.

A covered structure used for storing cotton bales, one side and end of which were planked up and the other left open, so that wagons could drive under to load and unload, which, together with two acres of land connected with it, was inclosed by a plank fence nine feet high, the gates of which were kept locked, constitutes a "warehouse," within Rev. Code, § 3707, providing that any person who commits the crime of larceny in any dwelling house, storehouse, warehouse, or steamboat shall be punished as if he were guilty of grand larceny. Hagan v. State, 52 Ala. 373, 374.

St. 2 Wm. IV, c. 45, § 27, conferring the right of voting upon one who occupies as owner or tenant any house, warehouse, counting house, shop, or other building, should be construed to include a shed closed on two sides, having a roof, and used for the purposes connected with the occupation of the wharf, and which was also used by a certain person as a place of deposit for goods. Watson v. Cotton, 5 Man., G. & S. 50, 53.

Livery stable.

A livery stable, in which bridles, bugles, and farming implements are kept, is a storehouse or warehouse, within the meaning of the statute relating to burglary. Webb v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 35 S. W. 1038, 1039.

Opera house.

An opera house, used for the storage of stage properties between occasions when it is used for entertainments, is a warehouse. Hunter v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 48 S. W. 1077.

Room in cellar.

A small room, forming part of a cellar, in which a few jugs of wine are kept for family consumption, is not a "warehouse," within the meaning of Ky. St. § 1164, providing a penalty for breaking a warehouse with intent to steal. Mason v. Commonwealth, 41 S. W. 305, 101 Ky. 397.

WAREHOUSE RECEIPT.

As negotiable instrument, see "Negotiable Instrument."

A "warehouse receipt" is a receipt issued by a warehouseman for goods deposited in his warehouse. It need not be in any particular form, but it usually, after describing the property, contains an agreement on the part of the warehouseman to redeliver the property on demand to the bailor or his order. Merchants' Warehouse Co. v. McClain (U. S.) 112 Fed. 787, 789.

A warehouse receipt is a written simple contract between the owner of the goods and the warehouseman, the latter to store the goods and the former to pay the compensation for that service; and nothing short of the delivery of the identical goods received in fulfillment of the contract discharges the obligation or amounts to a performance, and in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation or negligence in giving the receipt nothing more than this can under any circumstances be demanded of the warehouseman, unless he has failed to properly care for and store the goods. Hale v. Milwaukee Dock Co., 29 Wis. 482, 485, 486, 9 Am. Rep. 603.

A warehouse receipt is strictly but the written evidence of a contract between the depositor of grain and the warehouseman. It is an acknowledgment by the latter that he has received and holds in store for the former the amount and description of grain named in the receipt, and from this acknowledgment the law imposes certain duties upon the warehouseman, which become as much a part of the contract as if written in the receipt. Canadian Bank of Commerce v. McCrea, 106 Ill. 281, 293.

The phrase "warehouse receipts given for any goods stored or deposited with any warehouseman," as used in a statute (Laws 1858, c. 326, § 6) making such receipts transferable by indorsement, and providing that any "person to whom they may be so transferred shall be deemed the owner of the goods therein specified, so far as to give validity to any pledge, lien, or transfer made by such person," was held to mean receipts given for goods so stored or deposited by any person having the title thereto, real or apparent, or authority from such other person therefor. "This section of the act proceeds upon the assumption that the receipt is so issued. Any other consideration would enable warehousemen to issue receipts for goods known by them to be stolen, and so convey title to them, or even thus to permit larceny, and by issuing receipts for the stolen property defraud the plundered owner of all title to and power of reclaiming it." Collins v. Ralli (N. Y.) 20 Hun, 246, 255 (quoted and approved in Commercial Bank of Selma v. Hurt, 12 South. 568, 570, 99 Ala. 130, 19 L. R. A. 701, 42 Am. St. Rep. 38).

"Warehouse receipts," in the commercial world, have a well-understood meaning, and, when indorsed and delivered, the transfer of the goods or chattels as therein named, as do bills of sale. When the warehouseman issues a receipt, he puts it in the power of the holder to induce others to believe that the property represented by it can be sold by him, and when one thus receives a warehouse receipt, and indorses and delivers it, he transfers that right to the one thus receiving it. Theis v. Canmann (Ky.) 59 S. W. 1093.

A warehouse receipt is a document issued by warehousemen who have in store quantities of grain, and each one shows the receipt and holding of so much grain as it represents. By operation of law the transfer of a warehouse receipt is a delivery of the grain it represents. Edwards v. Hoeflinghoff (U. S.) 38 Fed. 635, 641.

A warehouseman's receipt for particular property may be used in commercial transactions as the representative of and substitute for property which has been deposited with him, and the delivery of the property described in such receipt may be affected by the delivery of the receipt; but the delivery of a so-called wharfinger's receipt, which represents nothing in his possession, is not a symbolic delivery of anything, and consequently could not form a good basis for a pledge of such property, though subsequently the property was delivered to the wharfinger. Commercial Bank v. Flowers, 42 S. E. 474, 475, 116 Ga. 45.

Receipt of bonded warehouse.

A warehouse keeper's receipt, within the meaning of the New York factors act of 1830, which provides that every factor or other agent, intrusted with the possession of any warehouse keeper's receipt for the delivery of merchandise, shall be deemed the true owner for the purpose of sales, means the receipt of the keeper of a private warehouse, in which the person named in the receipt has deposited the goods for safe-keeping, and by its terms binds such warehouse keeper, upon the surrender of the receipt, to deliver the goods to the bearer of it, or to the holder of it, if duly indorsed to him. It does not include such a receipt as the keeper of a bonded warehouse, on receiving goods for storage therein on which the duties are unpaid, is authorized to give by the acts of Congress. Bonito v. Mosquera, 15 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Bosw.) 401, 444.

In a statute (Factor's Act 1863, c. 91), providing that warehouse receipts may be transferred by delivery, with or without indorsement, and that the transferee shall be deemed to be the owner of the goods, etc., the term "warehouse receipt" is to be understood as applying to private warehouses, and not merely to custom houses or bonded warehouses. Price v. Wisconsin Marine & Fire Ins. Co., 43 Wis. 267, 275.

By the custom of the trade, whisky and rum are sold or hypothecated by the execution and delivery of certificates containing a serial number of the barrels, the date when bonded, and the gauge of the contents thereof, attested by the United States gauger, which certificates pass from hand to hand by indorsement, and are called on their face "warehouse receipts." Miller v. Browarsky, 18 Atl. 643, 130 Pa. 372.

WAREHOUSEMAN.

"Warehouseman" is defined as the owner of a warehouse, who as a business and for hire keeps and stores the goods of others; a person who receives goods and merchandise to be stored in his warehouse for hire. Franklin Nat. Bank v. Whitehead, 49 N. E. 592, 595, 149 Ind. 560, 39 L. R. A. 725, 63 Am. St. Rep. 302.

A warehouseman is one who receives and stores goods as a business for compensation. Bucher v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 2 Kulp, 476, 480.

The term "warehouseman" includes a person who receives goods in his own store, standing upon his own wharf, for the purpose of forwarding them. Bush v. Miller (N. Y.) 13 Barb. 481, 488.

Warehousemen are of the class of bailees known as "paid agents," exercising private employments, whose liability and relation is essentially different from that of common carriers. Their duty is to bring to the business in which they are employed reasonable skill and diligence, and they are answerable only for ordinary negligence. Moore v. City of Mobile (Ala.) 1 Stew. 284; Hatchett v. Gibson, 13 Ala. 587; Gibson v. Hatchett, 24 Ala. 201; Jones v. Same, 14 Ala. 743. As they do not exercise a public employment, and as they are at liberty to select their own customers, to accept only such business or services as they may choose, and to fix the measure of compensation to be paid for their services, they have the right by special contract to enlarge or narrow their liability, as in the absence of contract it is defined by law. Alexander v. Greene (N. Y.) 3 Hill, 9. The only limitation upon the powers of such bailee, to protect himself against loss occurring in the course of his employment, seems to be that he shall not stipulate for immunity from responsibility for his own fraud. For the law will not tolerate such an indecency and immorality as that a man shall contract to be safely dishonest. It therefore declares all such contracts utterly void, and holds the bailee liable in the same manner and to the same extent as if no contract ever existed. Seals v. Edmondson, 71 Ala. 509, 511, 512 (citing Story, Bailm. § 32).

"Warehouseman," as used in Act Sept. 24, 1866 (P. L. 1867, p. 1363), relating to receipts for goods deposited with a warehouseman, wharfinger, or other person, should be construed in its ordinary signification of one who carries on the business of receiving and keeping goods on storage for the owners for compensation or profit. Tradesmen's Nat.

Bank v. Thomas Kent Mfg. Co., 40 Atl. 1018, 186 Pa. 556, 65 Am. St. Rep. 876; Bucher v. Commonwealth, 103 Pa. 528, 534.

A warehouseman is a depositary of goods for hire. Schmidt v. Blood (N. Y.) 9 Wend. 268, 269, 270, 24 Am. Dec. 143.

Const. 1871, art. 13, § 1, declares that all elevators or storehouses where grain or other property is stored for a compensation are warehouses. Held, that one who was operating an elevator in which grain was stored for compensation, though the receipt given by him to the owner of the grain was not in the form adopted by those acting under the warehouse law, was a warehouseman. National Bank of Pontiac v. Langan, 28 Ill. App. 401, 406.

WAREHOUSING.

"Warehousing" is a privilege given by the statutes, by which, in lieu of compelling the importer to make immediate payment of his debt, he is permitted to postpone payment until he withdraws the merchandise from the warehouse for consumption. Mosie v. Bidwell (U. S.) 119 Fed. 490, 481.

WARFARE.

See "Maritime Warfare."

WARM ROLLING.

A claim for a patent for a new food product from maize, which includes hulling, granulating, and steaming, without cooking, and then pressing and drying the particles by "warm rolling," so as to reduce them to dry, hard flakes, does not disclose that such a degree of heat is to be applied or developed between the rolls as to convert starch into dextrine; nor do the words show that the invention consists in so adjusting and crowding the rolls together as to develop by contact the necessary heat. Cerealine Mfg. Co. v. Bates (U. S.) 77 Fed. 970, 975.

WARNING—WARNED.

"Warning," as used in Code, § 4419, providing for a prosecution for trespass after warning, implies notice, and notice brought home to the knowledge of the party to be affected by it. Actual knowledge, not constructive notice, is what the law exacts. Without such knowledge or actual notice, there can be no criminality. To constitute written notices posted at public places, not on the land, but in the neighborhood of it, warning, the notices must be carried home to the defendant. Owens v. State, 74 Ala. 401, 404.

The word "warned," as applied to notice of a meeting, according to its common use and acceptance, implies that notice had been given. Perry v. Inhabitants of Dover, 29 Mass. (12 Pick.) 206, 211.

WARRANT.

See "Search Warrant."

To collect taxes as process, see "Process."

A "warrant" is an order by which the drawer authorizes one person to pay a particular sum of money. Shawnee County Com'rs v. Carter, 2 Kan. 115, 116.

Whatever may be the definition of the word "warrant" given by lexicographers, a lawyer's idea of the thing is a writing from competent authority, in pursuance of law, directing the doing of an act, and addressed to an officer or person competent to do the act, and affording him protection from damages if he does. People v. Wood, 71 N. Y. 371, 376.

The warrant for a town meeting "is, as its name imports, a warrant or authority under which such meeting is held." Commonwealth v. Smith, 132 Mass. 289, 295.

A "warrant for the delivery of goods" is given when the person has a right and warrants the person who has the goods to deliver them as far as he is concerned. An "order" is given when the party has a right to have the goods delivered. A "request" is given when the maker of it has no interest in the goods at all. Reg. v. Illidge, 2 Car. & K. 871, 874.

In conveyances or sales.

The words "convey and warrant" comprehend and express all the covenants of warranty as fully as if they were written out at full length. Jackson v. Green, 112 Ind. 341, 342, 14 N. E. 89.

Under the express provision of Rev. St. c. 30, § 13, the words "convey and warrant" in a deed amount to the conveyance in fee simple. Palmer v. Cook, 42 N. E. 796, 159 Ill. 300, 50 Am. St. Rep. 165.

As used in a deed providing that the grantor conveyed and warranted unto the grantee the property conveyed, the expression "convey and warrant" is to be construed as containing a covenant not only of title and seisin, and against incumbrances, but also for quiet enjoyment; and where the original grantor either had the title or was in possession under claim of title, such covenant is in futuro and runs with the land, and binds the grantor himself, and his heirs and personal representatives, to the grantee, his heirs and assigns, that the grantor is lawfully seised of the premises, has good right to convey the same, and guarantees possession thereof, that the same are free from incumbrances, and that he will warrant and defend the title to the same against all lawful claims. Worley v. Hineman, 33 N. E. 260, 261, 6 Ind. App. 240.

Under the statute of Indiana, a deed containing the words "conveys and warrants" shall be deemed and held to be a conveyance in fee simple to the grantee, his heirs and assigns, with covenant from the grantor, for himself and his heirs and personal representatives, and he is lawfully seised of the premises, has good right to convey the same, and guarantees the quiet possession thereof, that the same are free from all incumbrances, and that he will warrant and defend the title to the same against all lawful claims. Rev. St. 1881, § 2927. Each one of these covenants is contained in the general warranty, the same as if they had been separately written in the deed. Kent v. Cantrall, 44 Ind. 452. In construing such a deed the court said: "It is thus seen that the deed in question contained, amongst other things, a covenant of general warranty, and this covenant, beyond all doubt, runs with the land." Dehority v. Wright, 101 Ind. 382, 383.

The words "convey and warrant," in a deed, operate to pass all the grantor's estate by virtue of legal implication only when there is nothing in the deed showing a contrary intent on the part of the grantor, and therefore the words in a deed reciting that, in consideration of a small cash payment and an agreement to furnish the grantor with support for life, she did convey and warrant to the grantee certain premises, "it being understood that possession of said property is to be given at my death," does not have such effect, but the deed must be construed as reserving a life estate to the grantor. Hart v. Gardner, 20 South. 877, 879, 74 Miss. 153.

The statutory form of mortgage, containing the word "warrant," carries with it all covenants of title. Esker v. Heffernan, 41 N. E. 1113, 1114, 159 Ill. 38.

A covenant of a deed which recites that the grantor "covenants, grants, and agrees" that he, "against all and every person or persons lawfully claiming or to claim the same or any part thereof, shall and will warrant and defend," means that the grantor warrants a quiet enjoyment, and is not an assurance against incumbrances. Leddy v. Enos, 33 Pac. 508, 509, 6 Wash. 247.

Of municipal corporations.

See "County Warrant."

All outstanding warrants, see "All."

"A warrant, under our statute, is a promise to pay it in its order of issue when money applicable to it comes into the treasury, and its maturity, by analogy with a note, is the time when the treasurer gives notice of his readiness to pay it and stops the interest." Savings Bank & Trust Co. v. Gelbach, 36 Pac. 467, 468, 8 Wash. 497; Potter v. City of New Whatcom, 56 Pac. 394, 20 Wash. 589, 72 Am. St. Rep. 135.

"Warrants" of a municipal corporation are generally orders payable when funds are found. They are issued for the payment of general municipal debts and expenses, subject to a rule providing that they shall be paid in the order of presentation; the time of presentation to be indorsed by the treasurer on the warrants. Shelley v. St. Charles County Court (U. S.) 21 Fed. 699, 701.

The word "warrant," as used in an indictment charging a person with forging a county warrant, like the word "check," imports a writing. State v. Fenly, 18 Mo. 445, 454.

A warrant is lacking in one of the qualities which make notes, bills, checks, etc., commercial paper, viz., negotiability. This lack is due, however, entirely to the fact that it is open to all the defenses which might have been made to the claim on which it was founded. In Allison v. Juniata County, 50 Pa. (14 Wright) 351, following Dyer v. Covington Tp., 19 Pa. (7 Harris) 200, it was held that warrants or county orders were not even contracts on which a suit could be maintained; but this court in Seymour v. City of Spokane, 6 Wash. 362, 33 Pac. 832, maintained a contrary doctrine, and it cannot now be held that a warrant is not a contract to pay money. Union Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v. Gelbach, 36 Pac. 467, 468, 8 Wash. 497, 24 L. R. A. 359.

Minutes of the meeting of village auditors, showing the audit of plaintiff's claim, are not a warrant of the auditors. They are not addressed to or contemplative of the receiver of taxes. They are in no sense meant or operative as a voucher for him, or a direction or authority to him to pay. People v. Wood, 71 N. Y. 371, 376.

Same—As bill of credit.

See "Bill of Credit."

Same—Bonds distinguished.

Warrants are general orders, payable when funds are found, and there is propriety in the rule providing that they shall be paid in the order of presentation; the time of presentation to be indorsed by the treasurer on the warrants. They are thus distinguished from bonds, which are obligations payable at a definite time, running through a series of years, and payable when the time of their maturity arrives, independent of any presentation. Shelley v. St. Charles County Court (U. S.) 21 Fed. 699, 701.

Same—As debts.

Warrants drawn upon designated funds in anticipation of uncollected revenue have always been regarded in this state as "debts" in only a restricted sense. In re State Warrants, 6 S. D. 518, 62 N. W. 101, 55 Am. St. Rep. 852; Western Town Lot Co. v. Lane, 7 S. D. 1, 62 N. W. 982; Shannon v. City of Huron, 9 S. D. 356, 69 N. W. 598; Lawrence County v. Meade County, 10 S. D. 175, 72 N. W. 405. They are not outstanding debts, so as to authorize the creation of a sinking fund for their payment. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Faulk County, 90 N. W. 149, 15 S. D. 501.

In practice.

The term "warrant" imports no more than the process or writ in the case, civil or criminal. Cannon v. Phillips, 34 Tenn. (2 Sneed) 185, 190.

The Bill of Rights, declaring that "no warrants can issue but upon probable cause supported by oath," refers only to criminal process, and has no application to arrests and civil suits. Walker v. Cruikshank (N. Y.) 2 Hill, 296, 300.

The term "warrant," as used in Const. art. 1, § 9, prohibiting the issuance of a warrant without cause being shown therefor on oath or information, means "an authority for the arrest of a person upon a criminal charge, with a view to his commitment and trial thereof. All process for the arrest of a party is not included in the word 'warrant' as used in the Constitution. A capias or writ of arrest in a civil action is not a warrant in that sense, and it is issued at common law as a matter of course without oath. The arrest of a person upon a charge of insanity, for the purpose of his commitment or confinement in an asylum, is, strictly speaking, not an arrest in a civil or criminal proceeding, but is one sui generis." Sprigg v. Stump (U. S.) 6 Fed. 207, 214.

"Warrant," is a term of wide significance, and may be applied to process in civil, as well as in criminal, cases; but as a general rule its use is restricted to such writs as authorize the taking of the body of the defendant in answer to a criminal charge, and such is the sense in which it would be understood by one not learned in the law, where there was nothing in the context to show the contrary; and a publication stating that plaintiff had been arrested on a warrant, in a suit to recover money, would be calculated to produce the impression that in the transaction there was some criminal conduct. Belo & Co. v. Smith (Tex.) 42 S. W. 850, 851, 91 Tex. 221.

The term "writ," as used in the Connecticut statutes, generally means process in a civil suit, while that in a criminal case is usually denominated a "warrant." Stoddard v. Couch, 23 Conn. 238, 240.

A warrant is both the process to procure the defendant's appearance, and is in the place of the declaration, to inform him of the nature of the demand. It need not contain any special day or place of return, unless so provided by statute; nor is a seal requisite thereto, except in the case of the state's warrant on a criminal charge, which at common law requires a seal. Duffy v. Averitt, 27 N. C. 455, 457.

There is no settled rule at common law invalidating warrants not under seal, unless the magistrate issuing the warrant had a seal of office or a seal as required by statute; and a warrant of the commissioner of the United States, not having a seal of office and not being required to affix a seal thereto, cannot be held void for its omission. Starr v. United States, 14 Sup. Ct. 919, 920, 153 U. S. 614, 38 L. Ed. 841.

A "warrant for a fine or penalty" imposed for a violation of a town ordinance is civil in character, being in the nature of an action of debt; and hence a plea of former jeopardy is of no avail. City of Memphis v. Smythe, 58 S. W. 215, 104 Tenn. 702.

WARRANT CREDITORS.

"Warrant creditors" of a city are those that become creditors from the fact that the money is not on hand derived from the revenues to pay them when the debt is created. Johnson v. City of New Orleans, 15 South. 100, 101, 46 La. Ann. 714.

WARRANT IN DEED.

"Warrant in deed," in speaking of the commitment of a man by lawful warrant in deed, or commitment by lawful warrant in law, means a warrant in writing and under seal. State v. Shaw, 50 Atl. 863, 869, 73 Vt. 149.

WARRANT IN LAW.

See "Without Warrant of Law."

Lord Coke (2 Inst. 51, 52) says: "Process of law is twofold, viz., by the king's writ or by due proceeding, and warrant either in deed or in law without writ." By "warrant in law" he comprehends any authority of law, as is plain by the instances which he gives. He adds: "If treason or felony be done, and one hath just cause of suspicion, this is a good cause and warrant in law to arrest any man. A watchman may arrest a night-walker by warrant in law." And he concludes by saying that "a commitment by lawful warrant, either in deed or in law, is accounted in law due process or proceeding in law." People v. Nevins (N. Y.) 1 Hill, 154, 171.

"Warrant in law," in speaking of the commitment of a man by lawful warrant in deed or by lawful warrant in law, is understood to apply to a commitment by authority of law without a written warrant. State v. Shaw, 50 Atl. 863, 869, 73 Vt. 149.

WARRANT OF ARREST.

See "Legal Warrant."

As process, see "Process."

A "warrant of arrest" is defined by Crim. Code Ala. § 4259, as an order in writing, issued and signed by a magistrate, stating the substance of a complaint, directed to a proper officer, and commanding him to arrest the defendant; and such warrant must designate the name of the defendant, if known, but, if it states that the name is unknown to the magistrate, then no name must be inserted. He must also state the offense by name, so that it can be clearly inferred. The county in which it is issued must appear from some part of the warrant, and the warrant must be signed by the magistrate with his name and initials of office, and the same must appear in some way in the warrant. It must be directed to any local officer in the state; but, if executed by any officer who has power to execute, it is valid, without regard to the direction. A warrant issued by a justice of the peace for the arrest of a defendant for larceny, of which office the justice has jurisdiction, which is regular and sufficient on its face, though it does not state in which capacity the justice acted in this instance, is sufficient as a protection to the officer serving it, and no error or irregularity in the previous proceedings can affect it or excuse defendant in killing the officer, or one called to his assistance, from the crime of murder. Brown v. State, 20 South. 103, 109, 109 Ala. 70.

A warrant is sufficient if it designates the offense by name or describes it, or if it employs terms from which the offense may be inferred. Brown v. State, 63 Ala. 97. Under Code 1896, § 5253, providing that a writ of arrest shall contain a statement of the offense charged by name, a writ of arrest reciting that accused was indicted for the offense of carrying a concealed pistol sufficiently designates the offense charged. Spear v. State, 25 South. 46, 48, 120 Ala. 351.

A warrant of arrest is a written order from a magistrate, directed to a peace officer or some other person specially named, commanding him to take the body of the person accused of an offense, to be dealt with according to law. Code Cr. Proc. Tex. 1895, art. 253.

A warrant of arrest is an order in writing, in the name of the state, signed by a magistrate, commanding the arrest of the defendant. Rev. St. Utah 1898, § 4616; Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 5240.

A warrant of arrest is an order in writing in the name of the state, signed by a magistrate with his name of office, commanding the arrest of the defendant. Ann. Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 1586.

WARRANT OF ATTACHMENT.

A warrant of attachment is "a summary provisional remedy to take from a debtor the custody of his property, and, to support the remedy, the provisions of the statute in this respect must be substantially observed." An unqualified averment of facts of which it is not apparent that the deponent actually had, or from his situation probably had, personal knowledge, is insufficient to sustain an attachment. Hoorman v. Climax Cycle Co., 40 N. Y. Supp. 1067, 17 Misc. Rep. 734.

A warrant of attachment is a mandate whereby an original special proceeding is instituted against the accused in behalf of the people on the relation of the complainant. Code, § 2273; People v. Grant (N. Y.) 13 Civ. Proc. R. 305, 312.

WARRANT OF ATTORNEY.

A warrant of attorney is an instrument authorizing an attorney at law to appear in an action on behalf of the maker or to confess judgment against him. It differs from a power of attorney, which is an instrument by which the authority of an attorney in fact or private attorney is set forth. Treat v. Tolman (U. S.) 113 Fed. 892, 893, 51 C. C. A. 522.

WARRANT OF COMMITMENT.

As process, see "Process."

WARRANT OF DISTRESS.

A warrant of distress is nothing but a power of attorney. The bailiff or other person executing the warrant is only the agent or landlord. Bagwell v. Jamison (S. C.) Cheves, 249, 252.

A warrant of distress is a judicial writ in the nature of an execution, the final process of the law. Inhabitants of Baileyville v. Lowell, 20 Me. (2 App.) 178, 181.

WARRANT OF LAW.

Under Act 1866 (13 St. at Large, p. 408), declaring that if any person shall have gone into or shall hereafter go into possession of any land or tenement of another, without his consent or without warrant of law, it shall be lawful, etc., to oust him, etc., if there be such consent, there is "warrant of law." Baldwin v. Cooley, 1 S. C. (1 Rich.) 256, 260.

WARRANT OFFICER.

A warrant officer in the navy is an officer, within the meaning of the act of Congress of March 27, 1794, March 3, 1801, and April 21, 1806. Johnson v. United States (U. S.) 2 Ct. Cl. 167, 177.

WARRANTOR.

One who has contracted the obligation of warranty is called the "warrantor." Flanders v. Sellye, 105 U. S. 718, 726, 26 L. Ed. 1217 (citing Code Prac. La. art. 379).

WARRANTIA CHARTÆ.

The writ of warrantia chartæ also lay only for a tenant of the freehold, and was only used when voucher did not lie, because the tenant was not impleaded, or because he was impleaded in an action in which it was the policy of the law to prohibit delay, and therefore forbid the voucher, and it lay in such cases only because the voucher did not lie. Vin. Abr. tit. "Warrantia Chartæ," D. It was then supplementary to, and in lieu of, voucher. Stout v. Jackson (Va.) 2 Rand. 132, 142.

WARRANTY.

See "Affirmative Warranty"; "Express Warranty"; "Implied Warranty"; "Personal Warranty"; "Promissory Warranty"; "Special Warranty."

See "Covenant of Warranty"; "Breach of Warranty."

At common law, a warranty was the foundation of a voucher by a tenant when impleaded; and, if he lost the land, he might have judgment to recover of the guarantor other lands to the value. It is of feudal origin. According to 2 Bl. Comm. 801, warranties were introduced in order to evade the strictness of the feudal doctrine of non-alienation without the consent of the heir. The use of this covenant is superseded by the introduction of other personal covenants. In many, if not most, cases there is no occasion for resorting to the covenant of warranty. In some, however, it is the only express covenant inserted. Townsend v. Morris (N. Y.) 6 Cow. 123, 126.

The word "warrant" is defined as an assurance of title to property sold, and a stipulation by an express covenant that the title of the grantor shall be good and his possession undisturbed. Black, Law Dict. p. 1233. Indeed, it has been said to have been fully established as a principle by the best authority that the doctrine of estoppel applies to conveyances without warranty, where it appears by the deed that the parties intended to deal with and convey a title in fee simple. Graham v. Meek, 1 Or. 325. And if this is not true the estoppel certainly arises when the conveyance of the land is coupled with the warranty. Hallyburton v. Slagle (N. C.) 44 S. E. 655, 657, 132 N. C. 947.

The obligation which one contracts to defend another in some action which may be instituted is termed "warranty." Flanders v. Sellye, 105 U. S. 718, 726, 26 L. Ed. 1217 (citing Code Prac. La. art. 379).

"Warranty," in a deed, means protection of or indemnification for what is given. Allison v. Allison, 9 Tenn. (1 Yerg.) 16, 19.

A warranty in a deed does not enlarge a grant. It is a covenant of indemnity for a disturbance of it. Babcock v. Wells (R. I.) 54 Atl. 596, 598.

The term "warranty" usually implies a warranty of title, and, where the language of a contract provided for a conveyance by a good warranty deed and abstract of title, it was the matter of title that the parties had in mind. People's Sav. Bank Co. v. Parisette, 67 N. E. 896, 897, 68 Ohio St. 450, 96 Am. St. Rep. 672.

"Warrant," in a contract to warrant upon a conveyance of a freehold estate, was a technical term at common law, having its own peculiar signification, and without the use of which the contract imported by that term could not be created, unless in cases in which the law implied the contract. The import of the word, when applied to freehold estates, was that the warrantor would upon voucher, or by judgment in a writ of warrantia chartæ, yield other lands and tenements to the value of those that shall be evicted by a former title. The contract to warrant has the same effect in all respects as if the party had contracted in the terms of this definition, if such a contract were allowed, and the specific execution of it could be enforced. Stout v. Jackson (Va.) 2 Rand. 132, 142 (citing Co. Litt. 365a, 366a, 389a).

Guaranty distinguished.

"Warranty" and "guaranty," being derivatives from the same root, are identical in signification and effect; the one usually, but not always, denoting a covenant in a conveyance, and the other denoting a parol promise. Ayres v. Findley, 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 501.

The term "warranty" is applied to a contract as to title, quality, or quantity of something sold. A guaranty is held to be a contract by which one person is bound to another for the fulfillment of a promise or engagement of a third party. A guaranty is perhaps always understood in its strict legal and commercial sense as a collateral warranty against some default or event in futuro, while a warranty is generally understood as an absolute undertaking in present. Sturges v. Bank of Circleville, 11 Ohio St. 153, 169, 78 Am. Dec. 296.

In legal contemplation there is a wide difference between "warranty" and "guaranty." The term "warranty" is an engagement or understanding forming a part of the transaction. It is an absolute understanding or liability on the part of the warrantor, and the contract is void unless it is strictly and literally performed. "Guaranty," on the other hand, is a collateral promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another. Consequently an instruction in a life insurance case that a "warranty means more than agreement, it means a guaranty," is erroneous. Masons' Union Life Ins. Ass'n v. Brockman, 50 N. E. 493, 497, 20 Ind. App. 206.

In contracts of affreightment.

The term "warranty" imports an absolute undertaking that the fact is as represented, and it was the settled meaning of the term as implied in contracts of affreightments or of insurance that it is an undertaking by the shipowner, not only that he will exercise due diligence to have the vessel seaworthy, but that she shall really be so. It has long been determined that in every contract for the carriage of goods by sea there is an implied warranty that the vessel is seaworthy at the time of beginning her voyage, unless it is superseded by some expressed condition in the contract. The Silvia (U. S.) 68 Fed. 230, 232, 15 C. C. A. 362.

In insurance.

A contract of insurance in its essence is a mere promise to pay money on the happening of a specified loss or injury. In practice such happening is not the only condition on which the payment depends. The payment is usually made conditional on the truth of certain statements made by the applicant. The falsity of such statements prevents the liability of the insurer from taking effect. When such statements have this effect, they are called "warranties." A warranty may relate to an existing fact, or it may relate to the doing or not doing of some particular act in the future. A warranty is a stipulation in a contract adverse to the interest of the insured and in the interest of the insurer. Indiana Farmers' Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Byrket, 36 N. E. 779, 781, 9 Ind. App. 443.

An express warranty, as applied to an application for insurance, is a stipulation inserted in a writing on the face of the policy, on the literal truth or fulfillment of which the validity of the entire contract depends. Arn. Ins. 577. This definition is adopted by May and sustained by several adjudications in this country. Ætna Ins. Co. v. Grube, 6 Minn. 82, 87 (Gil. 32, 36) (citing May, Ins. [2d Ed.] p. 179, § 156; Angell, Ins. § 140); Fitzgerald v. Supreme Council Catholic Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 56 N. Y. Supp. 1005, 1009, 39 App. Div. 251 (citing Bac. Ben. Soc. § 1940); Wood v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 13 Conn. 533, 545, 35 Am. Dec. 92; McKenzie v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co., 44 Pac. 922, 924, 112 Cal. 548; Home Life Ins. Co. v. Sibert, 31 S. E. 519 (citing Lynchburg Fire Ins. Co. v. West, 76 Va. 575; Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Morgan, 90 Va. 290, 18 S. E. 191); Petit v. German Ins. Co. (U. S.) 98 Fed. 800, 802. The stipulation is considered to be on the face of the policy, although it may be written on the margin, or transversely, or on a subjoined paper referred to in the policy. A false statement in the application and physician's report, which is not referred to in the policy, is not a warranty, though it is agreed in the application and report that the statements therein are warranties. Fitzgerald v. Supreme Council Catholic Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 56 N. Y. Supp. 1005, 1009, 39 App. Div. 251; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Grube, 6 Minn. 82, 87 (Gil. 32, 36); Ætna Ins. Co. v. Simmons, 69 N. W. 125, 133, 49 Neb. 811; Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Rehlaender (Neb.) 94 N. W. 129, 132.

By warranty, as the term is used in the law of insurance, the insured stipulates for the absolute truth of the statement and the strict compliance with some promised line of conduct, upon penalty of a forfeiture of his right to recover in case of loss, should the statement made prove untrue or the course of conduct promised be unfulfilled. Palatine Ins. Co. v. Brown (Tex.) 34 S. W. 462, 465.

In insurance a warranty is a stipulation expressly set out, or by inference incorporated into the policy, whereby the assured agrees that certain facts relating to the risk are or shall be true, or certain acts relating to the same subject have been or shall be done. Its purpose is to define the limits of the obligation assumed by the insurer, and it is a condition which must be strictly complied with or literally fulfilled before the right to recover on the policy can accrue. Providence Life Assur. Soc. v. Reutlinger, 25 S. W. 835, 836, 58 Ark. 528.

A warranty in an insurance contract is a statement made therein by the assured which is susceptible of no construction other than that the parties mutually intended that the policy should not be binding unless such statements be literally true. Phoenix Assur. Co. v. Munger Improved Cotton Mach. Mfg.

Co., 49 S. W. 222, 225, 92 Tex. 297 (citing Goddard v. Ins. Co., 67 Tex. 69, 1 S. W. 906; Bills v. Ins. Co., 87 Tex. 547, 29 S. W. 1036; Moulor v. Ins. Co., 111 U. S. 335, 4 Sup. Ct. 466, 28 L. Ed. 447).

A "warranty," as used in a policy of insurance, is a part of the contract of insurance, and must be exactly and literally fulfilled. Where a representation is inserted in the policy, or where it is referred to in the policy as forming a part thereof, the representation becomes a warranty. Conditions annexed to a policy are likewise a part thereof, and are of the same effect as if incorporated in it. Mers v. Franklin Ins. Co., 68 Mo. 127, 131.

A "warranty," as used in a contract of insurance, is a part and parcel of the contract of insurance, so as to appear, as it were, upon the face of the policy itself, and is in the nature of a condition precedent. It may be affirmative of some fact, or only promissory. It must be strictly complied with or literally fulfilled before the insured is entitled to recover on the policy. Alabama Gold Life Ins. Co. v. Johnston, 2 South. 125, 80 Ala. 467, 59 Am. Rep. 816.

A warranty in a policy of insurance is an express stipulation that something then exists, or has happened or been done, or shall happen or be done; and this must be literally and strictly complied with by the assured, whether the truth of the fact or the happening of the event be or be not material to the risk, or be or not connected with the cause of loss. It is a strict condition. Its effect is that the assured takes on himself the responsibility of the truth of the fact, or the happening or not of such contingency; and, unless the warranty be strictly complied with, the policy does not take effect. It is a condition precedent, and the assured is estopped from denying or asserting anything contrary to his express warranty. Forbush v. Western Massachusetts Ins. Co., 70 Mass. (4 Gray) 337, 340.

The purpose of a "warranty" in an insurance policy is not to set a trap for the applicant, but to inform the company about important facts upon which the contract is based. When, therefore, a company is in actual possession of knowledge of a fact, and by turning to its own record can assure itself better than by the imperfect memory of an applicant, it is a perversion of the purpose of a warranty to allow it to avoid a contract. Where, therefore, an insurance company had notice at the time of the issuance of a policy that the applicant had been rejected by it, it could not set up the falsity of the statement in the application that he had not been rejected. O'Rourke v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 50 Atl. 834, 835, 23 R. L. 457, 57 L. R. A. 496, 91 Am. St. Rep. 643.

A warranty, in insurance, is a part of the contract evidenced by the policy, and a binding agreement that the facts stated are strictly true. Price v. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co., 17 Minn. 497, 503 (Gil. 473, 481), 10 Am. Rep. 166.

Same—As a condition precedent.

A "warranty," in a policy of insurance, is a condition or contingency, and unless that be performed there is no contract. Trench v. Chenango County Mut. Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 7 Hill, 122, 124 (citing De Hahn v. Hartley, 1 Term R. 343); Western Assur. Co. v. Redding (U. S.) 68 Fed. 708, 714, 15 C. C. A. 619. It is perfectly immaterial for what purpose a warranty is introduced; but, being inserted, the contract does not exist, unless it is literally complied with. Mackie v. Pleasants (Pa.) 2 Bin. 363, 372. In contracts of insurance a warranty is regarded as very much like a condition precedent, which, if violated, voids the policy, and no recovery can thereafter be had thereon. Day v. Orient Mut. Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 1 Daly, 13, 17 (citing Mead v. Northwestern Ins. Co., 7 N. Y. [3 Seld.] 530; Duncan v. Sun Fire Ins. Co. [N. Y.] 6 Wend. 488, 494, 22 Am. Dec. 539).

A warranty in an insurance policy is an agreement in the nature of a condition precedent, and, like that, it must be strictly complied with. Boyd v. Insurance Co., 90 Tenn. 212, 215, 16 S. W. 470, 25 Am. St. Rep. 676.

In American Popular Life Ins. Co. v. Day, 39 N. J. Law (10 Vroom) 89, 23 Am. Rep. 198, in our court of last resort, "warranties" and "conditions" in insurance policies are treated as synonymous terms, as indeed they are. In Sonneborn v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 44 N. J. Law (15 Vroom) 220, 222, 43 Am. Rep. 365, it was declared in the same court that a promissory warranty had the nature of a condition precedent. That every inducing statement, made a warranty by a policy of life insurance, shall be true, is plainly a condition precedent to the insurer's liability under such policy. In Eddy St. Iron Foundry v. Hampden Stock & Mut. Fire Ins. Co. (U. S.) 8 Fed. Cas. 300, Clifford, J., said that in the law of insurance a warranty is a stipulation forming a part of the contract, and is construed as a condition; and in Hearn v. Equitable Safety Ins. Co. (U. S.) 11 Fed. Cas. 965, he reaffirmed that doctrine. In First Nat. Bank of Kansas City v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 95 U. S. 673, 24 L. Ed. 563, Harlan, J., said that, when warranted, the exact truth of statements in an application for insurance became a condition precedent to any binding contract; and he repeated the expression in Moulter v. American Life Ins. Co., 111 U. S. 335, 4 Sup. Ct. 468, 28 L. Ed. 447. See Dimick v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 51 Atl. 692, 694, 67 N. J. Law, 367.

May, in his work, states this proposition to be the law, and cites numerous authorities in support of his position. May, Ins. p. 179, § 156; Petit v. German Ins. Co. (U. S.) 98 Fed. 800, 802. See, also, Mers v. Franklin Ins. Co., 68 Mo. 127, 131; Lynchburg Fire Ins. Co. v. West, 76 Va. 575, 582; Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Morgan, 18 S. E. 191, 192, 90 Va. 290; Home Life Ins. Co. v. Sibert, 31 S. E. 519, 96 Va. 403; Byers v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 35 Ohio St. 606, 615, 35 Am. Rep. 623; Hendricks v. Commercial Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 8 Johns. 1, 13; Wood v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 13 Conn. 533, 545, 35 Am. Dec. 92; McKenzie v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co., 44 Pac. 922, 924, 112 Cal. 548; Palatine Ins. Co. v. Brown (Tex.) 34 S. W. 462, 465.

A "warranty" in a policy of insurance is in the nature of a condition precedent, and devolves upon the insured in an action upon the policy the burden of averring performance in his pleading and proving it strictly by evidence. American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Wood (U. S.) 73 Fed. 81, 84, 19 C. C. A. 264.

Same—Materiality.

A warranty in insurance law is the assertion by the insured of some fact, on the literal truth of which the validity of the policy depends, without regard to the materiality of such fact or the motive which prompted such assertion. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Rehlaender (Neb.) 94 N. W. 129, 132 (citing Aetna Ins. Co. v. Simmons, 49 Neb. 811, 69 N. W. 125).

A warranty in an application for an insurance policy must be strictly complied with, whether material or not. Lynchburg Fire Ins. Co. v. West, 76 Va. 575, 583, 44 Am. Rep. 177; Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Morgan, 18 S. E. 191, 90 Va. 290; Home Life Ins. Co. v. Sibert, 31 S. E. 519, 96 Va. 403.

A warranty in a policy of insurance is in the nature of a condition precedent, and no inquiry is allowed into the materiality or immateriality of the fact warranted. Mers v. Franklin Ins. Co., 68 Mo. 127, 131.

It is not necessary that the fact or act warranted should be material to the risk, for the parties by their agreement have made it so. Providence Life Assur. Soc. v. Reutlinger, 25 S. W. 835, 836, 58 Ark. 528.

"Whether the facts stated or the acts stipulated for be material to the risk or not is of no consequence, the contract being that the matter is as represented or shall be promised; and unless it prove so, whether from fraud, mistake, negligence, or other cause not proceeding from the insurer, the intervention of law or the act of God, the insured can have no claim. Indeed, one of the very objects of warranty is to preclude all controversy about the materiality or immateriality of the statement." Palatine Ins. Co. v. Brown (Tex.) 34 S. W. 462, 465.

Warranties in the law of insurance are conditions precedent to a valid policy, whether such conditions are material or not, if the parties have regarded them as material and clearly intended them to be so treated. Byers v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 35 Ohio St. 606, 615, 35 Am. Rep. 623; Alabama Gold Life Ins. Co. v. Johnston, 2 South. 125, 80 Ala. 467, 59 Am. Rep. 818.

Where the word "warranty" is used in a policy of insurance with reference to a requirement that the insured shall have stated in the survey a just, full, and true exposition of all the facts and circumstances in regard to the condition, situation, value, and risk of the property to be insured, so far as the same are known to the applicant and are material to the risk, the term "warranty" is not to be construed in its strict literal sense as requiring that the survey should be absolutely true, but requires only that such statements as are material to the risk should be truthfully stated. Lee v. Howard Fire Ins. Co., 65 Mass. (11 Cush.) 324, 328.

Same—Representations distinguished.

The essential difference between a "representation" and a "warranty" in a contract of insurance, when there is no statute touching the matter, is that a representation is a statement by the applicant to the insurer of information which the latter may desire in order to determine whether the risk will be written; the statement being no part of the contract, but only the inducement to make it, but a warranty becomes a part of the contract. Blumer v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 45 Wis. 622; Campbell v. New England Mut. Life Ins. Co., 98 Mass. 389. That is the difference between the two things, and the difference between the legal effect is that, if a representation turns out to be substantially true as to facts material to the risk, the policy will be upheld, though the representation was false in unessential particulars; but a warranty must be strictly true, and if it is false in any part, whether that part affects the risk or not, there can be no recovery on the contract. McDermott v. Modern Woodmen of America, 71 S. W. 833, 836, 97 Mo. App. 636.

A warranty as to any fact, which becomes an integral part of the basis of the contract, differs from a mere representation of such fact in this: It precludes any controversy as to the materiality of such fact, whereas a false representation is not ground for avoiding a contract, unless the party to whom it is made relies upon it and is actually induced by it to enter into an agreement or consent to terms disadvantageous to him. Selby v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. (U. S.) 67 Fed. 490, 491.

A "warranty" in the law of insurance, differs from a representation in this: that the former is a stipulation inserted in writing on the face of the policy, or in another writing referred to and made a part of it, on the literal truth or fulfillment of which the validity of the entire contract depends. A representation is a verbal or written statement made by the insured to the underwriter before the subscription of the policy. Cushman v. United States Life Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 4 Hun, 783, 786 (citing Pierce v. Empire Ins. Co. [N. Y.] 62 Barb. 644).

"Warranty," in insurance law, is the assertion by the assured of some fact, on the literal truth of which the validity of the policy depends, without regard to the materiality of such fact or the motive which prompted the assertion. "Representation," in insurance law, is also the assertion by the insured of some fact, but the validity of the policy does not depend upon the literal truth of the assertion. The falsity of a representation is a defense to a suit on the policy only when made of a fact material to the risk. Whether an assertion made by the insured of the existence of a fact is a warranty or representation is a question of law. Where an application for insurance is made a part of the insurance policy, the two are to be construed together for the purpose of ascertaining whether the contracting parties intended that statements and assertions made by the insured should be regarded as warranties or representations. If a doubt exists whether a statement made is a warranty or representation, it will be held a representation. Warranties are not to be created or extended by construction. In construing a contract, for the purpose of determining whether the statements made therein were intended by the parties thereto to be warranties or representations, the court will take into consideration the situation of the parties, the subject-matter of the contract, and the language employed, and will construe a statement made to be a warranty only when it clearly appears that such was the intention of the contracting parties, and that the mind of each party consciously intended and consented that such should be the interpretation of his statements. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Simmons, 69 N. W. 125, 133, 49 Neb. 811.

In insurance a "representation" is a statement by the applicant to the insurer regarding a fact material to the proposed insurance, and it must be not only false, but fraudulent, to defeat the policy; while a warranty in the law of insurance is a binding agreement that the facts stated by the applicant are true, and is a part of the contract, a condition precedent to a recovery upon it, and its falsity in any particular is fatal to an action on the policy. A representation is a mere declaration of a fact; but it is neither a condition precedent, nor a part of the contract, like a warranty. The crucial distinction between a representation and a warranty is that the one is not, and the other is, a part of the contract between the parties, and that the truth of the one is not, and the truth of the other is, a condition precedent to a recovery upon the policy. A written statement made by employers to the obligor in a bond of indemnity against the dishonest acts of their employé, to the effect that they will invariably apply certain checks to his action, which the parties expressly agree by the statement itself and by the bond shall be the basis of the latter and a condition precedent to a recovery upon it, is of the nature of a "warranty," and not of a "representation," and, therefore, a failure to comply with the promise it contains is fatal to an action on the bond. Rice v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland (U. S.) 103 Fed. 427, 430, 43 C. C. A. 270.

St. 1887, c. 214, § 21, providing that no misrepresentations made in the negotiation of a policy of insurance shall avoid the policy, unless the misrepresentation was fraudulently made or increased the risk, applies to warranties incorporated in the policy by reference to the application. White v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc., 39 N. E. 771, 772, 163 Mass. 108, 27 L. R. A. 398.

Where the word "warranty" is used in an application for insurance as applied to the answers of the applicant, but the policy on its face characterizes the statements of the insured as representations, the doubt as to the intent of the parties must, according to the settled doctrines of the law of insurance, be resolved against the party whose language it becomes necessary to interpret, and that construction must prevail which protects the insured from the obligations arising from a strict warranty. Moulton v. American Life Ins. Co., 4 Sup. Ct. 466, 469, 111 U. S. 342, 28 L. Ed. 447.

Where the contract of insurance contained inconsistent expressions, one part tending to show an intention to make the answers warranties, and another treating them as representations merely, the answers will be regarded, not as warranties, but in the nature of representations, or, if warranties, only of an honest belief of their truth. Alabama Gold Life Ins. Co. v. Johnston, 2 South. 125, 80 Ala. 467, 59 Am. Rep. 816.

The true rule as to what amounts to a warranty or what amounts to a representation in insurance is: "Whenever the answers are responsive to direct questions they are to be regarded as warranties, and when they are not so responsive, but voluntary, without being called for, they are to be construed as representations." Buell v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. (U. S.) 4 Fed. Cas. 590.

A warranty by an applicant for insurance must be literally and exactly fulfilled; but a representation is satisfied by showing a substantial compliance, and a slight variance, which would not have influenced the action of the insurer in making the contract, will not defeat the policy. Carrollton Furniture Mfg. Co. v. American Credit Indemnity Co. (U. S.) 124 Fed. 25, 29, 59 C. C. A. 545.

A warranty is an agreement, an answer is a statement, and a policy of insurance therefore says, in other words, that in consideration, inter alia, of the answers and warranties of the application, the contract is made; and where in the application the applicant warrants said answers to be true, the answers are warranties, and not merely representations. McClain v. Provident Savings & Life Assur. Soc. (U. S.) 105 Fed. 834, 835. See, also, Providence Life Assur. Soc. v. Reutlinger, 25 S. W. 835, 836, 58 Ark. 528.

In order to make any statements binding as warranties, they must appear upon the face of the instrument itself by which the contract of insurance is effected. They must either be expressly set out, or by inference incorporated in the policy. If they are not so, they are not warranties, but representations. Dime Sav. Inst. v. American Surety Co., 53 Atl. 217, 218, 68 N. J. Law, 440 (citing American Popular Life Ins. Co. v. Day, 39 N. J. Law [10 Vroom] 93, 23 Am. Rep. 198).

In contracts of insurance, a representation differs from a warranty, and from a condition expressed in the policy, in that the former is part of the preliminary proceedings which propose the contract, and the latter is part of the contract when completed. The validity of the contract depends upon the fulfillment of the warranties and conditions, and noncompliance therewith is an express breach, which, of itself, avoids the contract; whereas a misrepresentation, to avoid the policy, must have been made with a fraudulent intent, or with respect to some material matter. Deweese v. Manhattan Ins. Co., 34 N. J. Law (5 Vroom) 244, 247.

An approved writer on the law of insurance, distinguishing between a representation and a warranty, describes a warranty to be a condition precedent, and part of the written policy, and a representation to be a matter collateral, making no part of the policy. A representation in the body of a policy, stating the goods insured to belong to American citizens resident in Charleston, amounts to an express warranty that the same were neutral property at the time of the contract. Walton v. Bethune (S. C.) 2 Brev. 453, 454, 4 Am. Dec. 597.

A representation, as used in insurance, is a part of the preliminary proceedings preceding and proposing a contract of insurance, while a warranty is a part of the contract of insurance as completed. Ordinarily a statement made in an application for insurance is a representation only; but it may be incorporated into the policy, and so become a part of the contract and a warranty. Williams v. New England Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 31 Me. 219, 224.

In sales of personalty.

A warranty consists in representations and statements of and concerning the condition and quality of personal property, the subject of sale, made by the person making the sale to induce it and bring it about. Pemberton v. Dean, 92 N. W. 478, 479, 88 Minn. 60, 60 L. R. A. 331, 97 Am. St. Rep. 508.

A warranty is a collateral undertaking by which the warrantor contracts that certain facts in relation to the property are or shall be as represented. A warranty is always a representation, but the reverse is not necessarily true. Matteson v. Rice, 92 N. W. 1109, 1110, 116 Wis. 328.

A warranty in a sale of personal property is a statement or representation of fact made by the vendor as to the character or quality of the article sold, or of the title thereto, whereby the vendor promises that the thing is or shall be as represented. It is otherwise defined as a statement of fact as to an article sold, coupled with an agreement to make the statement good. Such an agreement may be express or implied. Ingraham v. Union R. Co., 33 Atl. 875, 876, 19 R. I. 356.

A warranty is a promise by the seller that the property proposed to be sold belongs to him, or is of the description or quality alleged. The allegation must be made at or before the sale, and must be of something that is material and calculated to induce the purchaser to buy. Brown v. Tuttle (N. Y.) 66 Barb. 169, 173.

A warranty is a stipulation in writing, on the literal truth or fulfillment of which the validity of the entire contract depends. A stipulation is considered to be on the face of the policy, although it may be written on a subjoined paper referred to in the policy. Levell v. Royal Arcanum, 9 Misc. Rep. 257, 258, 30 N. Y. Supp. 205, 206 (citing Alex. Ins. 51).

A warranty is a contract by which the person who makes it engages to become responsible to the other party for any damage which he may sustain by a breach of it. It does not necessarily include a declaration by the maker that the fact is so, but merely that he will be responsible if it shall not prove to be so. A warranty of the soundness of a slave, contained in a bill of sale, is not evidence that the party making it at that time admitted the soundness of the slave. Patton v. Porter, 48 N. C. 539.

Under a contract of warranty the liability of the warrantor is in no wise dependent on the degree of faith or belief that the warrantee may have in the words used in the contract of warranty, and the title does not pass simply on condition that no breach of such warranty shall occur. The term "warranty," therefore, has a technical meaning, and simply contemplates a liability for damages in case of breach. Newman v. H. B. Claflin Co., 32 S. E. 943, 945, 107 Ga. 89.

In a bill of sale a warranty of soundness is a contract which binds the warrantor to indemnify the warrantee in the event of unsoundness. Though it is not strictly a promise to pay money, nor to do any specified act, it is an undertaking in effect to do something that will oblige the obligor to pay money or perform some act, and is therefore in its legal effect any contract to do some act. Tribble v. Oldham, 28 Ky. (5 J. J. Marsh.) 137, 139.

"Warranty" and "guaranty," being derivatives from the same root, are identical in signification and effect; the one usually, but not always, denoting the covenant in a conveyance, and the other denoting a parol promise. Ayres v. Findley, 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 501.

Though the term "warrant" may not have been employed in regard to the sale of personalty, nevertheless representations and statements may be sufficient to constitute an express warranty. The term "warrant," especially where the contract of sale is reduced to writing, while most generally and appropriately used, is not absolutely necessary to express a warranty by the seller; for the rule is well settled that in sales of personalty no particular form of words is necessary to establish a warranty. Any positive representation made by the seller during the pendency of the negotiations for the sale, not the mere expression of opinion, which fairly expresses the intent of the seller to warrant the article sold to be what it is represented, will constitute an express warranty. Smith v. Borden, 66 N. E. 681, 683, 160 Ind. 223 (citing Conant v. Nat. State Bank of Terre Haute, 121 Ind. 323, 22 N. E. 250).

Representations made by the vendor on a sale, for the purpose of inducing the vendee to purchase, and which did induce him to purchase, amount to a warranty. Marsh v. Webber, 13 Minn. 109 (Gil. 99, 100).

No particular phraseology is requisite to constitute a warranty, nor is it necessary that the vendor should have intended the misrepresentation to constitute a warranty. A representation in an agreement to sell beef that, before being killed, it has not been heated, amounts to an express warranty. Fairbank Canning Co. v. Metzger, 23 N. E. 372, 373, 118 N. Y. 260, 16 Am. St. Rep. 753.

The word "warrant" is not indispensably necessary to make a contract of warranty. Any language which clearly shows that the seller affirms the property to be sound is sufficient. Buckman v. Haney, 11 Ark. (6 Eng.) 339, 341.

No particular words are necessary to constitute a warranty of quality on a sale of chattels. If a man say, at the time of a sale of a horse, "This horse is sound," it amounts to a warranty. Norton v. Doherty, 69 Mass. (3 Gray) 372, 373, 63 Am. Dec. 758.

A warranty in a contract of sale is an agreement by the vendor that the thing he sells is of a certain kind, character, or quality, affecting its value to the vendee. No particular form of words is necessary to constitute such a warranty. Any covenant, promise, or assertion of the vendor concerning the quality of the article sold, if relied on by the vendee and understood by both parties as an absolute promise or assertion, and not a mere expression of opinion, will amount to a warranty. Smith v. Holbrook (N. Y.) 1 Buff. Super. Ct. 474, 477.

A warranty or condition in a contract of sale that the article sold has certain qualities excludes the implication of the warranty or condition that it possesses other qualities. Carleton v. Lombard Ayres & Co., 25 N. Y. Supp. 570, 573.

There is an apparently irreconcilable conflict of authority as to the distinction between warranties and conditions, and as to the rights and obligations of parties thereunder. Much of the confusion has arisen from the fact that what were generally considered in this country as warranties that the article shall be of the kind or species contracted for were, prior to the passage of the sales of goods act in England, and are in some of the courts of this country, treated as conditions precedent. Benj. Sales, p. 589, 594, 677; Carleton v. Lombard Ayres & Co., 149 N. Y. 147, 43 N. E. 422. Furthermore, the word "warranties" has been used in such a great variety of senses, and the decisions thereon have been so anomalous, that, as a distinguished jurist has said, "an attempt to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion about any principle supposed to be established by them would be hopeless, if not absurd." McFarland v. Newman (Pa.) 9 Watts, 55, 34 Am. Dec. 497. Fairbank Canning Co. v. Metzger, 118 N. Y. 260, 23 N. E. 372, 16 Am. St. Rep. 753, approves the doctrine that a positive affirmation, relied on as such by the vendee, is an express warranty, and quotes with approval from an opinion by Judge Learned as follows: "There can be no difference between an executory contract to sell and deliver goods of such and such a quality, and an executory contract to sell and deliver goods which the vendor warrants to be of such and such a quality. The former is as much a warranty as the latter." Kent v. Friedman, 101 N. Y. 616, 3 N. E. 905. Manifestly there is no distinction in principle, as to the rights and remedies of a purchaser, between causes of action arising out of a breach of contract by the vendor to deliver an article of a specified quality or description, or out of a breach of representation which is material to the contract, or out of such a breach when the representation or warranty is implied instead of express. In either case there is an agreement in substance and purport to the same effect; in either, a breach of it works the same injury to the vendee. Whether the cause of action is for a breach of contract or for the breach of a warranty is a mere matter of nomenclature. Cleveland Linseed Oil Co. v. A. F. Buchanan & Sons (U. S.) 120 Fed. 906, 908, 57 C. C. A. 498 (citing Bagley v. Cleveland Rolling Mill Co. [U. S.] 21 Fed. 159).

A warranty is an engagement by which a seller assures to a buyer the existence of some fact affecting the transaction, whether past, present, or future. Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 1763; Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 2370; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 3970; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 1322; Harley v. Golden State & Miners' Iron Works, 66 Cal. 238, 239, 5 Pac. 160.

Words of description may amount to a warranty, if it appears that they were so intended by the parties; but courts are usually disinclined, in doubtful cases, to construe words of description as amounting to a warranty of quality. Whether language of description is to be construed as a warranty of quality must depend ordinarily upon the intention or understanding of the parties as collected from the entire contract. Maxwell v. Lee, 84 Minn. 511, 515, 27 N. W. 196, 198.

Same—As collateral undertaking.

A "warranty" is an express or implied statement of something which the party undertakes shall be part of a contract, and, though part of the contract, yet collateral to the express object of it. Lunt v. Wrenn, 113 Ill. 168, 175 (citing Obanther v. Hopkins, 4 Mees. & W. 399); Flint-Walling Mfg. Co. v. Ball, 43 Mo. App. 504, 510; Tower v. Howe Scale Co. (N. Y.) 2 City Ct. R. 47, 48; Neave v. Arntz, 56 Wis. 174, 176, 14 N. W. 41, 42; Fairbank Canning Co. v. Metzger, 28 N. Y. St. Rep. 775, 777; Id., 23 N. E. 372, 373, 118 N. Y. 260, 16 Am. St. Rep. 753; Reynolds v. Palmer (U. S.) 21 Fed. 433, 439 (citing Obanther v. Hopkins, 4 Mees. & W. 404); Jones v. George, 61 Tex. 345, 349, 48 Am. Rep. 280.

A warranty is, in general, a collateral undertaking, forming part of a transaction of sale. Morris v. Bradley Fertilizer Co. (U. S.) 64 Fed. 55, 58, 12 C. C. A. 34.

Originally the word "warranty," as used in connection with sales, was applied solely to contracts for the sale of existing articles, identified at the time of the sale, the title to which passes under the contract, and the obligation arising from a warranty was held to be a purely collateral undertaking, which survived the delivery of and the payment for the article sold. But in modern cases the word has been used as synonymous with stipulations in executory contracts prescribing the qualities of the goods to be sold, the title to which is to be vested in the vendee at a future date. In the case of executed sales, the warranty is a collateral undertaking, but in the case of executory sales the agreement to deliver articles of a specified standard is a part of the contract to sell and deliver. Warranties are express or implied. Carleton v. Lombard, Ayres & Co., 25 N. Y. Supp. 570, 573, 72 Hun, 254.

No particular form of words is necessary to create a warranty. Any definite statement or affirmation as to the quality of the thing sold, made by the seller at the time, which it may reasonably be supposed was intended to induce the sale, and which is relied on by the purchaser, may be regarded as constituting a warranty. Ingraham v. Union R. Co., 33 Atl. 875, 876, 19 R. I. 356.

To constitute a warranty in the sale of goods, it is not necessary that the vendor should use the word "warrant" or "warranty." If the language actually used at the time of the sale by a fair construction amounts to, or is equivalent to, an undertaking on the part of the owner that the property is what it is represented to be, it is sufficient to create a warranty. A description of a printing press, in a bill of sale thereof, as being "in good working order, with all parts intact," is a warranty. Udell v. Sarafian, 43 N. Y. Supp. 1092, 1094, 19 Misc. Rep. 542.

Selling a particular thing by its proper description cannot be said with accuracy to create a warranty. Heine Safety Boiler Co. v. Francis Bros. & Jellott (U. S.) 105 Fed. 413, 417.

To make an affirmation at the time of the sale a "warranty," it must appear by the evidence to be so intended, and not to have been a mere matter of judgment and opinion, of which the defendant had no particular knowledge. Waring v. Mason (N. Y.) 18 Wend. 425, 426.

A "guaranty," or "warranty," is not an independent agreement, but a mere incident, and part of the principal contract of sale, and, when the latter is formally reduced to writing, whatever incidents exist are presumed by the rules of evidence to have been incorporated thereunder. Jones v. Alley, 17 Minn. 292, 295 (Gil. 269, 272).

Same—Fraud distinguished.

See "Fraud."

Same—Noncompliance with contract distinguished.

A warranty is an express or an implied statement of something which a party undertakes shall be a part of the contract, and, though a part of the contract, collateral to the express object of it; but, in many of the cases, the circumstances of a party selling a particular thing by its proper description has been called a "warranty," and a breach of such a contract a breach of the warranty; but it would be better to distinguish such cases as noncompliance with a contract which a party has engaged to fulfill, as, if a man offers to buy peas of another, and he sends him beans, he does not perform his contract. But that is not a warranty. There is no warranty that he should sell him beans. The contract is to sell peas, and, if he sell him anything else in their stead, it is a non-performance of it. Columbian Iron Works & Dry Dock Co. v. Douglas, 34 Atl. 1118, 1121, 84 Md. 44, 33 L. R. A. 103, 57 Am. St. Rep. 362. See, also, Waeber v. Talbot, 60 N. E. 288, 290, 167 N. Y. 48, 82 Am. St. Rep. 712.

WARRANTY DEED.

See "Good Warranty Deed."

A "warranty deed" is a deed with covenants of general warranty. This is the common understanding of the term. Allen v. Hazen, 28 Mich. 142, 146.

In popular phrase, a "warranty deed" is one with special warranty. Withers v. Baird (Pa.) 7 Watts, 227, 229, 32 Am. Dec. 754.

A warranty deed is nothing more than a deed containing a covenant of warranty. Kinney's Law Dict. An instrument may be a warranty deed without containing any covenant that the property was free of liens for taxes, and it will not be inferred that such a deed contains a covenant against taxes or tax liens, or that it contains any other specific covenant. State Sav. Bank v. Gregg, 67 Mo. App. 303, 307.

In a contract for a warranty deed, a deed containing the usual covenants of seisin and against incumbrances is intended. Bowen v. Thrall, 28 Vt. (2 Williams) 882.

A contract to sell and convey land by a deed of warranty is complied with by a delivery to, and acceptance by, one of the three vendees, of a deed of special warranty. Payne v. Echols (Pa.) 15 Atl. 895.

Perfect title implied.

A contract for the conveyance of land, by which the vendor obligated himself to execute and deliver to the appraisers a warranty deed of the land, and conditioned that they pay the purchase price at the times and in the manner specified, obligated the vendor to give the appraisers a perfect title, including the inchoate right of dower of the vendor's wife. Pomeroy v. Drury (N. Y.) 14 Barb. 418.

In common parlance, a "warranty deed" means a perfect title, and in legal contemplation, when parties contract for warranty deed, they must be understood to mean a title paramount to all others; and where the payee of a note was to deliver warranty deeds of two quarter sections of land to the maker on the payment of the same, and could only give good title to one quarter, the contract was rescindable by the maker of the note. Tupy v. Kocourek, 51 S. W. 69, 70, 66 Ark. 433.

If it was considered that the letters "W. D." in an application for insurance, meant that the title was a warranty deed, still that is not an assertion that such a title is a fee. No member of the profession, we presume, would say that it was. All know that a warranty deed may pass a term of years, a life estate, a fee or less estate, or it may pass no estate whatever. It conveys, as all know, only the estate of the grantor, whatever it may be. If he has none, it can pass none to the grantee. Rockford Ins. Co. v. Nelson, 65 Ill. 415, 419.

WARRANTY OF FACT.

At common law, a warranty of fact in a material matter is a guaranty that the fact is as stated. Byers v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 35 Ohio St. 606, 616, 35 Am. Rep. 623.

WARRANTY OF NEUTRALITY.

A "warranty of neutrality" means that the ship shall maintain a neutral conduct, and not forfeit it during the voyage. Vandenheuvel v. United Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 2 Johns. Cas. 127, 148.

WARREN.

See "Birds of Warren."

WAS—WERE.

Rev. St. 1893, c. 77, § 123, provides that the purchaser of land at a tax sale seeking a deed shall serve notice on "the person in whose name the same was taxed or specially assessed," etc. Held, that the phrase should be construed to mean that a notice shall be served upon the person in whose name the land "is" taxed or specially assessed, as appears upon the last assessment thereof in the taxbook in the office of county treasurer. Thomsen v. Dickey, 60 N. W. 558, 560, 42 Neb. 814.

The words "was built and intended," in a statute authorizing the appointing of a receiver for any railroad company failing to operate daily trains over any part of its road for the space of ten days, but providing that the act shall not apply to any railroad company whose road is constructed at any seaside resort not exceeding four miles in length, and which was built and intended merely for the transportation of summer travelers and tourists, imports roads already in existence. Delaware Bay & C. M. R. Co. v. Markley, 16 Atl. 436, 438, 45 N. J. Eq. (18 Stew.) 139.

The words "were and still are," in an indictment charging that a dam and pond were and still are a nuisance to the public, import a prior and continuing offense, and therefore evidence of the existence of the nuisance at any time within two years prior to the date laid in the indictment is admissible. State v. Holman, 10 S. E. 758, 104 N. C. 861.

WASH SALE.

A wash sale is at most an affirmation that the buyer is paying a certain price for a certain lot of stock. It is not an affirmation that the stock has any intrinsic value, that a company owns any property of value, or that the buyer will ever again bid the same price for the stock. It is made on account of persons who are anonymous. If a man buys stock because he is led by wash sales to believe that he can make a fortunate speculation, he cannot have an action of deceit against those who have made the wash sales. The sales, though fictitious, are not representations of any fact on which a man has a right to rely. They are at most false affirmations of an opinion as to value. Such affirmations are not regarded as statements of fact. Wash sales are condemned, as they ought to be, because they are fictitious, but they are not false representations made to the public in general, which give a right of action to any one who is led by them to take an erroneous view of market prices, and to invest unprofitably in consequence. McGlynn v. Seymour, 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 707, 709.

WASHING POWDER.

The words "washing powder" on a label are no more descriptive or indicative of the soap manufactured by the parties using such label than of any other of a great variety of powders that are or may be compounded suitable for washing. They simply indicate a compound in the form of a powder used for washing, possessing many attributes common to many other compounds. They point to no particular person as the maker, and do not express the origin, ownership, or place of sale or manufacture. It is a sort of generic, and not a peculiar, term, and hence not suitable to use as a trade-mark which will be protected. The name "washing powder" is one by which compounds of like kind are known in the law, and which every person has an equal right to use. Falkinburg v. Lucy, 35 Cal. 52, 67, 95 Am. Dec. 76.

WASTE.

See "Commissive Waste"; "Equitable Waste"; "Further Waste"; "Impeachment of Waste"; "Permissive Waste."

Standard lexicographers use "refuse" as synonymous with "waste." Thus, Worcester: "Refuse: (a) Left as worthless when the rest is taken; worthless; waste." And one of the meanings given by him of "waste" is "refuse." State v. Howard, 72 Me. 459, 465.

"Waste," within the meaning of the provisions of the Code authorizing an action by a taxpayer to prevent waste of or injury to municipal property, is confined to cases where the acts complained of are without power; but where corruption, fraud, or bad faith amounting to fraud is charged, the word only includes illegal, wrongful, or dishonest action. Basselin v. Pate, 63 N. Y. Supp. 653, 657, 80 Misc. Rep. 368.

The terms "waste" and "injury," as used in a statute authorizing a taxpayer to maintain an action against a city officer for any waste or injury of city property, comprehend only illegal, wrongful, or dishonest official acts, and were not intended to subject the official of boards, officers, or municipal bodies, acting within the limitations of their jurisdiction and discretion, but which some taxpayer might conceive to be unwise, improvident, or based on errors of judgment, to the supervision of the judicial tribunals. Talcott v. City of Buffalo, 26 N. E. 263, 264, 125 N. Y. 280; Parfitt v. Kings County Gas & Illuminating Co., 33 N. Y. Supp. 1111, 1118, 12 Misc. Rep. 278; Sweet v. City of Syracuse, 14 N. Y. Supp. 421, 424, 60 Hun, 28.

Waste includes every wrongful act, the mismanagement of the property, rights, or interests of the municipality, causing a loss or damage. Ayers v. Lawrence, 59 N. Y. 192, 197.

The terms "waste" and "injury," as used in the statute authorizing any taxpayer to maintain an action against an officer for waste or injury to property of a city, do not comprehend individual acts, but only illegal, wrongful, and dishonest acts of public officials. The fact that a private individual is unlawfully enjoying the property of a city without the knowledge of the official does not render him liable to such action. Sheehy v. McMillan, 49 N. Y. Supp. 1088, 1090, 26 App. Div. 140.

In real property law.

"Waste," or "vastum," is a spoliation or destruction of houses, etc., to the disherison of him that hath the remainder or reversion in fee simple or fee tail. White v. Wagner (Md.) 4 Har. & J. 373, 391, 7 Am. Dec. 674; Davenport v. Magoon, 4 Pac. 299, 301, 13 Or. 3, 67 Am. Rep. 1; Sanderson v. Jones, 6 Fla. 430, 480, 481, 63 Am. Dec. 217; Dills v. Hampton, 92 N. C. 565, 570.

"Waste" is defined to be a spoil or destruction in houses, gardens, trees, or other corporeal hereditaments, to the disherison of him that has the remainder or reversion in fee simple; and it is said that whatever is done which tends to the destruction of the inheritance or the impairing of its value is waste. Smith v. Sharpe, 44 N. C. 91, 93, 57 Am. Dec. 574.

Waste is "the destruction or material alteration of any part of a tenement by a tenant for life or years, to the injury of the person entitled to the inheritance." 1 Steph. Comm. 241. "And it may be committed as well by destruction to any part of a tenement. It is waste to alter buildings, or vary, in any manner, the permanent erections." 5 Wait, Act. & Def. 239; Tayl. Landl. & T. § 348. The injury to the reality must be of a permanent character—some act which does a lasting injury to the property or tends to destroy its identity; and this may be accomplished by any alteration of the property which is material and of a substantial nature. Davenport v. Magoon, 4 Pac. 299, 301, 13 Or. 3, 67 Am. Rep. 1.

"Waste" is defined to be any unlawful act or omission of duty on the part of the tenant which results in permanent injury to the inheritance. Whitney v. Huntington, 34 Minn. 458, 462, 28 N. W. 631, 632, 57 Am. Rep. 68 (citing Whart. Law Dict.; Abb. Law Dict.; Bouv. Law Dict.).

In general, waste is the abuse or destructive use of property by him who has not an absolute, unqualified title. And in general, trespass is an injury, or use without authority, of the property of another, by one who has no right thereto. Duvall v. Waters (Md.) 1 Bland, 569, 572, 18 Am. Dec. 350.

Waste, in its simplest definition, is whatever does a lasting damage to the freehold or inheritance. Beekman v. Van Dolson, 18 N. Y. Supp. 376, 377, 63 Hun, 487; McGregor v. Brown, 10 N. Y. (6 Seld.) 114, 117.

Waste is an improper destruction or material alteration or deterioration of the freehold, or of things forming an essential part of it, done or suffered by a person rightfully in possession as tenant, or having but a partial estate, like a mortgagor. Hamilton v. Austin (N. Y.) 36 Hun, 138, 143.

Whatever the act of omission is, in order to constitute waste it must either diminish the value of the estate or increase the burden upon it, or impair the evidence of title of he who has the inheritance. Eysaman v. Small, 15 N. Y. Supp. 288, 289, 61 Hun, 618.

"Waste is understood in law as permanent or lasting injury done or permitted to be done by the holder of a particular estate to the inheritance, to the prejudice of any one who has an interest in the inheritance." Price v. Ward, 58 Pac. 849, 850, 25 Nev. 203, 46 L. R. A. 459.

Waste is voluntary, a crime or commission, as pulling down a house; or permissive, which is a matter of omission only, as by suffering it to fall for necessary repairs. White v. Wagner (Md.) 4 Har. & J. 373, 391, 7 Am. Dec. 674.

"Waste" may be defined to be whatever does a lasting damage to the freehold and tends to the permanent loss of the owner, or to destroy or lessen the value of the inheritance. Eysaman v. Small, 15 N. Y. Supp. 288, 289, 61 Hun, 618.

"Waste" is defined by Washburn, in his work on Real Property (volume 1, p. 126), to be whatever does a lasting damage to the freehold or inheritance, and tends to the permanent loss of the owner in fee or to destroy or lessen the value of the inheritance. It is a question of fact as to what constitutes waste, and a finding on such question will not be disturbed on conflicting evidence. Eysaman v. Small, 15 N. Y. Supp. 288, 289, 61 Hun, 618.

"Waste" is defined to be the destruction of such things on the land by a tenant for life or years as are not included in its temporary profits; in other words, it consists in such acts as tend to the permanent loss of the owner in fee, or to destroy or lessen the value of the inheritance. Proffitt v. Henderson, 29 Mo. 325, 327.

The term "waste," when applied to a tenant in common for life or for years, has a very extensive meaning. It includes the opening of new mines on lands; so, taking away soil is waste, though the purpose is to convert it into bricks for sale. Waste need not consist of loss of market value. It may be an actionable injury in the sense of destroying identity. Cosgriff v. Dewey, 58 N. E. 1, 164 N. Y. 1, 79 Am. St. Rep. 620.

Where a lessee of a building, without permission of the lessor, partially destroys a party wall by cutting out an opening for a door, actually removing the bricks and mortar, it was a spoil and destruction pro tanto of the building, constituting waste. Kerr, Inj. 250, 251, says an alteration of buildings which changes their nature and character is waste, even though the value of the premises be thereby increased. Kille v. Van Broock, 37 Atl. 469, 473, 56 N. J. Eq. (11 Dick.) 18.

"Waste" may be defined to be any act or omission of duty by a tenant of land which does a lasting injury to the freehold, tends to the permanent loss of the owner of the fee, or to destroy or lessen the value of the inheritance, or to destroy the identity of the property or impair the evidence of the title. Where, owing to the growth of business interests, residence property became valueless for that purpose, and incapable of any use as business property in the condition in which it was, a life tenant was not guilty of waste in removing the dwelling house standing thereon 30 to 40 feet above the street, and in cutting the lot down to grade, so as to make it useful for business and enhance its value. Melms v. Pabst Brewing Co., 79 N. W. 738, 739, 104 Wis. 7, 46 L. R. A. 478.

It is waste for a tenant for life to take the petroleum oil from the land, or for a tenant in common to take it, for which he is liable to his co-tenant. Williamson v. Jones, 27 S. E. 411, 413, 43 W. Va. 562, 38 L. R. A. 694, 64 Am. St. Rep. 891; Cosgriff v. Dewey, 58 N. E. 1, 164 N. Y. 1, 79 Am. St. Rep. 620.

It is waste, under Code, c. 92, § 2, for a tenant in common to remove the coal from the premises. Oecil v. Clark, 39 S. E. 202, 206, 49 W. Va. 459.

The common-law doctrine as to waste, defined to be the "spoil or destruction in houses, gardens, trees, or other corporeal hereditaments, to the disherison of him that hath the remainder or reversion in simple or fee tail," is not strictly followed in this country, and the right to interfere with the tenants of the Baltimore perpetual leases of ground in the management of their property only exists under circumstances which would justify the exercise of the preventive jurisdiction of a court of equity. Crowe v. Wilson, 65 Md. 479, 5 Atl. 427, 57 Am. Rep. 343.

The act of 1833 defines the words "waste and destruction," as applied to mines, to mean "quarrying and mining, and all such other acts as will do lasting injury to the premises." Irwin v. Covode, 24 Pa. 162, 168.

The cutting of timber on demised premises, beyond what is necessary for the use and improvement of such premises, is "waste." Mooers v. Wait (N. Y.) 3 Wend. 104, 107, 20 Am. Dec. 667.

The conversion of a meadow into arable land is not waste in law unless it is such in fact, and it is for the jury whether such act has deterred the value of the property as a whole. King v. Miller, 99 N. C. 583, 594, 6 S. E. 660, 666.

The conversion of land from one species to another is waste in England; as, to turn arable land into pasture or meadow, or meadow into arable, or arable into woodland, are all of them waste. In this state the question of waste depends upon the fact whether the injury to the land works a permanent or present injury to the freehold. Surely, then, the turning of arable land, not into woodland, but to the uses of a highway, to be trampled upon and cut up by the feet of horses and the wheels of vehicles, would be waste much more serious and injurious to the freehold than turning it into woodland or to a different species of husbandry. Dills v. Hampton, 92 N. C. 565, 570.

The cutting of timber may be waste, although necessary to the profitable enjoyment of the land. It may be waste, although the land is valuable for timber only. Proffitt v. Henderson, 29 Mo. 325, 327.

The use of the wood for the common purposes of an estate, as for a furnace, is not waste. Den v. Kinney, 5 N. J. Law (2 Southard) 552.

It is not waste in Vermont to cut down wood or timber so as to fit the land for cultivation, provided this would not damage the inheritance, and would be according to the rules of good husbandry, taking into view the location and situation of the whole farm. So, to remove the dead and decaying trees, whether for the purpose of clearing the land or giving the green timber a better opportunity to come to maturity, is not waste. Keeler v. Eastman, 11 Vt. 293, 294.

Same—Trespass distinguished.

Waste and trespass are easily distinguishable. Briefly stated, waste is the permanent or lasting injury to the estate by one who has not an absolute or unqualified title thereto. Trespass is an injury to the estate, or the use thereof, by one who is a stranger to the title. Price v. Ward, 58 Pac. 849, 850, 25 Nev. 203, 46 L. R. A. 459.

Waste is an injury to the freehold by one rightfully in possession. This marks the distinction between waste and trespass. I White & T. Lead. Cas. Eq. 1011. But the nature of the act is a tort in both cases—the same in both. Williamson v. Jones, 27 S. E. 411, 413, 43 W. Va. 562, 38 L. R. A. 694, 64 Am. St. Rep. 891; Cecil v. Clark, 39 S. E. 202, 206, 49 W. Va. 459.

In tariff acts.

See "Wool Waste."

The primary definition of "waste," given in Webster's Dictionary, is "that which is of no value; worthless remnant; refuse." The Century Dictionary defines it as "broken, spoiled, useless, or superfluous material; stuff that is left over, or that is unfitted or cannot readily be utilized for the purpose for which it was intended; overplus; useless or rejected material." As used in Act Oct. 1, 1890, par. 472, relating to the duties on waste, it does not include candle tar, a residuum or by-product in the manufacture of candles. Standard Varnish Works v. United States (U. S.) 59 Fed. 456, 457, 8 C. C. A. 178.

Waste is the refuse thrown off in the shearing or finishing of woolen cloths. Lenig v. Maxwell (U. S.) 15 Fed. Cas. 312, 313.

"Waste composed wholly or in part of wool," as used in Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, par. 388, includes waste pieces of cloth, composed in part of rubber, cotton, and wool. "Waste, not specially provided for," does not include waste pieces of cloth, composed in part of rubber, cotton, and wool. United States v. Cummings (U. S.) 65 Fed. 495, 496.

WASTE GROUND.

The term "waste ground" was used in a contract by a railroad company to pay so many dollars for waste ground, and it was held, in construing the contract, that parol evidence of residents of the neighborhood familiar with the technical terms used in the construction of railroads was admissible to show that waste ground meant earth or other material excavated from the bed of the road, and deposited on the ground. Prather v. Ross, 17 Ind. 495, 499.

WASTING OF ESTATE.

Rev. St. § 390, making the confirmed habit of drunkenness in the husband of not less than one year's duration, accompanied with a "wasting of his estate," a ground for divorce, should be deemed to mean, where the husband has no property, to apply to and embrace his health, time, and labor, all of which, for the purpose of supporting himself and family, are essentially his estate. McKay v. McKay, 57 Ky. (18 B. Mon.) 8, 9.

WATCH.

See "Anchor Watch"; "Suitable Watch." As wearing apparel, see "Wearing Apparel."

"To watch" means "to tend; to guard; to have in keeping." Jeffries v. State, 32 S. W. 1080, 1081, 61 Ark. 308.

A watch is neither a "jewel" nor an "ornament," as those words are used in a statute providing that innkeepers shall not be liable for the loss or theft by or from their guests of jewels or ornaments, unless said articles of property are deposited in a safe provided for that purpose. Ramaley v. Leland, 43 N. Y. 539, 542, 3 Am. Rep. 728; Briggs v. Todd, 59 N. Y. Supp. 23, 26, 28 Misc. Rep. 208; Becker v. Warner, 35 N. Y. Supp. 739, 741, 90 Hun, 187.

WATCH MATERIALS.

"Watch materials," as used in Rev. St. § 2504, Schedule M, providing for the rate of duty on watch materials, means articles which in themselves bear marks of their special adaptation for use in making watches. The fact that articles are used in the manufacture of watches has no relation to the condition of the article as imported. Worthington v. Robbins, 11 Sup. Ct. 581, 582, 139 U. S. 337, 35 L. Ed. 181.

WATCH TRIMMINGS.

Watch trimmings includes such articles of jewelry as are usually worn and sold in connection with watches, among which are chains, brooches or pins, keys, seals, pencils, lockets, rings, and charms; and the general definition of watch trimmings would be "ornaments worn in connection with watches." Crosby v. Franklin Ins. Co., 71 Mass. (5 Gray) 504.

WATCHMAN.

A watchman is an officer in cities or towns, whose duty it is to watch during the night and take care of the property of the inhabitants. Webster's definition is "one who guards the streets of a city or building by night." Singleton v. Eureka County, 35 Pac. 833, 22 Nev. 91.

"Watchman," as used in a city ordinance requiring the presence of a "watchman" at street crossings of railroads, who should display at the cars in the daytime a red flag, and at night a red light, is one set to espy the approach of danger, and give an alarm or notice of it. Such a watchman's duty includes the exercise of ordinary care in warning persons on or near the street crossings of any approaching danger from passing trains. Wilkins v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 13 S. W. 893, 896, 101 Mo. 93.

On insured premises.

"Watchman," as used in a fire insurance policy on a quartz mill, providing that a watchman should be employed by the owner to guard the premises during such time as the mill was idle, cannot be construed to include a person who, during several hours of the day, is working in a mine 2,200 feet away from the mill, and during the night sleeps in a house 900 feet therefrom, and out of view of the premises by reason of a hill. A watchman, according to Webster, is a sentinel. A watchman of a building is one who takes care of it during the nighttime. Wenzel v. Commercial Ins. Co., 7 Pac. 817, 67 Cal. 438.

Where an insurance policy declares a watchman to be a person kept in a mill or on the premises during the night, and at all times when the mill is not in operation or when the workmen are not present, the presence of a deputy sheriff and one of the trustees of the insured in the office of the mill, about two rods from it, on the night following a levy of the property, should not be construed to constitute the presence of a "watchman," within the meaning of that word as used in the policy. First Nat. Bank of Ballston Spa v. Insurance Co. of North America, 50 N. Y. 45, 48.

A policy of insurance insured the plaintiff "two thousand dollars on his machine shop, a watchman kept on the premises." Held, that the words "watchman kept on the premises" should be construed not to require a watchman to be kept there constantly, but only at such time as men of ordinary care and skill in like business keep a watchman on their premises. Crocker v. People's Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 62 Mass. (8 Cush.) 79, 82.

WATCHMAN NIGHTS.

The words "watchman nights," in a statement in an application for a fire policy that there was a watchman nights, was construed to mean that there was a watchman in the insured mill every night. Ripley v. Aetna Ins. Co., 30 N. Y. 136, 160, 86 Am. Dec. 362.

WATER.

See "Head of Water"; "Posted Waters."

All the water, see "All."

As land, see "Land."

As a mineral, see "Mineral."

As property, see "Property."

As real estate, see "Real Property."

Water is neither land nor tenement nor susceptible of absolute ownership. It is a movable thing, and must, of necessity, continue common by the law of nature. It admits only of a transient usufructuary property, and, if it escape for a moment, the right to it is gone forever, the qualified owner having no legal power of reclamation. It is not capable of being sued for by the name of "water," or by a calculation of its cubical or superficial measure; but the suit must be brought for the land which lies at the bottom, covered with water. As water is not land, neither is it a tenement, because it is not of a permanent nature, nor the subject of absolute property. Water, being neither land nor tenement, and in no possible sense real estate, is not embraced by a covenant of general warranty. Mitchell v. Warner, 5 Conn. 497, 518.

"Water from the bedrock," as used in a contract for drilling a well, is equivalent to "bedrock water." Book v. Newcastle Wire Nail Co., 25 Atl. 120, 121, 151 Pa. 499.

Laws 1892, p. 1000, c. 488, art. 9, as amended by Laws 1896, p. 264, c. 309, § 212, permits establishment of private parks for propagation or protection of fish or game by landowners on publication of intention, etc., provided that all "waters" previously stocked by the state, or which may afterwards be stocked at the expense of the state, shall be open to the public to fish therein as though the private park law had never existed. Held, that in common parlance the use of the term "waters," as applied to various lakes and streams on a tract of land, imports a designation of them in severalty, and the proper interpretation of the statute is that the stocking of streams and waters, the beds and adjacent lands of which are owned by an individual or corporation, in order to give the right to the public to fish therein, must be with the consent of the owner of one having a right of fishery therein; and that only the particular stream, lake, or pond thus stocked is so made public; and that such stocking does not open to the public streams to which they may be tributary; and that this stocking of such a stream by owners above or below does not have the effect of opening to the public that part of the stream situated on lands of an owner who has not consented to such dedication; and that the public is not permitted to follow the migrations of the fish, and take them in that part of the stream on private lands, without the owner's consent. Rockefeller v. Lamora, 83 N. Y. Supp. 289, 295, 85 App. Div. 254.

WATER COURSE.

See "Ancient Water Course"; "Artificial Water Course"; "Natural Water Course."

All the waters on the face of the earth may be divided into tide waters and inland waters. It is only to the latter that the term "water course" can be applied. Water courses are commonly denominated "rivers," "rivulets," or "brooks," according to their magnitude. It is only upon water courses that riparian rights exist. Chancellor Walworth, in Child v. Starr (N. Y.) 4 Hill, 375, said that a water course had ripam, but not littus. So, conversely, it may be said that the tide water has littora but not ripas. Chamberlain v. Hemingway, 27 Atl. 239, 240, 63 Conn. 1, 22 L. R. A. 45, 88 Am. St. Rep. 330.

A "water course" is defined to be a running stream of water; a natural stream, including rivers, creeks, runs, and rivulets. Los Angeles Cemetery Ass'n v. City of Los Angeles, 37 Pac. 375, 376, 103 Cal. 461; Sanguinetti v. Pock, 69 Pac. 98, 100, 136 Cal. 466, 89 Am. St. Rep. 169.

The words "water course" are broader and more comprehensive than "river." In their most general sense, they mean a course or channel in which water flows. In their legal sense they consist of bed, banks, and water, a living stream confined to a channel, but not necessarily flowing all the time, for there are many water courses which are sometimes dry. Shelby County Com'rs v. Castetter, 83 N. E. 986, 987, 7 Ind. App. 309; New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Speelman, 40 N. E. 541, 543, 12 Ind. App. 372; Rice v. City of Evansville, 9 N. E. 139, 142, 108 Ind. 7, 58 Am. Rep. 22; Weis v. City of Madison, 75 Ind. 241, 253, 39 Am. Rep. 135; Parke County Com'rs v. Wagner, 38 N. E. 171, 173, 138 Ind. 609; Maxwell v. Shirts, 61 N. E. 754, 755, 27 Ind. App. 529; Hoyt v. City of Hudson, 27 Wis. 656, 660, 9 Am. Rep. 473. The word "living" here means permanent or continuous. New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Speelman, 40 N. E. 541, 543, 12 Ind. App. 372.

Where water has a definite course, as a spring or springs, and takes a definite channel, it is a water course. Mitchell v. Bain, 42 N. E. 230, 233, 142 Ind. 604; Morrissey v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 56 N. W. 946, 950, 38 Neb. 406.

A fixed course over which surface water from adjoining land is uniformly discharged at a definite point is a "water course," within the rule prohibiting one from filling up a water course so as to impede the flow from the adjoining land, though the course has no well-defined banks and beds. Ribordy v. Murray, 52 N. E. 325, 327, 177 Ill. 134.

A water course consists of bed, banks, and water, yet the water need not flow continually. Justice Brewer is very accurate in saying: "For a water course there must be a channel, a bed to the stream, not merely lowland or depression in the prairie over which the water flows. It matters not what the width or depth may be, a water course implies a distinct channel; a way cut and kept open by running water; a passage whose appearance, different from that of the adjacent land, discloses to every eye, on a mere casual glance, the bed of a constant or frequent stream; and such flow must be necessary to prevent the flooding of a considerable tract of land." Neal v. Ohio River

R. Co., 34 S. E. 914, 915, 47 W. Va. 316 (citing Gibbs v. Williams, 25 Kan. 214, 37 Am. Rep. 241); Chicago, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. Steck, 33 Pac. 601, 602, 51 Kan. 737.

A water course consists of bed, banks, and water. Yet the water need not flow continually. There are many water courses which are sometimes dry. To maintain the right to a water course it must be made to appear that the water usually flows in a certain direction, and by a regular channel, with banks and sides. Chamberlain v. Hemingway, 27 Atl. 239, 240, 63 Conn. 1, 22 L. R. A. 45, 38 Am. St. Rep. 330; Porter v. Armstrong, 39 S. E. 799, 801, 129 N. C. 101; Hill v. Cincinnati, W. & M. R. Co., 10 N. E. 410, 109 Ind. 511; Wels v. City of Madison, 75 Ind. 241, 253, 39 Am. Rep. 135; Tampa Waterworks Co. v. Cline, 20 South. 780, 784, 37 Fla. 586, 33 L. R. A. 376, 53 Am. St. Rep. 262; Simmons v. Winters, 27 Pac. 7, 8, 21 Or. 35, 28 Am. St. Rep. 727; Eulrich v. Richter, 41 Wis. 318, 320; Id., 37 Wis. 226, 229; Barkley v. Wilcox, 55 N. W. 77, 78, 88 Iowa, 47; Case v. Hoffman, 84 Wis. 438, 445, 54 N. W. 793, 20 L. R. A. 40, 36 Am. St. Rep. 937; Shields v. Arndt, 4 N. J. Eq. (3 H. W. Green) 234, 235; Jeffers v. Jeffers, 107 N. Y. 660, 14 N. E. 316.

To constitute a water course there must be a channel, a bed to the stream, and not merely lowland or a depression in the prairie over which the water flows. A water course implies a distinct channel; a way cut and kept open by running water; a passage whose appearance, different from that of the adjacent land, discloses to every eye, on a mere casual glance, the bed of a constant or frequent stream. Morrissey v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 56 N. W. 946, 952, 38 Neb. 406.

In general, in order to constitute a water course, the channel and banks formed by the flowing of the water must present to the eye the unmistakable evidences of the frequent action of running water. Ventura Land & Power Co. v. Meiners, 68 Pac. 818, 820, 136 Cal. 284, 89 Am. St. Rep. 128.

To constitute a water course, the size of a stream is not important; it may be very small. Luther v. Winnisunmet Co., 63 Mass. (9 Cush.) 171, 174; Mitchell v. Bain, 42 N. E. 230, 233, 142 Ind. 604; Town v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 70 N. W. 402, 404, 50 Neb. 768; Morrissey v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 56 N. W. 946, 950, 38 Neb. 406.

In this state a water course may exist under one of two conditions, viz.: (1) Where surface water, having no definite source, is supplied from falling rains and melting snows from a hilly region or high bluffs, and, owing to the natural formation of the surface of the ground, is forced to seek an outlet through a gorge or ravine, and by its flow assumes a definite and natural channel, and escapes through such channel regularly during the spring months of every year and in seasons of heavy rains, and such has always been the case, so far as the memory of man runs, such accustomed channel through which the waters flow possesses the attributes of a natural water course. (2) Where the supply of water is not from mere surface drainage occasioned by falling rains and melting snow, but is definite and certain—as, for instance, from a spring—and such water flows in a well-defined channel, with banks cut through the turf and into the soil by the flowing of the water, such stream is a water course. The flow of the water need not be continuous, and the size of the stream is immaterial. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Wren, 62 Pac. 7, 8, 10 Kan. App. 408.

A spring of water on the surface is none the less a water course, although it is not equal in volume to a river. Small as it may be, if it has a clear and well-defined channel, and a regular flow in that channel, it cannot be diverted to the injury of the proprietors below. Wheatley v. Baugh, 25 Pa. (1 Casey) 528, 531, 64 Am. Dec. 721 (citing Jack v. Martin [N. Y.] 12 Wend. 311).

A lake fed by streams, which in times of flood find exit by rapid percolation through a bed of gravel, so that there is a sensible current towards the gravel bed, is a water course, and not merely surface water. Hebron Gravel Road Co. v. Harvey, 90 Ind. 192, 194, 46 Am. Rep. 199.

Any depression or drain two feet below the surrounding land, and having a continuous outlet to a stream or river or brook, shall be deemed a water course. Cobbey's Ann. St. Neb. 1903, § 5544.

Artificial or natural.

A water course is a channel or canal for the conveyance of water, particularly for the drainage of land. It may be natural, as where it is made by the natural flow of water, caused by the general superficies of the surrounding land, from which the water is collected into one channel; or it may be artificial, as in the case of a ditch or other artificial means used to divert the water from its natural channel or to carry it from lowlands, through which it will not flow in consequence of the natural formation of the surface of the surrounding land. Earl v. De Hart, 12 N. J. Eq. (1 Beas.) 280, 72 Am. Dec. 395; Chamberlain v. Hemingway, 27 Atl. 239, 240, 63 Conn. 1, 22 L. R. A. 45, 38 Am. St. Rep. 330; Shane v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 71 Mo. 237, 249, 36 Am. Rep. 480; Hawley v. Sheldon, 64 Vt. 491, 493, 24 Atl. 717, 33 Am. St. Rep. 941.

Broadening of stream.

A "water course," in the legal sense of the term, does not necessarily consist merely of the stream as it flows within the banks which form the channel in ordinary stages of water. When, in the times of ordinary high water, the stream, extending beyond its banks, is accustomed to flow down over the adjacent lowlands in a broader but still definable stream, it has still the character of a water course, and the law relating to water courses is applicable, rather than that relating to mere surface water. Byrne v. Minneapolis & St. L. Ry. Co., 38 Minn. 212, 214, 36 N. W. 339, 8 Am. St. Rep. 668.

"Where, owing to the level character of the land, water spreads over a wide space without any apparent banks, yet usually flows in a continuous current and passes over the surface to the lands below, it still continues to be a 'water course.' Gillett v. Johnson, 30 Conn. 180; Macomber v. Godfrey, 108 Mass. 219, 11 Am. Rep. 340; Gould, Waters, § 264, to the same effect. It is there laid down as an elementary principle that a stream does not cease to be a water course and become mere surface water because at a certain point it spreads over a level meadow several rods in width, and flows for a distance without defined banks before flowing again in a definite channel. The same principle was also stated in Shields v. Arndt, 4 N. J. Eq. (3 H. W. Green) 245." West v. Taylor, 13 Pac. 665, 668, 16 Or. 165. See, also, Blohowak v. Grochoski, 96 N. W. 551, 553, 119 Wis. 189.

Ditch.

The bed is the characteristic which distinguishes the water course from mere surface drainage and from percolating water. Mere surface or percolating water does not become a water course by being gathered into a ditch and led away. Such surface currents as do not follow a designated and known channel are not governed by the rules restricting the use of water courses. Case v. Hoffman, 72 N. W. 390, 392, 100 Wis. 314, 44 L. R. A. 728.

A rule quite generally recognized is that mere surface drainage through a ditch extending across different tracts of land does not form a water course. By common law no rights can be claimed jure naturæ in the flow of surface water, and its detention, expulsion, or diversion is not an actionable injury, even when injury results to others. Grosjean v. Ludlow, 92 N. W. 64, 65, 118 Iowa, 346 (citing Gould, Waters, § 263).

A pond of surface water on plaintiff's land after heavy rains discharged a part of its waters along a certain line over defendant's land, and by defendant's permission plaintiff dug a ditch along such line; but it did not appear that such line of discharge, before the digging of the ditch, had any fixed bed or bank, and the water did not usually flow therein. Held, that neither the original nor the artificial channel was a water course. Fryer v. Warne, 29 Wis. 511, 515.

Mill race.

"Water course," as used in Rev. St. 1881, §§ 2880, 2885, authorizing county commissioners to erect bridges over streams and water courses, includes a mill race through which a large quantity of water flows. Shelby County Com'rs v. Blair, 38 N. E. 216, 219, 8 Ind. App. 574.

Ravine or hollow.

A ravine, from the banks of which and into which the water flows from springs throughout the year, and which flows in its natural course through a party's land, is a water course. Maxwell v. Shirts, 61 N. E. 754, 755, 27 Ind. App. 529, 87 Am. St. Rep. 268.

A water course does not include water flowing in the holes or ravines in land, which is the mere surface water from rain or melting snow, and is discharged through them from a higher to a lower level, but which at other times are destitute of water. Such holes or ravines are not, in legal contemplation, water courses. Hoyt v. City of Hudson, 27 Wis. 656, 660, 9 Am. Rep. 473; Eulrich v. Richter, 37 Wis. 226, 229; Benson v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 78 Mo. 504, 514; Lessard v. Stram, 62 Wis. 112, 115, 22 N. W. 284, 285, 51 Am. Rep. 715; Wagner v. Long Island R. Co. (N. Y.) 2 Hun, 633, 636; Los Angeles Cemetery Ass'n v. City of Los Angeles, 103 Cal. 466, 37 Pac. 875. Hence a depression or swale which varies in width from 75 feet to 80 feet, with a depth of 6 inches to 2½ feet, and which is cultivated when the stream is not running, is not a water course. Sanguinetti v. Pock, 69 Pac. 98, 100, 136 Cal. 466, 89 Am. St. Rep. 169. And in Jones v. Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co., 18 Mo. App. 253, 256, the Kansas City Court of Appeals held that certain swales or sloughs, which were filled in times of freshets by the overflow of a stream, were not water courses, so as to subject a railroad company to an action for damages caused by closing their outlet with a solid bank. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Schneider, 30 Mo. App. 620, 623.

"Where surface water from rains and snow in a hilly country, by the natural formation of the ground, seeks its outlet through a gorge or ravine, and by its flow assumes a defined channel, such a one that, to a casual glance of the eye, bears the unmistakable sign of the frequent action of running water, and through which at regular seasons the water flows, and such has been immemorially the case, such a stream is a natural water course." Gibbs v. Williams, 25 Kan. 214, 37 Am. Rep. 241.

"In an undulating country there must always be valleys and depressions to which water from rains or snow will find its way from the hillsides, and be finally discharged into some natural outlet. But this does not constitute such valleys or depressions water courses." Barkley v. Wilcox, 86 N. Y. 140, 143, 40 Am. Rep. 519.

"A water course is a living stream, with defined banks and channel, not necessarily running all the time, but fed from other and more permanent sources than mere surface water." Jeffers v. Jeffers, 107 N. Y. 650, 14 N. E. 316. This definition demonstrates that water flowing over land supplied by rain and melting snow, although running through a natural depression, is nothing more than surface water. Gray v. Schriber, 58 Mo. App. 173, 177.

Surface waters.

A water course is a stream usually flowing in a particular direction in a definite channel, and discharging into some other stream or body of water. It need not flow continually. It may sometimes be dry. It must flow in a definite channel, having a bed, sides, or banks. It must be something more than a mere surface drainage over the entire face of a tract of land, occasioned by unusual freshets or other extraordinary causes. Hoyt v. City of Hudson, 27 Wis. 656, 660; Case v. Hoffman, 72 N. W. 390, 392, 100 Wis. 314, 44 L. R. A. 728; Blohowak v. Grochoski, 96 N. W. 551, 553, 119 Wis. 189; Morrison v. Bucksport & B. R. Co., 67 Me. 353, 357; Los Angeles Cemetery Ass'n v. City of Los Angeles, 37 Pac. 375, 376, 103 Cal. 461; Sanguinetti v. Pock, 69 Pac. 98, 100, 136 Cal. 466, 89 Am. St. Rep. 169; Luther v. Winnisimmet Co., 63 Mass. (9 Cush.) 171, 174; Vernum v. Wheeler (N. Y.) 35 Hun, 53, 54, 55; Lawton v. South Bound R. Co., 39 S. E. 752, 753, 61 S. O. 548; Benson v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 78 Mo. 504, 514; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Schneider, 30 Mo. App. 620, 623.

A water course is a stream in fact, as distinguished from mere surface drainage occasioned by freshets or other extraordinary causes; but the flow of water need not be continuous. Town v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 70 N. W. 402, 404, 50 Neb. 768; Morrissey v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 56 N. W. 946, 950, 38 Neb. 406.

There is a broad distinction between a stream and a brook, constituting a water course, and occasional and temporary outbursts of water occasioned by unusual rains or the melting of snows, flowing over the entire face of a tract of land, and filling up low and marshy places, and running over adjoining lands, and into hollows and ravines which are in ordinary seasons destitute of water and dry. Morrison v. Bucksport & B. R. Co., 67 Me. 353, 357; Hill v. Cincinnati, W. & M. R. Co., 10 N. E. 410, 109 Ind. 511.

"A water course consists of bed, banks, and water, yet the water need not flow continually, and there are many water courses which are sometimes dry. There is, however, a distinction to be taken in law between a regular flowing stream of water, which in certain seasons is dried up, and those occasional bursts of water which in times of freshets or meltings of ice and snow descend from the hills and inundate the country." Barnes v. Sabron, 10 Nev. 217, 236 (quoting Angell, Water Courses, 34); Schlichter v. Phillipy, 67 Ind. 201, 205; City of Bangor v. Lansil, 51 Me. 521, 525; Wagner v. Long Island R. Co. (N. Y.) 2 Hun, 633, 636; Lessard v. Stram, 62 Wis. 112, 115, 22 N. W. 284, 285, 51 Am. Rep. 715 (citing Hoyt v. City of Hudson, 27 Wis. 656, 9 Am. Rep. 473); Wagner v. Long Island R. Co. (N. Y.) 5 Thomp. & C. 163, 165.

A water course is a stream of water ordinarily flowing in a certain direction, through a defined channel with bed and banks. There is a broad distinction between a stream of water and those occasional outbursts of water which in times of freshets fill up the marshy places and run over and inundate the adjoining lands. A water course need not be shown to flow continuously. Its channel may sometimes be dry; but there must always be substantial indications of a stream, which is ordinarily and most frequently a moving body of water. A channel made by mere surface water resulting from rain and snow is not a water course, unless there is ordinarily and most frequently a moving body of water flowing through it. Hill v. Cincinnati, W. & M. R. Co., 109 Ind. 511, 513, 10 N. E. 410.

To constitute a water course, the size of the stream is immaterial. It must be a stream in fact, as distinguished from mere surface drainage, occasioned by freshets or other extraordinary causes, where flow of water need not be constant. Pyle v. Richards, 22 N. W. 370, 371, 17 Neb. 180.

WATER CRAFT.

"Water craft," as used in 66 Ohio Laws, 125, providing for the incorporation of companies engaged in building and repairing steamboats and other water craft, includes a wharfbat. Gaff v. Flesher, 33 Ohio St. 107, 114.

The words "water craft" in 2 Hill's Code, p. 662, § 46, which defines burglary as an unlawful entry, with intent to commit a felony, of an office, shop, store, warehouse, malthouse, stillhouse, mill, factory, bank, church, schoolhouse, railroad car, barn, stable, ship, steamboat and water craft, or any building in which goods, merchandise, or valuable things are kept for use, sale, or deposit, mean any water craft, without regard whether any valuable things are kept therein or not, as the latter clause of the statute only refers to buildings not specifically designated. State v. Sufferin, 32 Pac. 1021, 6 Wash. 107.

The words "water craft," as used in How. Ann. St. c. 285, § 2, providing that every water craft of above five tons' burden, used or intended to be used in navigating the water of the state, shall be subject to a lien thereon, etc., do not include steam dredges to be used solely for digging under water, and not for navigation, or the transportation even of the material which they bring up from the lake or river beds. Bartlett v. Steam Dredge No. 14, 107 Mich. 74, 64 N. W. 951, 61 Am. St. Rep. 314.

WATER FENCE.

Rev. St. c. 19, § 14, providing that, when a water fence, or fence running into the water, is necessary to be made, the same shall be done in equal shares by the boundary owners, contemplates a fence terminating at deep water, where it must be carried to such a distance into the water that the depth of water itself becomes a sufficient fence. It does not include a partition fence on land that is covered a part of the year with the waters of an artificial mill pond, but which is occupied and used as pasture or mowing land during another part of the year. Lamb v. Hicks, 52 Mass. (11 Metc.) 496, 508.

WATER MACHINERY.

"Water machinery," as used in Civ. Code, § 4764, providing that "if the nuisance complained of is a grist or saw mill, or other water machinery of valuable consideration, the same shall not be destroyed or abated except on affidavit of two or more freeholders," means such machinery as is operated by water power, and does not apply to a dam which was erected for purposes merely incidental to the operation of a manufacturing establishment, the machinery of which was propelled by steam. Strong v. La Grange Mills, 37 S. E. 117, 118, 112 Ga. 117.

WATER METER.

A meter is a contrivance to regulate the distribution of water by adjusting the quantity and price. Red Star Line S. S. Co. v. Jersey City, 45 N. J. Law (16 Vroom) 246, 249.

A water meter, however actuated, is not designed for exerting or transmitting power, but simply for measuring and registering fluid volume; and, as a matter of applied art, a water meter and a water motor are essentially different. National Meter Co. v. Neptune Meter Co. (U. S.) 122 Fed. 75, 78.

WATER ON EACH FLOOR.

A fire policy on a factory provided that there should be water on each floor, and hose, and a watchman to be kept on the premises at night. Held, that the phrase "water on each floor," literally interpreted, would require that the floors were to be kept wet, but, accompanied by reference to the keeping of a watchman at night and the hose, it might fairly be construed to refer to some means of protection against fire. New York Building & Packing Co. v. Washington Fire Ins. Co., 23 N. Y. Super. Ct. (10 Bosw.) 428, 433.

WATER POWER.

The water power to which a riparian owner is entitled consists of the fall in the stream when in its natural state as it passes through his land or along the boundary of it; or, in other words, it consists of the difference of level between the surface where the stream first touches his land and surface where it leaves it. This natural power is as much the subject of property as is the land itself of which it is an incident. McCalmont v. Whitaker (Pa.) 3 Rawle, 84, 90, 23 Am. Dec. 102; Rhodes v. Whitehead, 27 Tex. 304, 309, 84 Am. Dec. 631.

"Water power," until applied to mills, is potential, not actual, in the sense that it is property subject to taxation. When applied to mills, it becomes a part of the property, thereby giving them value, the proper subject of taxation. It then becomes the main element of value, not as water, not as power, but as an integral part of the mills themselves. Union Water Co. v. City of Auburn, 37 Atl. 331, 333, 90 Me. 60, 37 L. R. A. 651, 60 Am. St. Rep. 240.

Water power or right in a reservoir of water is an interest in the land upon and by which it is created. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Town of Concord (N. H.) 32 Atl. 151, 152.

A tannery erected on the banks of a stream, to be operated by steam, and which purchased the right to obtain water for its use from a mill pond thereon by means of a force pump and pipe, is not exempt from taxation under a town vote exempting improvements upon the water power on the stream by erections for manufacturing purposes. Plaisted v. Inhabitants of Lincoln, 62 Me. 91, 92.

WATER PRIVILEGES.

"Water privileges," as contained in a bond for a deed of land on a river, granting the same, together with all water privileges, indicated that the purchaser's right did not terminate at the water's edge, where there were no water privileges connected with the tract save those resulting from the river being a boundary. Piper v. Connelly, 108 Ill. 646, 652.

A devise of "all my water privileges," together with the mills connected therewith, includes any interest in the dam or pond. Nye v. Hoyle, 120 N. Y. 195, 24 N. E. 1.

WATER RATE.

"A water rate is a tax or compensation for the furnishing of a supply of water." McNeal Pipe & Foundry Co. v. Howland, 16 S. E. 857, 860, 111 N. C. 615, 20 L. R. A. 743.

WATER RENT.

As tax, see "Tax—Taxation."

"Water rents," as used in Laws 1875, c. 181, § 13, empowering the water commissioners of municipal corporations to establish a scale of water rents against different classes of buildings, according to their dimensions, value, exposure to fire, etc., is not used in the sense of a return or compensation for the possession of some estate, but was synonymous with "water rates," and might be collected merely for protection against exposure to fire. Dasey v. Skinner, 11 N. Y. Supp. 821, 823, 57 Hun, 593.

WATER RIGHT.

A water right is the legal right to use water. The right to the use of running water is a corporeal right or hereditament, which follows or is embraced by the ownership of riparian soil; it is a corporeal right running with riparian land. Hill v. Newman, 5 Cal. 445, 63 Am. Dec. 140; Cary v. Daniels, 49 Mass. (8 Metc.) 480, 41 Am. Dec. 532. A water right can therefore be acquired only by the grant, express or implied, of the owner of the land and the water. Smith v. Denniff, 60 Pac. 398, 24 Mont. 20, 81 Am. St. Rep. 408.

"Water right," as used in a deed conveying "1½ water rights," was a right to the use of water flowing through the canal, each water right representing 1.44 cubic feet of water flowing under a weir per second. La Junta & L. Canal Co. v. Hess, 42 Pac. 50, 53, 6 Colo. App. 497.

The water rights contemplated in a contract providing for the sale of a farm with "water rights and appurtenances therewith connected," and declaring that the vendees may enter on the land and make alteration of their dams to enable them to use the water rights agreed to be granted, are not merely the right to the use of the water for domestic or farm purposes, but the water rights connected with the dams or to be used in connection therewith when the requisite alterations of them had been made, or, in other words, to the right to use the water for furnishing power. Dyer v. Cranston Print Works (R. I.) 41 Atl. 1014, 1015.

A water right is a freehold estate, within the meaning of Code 1887, p. 206, § 388, providing that appeals from the district court to the Supreme Court shall be allowed in all cases involving a freehold. Daum v. Conley, 59 Pac. 753, 755, 27 Colo. 56 (citing Wyatt v. Larimer & Weld Irr. Co., 18 Colo. 298, 33 Pac. 144, 36 Am. St. Rep. 280).

A water right is realty, not personal property. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Childs, 54 Pac. 1020, 1021, 25 Colo. 360.

WATER SUPPLY.

See "Public Water Supply."

As city purpose, see "City Purpose."

As public use, see "Public Use."

Franchise for, as a monopoly, see "Monopoly."

WATER-TIGHT.

A contract to make a water-tight cellar is not complied with by making a cellar from which water must be drawn by a water ejector. MacKnight Flintic Stone Co. v. City of New York, 52 N. Y. Supp. 747, 749, 31 App. Div. 232.

WATER TRANSPORTATION.

A contract to deliver fertilizer to defendant, "water transportation permitting," etc., means not only that the water should be adequate, but that a boat or boats should ply the stream within the time contemplated for delivery capable of carrying the goods. Raisin Fertilizer Co. v. J. J. Barrow, Jr., Co., 12 South. 388, 390, 97 Ala. 694.

WATERED STOCK.

"Watered stock" is stock which purports to be paid in full, but which in fact has not been fully paid for. Lester v. Bemis Lumber Co., 74 S. W. 518, 520, 71 Ark. 379.

WATERING STOCK.

"Watering stock" is a term used to designate an increase of the nominal capital of the corporation, without any addition, or only a partial addition, to the actual capital. Appeal of Wiltbank, 64 Pa. (14 P. F. Smith) 256, 260, 3 Am. Rep. 585.

WATERS.

See "Coast Waters"; "Foreign Waters"; "Inland Waters"; "Internal Waters"; "Percolating Waters"; "Private Waters"; "Public Waters"; "Subsurface Waters"; "Surface Waters."

Boatable waters, see "Boatable."

Other waters, see "Other."

WATER'S EDGE.

By the term "water's edge," as used in decisions as to the extent of riparian owners' rights, is meant low-water mark. State ex rel. Citizens' Electric Lighting & Power Co. v. Longfellow, 69 S. W. 374, 379, 169 Mo. 109.

WATERS OF A BROOK.

The rain water which, instead of soaking into the ground and forming reservoirs to supply the springs which feed a brook, runs off immediately and rapidly, is brook water, and properly styled "waters of the brook." State Board of Health v. City of Jersey City, 35 Atl. 835, 836, 55 N. J. Eq. (10 Dick.) 116.

An appropriation for public use of the "waters of a brook" is, unless otherwise limited, an appropriation of all its waters. New London Water Com'rs v. Perry, 37 Atl. 1059, 1062, 69 Conn. 461.

WATERS OF THE GULF.

The expression "waters of the Gulf," as used in Rev. St. arts. 721, 722, authorizing a corporation organized to construct channels in the "waters of the Gulf" along and across any of the bays on the coast, etc., is sufficiently broad in its meaning to embrace at least all bays, inlets, and streams on the Gulf coast to the extent to which they are subject to the ebb and flow of the tide. Crary v. Port Arthur Channel & Dock Co., 47 S. W. 967, 970, 92 Tex. 275.

WATERS OF THE STATE.

A vessel used in navigating the high seas for its principal occupation, and only sailing into the harbor of San Francisco, is not a vessel "used in navigating the waters of the state." Ray v. The Henry Harbeck, 1 Cal. 451; Tucker v. The Sacramento, 1 Cal. 403.

"Waters of the state," as used in Rev. St. § 1625, forbidding, under penalty, the erecting or maintaining of any seine, net, or trap in any "waters of the state," among other places, is expressly defined by section 1631 to mean all streams, lakes, ponds, sloughs, bayous, or other waters wholly or in part within the state, except the Missouri and Mississippi rivers, and all such parts as shall be within 50 feet of the mouth of any river, creek, branch, slough, bayou, or other water emptying into or connecting with such rivers within or on the boundary lines of the state. State v. Blount, 85 Mo. 543, 546.

The statute authorizing a lien in favor of persons furnishing materials or provisions for the use of vessels "used in navigating the waters of this state" should be construed to include only vessels used in interior navigation. Noble v. The St. Anthony, 12 Mo. 261, 263.

A statute giving an action for negligence against vessels "used in navigating the waters of this state" includes a boat used on the Mississippi river from the northern to the southern boundary of the state. Swearingen v. The Lynx, 13 Mo. 519, 520.

Act April 10, 1850, authorizing the issuing of attachments against boats and vessels "used in navigating the waters of this state," should be construed to mean only vessels which are confined in their usual and substantial employment to interior navigation, and not to include a vessel which belonged to the port of New York, and was intended for the New York and China trade, had been in the harbor of San Francisco but a few days, and was never otherwise used in navigating the waters of the state than by sailing into the harbor of San Francisco from the ocean. The Sea Witch, 1 Cal. 162, 164.

Vessels used exclusively in "navigating the waters of the state" between ports of the state of Oregon and foreign ports are not within a statute giving a lien for repairs and boats or vessels used in "navigating the waters of the state." The Haytian Republic (U. S.) 65 Fed. 120, 122.

WATERS OF THE UNITED STATES.

All waters within the United States which are navigable for the purpose of commerce, or, in other words, waters whose navigation successfully aids commerce, are waters of the United States. The Daniel Ball (U. S.) 6 Fed. Cas. 1161, 1163.

WATERSTONE.

Goodrich, P. J., says: "I cannot find the word 'waterstone' in the Century Dictionary, while in the Standard Dictionary the following appears: 'Waterstones, n. (Geol.) A division of the Keuper in England.' The former authority defines 'cobblestone': A cobble or rounded stone; especially such a stone used in paving; and 'cobble': A stone rounded by the action of water, and of a size suitable for use in paving; and there is nothing more to indicate that the words 'cobblestone' and 'waterstone' are synonyms or interchangeable." The court refused to take judicial notice that waterstone was the same as cobblestone, in construing a railroad franchise requiring paving with waterstone. Doyle v. City of New York, 69 N. Y. Supp. 120, 122, 58 App. Div. 588.

WATERWAY.

The express provision of a New Jersey tax law defining "waterway," for taxation purposes, includes the towing path and the berme bank. State Board of Assessors v. Central R. Co., 4 Atl. 578, 579, 609, 48 N. J. Law (19 Vroom) 146.

The term "waterway," in an instruction, held to mean only a road or way taken by surface waters accumulating in a draw. Lincoln & B. H. R. Co. v. Sutherland, 62 N. W. 859, 862, 44 Neb. 528.

WATERWORKS COMPANY.

The term "waterworks company," as used in the chapter relating to the listing of personal property for taxation, includes any person or persons, joint-stock association or corporation, wherever organized or incorporated, when engaged in the business of supplying water through pipes or tubing, or in a similar manner, to consumers within this state. Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, § 2780—17.

WAY.

See "By Way of"; "Cartway"; "County Ways"; "Fairway"; "Passageway"; "Private Way"; "Public Way"; "Right of Way"; "Road"; "Townway"; "Traveled Way"; "Under Way."

A "way," technically and strictly, is the passage over the lands of another. Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Southern R. Co. (U. S.) 90 Fed. 30, 32.

A way is the right of going over another man's ground. Boyd v. Hand, 65 Ga. 468, 470 (citing 2 Chit. Bl. 35).

"Way," in its legal technical sense, means nearly the same thing as right of way, or, in other words, the right of one person, of several persons, or of the community at large to pass over the land of another. Chollar-Potosi Min. Co. v. Kennedy, 3 Nev. 361, 372, 93 Am. Dec. 409.

"A way is an incorporeal hereditament, and consists in the right of passing over another's ground. It may arise from grant, prescription, or necessity, and is either in gross—that is, attached to the person using it—or appurtenant or annexed to and passing with a conveyance of the estate; but it is never presumed to be in gross when it can be fairly construed to be appurtenant to the land." Sanxay v. Hunger, 42 Ind. 44, 48. See, also, Chandler v. Goodridge, 23 Me. (10 Shep.) 78, 82.

A way is a hereditament. A way, like all incorporeal hereditaments, lies only in grant, and not in livery. It is a right, the enjoyment of which requires no exclusive possession of the locus in quo. Randolph v. Montfort, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 228, 227.

A "way," is defined to be a means of passage from some place to some other place. The term does not include a roadway which leads to no place or object to which a person has an interest or right to go. Dennis v. Wilson, 107 Mass. 591, 593.

A "way" implies a right of passage over another's land; as an "easement," it cannot exist without a servient as well as a dominant estate. Abbott v. Jackson, 84 Me. 449, 457, 24 Atl. 900.

As used in the chapter relating to the law of roads, the word "way" includes all kinds of public highways. Rev. St. Me. 1883, p. 260, c. 19, § 1.

Three classes of "ways" exist in South Carolina: First, highways, such as the great market and cross roads, kept in repair by public authority; second, "private paths," as they are termed in our acts of the Legislature, which are used for public purposes, diverging from or crossing the highways; and, third, private ways. State v. Sartor (S. C.) 2 Stroob. 60, 65.

Canal.

The term "way," as used in Rev. St. § 3283, authorizing a railroad, if it be necessary to the location of any part of its road, to occupy any public road, street, alley "way" or ground of any kind, should be construed as meaning something of the same nature and kind as a road or street, and not to include the public navigable canals of the state, or the banks thereof. State v. Cincinnati Cent. Ry. Co., 37 Ohio St. 157, 175.

Footpath.

Paths marked out, graded, paved, repaired, and kept clear of snow by a town or city, crossing common ground used by the inhabitants as a place of public resort or recreation, and serving as one means of connection between public streets with which they connect to posts such as are usual at the entrance of walks designed for foot passengers, are not "ways open and dedicated to the public use" within Gen. St. c. 43, § 82, providing that "no way open and dedicated to the public use" which has not become the public way shall be chargeable to a city or town as a highway or townway, unless the same is laid out and established by such city or town in the manner prescribed by statute. Oliver v. City of Worcester, 102 Mass. 489, 495, 3 Am. Rep. 485.

Road distinguished.

The word "way" is more generic than the word "road," referring to many things besides roads. Kister v. Reeser, 98 Pa. 1, 4, 42 Am. Rep. 608.

The word "road" is not synonymous with "way." It is true that the term "way" is sometimes used in the same sense as "road." Sometimes we call a road, a street, a lane, etc., a "way," though this is perhaps an improper use of the term "way." Chollar-Potosi Min. Co. v. Kennedy, 3 Nev. 361, 372, 93 Am. Dec. 409.

Strictly speaking, the words "road" and "way" are not synonymous, although in one case they have been so held. As a matter of fact, however, the words are often used interchangeably in general conversation. "A way" is an incorporeal hereditament, and imports ex vi termini the right of passing over the land of another along a particular line or route, and it may arise either from grant, necessity, or prescription. Washb. Easem. 256. Webster, as one of the definitions of a "road," says: "It is the ground appropriated for travel, forming a communication." Bouvier defines a "road" as "a passage through the country for the use of the people." Anderson, in his Dictionary, says: "A road is an open way or public passage ground appropriated for travel, and generally it includes highways, streets, and lanes." As a general proposition, the word "road" is applied to a highway, street, or lane, but the term is often applied to a private way or a pathway. The word "road" includes in some sort the sense of "way," although the latter word is more generic, and refers to many things besides roads. The grant of a way over one's land, nothing appearing in the grant to restrict it, will be understood to be a general way for all purposes. Newsom v. Newsom (Tenn.) 56 S. W. 29, 31.

Road synonymous.

"Road" is a legal term, strictly, synonymous with the term "way." It is an incorporeal hereditament; a servitude imposed upon corporeal property, and not a part of it. Wood v. Truckee Turnpike Co., 24 Cal. 474, 487; City and County of San Francisco v. Grote (Cal.) 47 Pac. 933, 939, 36 L. R. A. 502.

WAY APPURTENANT.

See "Appurtenance—Appurtenant."

WAY BY DEDICATION.

A "way by dedication" is created by the permission or gift of the owner, and upon the acceptance of such gift by the public authorities it becomes a way, and the owner cannot withdraw his dedication. Commonwealth v. Coupe, 128 Mass. 63, 65.

WAY BY PRESCRIPTION.

A "way by prescription" is established on evidence of user by the public, adverse and continuous, for a period of 20 years or more, Schwerdtle v. Placer County, 41 Pac. 443, 449, 108 Cal. 589; from which use arises a presumption of a reservation or grant and the acceptance thereof, or that it has been laid out by the proper authorities, of which no record exists, Commonwealth v. Coupe, 128 Mass. 63, 65.

WAY EX VI TERMINI.

A "way ex vi termini" imports a right of passing in a particular line. The way must be kept in repair by the owner of the easement, and not by the owner of the land over which it passes. Jones v. Percival, 22 Mass. (5 Pick.) 485, 487, 16 Am. Dec. 415.

WAY-GOING CROP.

A way-going crop is the crop of grain sown by the tenant during the lease and coming to maturity after its expiration. Stultz v. Dickey (Pa.) 5 Bin. 285, 287, 6 Am. Dec. 411.

Where a tenant of agricultural lands sows in the fall a crop of grain which requires for its ripening a period greater than the unexpired term of his lease, the crop is called the "way-going crop," to which the tenant has a right in the absence of express agreement of the parties. Ellison v. Dolbey (Del.) 49 Atl. 178, 179, 3 Pennewill, 45.

WAY OF NECESSITY.

See "Necessary Way."

A "right of way from necessity" arises where one person sells lands to another which are inclosed on all sides by other lands. Here the law imposes an obligation on the seller to allow the purchaser a right of way over his adjacent land. Turnbull v. Rivers (S. C.) 3 McCord, 131, 139, 15 Am. Dec. 622.

"Way of necessity" is a right of way; the privilege of going over another's land; a legal way, to use which one has a legal right, which may be enforced, and which may not be rightfully interfered with. Cox v. Tipton, 18 Mo. App. 450, 455.

A "way of necessity" is one implied where a person sells another land so surrounded by other lands as to be inaccessible except by passing over such grantor's land, and can only be raised out of land granted or reserved by the grantor, but not out of lands of a stranger. Ellis v. Bassett, 27 N. E. 344, 345, 128 Ind. 118, 25 Am. St. Rep. 421.

"A 'way of necessity' is founded upon an implied grant. When a person grants land to which there is no right of way except over his land, or retains land which is inaccessible except over the land which he conveys, a right of way is presumed to have been granted or reserved. But without a unity of ownership, there will be no way of necessity." Quimby v. Straw, 51 Atl. 656, 657, 71 N. H. 160.

A "way by necessity" is in fact acquired by grant, not by prescription, but as an incident to the thing described and granted. Voorhees v. Burchard, 55 N. Y. 98, 105.

A "way of necessity" arises "where the owner sells land to another which is wholly surrounded by the land of the grantor, or partly by the land of the grantor and partly by the land of a stranger." Trump v. McDonnell, 24 South. 353, 354, 120 Ala. 200; Fairchild v. Stewart, 89 N. W. 1075, 117 Iowa, 734. In such a case, if there be no other way to the land, the law presumes that it was the intention of the parties that the grantee should have access to it over the land of the grantor, and he has a way across such land in order to make it available. Fairchild v. Stewart, 89 N. W. 1075, 1076, 117 Iowa, 734.

The term "way of necessity" is used to designate the right which a man who owns land entirely surrounded by the land of another has to cross over the land of the latter in going to and from the land surrounded thereby. It is a mere easement, and not an interest in land; and therefore a statute enabling persons to secure such a right of way is not in violation of the constitutional provision prohibiting the taking of property without due compensation. Snyder v. Warford, 11 Mo. 513, 514, 49 Am. Dec. 94.

There cannot be said to be a way of necessity where there are other reasonably practical ways of ingress and egress. Trump v. McDonnell, 24 South. 353, 354, 120 Ala. 200.

A "way of necessity," when the nature of it is considered, will be found to be nothing else but a way by grant. It derives its origin from a grant, for there seems to be no difference where a thing is granted by express words and where, by operation of law, it passes as incident to the grant. Thus, if a man sells land to another which is wholly surrounded by his own land, the purchaser is entitled to a right of way over the other's ground to arrive at his own land. The way is a necessary incident to the grant, and without which the grant would be useless. Banks v. McLean County School Directors, 62 N. E. 604, 605, 194 Ill. 247 (quoting 2 Bl. Comm. 35; note 3, Kent, Comm. 420).

The right of travelers along an obstructed highway to enter upon adjoining lands, whether inclosed or not, in the pursuit of their lawful business, is called a "way of necessity." State v. Talley (Del.) 33 Atl. 181, 183, 9 Houst. 417.

A way of necessity is derived from the law, and depends solely on the situation and boundaries of the land to which it is claimed to be appurtenant, as these existed at the time of the conveyance. Botsford v. Wallace, 37 Atl. 902, 905, 69 Conn. 263.

"It is said by Lord Mansfield in Morris v. Edgington, 3 Taunt. *31: 'It would not be a great stretch to call that a necessary way without which the most convenient and reasonable mode of enjoying the premises could not be had.' We do not think that this is sustained to that extent by the later decisions. In Lawton v. Rivers (S. C.) 2 McCord, 445, 13 Am. Dec. 741, it is remarked: 'An inconvenience may be so great as to amount to that kind of necessity which the law requires.' In Pettingill v. Porter, 90 Mass. (8 Allen) 1, 85 Am. Dec. 671, it is held: 'That there is a way by necessity, where another cannot be got or made without unreasonable labor and expense; and that in determining the question the jury may consider the comparative value of the land and the probable cost of such ways, and that the word "necessary" cannot be limited to absolute physical necessity.' But yet the way must be necessary, and the facts of each case must determine whether it or any other easement thus claimed is necessary. It must be more than one of mere convenience (Screven v. Gregorie [S. C.] 8 Rich. Law, 158, 64 Am. Dec. 747), or one beneficial and convenient, and is only commensurate with the existence of the necessity upon which the implied grant of it is founded, and ceases when the necessity for it ceases. One owning a right to minerals in land can go upon the lands to mine the minerals only as necessary; but, if necessary, he is entitled to a convenient way. The necessity which is to govern is not fixed and unvarying. The right may be exercised in a manner suitable to the business to be carried on. It is not to be confined to the modes in vogue when it was first acquired. The owner of the mine may keep pace with the progress of invention and ingenuity, so far as is necessary to a profitable working of his property in competition with rivals. Ordinarily the mine owner cannot justify the use of the surface for the lengthened keeping of his ore, the long-continued deposit of the rubbish from the mine, or the erection of buildings for the storage of materials, the housing of animals, or the use of artisans." Marvin v. Brewster Iron Min. Co., 55 N. Y. 538, 552, 14 Am. Rep. 322.

WAY RESERVED.

A "way reserved," as used in a popular sense, is strictly an easement newly created, by way of a grant from the grantee in the deed, of the estate to the grantor. Winston v. Johnson, 45 N. W. 953, 959, 42 Minn. 398 (citing Washb. Easements, § 20; 2 Washb. Real Prop. [5th Ed.] 465); Hagerty v. Lee, 54 N. J. Law (25 Vroom) 580, 583, 25 Atl. 319, 320, 20 L. R. A. 631.

WAYFARER.

The term "wayfarer" is used to designate travelers. Meacham v. Galloway, 52 S. W. 859, 861, 102 Tenn. 415, 46 L. R. A. 319, 73 Am. St. Rep. 886.

Persons belonging to the army and navy who have no permanent residence they can call home are regarded as "travelers or wayfarers" when stopping at public inns or hotels, and to make them chargeable as mere boarders it must be shown that an explicit contract had been made which deprived them of the privileges and rights which their vocation confers upon them as passengers or travelers. Hancock v. Rand, 94 N. Y. 1, 6, 46 Am. Rep. 112.

WAYLAY.

Waylaying or otherwise, see "Otherwise."

WAYS, WORKS, OR MACHINERY.

St. 1887, c. 270, renders a master liable for injuries to a servant because of defects in the "ways, works or machinery connected with or used in the business of the employer." Held, that the phrase "ways, works or machinery connected with or used in the business of the employer" should not be taken literally, but understood to mean those ways, works, and machinery which are connected with or used in the business of the employer by his authority and subject to his control; and hence the statute does not make a railroad company liable for injuries sustained by an employé from a defective track of another company over which it had no control, but which it sometimes went on to get cars under a license. Trask v. Old Colony R. Co., 31 N. E. 6, 7, 156 Mass. 298.

A building for a mill, while in process of erection, is not "ways, works, or machinery" connected with or used in the business, so as to render the owner liable for injuries to an employé from defects therein under a statute. Beique v. Hosmer, 48 N. E. 338, 169 Mass. 541.

A temporary derrick at a stoneyard, erected to move stones from cars to where stonecutters could use them, is a part of the "ways, works and machinery" connected with the yard, within the meaning of St. 1887, c. 270, § 1, authorizing an employé to recover for injuries sustained by reason of defects of the ways, works, and machinery of the employer. McMahon v. McHale, 54 N. E. 854, 855, 174 Mass. 320.

A cone shafting with six pulleys, and attached to the ceiling by hangers and screws, used in a manufacturing establishment, is included in the term "ways, works and machinery," as used in St. 1887, c. 270, rendering employers liable for injuries resulting from their failure to see that the "ways, works and machinery" were in proper condition. Copithorne v. Hardy, 53 N. E. 915, 916, 173 Mass. 400.

Code, § 2590, declares that a master shall be liable to a servant for injuries caused by any defect of the "ways, works, machinery or plant" connected with or used in the business of a master. Held, that the term "ways, works, machinery and plant" included a projected supply pipe of a water tank located beside a highway, which was negligently allowed to project so far that it could and did hit a brakeman, by reason of which he was knocked off the train and killed. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Thompson, 10 South. 280, 281, 94 Ala. 636.

A pile of lumber in a yard of a lumber dealer is not "ways, works or machinery" within St. 1887, c. 270, § 1, authorizing an employé to recover for injuries caused by defective "ways, works or machinery," connected with or used in the business of the employer, which the employer negligently failed to remedy. Campbell v. Dearborn, 55 N. E. 1042, 175 Mass. 183.

Dynamite or exploder.

The death of an employé from the explosion of a dynamite cartridge, which remained undischarged after a blast in which other cartridges had exploded, does not result from a defect in the "ways, works or machinery" of an employer, within St. 1887, c. 270, § 1, giving a right of action to the widow or next of kin. Welch v. Grace, 46 N. E. 387, 389, 167 Mass. 590.

An exploder used to discharge dynamite blasts, and composed of a copper cap filled with a high explosive, which is instantly consumed in making the explosion, is not a part of the "ways, works or machinery" of a quarry, within the Massachusetts statute making employers liable for injuries resulting from defects in the "ways, works or machinery," etc. Shea v. Wellington, 40 N. E. 173, 175, 163 Mass. 364.

Staging or scaffold.

A temporary staging erected by a building contractor on the land of a third person, and used by the masons in their work on the building, is not a part of the contractor's "ways or works," within the meaning of St. 1887, c. 270, § 1, cl. 1, which renders a master liable for injuries to a servant caused by a defect in the "ways or works" used in his business. Burns v. Washburn, 36 N. E. 199, 160 Mass. 457.

A temporary staging built by the employés themselves for their use while slating a roof was not a part of the employer's "ways, works or machinery," a defect in which, under St. 1887, c. 270, § 1, cl. 1, makes the employer liable for an injury resulting to an employé when the defect is owing to the employer's negligence. Reynolds v. Barnard, 46 N. E. 703, 704, 168 Mass. 226.

"Ways, works or machinery," within the meaning of St. 1887, c. 270, making an employer liable for injuries caused by defects in "ways, works or machinery," does not include a scaffold, so as to render an employer liable for the presence of a stone thereon. Carroll v. Willcutt, 89 N. E. 1016, 163 Mass. 221.

A temporary staging made of a ladder with boards laid on it and held up by ropes, which is put together by the workmen when needed, does not come within the definition of "ways, works or machinery," the defective condition of which renders the employers liable for an injury resulting to the workmen when due to negligence, under Laws 1887, c. 270, § 1. Adasken v. Gilbert, 43 N. E. 199, 200, 165 Mass. 443.

WE.

The word "we," as used in a constable's return, certifying the name of a juror, stating, "'We' have appointed," etc., means the town of which the constable was an inhabitant. Fellow's Case, 5 Me. (5 Greenl.) 333, 334.

In construing a letter in which the writer stated that he had purchased certain property, and that he candidly believes that "we will be able to realize from our half of it $15,000.00," it was said that "the employment of the pronoun 'we' and the pronominal adjective 'our' is referred to as a recognition by the writer that the person addressed was interested with him in the property, counsel arguing that 'these words, being in the plural form, could not possibly refer to any but the writer of the letter and the plaintiff to whom it was written.' But the inference deduced by counsel is not by any means necessary or exclusive. In the first place, the assumption that the writer would not have used the words 'we' and 'our' in the connection in which they are employed, unless some one was interested with him in the stock spoken of, has but the barest probability to rest upon. Although incorrect, it is not infrequently the case that the plural pronoun is used for the first person singular, and so with the pronominal adjective 'our.'" Mitchell v. O'Neale, 4 Nev. 504, 517.

The words "we waive" (demand and notice on a note) held equivalent to the words "we severally waive," where the contract of each was several upon his indorsement. Farmer v. Rand, 14 Me. 225, 227.

As individual act.

The words "we promise," in the body of a note signed by only one person, did not make it less binding on such sole promisor. Whitmore v. Nickerson, 125 Mass. 496, 498, 28 Am. Rep. 257.

The word "we," in a declaration of homestead, signed by a husband and wife, which states that "we" do now actually reside on the land, and "we" do hereby claim the same as a homestead, is to be construed in connection with Code Civ. Proc. § 17, providing that the singular number includes the plural and the plural the singular, as the personal declaration of each of the parties. Simonson v. Burr, 54 Pac. 87, 88, 121 Cal. 582.

As joint obligation.

Where a contract signed by several recites that the "undersigned" propose that if the other party to the contract will do a certain thing "we will undertake" to do a certain thing, the undertaking on the part of the signers is a joint one. New Haven & N. Co. v. Hayden, 119 Mass. 361, 364.

The words "we promise to pay" create a joint obligation only. City of New Orleans v. Ripley, 5 La. 120, 122, 35 Am. Dec. 175.

A promissory note written, "we promise to pay," etc., and simply signed by two or more mortgagors, is a joint note. Barnett v. Juday, 38 Ind. 86.

The use of the words "we bind ourselves and each of us," in a bond signed by several persons, operates to render the bond a joint and several obligation. Carter v. Carter (Conn.) 2 Day, 442, 2 Am. Dec. 113.

The phrase "we bind ourselves," when used by persons acting as agents and who disclose their principal, is to be construed as used in a representative character only, and as not binding the agents personally. Salmon v. Serapis (U. S.) 37 Fed. 436, 440.

Where a bond recited that A., B., C., D., E., and F. were held and bound in the sum of $700 to be paid to G. or his heirs, executors, or administrators or assigns, which payment to be good "we bind ourselves, our heirs, executors and administrators severally by these presents," the quoted phrase meant that the bond was a several one, and not joint and several. Brinkerhoof v. Doremus, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 119, 121.

Personal or corporate liability implied.

The expression, "We, the trustees," in a note signed by the trustees of a corporation, did not leave it doubtful on the face of the instrument as to who was bound, but it was equivalent to saying, "we, the corporation." The word "we" may not improperly be used to denote a corporation aggregate. Newmarket Sav. Bank v. Gillet, 100 Ill. 254, 262, 39 Am. Rep. 39; Scanlan v. Keith, 102 Ill. 634, 645, 40 Am. Rep. 624.

The use of the words "I or we," in a note as follows, "Sixty days after date, I or we promise to pay," etc., and signed by a corporation per its officers, does not change the legal import of the instrument so as to make it the note of the officers. For, though there is no personal pronoun which is properly adapted to use by a corporation in making a note, the word "we" is frequently used by a corporation. Williams v. Harris, 64 N. E. 988, 990, 198 Ill. 501.

"We," as used in a letter written by an agent of a corporation in which he refers to a proposed business transaction, and states that "we have just been able to issue the stock, and that we will change its form if necessary," etc., will be understood to mean the company. Anthony v. American Glucose Co., 41 N. E. 23, 25, 146 N. Y. 407.

WEAK.

"The words 'strong' and 'weak' are relative terms, both having reference to the medium of the class to which they are applied, one being above, and the other below it." People v. Orilley (N. Y.) 20 Barb. 248, 248.

WEAKNESS.

In an instruction in an action to recover damages for negligence in the construction of a retaining wall and roadway above the plaintiff, whereby his fruit trees were injured and his land covered with a large amount of rock and other debris by the sliding down of the same, that it would be an excuse for the defendant, in the construction of its works, if it so constructed them as that no "weakness or defects" therein contributed with the act of God to produce the result complained of, the words "weakness or defects" do not mean any weakness or defect, however slight or fanciful or speculative, or which have in the least degree caused the injury, but means weakness or defects therein from negligence or a want of ordinary care on the part of the defendant in the construction of the wall, and it does not mean or include weakness or defects in the wall which might arise or exist while ordinary care and diligence had been observed. Hummell v. Seventh St. Terrace Co., 26 Pac. 277, 279, 20 Or. 401.

Of mind.

"Weakness of mind is the opposite of strength of mind; it is not the opposite of unsoundness. Thus, a weak mind may be a sound mind." In re Black's Estate (Cal.) 1 Myr. Prob. 24, 27.

WEALTH.

The word "wealth," as used in Code, § 4587, providing that any person who by falsely representing his "wealth" obtains a credit shall be deemed guilty of swindling, does not import a great fortune or vast possessions, as is frequently implied from its ordinary use, but its real meaning is the possession or ownership of such means or property as would reasonably entitle one to expect and receive the credit he seeks to obtain. Indeed, this word is at last a mere relative term. Among millionaires a man worth $100,000 is poor indeed, while in some localities a man worth $5,000 over and above all his liabilities would be considered a very wealthy citizen. Branham v. State, 96 Ga. 307, 22 S. E. 957.

WEAPON.

See "Concealed Weapons"; "Cruel Weapon"; "Dangerous Weapon"; "Deadly Weapon"; "Lethal Weapon"; "Offensive Weapon"; "Sharp Dangerous Weapon."

Carrying concealed weapons, see "Carry."

Weapon likely to produce death, see "Likely."

"A 'weapon' is an instrument of offensive or defensive combat; something to fight with." Harris v. Cameron, 51 N. W. 437, 438, 81 Wis. 239, 29 Am. St. Rep. 891.

Webster defines a "weapon" as "an instrument of offensive or defensive combat; anything used or designed to be used in destroying, defeating, or injuring an enemy, as a gun or sword." The term "weapon" itself indicates that it is for the offense or defense of a person, and that it cannot be extended to include mere ordinary instruments not used for any such purpose. State v. Page, 91 N. W. 313, 314, 15 S. D. 613.

Air gun.

An air gun is not a gun or weapon in the ordinary signification of the words, but is initiative only of a real gun, to give it dignity to a boy to play soldier with. Harris v. Cameron, 51 N. W. 437, 438, 81 Wis. 239, 29 Am. St. Rep. 891 (citing Webster Dict.).

Ax.

An ax is a mechanical tool rather than a weapon to be used in combat, and the mere fact that one of three men carries an ax to a sawmill which they enter cannot be supposed to excite terror. Pike v. Witt, 104 Mass. 595, 597.

Cord.

A weapon is anything used or intended to be used in destroying or annoying the enemy. A cord is often used as an instrument by robbers to kill or disable their victims, and when so used is properly called a "weapon." State v. Calhoun, 34 N. W. 194, 196, 72 Iowa, 432, 2 Am. St. Rep. 252.

Knife.

A knife is a weapon likely to produce grievous bodily harm, within the meaning of the statute authorizing an indictment for an assault therewith. State v. Henn, 40 N. W. 572, 573, 39 Minn. 476.

A pocketknife is a means that could be used as an offense or defense, and hence is a "weapon." State v. McCann, 72 Pac. 137, 139, 43 Or. 155.

Pistol.

The term "weapon," in a statute prohibiting the carrying of concealed weapons or firearms, includes a pistol which is defective, but which may be discharged while holding it in the hand by striking the hammer with a knife or other small instrument. Redus v. State, 2 South. 713, 82 Ala. 53.

A person who carries concealed about his person all the pieces of a pistol, which could be readily put together so as to make an effective weapon, though, at the time he carried them concealed, the pieces were separate and incapable of use as a firearm until put together, is guilty of carrying concealed weapons. Hutchinson v. State, 62 Ala. 3, 4, 34 Am. Rep. 1.

"Weapons," within the meaning of the statute prohibiting the carrying of concealed weapons, includes a broken and insufficient pistol, even though it be carried for the purpose and intent of having it repaired. Crawford v. State, 21 S. E. 992, 94 Ga. 772.

A pistol is carried as a "weapon" when it is carried for the purpose of having it convenient for use in fight. Lemmons v. State, 20 S. W. 404, 405, 56 Ark. 559.

Gantt's Dig. § 1517, making it a misdemeanor to wear any pistol "concealed" as a weapon, requires that in order to constitute the offense the implement must be carried about the person to be always accessible for use in fight, and so hidden from general view as to put others off their guard. If a pistol is not loaded or is unfit for use, such fact would rebut the presumption that it was carried as a weapon; but if it is worn concealed, it may be presumed that it was loaded and worn as a weapon. Carr v. State, 34 Ark. 448, 36 Am. Rep. 15.

Razor.

A razor is an instrument or implement pertaining to the toilet or shop. It has a well-known and specified use to which it is ordinarily applied. It is not known, nor usually sold in the market, as a weapon. State v. Neison, 38 La. Ann. 942, 946, 58 Am. Rep. 202.

"A razor is an article of common domestic use, and while no one could be held guilty of the offense of carrying a dangerous and deadly weapon concealed about his person simply because he so carried a razor, yet, if surrounding circumstances would tend to show that he carried it as a weapon of defense, he might become liable to the charge, because a razor when thus used is notoriously a weapon dangerous to life." State v. Larkin, 24 Mo. App. 410, 412.

WEAPON OF SELF-DEFENSE.

The term "weapons of self-defense," which under certain conditions may be carried for the purpose of self-defense, does not include brass knuckles, which are usually an instrument of the assassin, and the index of a murderous heart. Bell v. State, 8 South. 133, 89 Ala. 61.

WEAR.

Under Gantt's Dig. § 1517, making it a misdemeanor to "wear" any pistol concealed as a weapon, the pistol, in order to be worn, must be placed about the person, and carried around in some way to be at all times accessible. If it is merely, and in good faith, being transported to be repaired or given to another, or for purposes of trade or any other object, save to be used in a fight, it cannot be said to be worn. Carr v. State, 34 Ark. 448, 450, 36 Am. Rep. 15.

Of the creek.

A deed conveying land described as containing a certain number of acres, less the "wear of the creek," means the gradual and imperceptible changes in the banks of the creek by which the soil is taken from one side of the stream and deposited on the other, and does not include a sudden and violent change in the course of the stream by floods whereby a considerable portion of the land is severed from the main body. Hening v. Bennett, 18 N. Y. Supp. 645, 646, 63 Hun, 592.

WEAR AND TEAR.

See "Natural Wear and Tear"; "Ordinary Wear and Tear"; "Reasonable Wear and Tear."

WEAR OUT.

A threat by deceased that he intended to "wear out" the defendant was not a threat against his life. Dow v. State, 20 S. W. 583, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 273.

WEARING APPAREL.

See "Necessary Wearing Apparel."

"Wearing apparel" usually means clothing and garments protecting the person from exposure. Neasham v. McNair, 72 N. W. 773, 774, 103 Iowa, 695, 38 L. R. A. 847, 64 Am. St. Rep. 202; Towns v. Pratt, 33 N. H. 345, 346, 349, 66 Am. Dec. 728.

The ordinary meaning of "wearing apparel" is, vesture, garments, dress; that which is worn by or appropriated to the person. Gooch v. Gooch, 33 Me. 535; McClung v. Stewart, 8 Pac. 447, 12 Or. 431, 53 Am. Rep. 374.

The words "wearing apparel," as used in statutes exempting from execution all wearing apparel of the debtor and his family, "are to be construed according to the common and approved usage of the language, as referring to garments or clothing, generally designed for wear of the debtor and his family." Rothschild v. Boelter, 18 Minn. 361, 362 (Gil. 331, 332).

"Wearing apparel," as used in Rev. St. § 2505, exempting from duty "wearing apparel" in actual use, means such apparel owned by the passenger as is in a condition to be worn at once without further manufacture, brought with him as a passenger, and intended for the use of himself or family who accompanied him as passengers; not for sale or purchase, or imported for other persons, or to be given away; suitable for the season of the year which was immediately approaching; not exceeding in quantity or value what the passenger was in the habit of ordinarily providing for himself and his family, even though the articles have not been actually worn. Astor v. Merritt, 4 Sup. Ct. 413, 415, 111 U. S. 202, 26 L. Ed. 401.

As used in a will in which the testator gave all his "goods, wearing apparel," of what nature and kind soever, the words "wearing apparel" are not to be confined to wearing apparel only, but the expression was to be construed the same as goods "and" wearing apparel, and therefore the expression meant wearing apparel, ornaments of the person, household goods, and furniture, but no other part of the personal estate. Crickton v. Symes, 3 Ark. 61, 62.

Though an article may unquestionably be a part of the wearing apparel of a man or woman which may be regarded as ornamental, or as serving some use in addition to that of ordinary vesture or clothing, yet if the chief and distinguishing characteristic of the article be to serve as an ornament or as a mechanism, or any other purpose than that of clothing or part of the clothing for the body or some portion of the body, it can hardly be regarded as coming within the meaning of wearing apparel in the plain or ordinary and usual sense. In Gooch v. Gooch, 33 Me. 535, the court said that the ordinary meaning of wearing apparel is vesture, garments, dress; that which is worn by or appropriate to the person. In Sawyer's Heirs v. Sawyer, 28 Vt. 249, under a statute providing that a widow should be allowed the wearing apparel of her husband, the Legislature was construed to intend that the term should be used in the more restricted sense, and be confined to its popular meaning and include only such articles as could be properly termed the "clothing" of the husband, in contradistinction to his ornaments; and the court held that the watch or watch key or watch chain and seals and the finger ring and sword and sword belt were not parts of the wearing apparel of the deceased husband, but that his epaulets and his scarf pin were to be so considered. Coffinberry v. Madden, 66 N. E. 64, 65, 30 Ind. App. 360, 96 Am. St. Rep. 349.

Bags.

Bags used to hold vegetables and to take them to market are not exempt from execution as articles of wearing apparel, notwithstanding the fact that, when seized, the owner was taking the vegetables therein to market to exchange them for articles of necessity for his family. Shaw v. Davis, 55 Barb. 389, 400.

Cloth.

A statute exempting from attachment the debtor's necessary "wearing apparel" should be construed to include cloth for a coat, which had been cut out but not made up. "Apparel" means dress, clothing, vestments, garments, but is not restricted only to those which are in a fit state to be worn or used as such. Cloth which has assumed the form and shape to fit it to the body of a particular person may be regarded as a vestment or apparel, although not in a condition at that time to be worn. Ordway v. Wilbur, 16 Me. (4 Shep.) 263, 264, 33 Am. Dec. 663.

Rev. St. c. 97, § 22, exempting from execution the "wearing apparel" of a debtor, is to be literally construed, and means not only apparel actually in the form of clothing, but extends to cloth and trimmings which have been put into the hands of a tailor to be made into clothes. Richardson v. Buswell, 51 Mass. (10 Metc.) 506, 507, 43 Am. Dec. 450.

"Wearing apparel," as used in Act Cong. July 30, 1846, subjecting wearing apparel to a duty, was used for the purpose of describing a class of articles, "not as known in trade or commerce by any particular appellation, but by the actual use for which they were designed and to which they were adapted, taken in connection with the fact that they were to be made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, sempstress, or manufacturer." Mallard v. Lawrence (U. S.) 16 Fed. Cas. 500, 501.

Cotton.

Under a statute providing that no waiver of exemptions can be effectual to render wearing apparel, household and kitchen furniture, and provisions subject to execution.

it is held that cotton belongs to none of these classes, though produced by labor performed under sustenance afforded by exempt provision, and that it does not take the place of the provisions consumed in its production, and is not exempt. Butler v. Shiver, 4 S. E. 115, 79 Ga. 172.

Goods for sale.

A fire policy on the stock of a grocer, wearing apparel, and household furniture does not cover linen sheets, etc., not laid in for the use of the family, but smuggled into the country for clandestine sale. Clary v. Protection Ins. Co. (Ohio) Wright, 227, 229.

The term "wearing apparel and clothing," in a statute exempting such property of a debtor and his family from execution, means the wearing apparel and clothing worn and used or to be used by the debtor and his family, and does not include clothing purchased by a firm of which the debtor is a member, and held by said firm for sale. In re Lentz (U. S.) 97 Fed. 486, 487.

Hats.

"Wearing apparel," as used in Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, includes wool-knit hats invoiced as "red fez caps." Wanamaker v. Cooper (U. S.) 69 Fed. 465, 466.

Jewelry, watch, etc.

As ordinarily used, the term "wearing apparel" is hardly comprehensive enough to include jewelry. Nevertheless jewelry may fairly be called apparel, and it is worn on the person. If one chooses to classify jewelry as one variety of wearing apparel, it cannot be held that he is making an improper and indefensible use of the English language. One Pearl Chain v. United States (U. S.) 123 Fed. 371, 377, 378, 59 C. C. A. 499.

The "wearing apparel" of deceased and of his wife, which by Comp. St. c. 50, § 1, goes to the wife, includes all the articles of apparel and ornament of the wife; most, if not all, of those things which at the common law go to make up her paraphernalia. It includes a bosom pin, but excludes a watch and its chain, key and seals, or finger ring. The word also includes his epaulets, but does not include the sword and sword belt of an officer of the United States navy. Sawyer v. Sawyer, 28 Vt. 249, 254.

"Wearing apparel," as understood in its ordinary signification, means clothing, garments worn to protect the person from exposure, and not articles used for ornament merely. In its original signification the word "apparel" may have a more extensive meaning, including not merely a vesture or habilliment for covering the person, but all ornaments and decorations worn with the vesture. In an exemption, therefore, under a statute exempting wearing apparel necessary for the debtor and his family, the word "necessary" is not to be understood in its most rigid sense, implying something indispensable, but is equivalent to "convenient and comfortable." It does not include a breastpin. Towns v. Pratt, 33 N. H. 346, 349, 66 Am. Dec. 726.

As used in exemption laws, "wearing apparel" has its popular sense, and includes all the articles of dress generally worn by persons in the calling and condition of life and in the locality of the residence of the person claiming the exemption. It includes whatever is necessary to a decent appearance and to protection against exposure to the changes of weather, and also what is reasonably proper and customary in the way of ornament. Sellers v. Bell (U. S.) 94 Fed. 801, 811, 36 C. C. A. 502.

Within the exemption of the United States bankruptcy act, "wearing apparel" does not include articles of jewelry belonging to the bankrupt. In re Kasson (U. S.) 14 Fed. Cas. 138.

"Apparel," as used in Code Or. c. 297, subd. 1, § 2, exempting necessary wearing apparel, means the vesture and necessary garments, and does not relate to articles which may be worn for convenience and ornament. Stewart v. McClung, 8 Pac. 447, 12 Or. 431, 53 Am. Rep. 374.

A watch which the testator has been in the habit of carrying with his person does not pass by a bequest of his "wearing apparel." Ornaments may be so connected and used with the wearing apparel as to belong to it. There are implements, such as pencils and penknives, carried about the person but not connected with the wearing apparel. These are not to be considered as clothing. A watch may not properly be called an implement, for it is used merely to look at. Neither is it used as clothing or vesture. In its use it more nearly resembles the pencil or penknife. Gooch v. Gooch, 33 Me. 535.

"Wearing apparel" includes a gold watch, and when not carried about the person, but in a trunk while traveling, is an article of baggage. McCormick v. Hudson River R. Co. (N. Y.) 4 E. D. Smith, 181, 182.

"Wearing apparel," as used in a statute exempting from sale the wearing apparel of an insolvent debtor, should not be construed to allow him to have as many as two watches exempt from sale, it being doubtful whether he is entitled to have even one. Smith v. Rogers, 16 Ga. 479, 480.

"Wearing apparel" usually means clothing and garments protecting the person from exposure, and not articles of ornament merely. Originally it included not only the vesture, but all the ornaments and decorations worn with it, and would include a diamond shirt stud, where the purchaser was a person of large fortune and luxurious habits. Neasham v. McNair, 72 N. W. 773, 774, 103 Iowa, 695, 88 L. R. A. 847, 64 Am. St. Rep. 202.

In the case of In re Steele, Fed. Cas. No. 13,346, it was said that the definition of the word "apparel" as given by lexicographers is not confined to clothing, and that the idea of ornamentation seems to be a rather prominent element in the word, and that it is not improper to say that a man "wears" a watch and "wears" a cane. As used in Rev. St. Tex. art. 2397, exempting from execution all "wearing apparel" of the debtor, it includes a diamond stud worth $250, habitually worn by the debtor, during several years past, in the front of his shirt, and for the purpose of fastening the shirt together. In re Smith (U. S.) 96 Fed. 832, 834, 835.

"Wearing apparel" is not confined in its meaning to clothing, but includes the idea of ornamentation as well. A watch and chain have been adjudged such. Brown v. Edmonds, 66 N. W. 310, 8 S. D. 271, 59 Am. St. Rep. 762.

Lace aprons.

Lace aprons are dutiable as "articles of wearing apparel" under Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, c. 1244, par. 349, 26 Stat. 592, and not as "articles made wholly or in part of lace" under paragraph 373. In re Boyd (U. S.) 55 Fed. 599, 5 O. C. A. 223.

Overcoat.

"Wearing apparel" exempt from attachment must be that necessary to meet the varying changes of the climate and the customary habits and ordinary necessities of the mass of the people, and the clothing suitable for days of labor might not be such as the common sentiment of the community would deem necessary for use on days set apart for religious worship. An outside or great coat at all seasons of the year, and, in addition to every day decent wearing apparel, a full suit suitable to wear abroad or to meeting, is included. Peverly v. Sayles, 10 N. H. 358, 357.

Shawls.

"Wearing apparel," as used in Tariff Act 1846, imposing a duty on wearing apparel of every description, must be construed in the popular and received import of the words, and includes shawls, whether worsted and cotton shawls, silk and worsted shawls, barage shawls, merino shawls, silk shawls, and mousseline de laine shawls. Maillard v. Lawrence, 57 U. S. (16 How.) 251, 260, 14 L. Ed. 925.

Shoes.

Shoes are not included in the term "wearing apparel of every description," in the tariff act, for in reading it with the context, which is wearing apparel made up or manufactured wholly or in part by a tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, the phrase should be construed to refer only to the work of manufacturers of clothes similar to tailors or seamstresses; and hence, as a shoemaker is not in any respect similar to a tailor or seamstress, shoes were not to be included. Swayne v. Hager (U. S.) 37 Fed. 780, 782.

Underclothing.

In tariff legislation "wearing apparel" means not merely outer clothing as indicated by the definitions of some dictionaries, but means all articles usually worn, dress in general, and includes underclothing. Arnold Constable & Co. v. United States, 13 Sup. Ct. 406, 407, 147 U. S. 494, 37 L. Ed. 253.

Veils.

"Wearing apparel," as used in Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, c. 1244, par. 413, 26 Stat. 598, relating to the duties on "wearing apparel," includes silk veils or vellings in the piece, with borders upon them, and a distinctly marked line between the borders designating where they are to be cut off. Oppenheimer v. United States (U. S.) 61 Fed. 283, 284; Id. (U. S.) 66 Fed. 52, 53. See, also, In re Spielman (U. S.) 66 Fed. 724, 725.

WEATHER.

See "Bad Weather."

WEATHER WORKING DAYS.

"Weather working days," as used in a charter party which provides that 18 "weather working days" should be allowed shippers in which to deliver cargo alongside of the vessel, means days when the weather will reasonably permit the carrying on of the work contemplated. The India (U. S.) 49 Fed. 76, 78, 1 C. C. A. 174.

WEB PRESS.

A "web-perfecting press" is a press which feeds itself with a long, continuous roll of paper, perfects or prints such paper on both sides by passing it between two sets of form and impression cylinders, and, by transverse cuts, severs the web into sheets. In a multi-roll web-perfecting press two or more such webs are fed into its separate adjoining printing mechanisms, and are simultaneously perfected. The separate webs are then brought into conjoint register, and thereafter transversely cut into sheets. Goss

Printing-Press Co. v. Scott (U. S.) 108 Fed. 253, 254, 47 C. C. A. 302.

A printing press is said to be a "web press" when it receives and prints upon a continuous web or roll of paper as it is unwound, and not upon cut sheets. Duplex Printing-Press Co. v. Campbell Printing-Press & M. Co. (U. S.) 69 Fed. 250, 253, 16 C. C. A. 220.

WEEK.

As seven days merely.

"Week," as often used, refers to a period of seven days ending Saturday night at 12 o'clock; but there are many exceptions to such a meaning. When a person declares his intention to perform some act within one week, he means within a period of seven days. When we speak of things that transpire within a week, we mean within seven days. Evans v. Job, 8 Nev. 322, 324.

"Week" is defined to be a period of seven consecutive days, so that where an ordinance was published for fourteen consecutive days it complied with a statute providing that it shall be published for at least two weeks. El. M. Derby & Co. v. City of Modesto, 38 Pac. 901, 902, 104 Cal. 515 (citing Savings & Loan Soc. v. Thompson, 32 Cal. 347, 351; Misch v. Mayhew, 51 Cal. 516; Hagenmeyer v. Board of Equalization, 82 Cal. 217, 23 Pac. 14).

"Week," as used in Code, § 3647, requiring notices of sheriffs' sales of land to be published weekly for four "weeks," means a period consisting of seven days, and the statutory requirement is not met by a publication for a shorter period of time than 28 days. Bird v. Burgsteiner, 28 S. E. 219, 221, 100 Ga. 486.

Act Pa. March 29, 1832, § 19, requiring administrators to give certain notice to claimants "for six successive weeks" by publication, required that the publication be at least once in every seven days, and the statute was not complied with where eleven days were allowed to elapse between the first and second notices. Appeal of Stoeber (Pa.) 3 Watts & S. 154, 156.

A "week" consists of seven consecutive days. Pol. Code Cal. 1903, § 3258.

Whenever, in any act or statute of the state of North Dakota providing for the publication of notices, the phrase "successive weeks" is used, the word "weeks" shall be construed to mean calendar weeks, and the publication upon any day in such week shall be sufficient publication for that week; provided, that at least five days shall intervene between such publications, and all publications heretofore or hereafter made in accordance with the provisions of this section shall be deemed legal and valid. Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 5143.

As from Sunday to Sunday.

Worcester defines a "week" as a period of seven days, particularly the period of seven days commencing with Sunday; Webster as "a period of seven days, usually reckoned from one Sabbath or Sunday to the next." In re Tyson, 22 Pac. 810, 812, 13 Colo. 482, 6 L. R. A. 472.

A "week" is seven days of time, commencing immediately after 12 o'clock on the night between Saturday and Sunday, and ending at 12 o'clock seven days, of 24 hours each, thereafter. The first day is called Sunday, and the seventh Saturday. Steinle v. Bell (N. Y.) 12 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 171, 175 (citing 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 647); In re Tyson, 22 Pac. 810, 812, 13 Colo. 482, 6 L. R. A. 472.

A "week" is a definite period of time, commencing on Sunday and ending on Saturday. Ronkendorff v. Taylor, 29 U. S. (4 Pet.) 349, 361, 7 L. Ed. 882.

A "week" is universally defined as a period of time commencing with Sunday and ending with Saturday night, and also as a period of seven days' duration without reference to the time such period commences. Raunn v. Leach, 53 Minn. 84, 87, 54 N. W. 1058.

A "week" is a definite period of time, commencing on Sunday and ending on Saturday. Leach v. Burr, 23 Sup. Ct. 393, 188 U. S. 510, 47 L. Ed. 567.

Gen. Laws, § 729, provided that on sentencing one to death the judge should designate the "week of time" within which the sentence must be executed. Held, that a week of time was a calendar week, beginning Saturday at midnight. In re Tyson, 22 Pac. 810, 812, 13 Colo. 482, 6 L. R. A. 472.

The word "week," in its most accurate sense, means seven consecutive days beginning with Sunday, but it is also appropriately used to mean seven consecutive days beginning with any day. It was held under Const. art. 15, § 2, declaring that proposed constitutional amendments shall be published weekly in some newspaper within each county of the state for four consecutive weeks next preceding the general election, that publication once in each of the four consecutive weeks next preceding the week in which the election occurred complied with the statute, though the first publication was less than 28 days before the day of election. Russell v. Croy, 63 S. W. 849, 852, 164 Mo. 69.

A "week" is a definite period of time, beginning on Sunday and ending on Saturday. Where property was advertised for the purpose of a tax sale on Tuesday, December 17th, Tuesday, December 24th, Tuesday, December 31st, Tuesday, January 7th, and Saturday, January 18th, such advertisement was a sufficient compliance with the statutory requirement that the advertisement be made once a week for 80 days. In re City of New Orleans, 27 South. 592, 594, 52 La. Ann. 1073.

A Massachusetts statute requiring a certain notice to be published for "two weeks successively" is sufficiently complied with by the publication in a newspaper on Tuesday and Saturday only of each of two successive weeks. Brewer v. City of Springfield, 97 Mass. 152, 154.

A "week," in its legal signification, means a period of time, commencing on Sunday morning and ending on Saturday night. By common consent, and in computing time throughout Christendom, Sunday is recognized as the first day of the week, and hence a publication of summons, required by law to commence the first "week" in October, is complied with by a publication on Saturday after the first Sunday in the month, though the Saturday previous was also in October. Medland v. Linton, 82 N. W. 866, 869, 60 Neb. 249.

WEEK TO WEEK.

See "Tenant from Week to Week."

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER.

The expression "weekly newspaper" unerringly conveys the idea of a paper issued once a week. Iowa State Sav. Bank v. Jacobson, 8 S. D. 292, 300, 66 N. W. 453.

WEEK'S WORK.

A "week's work" under a contract for work at a fixed price per week means work for the period of a week, and not for six periods of eight hours each, though the act of 1867 provides that eight hours of labor performed in any one day by any one person shall be deemed a lawful day's work, so that a party who under such contract worked 16 hours a day cannot recover for two weeks' work in the period of one week. Luske v. Hotchkiss, 37 Conn. 219, 220, 9 Am. Rep. 314.

WEIGHAGE.

"Weighage" is the duty or toll imposed by English law to be paid for weighing merchandise, as for weighing wool at the king's beam, or for weighing other avoirdupois goods. Hoffman v. Jersey City, 84 N. J. Law (5 Vroom) 172, 176 (citing 2 Chitty, Com. Law 16; 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 628).

WEIGHT.

See "British Weight"; "Long Weight"; "Miner's Weight."

WEIGHT AND CONTENTS UNKNOWN.

The words "weight and contents unknown," added with pen and ink at the bottom of a bill of lading, exclude any inference that the owner is bound by a memorandum on the margin of the bill giving the weight, as the addition of the words at the bottom with a pen clearly indicate an intent on the part of the carrier not to be bound by any supposed ascertainment of the weight at the time by the shipper. The Andover (U. S.) 1 Fed. Cas. 855.

WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

Burden of proof distinguished, see "Burden of Proof."

The "weight of evidence" is not a question of mathematics, but depends on its effect in inducing belief. It often happens that one witness standing uncorroborated may tell a story so natural and reasonable in its character, and in a manner so sincere and honest, as to command belief, although several witnesses of equal apparent respectability may contradict him. The question for the jury is not on which side are the witnesses most numerous, but what testimony do they believe. Braunschweiler v. Waits, 86 Atl. 155, 156, 179 Pa. 47.

"Weight of proof" is a phrase meaning a greater amount of creditable evidence. It is synonymous with "preponderance of proof," and is sufficient to authorize a verdict in a civil case in favor of the party producing such proof. Haskins v. Haskins, 75 Mass. (9 Gray) 390, 393.

"Preponderance" is something more than 'weight'; it is a superiority of weight outweighed. The words are not synonymous, but substantially differ. There is generally a weight of evidence on each side in case of uttered facts. But juries cannot properly act upon the weight of the evidence in favor of one having the onus, unless it overbalance in some degree the weight upon the other, in their opinion." Thus, it is erroneous in an instruction to use the term "weight of evidence" for "preponderance of evidence." Shinn v. Tucker, 37 Ark. 580-588.

The word "effect," as used in an instruction relative to determining what weight or effect the jury would give the testimony of each witness, etc., is held to mean precisely the same thing as "weight," and hence not to be confusing. Jessen v. Donahue (Neb.) 96 N. W. 639, 640.

WEIR.

A "weir" is understood to be formed by a fence of sticks or twigs erected upon flats covered with water and remaining during the whole year, although used for taking fish only during the fishing season. Treat v. Chipman, 35 Me. 34, 38.

A "weir" is a dam across a river. Arnold v. Mundy, 6 N. J. Law (1 Halst.) 1, 55, 10 Am. Dec. 353.

WELFARE.

See "General Welfare"; "Public Welfare."

"The good and welfare of this commonwealth, for which reasonable orders, laws, statutes, and ordinances may be made, by force of which private rights of property may be affected, is a much broader and less specific ground of exercise of power than public use and public service. The former expresses the ultimate purpose or result sought to be obtained by all forms of legislative power over property; the latter implies a direct relation between the primary object of appropriation and the public enjoyment. The circumstances may be such that the use or service intended to be secured will practically affect only a small portion of the inhabitants or lands of the commonwealth. The essential point is that it affects them as a community, and not merely as individuals." The rebuilding, by private property owners in a city, of buildings destroyed by general fires, is not a public use or public service for which the city may issue bonds. Lowell v. City of Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 470, 15 Am. Rep. 39.

WELL

See "Artesian Well"; "Driven Well"; "Oil Well."

As defined by Worcester, a "well" is a deep, narrow pit dug in the earth, and usually walled, for the purpose of obtaining a supply of water. Andrews v. Cross (U. S.) 8 Fed. 269, 275.

Bouvier's Law Dictionary defines a "well" as a hole dug in the ground in order to obtain water. A contract to dig a well does not imply that water other than surface water shall be obtained. Littrell v. Wilcox, 27 Pac. 394, 396, 11 Mont. 77.

Places where a person has reached water by orifices in the ground, and where the water did not flow to the surface, are "wells," and not springs. Magoon v. Harris, 46 Vt. 264, 271.

A well consists of a pit sunk in the earth until a water-bearing stratum of earth is reached, from which the water therein will flow into the pit and a supply of water be thus obtained. Two forms of wells have long been known—one the ordinary domestic well, and the other the artesian well. In the ordinary well the well pit is sunk to the water-bearing stratum of earth, from which the water will, by reason of the natural forces operating upon it as it lies on the earth, ooze or fall from the earth into the bottom of the pit, as a reservoir, in sufficient quantities for the ordinary purpose of domestic use. In the artesian well the well pit is sunk in the earth until a water-bearing stratum is reached, where the water lies under the pressure of such a head as, when struck by the well pit, will come into the pit so rapidly that a stream of water is produced flowing by the force of its own current from the earth into and from the well pit to the surrounding surface. These two forms are not different in their method of operation. Both rely upon the natural forces as they are found operating upon the water in the water-bearing stratum reached by the well pit, which has uniformly been made by loosening the earth or rock and removing it upward and out upon the surface either by means of a spade or a drill, or auger and a sand bucket. In this state of the art of obtaining a supply of water from the earth, a new form of well appeared, now known as a "driven well." This well embodies an idea not present in any other form, namely, that the water in the water-bearing stratum of the earth may be, by the application of artificial power, forced to flow from the earth into the well pit with increased rapidity, so that a well pit only a few inches in diameter, sunk to a moderate depth, will afford an abundant supply of water, and constitute a practical and productive well. The characteristic difference between the driven well and other forms consists in the practical application of this new idea. In previous forms the rapidity with which the water flows from the earth into the well pit is dependent upon the natural forces as they happen to be found operating upon the water lying in the water-bearing stratum to which the well is sunk. The driven well adds artificial power so applied as to cause a great increase in the rapidity with which the water in the earth will flow from the earth into the well pit. The foundation of this new form of well is the discovery that if a pipe with an opening at the lower end be driven into the earth, extending down, air-tight, until it reaches the water, and have the pump attached air-tight to its upper end, and a vacuum be created in the pipe so fitted and connected with the water in the earth, water will flow abundantly from the earth into the pipe. The novelty consists in making a well pit to consist of an air-tight tube with a pump at the top, connected tightly with the earth. This is accomplished by driving into the earth a tube to be used, at the top, as the pump, and at the same time as the pit of the well. This manner of inserting the tube renders it possible, by means of a pump attached to the tube, to create a vacuum in the pit of the well, and at the same time in the water-bearing stratum of the earth. It was held that the driven well was patentable, not as a machine, but as a new process. Andrews v. Carman (U. S.) 1 Fed. Cas. 868, 869.

Soil used and water.

"In Johnson v. Rayner, 72 Mass. (6 Gray) 107, the court says the term 'well' is used to designate an artificial excavation and erection in and upon land which necessarily, from its nature and mode of use, includes and comprehends the substantial occupation and beneficial enjoyment of the whole premises on which it is situated. The term aptly designates the soil covered by and used with it." Ocean Causeway of Lawrence v. Gilbert, 66 N. Y. Supp. 401, 404, 54 App. Div. 118.

A "well," as a general term of description in a deed, designates the portion of land under and occupied by the excavation and its surrounding retaining walls, and by any structure or appliance built upon the land to facilitate its use, and also the water actually at any time in the excavation. Davis v. Spaulding, 32 N. E. 650, 651, 157 Mass. 431, 19 L. R. A. 102.

A "well," as used in a deed conveying two-thirds of a "well" on certain described premises, includes, ex vi termini, not only the orifice which reached down to the water, but the whole opening into the earth before it was stoned, and the stone laid into the well, and the water therein. This must be regarded as the thing intended to be conveyed, and not the water only, which only imports the right to use the water, and by which term nothing passes but the easement or right to take the water. A well imports the land in which it is dug and erected. Mixer v. Reed, 25 Vt. 254, 257.

Spring distinguished.

See "Spring."

WELL.

See "Work Well."

A covenant in a lease to repair, uphold, and support, or to well and sufficiently repair, imposes on the covenantor the duty of rebuilding or restoring premises destroyed or injured by the elements. Armstrong v. Maybee, 48 Pac. 737, 738, 17 Wash. 24, 61 Am. St. Rep. 898.

WELL ACQUAINTED.

A statement of a witness, called to prove the handwriting of a subscribing witness to a deed, that he was well acquainted with him, is equivalent to the declaration that he personally knew him. Delaunay v. Burnett, 9 Ill. (4 Gilm.) 454, 489.

The expression "well acquainted," as used in the testimony of a witness that he was well acquainted with another person, construed to mean a mutual acquaintance between the witness and such party. United States v. Jones (U. S.) 23 Fed. Cas. 638.

WELL AND FAITHFULLY.

A bond conditioned that a bank clerk should well and faithfully perform the duties assigned constituted a security for his honesty, and not for his competency. Union Bank v. Clossey (N. Y.) 11 Johns. 182.

A contract of an apprenticeship whereby the apprentice agrees "well and faithfully to serve" his master does not require that the apprentice should follow his master into a foreign jurisdiction to work. Vickere v. Pierce, 12 Me. (3 Fairf.) 315.

The inability of an apprentice to work, caused by sickness, without his fault, is no breach of his father's covenant in the indenture of apprenticeship that he should "well and faithfully serve and give and devote his whole time and labor to his master," sickness not being within the words of the covenant. Caden v. Farwell, 98 Mass. 137, 139.

WELL AND TRULY.

In a bond the condition that an officer should "well and truly, faithfully, firmly and impartially, execute and perform" the duties of his office, is equivalent to faithful performance. As used in a bond conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties by an officer, the words "well, truly, and impartially" are simply redundant. They are comprised in their legal signification in the word "faithfully." City of Hoboken v. Evans, 31 N. J. Law (2 Vroom) 342, 343.

A condition in a bond that the principal obligor shall "well and truly execute the duties of cashier" of a bank is not a mere stipulation for honesty, but also includes reasonable skill and diligence in the performance of the duties of such office. Minor v. Mechanics' Bank of Alexandria, 26 U. S. (1 Pet.) 46, 69, 7 L. Ed. 47.

WELL AND TRULY ADMINISTER.

The words "well and truly administered according to law," as used in an administrator's bond, impose on such administrator only the liability to dispose of the estate legally and properly in behalf of creditors, and create no liability in favor of the distributees of the residue. Barbour v. Robertson's Heirs, 11 Ky. (1 Litt.) 93, 95.

The phrase "well and truly administer," in an administrator's bond, requires a faithful administration of the estate of the intestate in applying the goods, chattels, and credits of the deceased to the payment of his debts. A conversion of the effects of the intestate to the private use of the administrator, leaving the debts unpaid, is a breach of the condition of the bond. People v. Dunlap (N. Y.) 13 Johns. 437, 441.

A condition in an administrator's bond that he shall well and truly administer the estate requires the payment of a debt against the estate, and hence, after its determination by the court or commissioners, an action lies on the bond for the administrator's failure to pay it. Coney v. Williams, 9 Mass. 114, 117.

WELL-BURNT HARD BRICK.

The words "well-burnt hard brick," as used in a contract for mason work, were plain and unambiguous, and could not be construed to mean a mixture of hard and soft brick. Robertson v. King, 8 N. W. 665, 666, 55 Iowa, 725.

WELL-CONDITIONED.

The words "well-conditioned," in a bill of lading reciting the receipt of freight in good order and well-conditioned, have reference to the external condition of the package, and do not refer to or warrant the internal quality or condition thereof. The California (U. S.) 4 Fed. Cas. 1058, 1059.

WELL KNEW.

In an instruction that a plaintiff "well knew" the fact that a certain sidewalk was in a dangerous and unsafe condition, the words "well knew" mean no more than "fully knew." Barnes v. Town of Marcus, 65 N. W. 984, 986, 96 Iowa, 675.

WELL-KNOWN MEMBER.

The term "well-known member of a political party," within the meaning of Act Cong. June 30, 1879, providing that a jury commissioner appointed by the judge shall be a "well-known member" of the principal political party in the district opposed to that which the clerk may belong, applies to one who has always advocated the principles and voted the state and national tickets of the Democratic party, although at one time he organized a Democratic movement in his county in opposition to that part of his party then in power, nominated a legislative ticket, and was himself elected thereon by the aid of Republican votes, acting, while in the Legislature, with the Democrats, and proclaiming himself a Democrat. On who is a well-known Democrat is a well-known member of the Democratic party, no matter how much he may differ in many important things from other well-known members of that party. United States v. Paxton (U. S.) 40 Fed. 136, 137.

WELL PACKED.

The term "well packed," in a contract for the purchase of glass to be shipped to the purchaser well packed, "means so securely packed as to bear transportation by the proposed route without injury." A box of glass which is sound when shipped, but a portion of which reaches its destination in a broken condition, has not borne transportation without injury. The nature of the article is such as to render it almost of necessity liable to some injury during shipment, and persons dealing with it must be supposed to take into consideration its peculiar properties, and to contract with a view to the ordinary injuries to which it is subject. It cannot, then, be laid down as a matter of law that a box of glass which was injured in shipment was not well packed. Such a rule would make the shipper a warrantor of the condition of the article at the time of its arrival. King v. Nelson, 36 Iowa, 509, 512.

WELL SATISFIED.

Where one covenanted that, in case the title to a lot of land conveyed to him should prove good and sufficient in law against all other claims, he would pay the grantor three months after he should be "well satisfied" that the title was undisputed and good, law would determine for the grantee when he ought to be satisfied; and the agreement means that, until he showed some lawful claim or title to countervail that which he derived from the grantor, the intendment of the law is that his title was complete, and he was bound to pay. Folliard v. Wallace (N. Y.) 2 Johns. 395, 403.

WELL SETTLED.

A rule of action may be said to be "well settled" when it has the sanction of established usage, or the recorded judgment of the tribunals of justice, and does not conflict with some other rule of equal or paramount authority. People v. City of Brooklyn (N. Y.) 9 Barb. 535, 555.

WELL-TIMBERED LAND.

A forest of standing trees, if they can be appropriated to building, is called "well-timbered land," but loses that designation if swept to the earth by a tornado. United States v. Schuler (U. S.) 27 Fed. Cas. 978, 982.

WELSH MORTGAGE.

A "Welsh mortgage" is one in which the mortgagee enters at once and takes the rents instead of interest, and is by agreement or distinct understanding to have no remedy for the principal (1 Pow. Mortg. 374, note; Patch, Mortg. 22, 29; Lawley v. Hooper, 3 Atk. 280), but he agrees merely to reconvey on its payment (Coop. 189). Bentley v. Phelps (U. S.) 3 Fed. Cas. 244, 250.

A vivum vadium or Welsh mortgage was a species of security by which the borrower of a sum of money made over his estate to the lender until he had received that sum out of the issues and profits of his land, and it was so called because neither the money nor the land was lost, and were not left in dead pledge. There was a living pledge, for the profits earned were constantly paying off the debt. But the distinguishing characteristics of such an instrument were that there was no proviso that the conveyance was to be void on payment of the debt, and there was no covenant, express or implied, for such payment. O'Neill v. Gray (N. Y.) 39 Hun, 566, 568.

WEREGILD.

Among the customs of the ancient Saxons, the "weregild" (wergildus) was the price of homicide paid for killing a man, the pretium redemptionis of the offender, as the "werelada" was when the price was not paid, but the accused denied his guilt and purged himself by the oaths of compurgators. The notion of compensation ran through the whole criminal law of the Anglo-Saxons, who allowed a sum of money as a recompense for every kind of crime. Wise v. Teerpenning, 8 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 153, 156.

WEST.

A contract to not engage in certain business in all the territory of the state of New York "west of" the city of Albany means west of a meridian line drawn from north to south through the city of Albany, and does not refer merely to that portion of the state which in common parlance, and according to the ordinary acceptance of the term in matters of business, would be embraced by the phrase. Lawrence v. Kidder (N. Y.) 10 Barb. 641, 652.

In describing courses, the words "north," "south," "east," and "west," mean true courses, and refer to the true meridian, unless otherwise declared. Pol. Code Cal. 1903, § 3903; Pol. Code Mont. 1895, § 4103.

WEST END.

The expression "west end of the lot," as used in an advertisement for the sale of certain property, the description of which was as follows: "Beginning at the northeast corner of said square, running thence south 44 feet; thence west to the 'west end of the lot'; thence in a northerly direction with the west line thereof to the north line of said lot; thence with said north line to the place of beginning"—the lot being irregularly shaped, and the northwest corner being the farthest west of any point in the lot, means, construed with the rest of this description, the west line of the lot. Mackall v. Richards, 5 Sup. Ct. 170, 173, 112 U. S. 369, 28 L. Ed. 737.

WEST HALF.

The words "west half," as applied to lots and parcels of land, have, both in ordinary conversations and in deeds, sometimes a very precise and exact meaning, but sometimes they are used very loosely and indefinitely. As used in a mortgage in which the mortgaged premises were described as the "west half of a city lot," the mortgagor and another owning the lot in common, and having agreed to divide the lot so as to give each a half, is to be construed as meaning the "half" occupied by the mortgagor, though it does not conform to the part which would be ordinarily understood as the "west half." Schmitz v. Schmitz, 19 Wis. 207, 211, 88 Am. Dec. 681.

WEST LINE.

The term "west line of railroad," when used in a deed of lands to describe a boundary beginning on the west line of a certain railroad and southeast corner of land west of said railroad, thence south on the west line of said railroad, will be construed as showing the boundary to be on the west line of the railroad and not in the center thereof. Public roads and highways, and also railroads, are regarded as having three lines—the center line, which is usually the line surveyed when the road is laid out, and on each side of which the road is laid out, and the two side lines, at equal distances from the center line, and between which lies the territory covered by the road. When, in a conveyance of real estate adjoining a highway, such highway is referred to as constituting a boundary, the center line will be held to be the boundary so referred to, unless the language used in so referring to it shows clearly that a side line instead of the center was intended. If it be doubtful which is intended, the law, from considerations of public policy, will resolve the doubt in favor of the center. Maynard v. Weeks, 41 Vt. 617, 619.

WESTERLY.

In construing a notice of location of a mining claim, there is no rule of necessity, such as exists in the construction of deeds, which requires that the terms "easterly" and "westerly," used without qualifying language, shall denote east and west, in the sense in which "easterly" is used by the miner and prospector. The term denotes the general course of a vein or location running nearer towards the east than any of the other cardinal points of the compass. A notice of location, therefore, which gives the course of a location as running westerly so many feet, and easterly so many feet, from a discovery shaft or point of discovery until the boundaries are definitely located by the erection of monuments, must be held to reserve from entry by subsequent locators the surface area which might be included within any location so made that, were a line drawn lengthwise through the center of such claim from the west center end thereof through the point of discovery to the east center end, such line would lie at some point between east 45 degrees north and east 45 degrees south from the point of discovery. Wiltsee v. King of Arizona Min. & Mill. Co. (Ariz.) 60 Pac. 896, 898.

The words "northerly," "southerly," "easterly," and "westerly," mean due north, due south, due east, or due west, unless controlled by other words or by lines, monuments, or natural objects. Pol. Code Cal. 1903, § 8904; Pol. Code Mont. 1895, § 4104.

WESTERN BARGES.

As used in the waterman's act forbidding any person not a freeman to navigate any wherry, lighter, or craft within certain limits, excepting that all flat-bottomed boats and barges navigated from the town of Kingston, in the county of Surrey, or any place or places beyond the said town, shall be deemed "western barges" and may be navigated within the prohibited limits, the words "western barges" were not intended to except all flat-bottomed barges of the build commonly known as a "western barge," but merely meant to except such build of boats navigated from the town of Kingston to any place beyond. Reg. v. Tibble, 30 Eng. Law & Eq. 372, 374.

WESTERN OCEAN.

The term "Western Ocean," in the Warwick patent to Connecticut, of 1631, granting all the land from certain points to the Western Ocean and to the South Sea, meant the Atlantic Ocean, as is shown from the fact that a grant to Sir Henry Roswell and others, dated four years earlier than the Warwick patent, employed the words "from the Atlantic and Western Sea and Ocean on the east part, to the South Sea on the west part." Keyser v. Coe (U. S.) 14 Fed. Cas. 442, 443.

WESTWARDLY.

Courses in a grant indicated by the term "westwardly" run due west. Seaman v. Hogeboom (N. Y.) 21 Barb. 398, 404.

WETHER.

A wether is a castrated male sheep. State v. Royster, 65 N. C. 539.

A wether is a castrated ram, at least one year old. In an indictment it may be called a "sheep." Rex v. Birket, 4 Car. & P. 216.

WHALING VOYAGE.

A policy of marine insurance on a "whaling voyage" covers not only a voyage for whales, but the taking of sea elephants as well. Child v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co., 5 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Sandf.) 26, 44.

WHARF.

See "Private Wharf"; "Public Wharf." As fixture, see "Fixture."

A wharf is a structure on the margin of navigable waters, alongside of which vessels can be brought for the sake of being conveniently loaded or unloaded. Hence water of sufficient depth to float vessels is an essential part of every wharf. A wharf cannot be defined or conceived except in connection with adjacent navigable water. Langdon v. City of New York, 93 N. Y. 129, 151. See, also, Prior v. Swartz, 62 Conn. 132, 138, 25 Atl. 398, 399, 18 L. R. A. 668, 36 Am. St. Rep. 333.

A wharf is a space of ground, artificially prepared, for the reception of merchandise from a ship or vessel, so as to promote the convenient loading or discharge of such vessel. City of Dubuque v. Stout, 32 Iowa, 47, 49 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

A wharf is a sort of quay constructed of wood or stone on the margin of a roadside or harbor, alongside of which ships or lighters are brought for the sake of being conveniently loaded or unloaded, and is not necessarily a nuisance. Where the water is shallow near the shore, neither passengers nor goods, without their aid, could be conveyed to or from the land or sea without great trouble and inconvenience, delay, and expense. They are indispensable to commerce, and no city or town, in the present advanced state of commerce, having navigable facilities, could be without them. Gelger v. Filor, 8 Fla. 325, 332.

A wharf is intended to afford conveniences for the landing of vessels, the loading and unloading of their cargoes, and to supply a place on which wares discharged from vessels or awaiting shipment may be laid or deposited; and it would seem that structures or appliances of any kind, intended to facilitate the handling and preservation of merchandise arriving at the wharf, erected under municipal control, would be lawful and within the purpose for which wharf property was acquired or dedicated. Illinois & St. Louis R. & Canal Co. v. St. Louis, 2 Fed. Cas. 1199, 1203 (cited in Reighard v. Flinn [Pa.] 44 Atl. 1080, 1081).

A landing may be public in the sense that it is open to all comers, but wharfage is demandable by some one, and, in order to conclusively indicate that the public is to have a proprietary right, something more than calling the structure a "wharf" is essential. It is a wharf, whether in public or private control, and its delineation and name on a map have no effect whatever in determining its character. Palen v. City of Ocean City, 46 Atl. 774, 775, 64 N. J. Law, 669.

A wharf is for the use of the steamship company. It is not a place for the storage of merchandise until it is entirely convenient for the consignees to remove the goods. Smith v. Britain S. S. Co. (U. S.) 123 Fed. 176, 178.

Bridge.

The statute of 1850, giving mechanics and others liens on buildings and wharves, is to be literally construed, and hence does not give a lien on a bridge. Burt v. Washington, 3 Cal. 246.

Floats or pier wharf.

A deed of a lot of land, with the wharf thereon, described the land by metes and bounds, and stated that a part of the granted premises was held under a certain statute, and referred to a certain deed on record as to the grantor's title. The statute authorized the grantor to extend his wharf to the harbor commissioner's line, and there was a solid wharf, part of which had a water front, within the metes and bounds, extending to the commissioner's line, and outside of this line and of the metes and bounds was a pier wharf, which extended from a part of the solid wharf, and was used in connection with it. Held, that the pier wharf did not pass by the deed, under the phrase "with the wharf thereon." Wood v. West Boston & Cragie Bridges Com'rs, 122 Mass. 394, 399.

A wharf is a structure erected on a shore below high-water mark, and sometimes extending into the channel for laying vessels alongside to load or unload, and on which stores are often erected for the reception of cargoes. To a structure of this description, and built for such purpose, floats necessary for the use of such wharf, and usually occupied with it, may pass as appurtenant. Doane v. Broad St. Ass'n, 6 Mass. 332, 334.

Highway.

A wharf is sometimes built on the land on the water's edge, and is sometimes built in the water to the channel of a river or other part, and is a space for the deposit of goods, in order conveniently to load and unload vessels. To those ends, drays, carts, and other vehicles of burden go on them to carry or take away merchandise, and the merchants go also to look to their property and conduct their business; and a public wharf is, for this purpose, open to all persons, and in that sense it is like a public street, but the same cannot be considered a highway. State v. Cowan, 29 N. C. 239, 249.

Landing.

A piece of land on the margin of a large basin, and adjoining the private yard of a timber merchant, consisting of natural ground not faced with brick or timber, and where the ground below the water gradually sloped to the bottom of the basin, on which ground the timber merchant landed his timber, where it was marked and measured by the revenue officers, was not a "wharf," within the meaning of the act of Parliament relating to the rating of property for the relief of the poor. Rex v. The Proprietors of the Regent's Canal, 6 Barn. & C. 720.

Market overt.

A wharf is not a market overt. Wilkinson v. King, 2 Campb. 335, 336.

Site alone.

"Wharves," as used in Act 1848, authorizing a township to repair or rebuild wharves by means of a tax, is not limited to an actually existing artificial structure. It may indicate a locality as well as a structure. Any locality is a wharf which is known as a site designed for such structure, or upon which site a structure has existed, and so marked the location as having once been or to be used for a landing place. Bacon v. Mulford, 41 N. J. Law (12 Vroom) 59, 63.

Street distinguished.

A wharf differs in many material respects from a street. The latter is primarily intended for the purpose of passage or travel, and any erection in it without legislative authority is a nuisance; but a wharf is intended to afford convenience for the landing of vessels, the loading or unloading of their cargoes, and to supply a place on which the wares discharged from vessels or awaiting shipment may be laid or deposited. Illinois

& St. L. R. & Cana. Co. v. St. Louis (U. S.)
12 Fed. Cas. 1199, 1203.

WHARFAGE.

Contract for, as maritime contract, see "Maritime Contract."

Wharfage is a charge or rent for the temporary use of a wharf. Ouachita & M. R. P. Co. v. Aiken, 7 Sup. Ct. 907, 910, 121 U. S. 444, 30 L. Ed. 976; The Idlewild, 64 Fed. 603, 605, 12 C. C. A. 198; Parkersburg & O. R. Transp. Co. v. City of Parkersburg, 2 Sup. Ct. 732, 738, 107 U. S. 691, 27 L. Ed. 584; Sweeney v. Otis, 37 La. Ann. 520, 621.

Wharfage is the fee paid for tying vessels to a wharf, or for loading goods on a wharf or shipping them therefrom. Langdon v. City of New York, 93 N. Y. 129, 151.

Wharfage is money due or money actually paid for the privilege of landing goods upon or loading a vessel, while moored, from a wharf. The Gem (U. S.) 10 Fed. Cas. 161, 162.

Wharfage or keyage is a toll or duty for the pitching or lodging of goods upon a wharf, or pay for taking goods into a boat and from thence. Kusenbergs v. Browne, 42 Pa. (6 Wright) 173, 179.

The definition of wharfage is not to be confined to the charge for landing at a wharf. The term "wharfage" is generally applied to a charge for landing the goods, whether upon an artificial erection or a natural landing. City of Sacramento v. The New World, 4 Cal. 41, 44.

Wharfage, within the meaning of the statute giving a lien on vessels for wharfage, does not include the use by a steamboat of a private wharfboat placed at the St. Louis levee, and therefore such use cannot be the basis of a lien upon the steamboat. Bersie v. The Shenandoah, 21 Mo. 18, 19.

Dockage and moorage.

Wharfage is a charge against merchandise for the use of wharves. The assessment by state harbor commissioners of rates of dockage, or charges for the privilege of mooring to docks, is not a violation of St. 1880, p. 11, providing that no wharfage shall be collected on commerce within the state. People v. Roberts, 28 Pac. 680, 691, 92 Cal. 659.

Moorage is a sum due, by law or usage, for mooring or fastening of ships to trees or posts at the shore or to a wharf. Wharfage is a toll or duty for the pitching or lodging of goods upon a wharf. Those two kinds of shore duties, as thus designated in the English books, which are evidently distinct in their nature, the one as a charge for the accommodation of ships, the other as a toll for the use of a landing place for goods, are in our country generally, and certainly in the port of Baltimore, spoken of under the one common denomination of "wharfage"—the wharfage due from a vessel, and the wharfage payable on merchandise; and this, perhaps, has arisen from the fact of no duty being demanded of ships which have been moored to the shore where there was no wharf. The Wharf Case (Md.) 3 Bland 361, 373.

Duty on tonnage distinguished.

See, also, "Tonnage Duty."

A wharfage fee, though graduated by the tonnage of the vessel, is not necessarily a duty on tonnage; but, if fixed merely for the privilege of landing at a wharf, it is in no sense a tax. City of Keokuk v. Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co., 45 Iowa, 196, 213.

The license fee exacted by St. Louis City Ordinance No. 232, from vessels engaged in transporting freight upon the Mississippi river from Illinois to Missouri, and unloading the same into vessels moored at the improved wharf of the city of St. Louis, such fee not being exacted as compensation for the use of the city's wharf, but for the privilege of towing boats or other water crafts into or out of the harbor of the city, or from one place to another within said harbor, is not a wharfage charge, such as a state or municipality may lawfully exact from vessels licensed for coasting trade and engaged in interstate commerce, but is an interference with such commerce. In Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co. v. City of Keokuk, 95 U. S. 80, 24 L. Ed. 377, the court says: "If the charge is clearly a duty, a tax, or burden, which, in its essence, is a contribution claimed for the privilege of entering the port of Keokuk, or remaining in it, or departing from it, imposed by authority of the state, and measured by the capacity of the vessel, it is embraced by the prohibition of such a duty. But a charge for services rendered or for conveniences provided is in no sense a tax or duty. It is not a hindrance or impediment to free navigation. The prohibition to the state against the imposition of a duty of tonnage was designed to guard against local hindrances to trade and carriage of vessels, not to relieve them from liability to claims for assistance rendered and facilities furnished for trade and commerce. It is a tax or duty that is prohibited; something imposed by virtue of the sovereignty, not claimed in right of proprietorship. Wharfage is of the latter character." In Parkersburg & Ohio River Transp. Co. v. City of Parkersburg, 107 U. S. 691, 2 Sup. Ct. 732, 27 L. Ed. 584, the court distinguishes between a duty on tonnage and a charge for wharfage, saying the one is imposed by the government; the other, by the owner of the wharf or landing. The one is a commercial regulation, dictated by the general policy of the country upon considerations having reference to its commerce or revenue; the other is a rent charged by the owner of the property for its temporary use. City of St. Louis v. Consolidated Coal Co. (Mo.) 59 S. W. 103, 105, 51 L. R. A. 850, 81 Am. St. Rep. 310.

As franchise.

See "Franchise."

Nature of use.

Wharfage involves exclusive use, for longer or shorter periods, by each vessel, depending on the nature of its business and the extent of its cargo. Horn v. People, 28 Mich. 221, 224.

"Wharfage," as used in a resolution of a board of town auditors fixing the rate of wharfage for the town dock, should be construed in the ordinary sense of that term, and does not apply where a vessel enjoyed none of the ordinary benefits or uses of the wharf for the purposes of commerce and navigation, but lay aground at a distance from it, attached to it by one or two, only, of several lines. Wharfage is defined in the Encyclopedia of Commerce and Webster's Dictionary as the fee paid for loading goods on a wharf, or for shipping them off; but it also may clearly include the use of a wharf while lying alongside for protection. The term "wharf" is usually applied only to vessels afloat and enjoying some substantial benefits, either of protection or safety, or in the loading or unloading of cargo. Town of Pebbam v. The B. F. Woolsey (U. S.) 16 Fed. 418, 419.

Where a vessel discharging cargo at one wharf overlapped the adjoining wharf for the distance of 20 feet, the vessel enjoyed the beneficial use of such adjoining wharf, although not made fast to it, and for such use the libellant was entitled to "wharfage," though the primary definition of the word is "compensation paid for loading goods on a wharf or shipping them off." The William H. Brinsfield (D. C.) 39 Fed. 215, 219.

The right to the use of a wharf for the purpose of weighing the cargo is part of the wharfage. Carsanago v. Wheeler (U. S.) 16 Fed. 248, 251.

WHARFBOAT.

As a Boat, see "Boat."

WHARFINGER.

A wharfinger is one who for hire receives merchandise for his wharf, either for the purpose of forwarding, or for delivering to the consignee on such wharf. A wharfinger is impliedly bound to use care for the safety of property in his custody, and must see that the wharf is reasonably safe. Chapman v. State, 38 Pac. 457, 458, 104 Cal. 690, 43 Am. St. Rep. 158.

A "wharfinger" is one who keeps a wharf for receiving goods for hire. His responsibility begins when the goods are delivered at or on the wharf, and he has either expressly or by implication so received them. Rodgers v. Stophel, 32 Pa. (8 Casey) 111, 113, 72 Am. Dec. 775.

WHARFINGER'S RECEIPT.

A wharfinger's receipt for particular property may be used in commercial transactions as the representative of and a substitute for property which has been deposited with him, and the delivery of the property described in such receipt may be effected by the delivery of the receipt; but the delivery of a so-called "wharfinger's receipt," which represents nothing in his possession, is not a symbolic delivery of anything, and consequently could not form a good basis for a pledge of such property, though subsequently the property was delivered to the wharfinger. Commercial Bank of Jacksonville v. Flowers, 42 S. E. 474, 116 Ga. 219.

WHAT.

WHAT I MAY DIE POSSESSED OF.

The words "what I may die possessed of," in a will, are sufficient to describe all property of whatever description, and will pass real estate. Barnes v. Patch, 8 Ves. 604, 607.

WHAT REMAINS.

As giving power of disposal, see "Residual."

"What remains," as used in a will requiring the residuary legatee to give as directed or sell what remains, means what is left undisposed of by the other clauses of her will, and is synonymous with "residue." Wyman v. Woodbury, 33 N. Y. Supp. 217, 220, 86 Hun. 277.

"What remains," used in a will, will carry the whole residue, comprising everything not disposed of. The words are equivalent to the Latin word "residuum." Crook v. Devandes, 11 Ves. 330, 331.

WHATEVER.

Real property was devised to a trustee to permit A. to take the income for life, with remainder to such persons as A. by his last will should appoint, and, in default of appointment, to A.'s children. A. by his last will devised "all the rest and residue of my estate, whatever and wherever," but his will did not mention the power nor the trust property, and A. had real estate in his own right not specifically disposed of. Held, that the words "wherever and whatever" did not mean the trust property. Bilderback v. Boyce, 14 S. C. 528, 542.

WHATEVER CAUSE.

A drover's pass, providing that persons riding free, to take charge of stock shipped, should do so at their own risk of personal injury, "from whatever cause," cannot be construed to mean from gross negligence or a want of ordinary care. The carrier is liable for what would be regarded as fault or misconduct on its part, and is bound to observe reasonable care and caution, employ persons of reasonable care and skill, and the best vehicles for the use and adapted to the nature of the service required. Smith v. New York Central R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 29 Barb. 132, 138, affirmed 24 N. Y. 222, 246.

WHATEVER REMAINS.

A testatrix whose personal property consisted chiefly of stock, after bequeathing a number of pecuniary and specific legacies, and giving certain directions as to her funeral, gave £200 to each of her executors for their trouble, and bequeathed "whatever remains of money" to the five children of E. D. Held, that the words "whatever remains of money" referred to the testatrix's general residuary personal estate. Dowson v. Gascoin, 2 Keen, Ch. 15, 18.

WHATSOEVER.

The word "whatsoever" has a very broad and comprehensive meaning. Among other definitions given to the word by Webster are "one thing or another" and "anything that may be," etc., sufficiently broad to cover both real and personal property; anything, in fact, in the way of property. Where a will, after providing for the payment of debts, gave testator's farm, which was all the real estate he then had, and all his personal property, "whatsoever I may die possessed of," the word "whatsoever" was held broad enough to cover both real and personal property. Schuck v. Shook, 10 N. Y. Supp. 935, 936.

Where a lease required the lessee to pay all assessments whatsoever levied or charged on the leased property, the word "whatsoever" did not affect the significance of the word "assessments," so as to increase its meaning to include general taxes not ordinarily within the meaning of such word. Stephani v. Catholic Bishop of Chicago, 2 Ill. App. 249, 254.

WHEAT STEMS.

Bleached wheat stems or wheat heads are entitled to admission free of duty, under Tariff Act 1897, par. 566, Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 198 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1864], including textile grasses or fibrous vegetable substances not dressed or manufactured in any manner. Bayersdorfer & Co. v. United States (U. S.) 122 Fed. 968.

WHEELED VEHICLE.

"Wheeled vehicle," as used in Act May 18, 1871, providing for the erection of a bridge, fixing the rates or tolls for every "carriage, wagon, buggy, or other wheeled vehicle of whatever description," does not apply to a street car. In the general sense of the term, a street car is a wheeled vehicle, the same as an ordinary railroad car is a vehicle; but both are vehicles of a somewhat extraordinary character in this respect; that they can only be used as a means of conveyance or transportation upon a permanent, continuous, and connected track. Monongahela Bridge Co. v. Pittsburg & B. T. R. R. Co., 8 Atl. 233, 236, 114 Pa. 478.

WHEN.

An instruction to disregard the testimony of a witness "when it is successfully proven that his reputation or general moral character is bad" is equivalent to "if it be successfully proven." State v. Haberle, 33 N. W. 461, 462, 72 Iowa, 140.

The word "when," in Act 1811, to amend the thirty-first section of the judiciary act of 1779, which contains the passage that, when an execution against the body of any defendant shall have been served, the party on whom the same shall have been served shall be released, provided, etc., is used in the sense of "if" or "whenever," and not as restricting the exercise of the right given to the very point of time at which the arrest takes place. Hening v. Nelson, 20 Ga. 583, 584.

"When," as used in a statute providing that, when any notary public shall protest certain instruments, he shall make and certify, on oath, a full and true record of what shall have been done, which certificate shall be admissible as evidence, does not mean "at the time" or "at which time." The word "when" is generally employed as equivalent to the word "if" in legislative enactments. Grimball v. Marshall, 11 Miss. (3 Smedes & M.) 359, 364.

"When," as used in Pub. St. c. 44, § 1, providing that it shall be the duty of the court to appoint commissioners when letters testamentary or of administration shall be granted, means no more than "in case" or "if." The court is not required to make the appointment at the same time when letters are granted. Wilkinson v. Winne's Estate, 15 Minn. 159, 166 (Gil. 123).

The word "when," as used in transfer tax law, providing that such tax shall be imposed when any such person or corporation as specified becomes beneficially entitled to any property by any such transfer, whether made before or after the passage of this act, clearly refers to future, and not to past, events. In re Birdsall's Estate, 49 N. Y. Supp. 450, 463, 22 Misc. Rep. 180.

The word "when," as used in the statute authorizing a motion for a new trial upon the minutes of the court, and providing that when such motion is heard and decided upon the minutes of the court, and an appeal is taken from the decision, the case or exceptions must be settled in the usual form, relates to the facts of the motion and its determination, and has the meaning the word "provided," or the words "in case," would have had, if used in the same connection. Van Brunt & Wilkins Mfg. Co. v. Kinney, 51 Minn. 337, 339, 53 N. W. 643, 644.

As after.

"When," as used in a contract providing that, when money is paid, the second party and her husband should release and discharge the party of the first part from all claims, dues, and demands which they or either of them might have against him, should be construed in the sense ascribed to it by lexicographers, as "at any time after." Kirts v. Peck, 21 N. E. 130, 131, 113 N. Y. 222.

Webster's Dictionary gives one of the definitions of the word "when" to be "after the time that"; and it has that meaning in Rev. Civ. St. art. 541, as amended by Act April 13, 1891, providing that when any town or city shall reincorporate under a certain statute, upon a majority vote of the legal voters, all property of the old corporation shall be vested in the new. City of Quanah v. White, 28 S. W. 1065, 1067, 88 Tex. 14.

As at the time of.

"The ordinary meaning of the adverb 'when' is 'at the time that.'" City of St. Louis v. Withaus, 3 S. W. 395, 397, 90 Mo. 646 (quoting Webst. Dict.).

In Act June 17, 1887, authorizing the filing of mechanics' liens on leaseholds, and providing that, when the materials are furnished or labor performed by others than the original contractor, they shall notify the owners or reputed owners of their intention to file a lien, the word "when" is equivalent to the words "at the time," and, after the work is done, a notice of an intention to file a lien comes too late. Strawick v. Munhall, 21 Atl. 151, 139 Pa. 163.

"When," as used in the contract for the sale of land, obligating the vendee to give his note for a certain sum when the deed is delivered, is not to be construed as requiring the delivery of the deed before execution of the note, but the two acts are contemporaneous, and the vendee is not entitled to specific performance without first tendering the note. Ware v. Lippincott (N. J.) 10 Atl. 404, 405.

A city charter providing that the mayor may by proclamation call special sessions of the Assembly, and shall specially state to them, "when assembled," the objects for which they have been convened, and their actions shall be confined to such objects, is to be construed to mean "at the time of assemblage." City of St. Louis v. Withaus, 3 S. W. 395, 397, 90 Mo. 646.

As word of condition.

"When," standing by itself and applied to legacies, is a word of condition. Johnson v. Baker, 7 N. C. 318, 321, 9 Am. Dec. 605.

The word "when," like "at," "if," "provided," etc., in a testamentary gift of personalty, is a word of condition, denoting, unless qualified by the context, the time when the gift is to take effect in substance; so that, if the legatee die before the period specified, the legacy is lapsed. Sellers' Ex'r v. Reed, 13 S. E. 754, 755, 88 Va. 377.

"When," as used respecting gifts of personal estate by will, is a word of condition, and imports that the time when the legatee is to receive the bounty is of the essence of the donation, unless there be some other expression to explain it or some provision in the context to control it. Guyther v. Taylor, 38 N. C. 323, 326.

As importing condition precedent.

A contract which provides that the money is to be paid when some particular thing is done means that the doing of such thing is a condition precedent. Adams v. Williams (Pa.) 2 Watts & S. 227, 228.

The condition of a bond providing that the obligor was to do a thing "when thereto requested" means that he was not obliged to perform the act unless the request was made. Jones v. Cooper (Vt.) 2 Alkns. 54, 58.

As used in a legacy going to daughters, equally to be divided between them when they shall arrive at 24 years of age, and giving all the residue to another, the word "when" denoted the period of payment, and was not to be deemed as a condition precedent on which the legacy was to vest, but merely postponed the payment thereof. May v. Wood, 3 Brown's Ch. 471, 474.

As creating a contingency.

"When," as used in the grant of a remainder, did not import a contingency or make anything necessary to precede the vesting of a remainder. Middleton's Heirs v. Middleton's Devisees (Ky.) 43 S. W. 677 (citing Williams v. Williams, 91 Ky. 554, 555, 16 S. W. 361; Williamson v. Williamson, 57 Ky. [18 B. Mon.] 329).

A will declaring that a certain legacy shall be paid to a legatee "when or if" he attains 21 vests the legacy at the death of the testator, and such legacy is not contingent upon the legatee attaining 21. Lister v. Bradley, 1 Hare, 10, 14.

"When," as used in a will giving one a legacy when he arrives at a certain age, means that the legacy is contingent. Colt v. Hubbard, 33 Conn. 281, 286; Post v. Herbert's Ex'rs, 27 N. J. Eq. (12 C. E. Green) 540, 543.

The words "when," and "whenever," referring to the time at which property is to be divided, will not be allowed to make a devise to children contingent, for these words and their synonyms almost always appear when a vested remainder is created. Manderson v. Lukens, 23 Pa. (11 Harris) 31, 62 Am. Dec. 312. "When" and "upon," referring to the time of performing an act, are substantially synonymous. Womrath v. McCormick, 51 Pa. (1 P. F. Smith) 504, 507 (citing Adams v. Williams [Pa.] 2 Watts & S. 227).

It is the general rule that a legacy to a person "when" or "as" he shall attain to a given age, is prima facie contingent; but circumstances, even though but slight, in the context, may be sufficient to show that the attainment of the specified age was not intended as a condition, but only to fix the time of payment, in which case it will be held to be a vested legacy. An exception to the general rule of construction above stated is that, where the postponement is for the benefit of the estate, the legacy vests at the death of the testator, notwithstanding the direction is to pay "when" or "as" the legatee attains to a specified age. Fisher v. Johnson, 38 N. J. Eq. (11 Stew.) 46, 66.

The expressions, "I give and bequeath to A. B. at the age of twenty-one," or "if he arrives at twenty-one," or "provided he lives to be twenty-one," or "in case of his arriving at twenty-one," or "when he arrives at the age of twenty-one," have all been held to be contingent legacies. Gifford v. Thorn, 9 N. J. Eq. (1 Stockt.) 702, 704, 729.

As if.

The word "when" means "at that time"; but this is not the only meaning of the word, it being often used for "if" or "in case." United States v. Willings, 8 U. S. (4 Cranch) 48, 54, 2 L. Ed. 548.

Defendant executed the following instrument: "I, the undersigned, herewith promise to pay to the widow G. on her wedding day, when she shall become my wife, the sum of One Thousand Dollars." The parties separated soon after the marriage, and the wife brought an action to recover the amount claimed to be due under the instrument. It was held that the word "when," as used in the instrument, was not used in the sense of "if," so as to express the consideration of the promise, but merely expressed the time when the payment should be made. Therefore the consideration for the promise was not sufficiently expressed in the agreement. Siemers v. Siemers, 85 Minn. 104, 106, 67 N. W. 802, 60 Am. St. Rep. 430.

As relating to time of vesting or enjoyment of estate.

When used in a devise of a remainder, limited upon a particular state and terminable on an event which may necessarily happen, the word "when" will be construed to relate merely to the time of the enjoyment of the estate, and not to the time of its vesting. Canfield v. Fallon, 57 N. Y. Supp. 149, 154 (citing Moore v. Lyons [N. Y.] 25 Wend. 119, 144; Sheridan v. House, *43 N. Y. [4 Keyes] 569; Livingston v. Greene, 52 N. Y. 118, 123; Ackerman v. Gorton, 67 N. Y. 63, 66; Nelson v. Russell, 135 N. Y. 137, 31 N. E. 1008; Haug v. Schumacher, 64 N. Y. Supp. 310, 313; Hersee v. Simpson, 48 N. E. 890, 891, 154 N. Y. 496; Frame v. Stewart (Pa.) 5 Watts, 433, 436. See, also, Boreston's Case, 3 Coke, 19, 21 (followed by Holcroft's Case, Moore, 486); Middleton's Heirs v. Middleton's Devisees (Ky.) 43 S. W. 677; Williamson v. Williamson, 57 Ky. (18 B. Mon.) 329, 375; Williams v. Williams, 91 Ky. 554, 555, 16 S. W. 361.

As used in a will leaving certain property to testator's children when they should respectively attain their ages of 21 years, or day or days of marriage, the word "when" did not denote merely the time at which the gifts were to take effect in possession, but the time when the gifts were to take effect in substance. It is the same, speaking of an uncertain event, whether you say "when" or "if" it shall happen. In the civil law the words "cum" and "si," as referred to this subject, are precisely equivalent. The word "when," not standing by itself, but coupled with other expressions or circumstances that have a reference to the time at which the possession of the thing is to take place, has been held by the civil law not to have so absolute a sense that it cannot be controlled. Hanson v. Graham, 6 Ves. Jr. 239, 243.

"The cases are common which hold that adverbs of time, such as 'when,' 'then,' 'after,' 'from and after,' etc., in the devise of a remainder limited upon a life estate, are to be construed merely as relating to the time of the enjoyment of the estate, and not to the time of its vesting in interest, and that the law favors such a construction of a will as will avoid the disinheritance of remaindermen who may happen to die before the determination of the precedent estates. In Connolly v. O'Brien, 60 N. E. 20, 166 N. Y. 406, the Court of Appeals carried this doctrine so far as to hold that where testator gave his property to his widow during her life, and to such of his children that 'may then be alive,' the adverb was intended by him to refer to the time of his own death and not to that of his widow, and that consequently a daughter who survived him, but died before the widow, took a vested share." Ackerman v. Ackerman, 71 N. Y. Supp. 780, 781, 63 App. Div. 370.

Where a will provided that testator gave and bequeathed unto his son J., when he arrived at the age of 21 years, a certain tract of land, to hold to him, his heirs and assigns, forever, and thereafter the testator bequeathed to his wife the use of the land until J. should become of age, the use of the word "when" did not limit the quality of the estate devised, but merely the time when J. was to be entitled to possession thereof, and hence the devise vested in him an absolute fee on the testator's death. Kerlin's Lessee v. Bull (Pa.) 1 Dall. 175, 177, 1 L. Ed. 88.

A devise to two children "when they shall attain the age of twenty-one years" means that the devise is vested, but the possession or enjoyment thereof is postponed until the devisees attain such age. Branstrom v. Wilkinson, 7 Ves. 422.

The word "when," like the words "at" and "if," applied to legacies of personalty, makes the gift contingent; but the superaddition of the words that the legacies are "equally to be divided among the beneficiaries" shows that the word "when" is used to designate the time of enjoyment of the legacy, and not to prevent its vesting. Sims v. Smith, 59 N. C. 347, 349.

The words "if" and "when," in a will, are ordinarily words of condition or of conditional limitation. It is equally clear that their meaning may be controlled by provisions in the will which show an intention that the legacy shall be vested. Thus, a will giving each of testator's children a pecuniary legacy when the youngest child arrives at the age of 12 years, and providing that the whole estate shall be enjoyed by testator's family in common until that time, creates a vested legacy. Sutton v. West, 77 N. C. 429, 431.

"When recovered," as used in a will by which legacies were to be paid out of the money due on a mortgage "when the same shall be recovered," did not suspend or postpone the right of the legatees to the interest. Wood v. Penoyre, 13 Ves. 325, 337.

As at which time.

"When" means "at which time." Williams v. Washington Life Ins. Co., 81 Iowa, 541, 544 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

As where.

"When," as used in Gen. St. 1889, par. 1259, providing that, when any railroad runs through improved or fenced land, the railroad company shall make proper cattle guards on such road when they enter and when they leave, has the meaning of "whenever," regardless of whether the land is fenced when the road is built, and is not equivalent to "where." Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Billings, 52 Pac. 61, 63, 7 Kan. App. 399.

As whenever.

As used in Laws 1886, c. 335, authorizing the city of Brooklyn to buy certain waterworks when and at such price as may be agreed on, and providing that, if the parties were unable to agree on a price, the power to acquire said property by eminent domain was delegated to the city, and the officers thereof, within two years thereafter, might acquire such property, the word "when" relates to a point of time in the progress of a simple negotiation, and not in the sense of an unlimited future. It does not have the effect of the word "whenever." It contemplates a possible agreement as to price in the course of the only authorized negotiation of the one permitted effort to buy, and, "when" that occurs, the authority to purchase arises; but, if the single negotiation contemplated ends in a disagreement, the city may condemn, but must exercise the right within two years or not at all. Zeigler v. Chapin, 27 N. E. 471, 473, 126 N. Y. 342.

As as soon as.

In an action against a railroad for negligence it was said: "The language of the finding is not that 'when' he had passed the car, and his horses had gone to within 10 feet of the main track, he looked, and then pulled on his lines. The sense of the language of the finding is that 'as soon as' he had passed he looked, or 'just after the moment' of passing he looked, or he passed the car at the time he looked." The quoted words are definitions of the word "when," given by the Century Dictionary, and sustained by Webster's International Dictionary (Ed. 1893). When he had passed the car and looked, and when he had pulled upon the lines and endeavored to stop the horses, it was then that the horses were 10 feet from defendant's main track. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Burton, 38 N. E. 594, 139 Ind. 357.

Upon synonymous.

"When" and "upon," referring to the time of performing an act, are substantially synonymous. Womrath v. McCormick, 51 Pa. 504, 507 (citing Adams v. Williams [Pa.] 2 Watts & S. 227).

WHEN ABLE.

A promise by a debtor to pay "when able" amounts to a promise to pay on condition, the burden of proof of the fulfillment of which is on the creditor. Cole v. Saxby, 3 Esp. 159, 160; Penn v. Bennet, 4 Camp. 205; Besford v. Saunders, 2 H. Bl. 116; Walt v. Morris (N. Y.) 6 Wend. 394, 396; Cartledge v. West (N. Y.) 2 Denio, 377, 378; Everson v. Carpenter (N. Y.) 17 Wend. 419, 420; Wakeman v. Sherman, 9 N. Y. 85, 92; Proctor v. Sears, 86 Mass. (4 Allen) 95; Chandler v. Glover, 32 Pa. (8 Casey) 509; Davies v. Smith, 4 Esp. 36; Bush v. Barnard (N. Y.) 8 Johns. 407; Salinas v. Wright, 11 Tex. 572, 575 (citing Mitchell v. Clay, 8 Tex. 445); Thompson v. Lay, 21 Mass. (4 Pick.) 47, 49.

A promise to pay "when able," "as soon as possible," "when I can," "as soon as he could," construed not to render a promise conditional; such phrases being held too uncertain to constitute a condition. Horner v. Starkey, 27 Ill. 13, 14; Norton v. Shephard, 48 Conn. 141, 142, 40 Am. Rep. 157; Cummings v. Gassett, 19 Vt. 308, 310; First Congregational Soc. v. Miller, 15 N. H. 520, 522.

A new promise to pay a debt barred by the statute of limitations, "when able," was a conditional promise, and, the debtor having a right to impose conditions on his promise, the debt being barred, and he being under no legal obligation to pay the same, the creditor could not recover thereon in the absence of proof of the debtor's ability to pay, which was a question of fact. Richardson v. Bricker, 1 Pac. 433, 434, 7 Colo. 58, 49 Am. Rep. 344.

Where an insolvent or bankrupt, after his discharge, agrees to pay one of his debts, existing prior to the discharge, "when able," there is not an absolute, but a conditional, promise. Scouton v. Elslord (N. Y.) 7 Johns. 86, 37.

WHEN CONVENIENT.

See "Convenience—Convenient."

WHEN IN FUNDS.

When a bill of exchange or order for money is accepted to be paid "when in funds," the import of that condition is "when the acceptor is in possession of cash which the drawer has a present right to demand and receive." It would not apply to the wages for the daily labor of the drawer, due from the acceptor to him after the acceptance, such wages being necessary for the support of himself and family. In Campbell v. Pettengill, 7 Me. (7 Greenl.) 126, 20 Am. Dec. 349, the question came directly up, and the court determined that the phrase "when in funds" means when the acceptor has in his hands money of the drawer sufficient to pay the bill. Wintermute v. Post, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 420, 423.

WHEN MANUFACTURED.

An authority to an agent to make sales of sherry "when manufactured" authorizes the agent to sell manufactured sherry only, and not to make sales of sherry to be manufactured. Merriam v. De Turk, 6 Pac. 424, 66 Cal. 549.

WHEN WANTED.

A note payable "when wanted" is payable on demand. Goodwin v. Hazzard, 1 Ind. 514, 515.

WHENEVER.

"Whenever" is often used as equivalent to "as soon as," but it is also often used where the time intended by it is and will be, until its arrival, or for some uncertain period at least, indeterminate. The word was construed in the latter meaning in a will directing a distribution of certain property whenever the younger child of testator's daughter should have reached the age of 21 years. Robinson v. Greene, 14 R. I. 181, 188.

Laws 1890, c. 37, art. 3, § 5, declaring that the mayor shall have power to remove any officer appointed by him whenever he shall be of the opinion that the interests of the city demand it, confers on the mayor an absolute power, which vests in him without limitation or qualification, and gives him the right to remove any person appointed by him at will; the last clause of the section not being in the nature of a proviso or a condition precedent to such removal, but merely requiring that the mayor shall make the report to the city council for the purpose, evidently, of apprising the council and the citizens generally of the reasons which influenced him in his action. The mayor's failure to make such report, however, does not affect his action in making the removal. State v. Williams, 60 N. W. 410, 412, 6 S. D. 119.

The word "whenever" is an adverb of time rather than place, and its indication is future rather than past. Kennebec & P. R. Co. v. Portland & K. R. Co., 59 Me. 9, 61.

As at any time.

As used in Gen. St. c. 80, § 73, enacting that, whenever service of process cannot be made on any person liable as sheriff by reason of the removal of such person, an action of debt or sci. fa. may be brought, the word "whenever" covers all the time during which the liability of the sheriff would exist, and looks directly to the act of making service of the process. If, at any time during the existence of such liability, process cannot be served by reason of the removal of the sheriff, then the action against the sureties may be had. Hine v. Pomeroy, 40 Vt. 103, 107.

As used in Act Jan. 28, 1885, as amended by Act Feb. 12, 1885, § 1, providing that whenever any city or town incorporated under the general municipal corporation act should be indebted in a certain sum and defaulted in the payment of its interest, its charter should be repealed, and the incorporation thereof dissolved, "whenever" means "at whatever time," and does not apply only to cities which were, at its approval, indebted in the sum mentioned. Ex parte Wells, 21 Fla. 280, 301.

"Whenever," as used in Pol. Code, § 437, providing that whenever any person has received moneys belonging to or held in trust for the state, and fails to render an account thereof and to make settlement with the comptroller within the time prescribed by law, the comptroller must state an account with such person, charging 25 per cent. damages and interest, simply means the same as "if"; i. e., in those cases in which parties receiving money do not account, etc. It does not mean at whatever time moneys have been received. People v. Melone, 15 Pac. 294, 296, 13 Cal. 574.

The term "whenever it appears that the justice has no jurisdiction thereof," as used in Code, c. 50, § 66, providing that an action shall be dismissed at plaintiff's cost in such case, obviously means if it appears at any time during the trial, by the evidence or otherwise, the action shall be dismissed. Mountain City Mill Co. v. Southern, 34 S. E. 782, 783, 46 W. Va. 754.

As importing contingency.

"Whenever," as used in a will providing that, whenever the death or marriage of testator's widow should take place, the property should be equally divided among his children, cannot make the devise to the children contingent, for that word or its synonyms almost always appear where a vested remainder is created. Manderson v. Lukens, 23 Pa. (11 Harris) 31, 33, 62 Am. Dec. 312.

As in all cases.

Rev. St. c. 26, § 19, providing that "whenever," at the time and place appointed for the trial of any civil suit before a justice, such justice should be unable to attend, any other justice might continue the cause, means in all cases which should need the intervention of another justice. Whitcomb v. Rood, 20 Vt. 49, 53.

WHERE.

The word "where" is defined as meaning "at which or what place." Cook v. Kelsey, 19 N. Y. 412, 414.

Adverbs of time, as "where," "thereafter," "from," etc., in a devise of a remainder, are construed to relate merely to the time of the enjoyment of the estate, and not the time of the vesting in interest. Poor v. Considine, 73 U. S. (6 Wall.) 458, 474, 18 L. Ed. 869, 874.

WHERE SITUATED.

The law providing that all other personal property, including shares in national banks, shall be taxed "where situated," and being silent as to the definition of these words, by implication adopts the ordinary rule that personal property in the nature of bank shares follows the situs of the owner. Smith v. Webb, 11 Minn. 500, 514 (Gil. 378, 390).

WHEREAS.

The word "whereas" is defined to mean "the thing being so that"; "considering that things are so." Dean v. Clark, 80 Hun. 80, 83, 30 N. Y. Supp. 45, 47.

The word "whereas," as used in an indictment for perjury averring that "whereas, in truth and in fact, * * * he * * * was down to S.'s corral," is not used in the sense of being a mere recital, but is used as a positive averment. People v. Ennis, 70 Pac. 84, 86, 137 Cal. 263.

WHEREFORE.

The word "wherefore" is defined as meaning "for which reason"; and an averment in a plea, "Wherefore the defendants say that said premium note was and is void," is held not to render the plea argumentative. Lycoming Fire Ins. Co. v. Wright, 55 Vt. 526, 531.

WHEREON.

A contract for the construction of a bridge, providing that the company for whom the bridge was to be built should have a lien upon such machines, implements, and materials as should for the time being be in or upon the "lands or grounds whereon said bridge was to be built," as a security for the completion of the works, includes all places in which the building of the bridge, in a popular sense, is being carried on, if such places were in the possession of the person for whom the bridge was to be built, so that they might be considered as having a possession of the articles there placed. Hawthorn v. Newcastle upon Tyne & North Shields R. Co., 3 Adol. & E. 733, 738.

WHERESOEVER.

In a will by which the testator devised and bequeathed "all my estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever," the word "wheresoever" pointed to locality, and was peculiarly applicable to real estate. Stokes v. Salomons, 4 Eng. Law & Eq. 133, 137.

WHEREUPON.

"Whereupon" does not necessarily imply immediate, instantaneous action, but it does imply action in consequence of and without change in the facts antecedently stated as the moving cause, and "after which," "upon which," "in consequence of which," the subsequent fact took place; and where a record stated that the jury had retired to consider their verdict, and they returned into court with the same, and presented it, finding the prisoner guilty, "whereupon the prisoner moved to set aside the verdict," the record will be deemed to show that the prisoner was actually present in court at the time. Gilligan v. Commonwealth, 37 S. E. 962, 964, 99 Va. 816.

"Whereupon" is not a word expressing a definite time, but as contained in a docket entry stating that the jury returned a verdict, "whereupon the court rendered judgment," means that the judgment was rendered on the verdict without an adjournment. State v. Van Ellis, 32 N. W. 32, 33, 69 Wis. 19.

"Whereupon," as the term is used in a justice's transcript, as follows: "The plaintiff appeared according to notice, and the defendant did not appear until after 4 o'clock, whereupon I gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff," etc.—means that upon the defendant's appearance he gave judgment, etc. Bartow v. Smyth, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 286, 288.

WHEREVER.

In Act March 13, 1815, declaring that on due proof that process had been served personally on a party, wherever found, or that a copy had been given to him or her 15 days before the return of the same, a divorce might be decreed, the words "wherever found" could not be construed so as to give the court extraterritorial power, without its jurisdiction over a person, citizen, or resident of another state. Appeal of Ralston, 93 Pa. 133, 136.

A bond requiring the appearance of defendant "wherever the King shall then be in England," is to be construed to mean "Westminster." Jones v. Stordy, 9 East, 55, 56.

WHERRY.

A wherry is a craft plying for hire for the carrying of passengers. Reg. v. Reed, 28 Eng. Law & Eq. 133, 135.

A wherry is a boat plying for hire and carrying passengers or goods, and does not include a steam tug used for towing boats. Reed v. Ingham, 26 Eng. Law & Eq. 164, 167.

WHETHER.

The word "whether" neither in common parlance nor in legal phraseology has ever had the force of a videlicet. The word "whether" in the act of March 25, 1831—an act authorizing a tax on personal property, and describing the property made taxable by its provisions as "all ground rents, moneys at interest, and all debts due from solvent debtors, whether by promissory notes (except bank notes), penal or single bill, bond, mortgage, judgment, stocks," etc.—requires some correlative, generally the word "or." "It may be true that in construing penal acts an enumeration after the word 'whether' might be held as exclusive; as, if a statute making horse stealing a felony punished with death had been worded 'all horses, mares, or colts, whether black or white,' the court, in favorem vitæ, would perhaps adjudge that stealing a bay horse would not come under the statute, but in construing a statute enacting that 'horses of all descriptions, whether black or white, should be taxed six cents a head,' I think a judge would be considered capriciously astute who would say that the Legislature meant to tax only black and white horses. Money payable under articles of agreement, and bearing interest, held taxable for school purposes under the above act." Voegtly v. Third Ward School Directors, 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 330, 331, 332.

WHICH.

See "At Which Time."

The word "which" gives writers a good deal of trouble, and its usage is varying, as a consultation of any standard work on grammar will show. It is often equivalent to "and it" or "that," used restrictively; but such usage is said not to be generally observed by modern writers in this country, and the rule is given that "which" is to be used in preference to "that" or "and it" whenever it introduces a new fact about the antecedent. State of Tennessee v. Bank of Commerce (U. S.) 53 Fed. 735, 743.

In determining whether a clause beginning with the word "which" related to one or more antecedents in a contract, it was said that the word "which" often has more than one antecedent, and that therefore there would be no reason for limiting the clause beginning with the word "which" to one of the antecedents. Lowrey v. Cowles Electric Smelting & Aluminum Co. (U. S.) 68 Fed. 854, 872.

Tariff Act 1875, providing that certain specified silk articles and ready-made clothing of silk, or "of which silk is the component material" of chief value, only applies to ready-made clothing "of which silk is the component material" of chief value, and does not authorize such duty on the other articles designated as being composed of silk. Wilson v. Spalding (U. S.) 19 Fed. 413, 415.

The words "which I hold," in the bequest of "all my 250 shares of capital stock which I hold in the Union Bank of Pennsylvania," certainly indicates the stock as constituting a part of the corpus of the estate with as much precision as would the words "standing in my name," which made the bequest specific in Sleech v. Thornton, 2 Ves. 561, or the words "all the stock which I have in the three per cents.," which was allowed to have the same effect in Humphreys v. Humphreys, 2 Cox, 184, and it is even more specific than the words in Drinkwater v. Falconer, "to be paid out of my dividends of 400 pounds in the joint stock of South Sea annuities, now standing in the company's books in my name," which were held to be sufficiently so, though the stock was described as a fund for payment, because the residue was given in nearly the same terms, and charged with the preceding bequest. Blackstone v. Blackstone (Pa.) 3 Watts, 335, 338, 27 Am. Dec. 359.

Act April 8, 1875 (Revision, p. 1166), providing that no certificate of sale or tax title shall be set aside, etc., by reason of any variance between the date of the notice required by law and the actual publication thereof, provided that notice shall have been or shall be actually given for the specified number of days prior to such proceedings for public sale, is prospective only. The stress, in the opinion below, laid upon the grammatical construction of the words "which shall have been," as used in the act, was here criticised and remarked upon as an effort to escape from a possible or probable retroactive meaning under rules of accurate composition, which do not necessarily control in the interpretation of statutes. But it is not enough that words used in an act may be given a retrospect, without doing violence to their meaning, or that such a course may coincide with their common understanding. Citizens' Gas Light Co. v. Alden, 44 N. J. Law (15 Vroom) 648, 653.

WHILE.

See "Once in a While."

"While" is defined either as a conjunction or as an adverbial modifier—as "during the time that," "as long as"; so that, as used in Const. art. 5, § 3, providing that for the purpose of voting no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence while kept at any asylum at public expense, means that no residence shall be gained during the time that, or as long as, a person is kept at an asylum. Lawrence v. Leidigh, 50 Pac. 600, 602, 58 Kan. 594, 62 Am. St. Rep. 631 (citing Silvey v. Lindsay, 107 N. Y. 55, 13 N. E. 444; Wolcott v. Holcomb, 97 Mich. 361, 363, 56 N. W. 837, 838, 23 L. R. A. 215).

A policy of insurance which insured a hophouse from the 15th of August to the 15th of October, "while drying hops," should be construed to limit the contract of insurance to the destruction of the building while being used for drying hops, and, if destroyed while not so used, the insured could not recover for the loss. Langworthy v. Oswego & O. Ins. Co., 85 N. Y. 632, 633.

WHILE CONTAINED IN.

The words "while contained in," in a fire policy on certain described chattels while contained in a certain dwelling house, may be held to confine the operation of the policy to such times as the articles are contained in a house answering the description; but we see no reason why they should do more than suspend the insurance while the articles are not contained in such house. Ring v. Phoenix Assur. Co., 14 N. E. 525, 528, 145 Mass. 426.

WHILE FRESH IN HIS RECOLLECTION.

The statement that memoranda are inadmissible to refresh the memory of a witness, unless reduced to writing "while fresh in his recollection," has apparently a very unsettled meaning. In Wood v. Cooper, 1 Carr. & K. 646, a witness was allowed to look at his examination before commissioners in bankruptcy, signed by him, given within a fortnight of the time of the happening of certain occurrences, and when the facts were fresh in his memory. So, in State v. Colwell, 3 R. I. 132, a witness was allowed to refer to a memorandum made a day or two after a previous trial, when an interval of about eight days had elapsed from the time when the occurrences transpired concerning which the witness gave testimony. In Billingslea v. State, 85 Ala. 323, 5 South. 137, it was held proper to allow a witness to refresh his recollection by resort to the minutes of statements made to a grand jury within a week after the occurrence about which he was being interrogated. In Spring Garden Mut. Ins. Co. v. Evans, 15 Md. 54, 74 Am. Dec. 555, it was held that a witness who, five months after the occurrence of certain facts, and at the request of a party interested, made a statement in writing and swore to it, could not be allowed to testify to his belief in its correctness. Putnam v. United States, 16 Sup. Ct. 923, 927, 162 U. S. 687, 40 L. Ed. 1118.

WHILE VIOLATING LAW.

The expression "while violating the law," used in an accident insurance policy exempting the insurer from liability if the disability was incurred while violating the law, was evidently intended to comprehend acts that would avoid the risk if done at any time. They must be in the nature of contributing causes, and not mere conditions of the accident. In an action to recover on an accident policy by one injured on Sunday in attempting to get pigeons in the cupola of his barn, it is no defense that labor is prohibited by Code 1873, § 4072, on Sunday. Matthes v. Imperial Acc. Ass'n, 81 N. W. 484, 485, 110 Iowa, 222.

The expression "while or in consequence of violating any law," as used in an accident policy, providing that the contract of insurance shall not cover an injury received while or in consequence of violating any law, does not prohibit the insured from riding on his bicycle on Sunday to attend the funeral of his friend, when he was injured when returning by another road, four miles longer than the direct road to his home, notwithstanding the provisions of Rev. St. c. 124, § 20, relating to the Lord's Day. Eaton v. Atlas Acc. Ins. Co., 38 Atl. 1048, 1049, 89 Me. 570.

WHILST.

Whilst actually on duty, see "Actually on Duty."

In a lease in which a pump was not a specific subject of the demise, but which contained a covenant by the lessor that during the term he would permit plaintiff to have free ingress through the gate in the yard, and the use of a pump in the yard whilst the same should remain there, paying half the expenses of keeping it in repair, the use of the word "whilst" reserved to the lessor the power of removing the pump at his pleasure. Rhodes v. Bullard, 7 East, 116, 119.

WHISKY.

See "Straight Whiskies."

Whisky is a spirit distilled from grain. Briffitt v. State, 16 N. W. 39, 40, 58 Wis. 39, 46 Am. Rep. 621; Watson v. State, 55 Ala. 158, 160; State v. Williamson, 21 Mo. 496, 498.

Whisky is a spirit distilled from grain; generally from barley, maize, wheat, rye, or from potatoes. It is a spirituous liquor. Freese v. State, 2 South. 1, 4, 23 Fla. 267.

The use of the term "whisky," in an indictment charging defendant with selling intoxicating liquors, to wit, one quart of whisky, is sufficient to show the sale of fermented or distilled liquor, within the meaning of the statute prohibiting the sale of such liquor. State v. Williamson, 21 Mo. 496, 498; Caldwell v. State, 30 South. 814, 815, 43 Fla. 545.

The courts judicially know that whisky is a spirituous liquor, so that a complaint charging defendant with selling whisky to an Indian is sufficient under a statute making it a crime to sell spirituous liquors to an Indian. State v. Murphy, 48 Pac. 628, 629, 23 Nev. 390.

As a drug.

See "Drug."

As an intoxicating liquor.

Whisky is intoxicating liquor. "That whisky will intoxicate is as well known as that fire will burn or water will drown." Eagan v. State, 53 Ind. 162, 163 (citing Carmon v. State, 18 Ind. 450, 451).

Whisky is alcohol mingled with water and other elements, of which alcohol alone is intoxicating. The words "mixed liquor, a part of which is intoxicating," did not properly describe any well-known kind of intoxicating liquor, but they are not inconsistent with the general words "intoxicating liquor," and include "whisky." Commonwealth v. Morgan, 21 N. E. 369, 149 Mass. 314.

As long as the laws for licensing the sale of intoxicating liquors have existed, brandy, whisky, gin, rum, and other alcoholic liquids have been held to be intoxicating liquors per se, simply because it is within the common knowledge and ordinary understanding that they are intoxicating liquors. Snider v. State, 7 S. E. 631, 632, 81 Ga. 753, 12 Am. St. Rep. 350.

Courts and juries will take knowledge of the fact that whisky and brandy are intoxicating liquors. It needs no evidence to support a fact so well known. State v. Lewis, 90 N. W. 318, 86 Minn. 174.

Judicial notice will be taken that whisky is an intoxicating liquor, and therefore an indictment for the unlawful sale of spirituous liquor commonly called "whisky" is sufficient, without an averment that the whisky sold was an intoxicating liquor. Schlicht v. State, 56 Ind. 173-176.

As a spirituous liquor.

"Whisky" is judicially known to be a spirituous liquor. Pedigo v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 70 S. W. 659.

WHISKY COCKTAIL.

A whisky cocktail is only a mode of preparing whisky as a beverage. Evidence of the sale of a "whisky cocktail" under an indictment for selling "whisky" is not a variance. Galloway v. State, 5 S. W. 248, 248, 23 Tex. App. 398.

WHISTLING.

"Whistling," as applied to a horse, is a noise made in respiration while trotting or cantering, and though at first it does not indicate any defect in pace or endurance, yet it is apt to increase, and indicate such defects. King-King v. Cave (cited in 29 Alb. Law J. 25).

WHITE.

Ballots upon paper tinged with blue, which has ruled lines not placed there as marks to distinguish the ballots, are upon "white paper," within the meaning of Act 1849, p. 74, § 15, providing that no ballot shall be received or counted unless the same is written or printed upon white paper without any marks thereon intended to distinguish one ballot from another. People v. Kilduff, 15 Ill. 492, 501, 60 Am. Dec. 769.

Act Oct. 1, 1890, c. 1244, par. 419, 28 Stat. 590, relating to the duties on "tissue paper, white or colored," includes tissue having certain colors in stripes and plaids printed or stamped thereon, and not of one uniform color. Kraft v. United States (U. S.) 61 Fed. 398.

WHITE HARD ENAMEL.

White hard enamel is an article of commerce which is used for various purposes, including the making of faces or surfaces of watch dials, scale columns, and thermometers, faces or surfaces of steam-gauge dials, and for other purposes where a smooth or enameled surface is desired. Worthington v. Robbins, 11 Sup. Ct. 581, 582, 139 U. S. 337, 35 L. Ed. 181.

WHITE LEAD.

"White lead is manufactured as follows: Small earthen pots are partially filled with vinegar or acetic acid. Pig lead of commerce, cast into round, perforated plates, technically called "buckles," are placed in the pots above the acid, and not in contact with it. The pots thus filled are placed in a chamber upon a layer of spent tanbark. Alternate layers of pots and tanbark are filled up to the roof of the chamber. Air is introduced into the chamber through flues and natural crevices. The tanbark contains moisture, becomes heated, and evolves carbonic acid. By chemical action the lead is oxidized by the oxygen of the air, and then, in combination with the carbonic acid, becomes a carbonate of the oxide of lead." Meyer v. Arthur, 91 U. S. 570, 571, 23 L. Ed. 455.

WHITE PERSON.

"White person," as used in the naturalization laws, means a person of the Caucasian race. In re Camille (U. S.) 6 Fed. 256, 257; In re Ah Yup (U. S.) 1 Fed. Cas. 223; In re Kanaka Nian, 21 Pac. 993, 6 Utah, 259, 4 L. R. A. 726.

"White person," as used in the Constitution and statutes, "has a distinct signification, which ex vi termini excludes black, yellow, and all other colors." It is used, "in its generic sense, as including the Caucasian race, and necessarily excluding all others." People v. Hall, 4 Cal. 399, 404.

"White," as used in the legislation of the slave period, meant persons without a mixture of colored blood, whatever the actual complexion might be. Du Val v. Johnson, 39 Ark. 182, 192.

In sustaining a bequest "for the special benefit of the worthy, deserving, poor, white, American, Protestant, Democratic widows and orphans residing in the town of Bridgeport, Connecticut," the court said: "They must be white. It is as difficult to declare of a person that he has color as that he has none. For many years, by the Constitution of this state, only white men were permitted to vote. If the word has in the general mind a meaning so sharply defined that it can be put to a use so practical and important, we think it may well support a charitable bequest." Beardsley v. Selectmen of Bridgeport, 53 Conn. 489, 493, 3 Atl. 557, 559, 55 Am. Rep. 152.

The term "negro," as used in the article prohibiting the intermarriage of white persons and negroes, includes also a person of mixed blood descended from negro ancestry from the third generation, inclusive, although one ancestor of each generation may have been a white person. All persons not included in the definition of negro shall be deemed a white person. Pen. Code Tex. 1895, art. 347.

Chinese or Japanese.

"White person," as used in Rev. St. p. 1, relative to naturalization, and providing that the act shall apply to white persons and aliens of African nativity, means a person of the Caucasian race, and should not be construed to include Chinese, or other members of the Mongolian race. In re Ah Yup (U. S.) 1 Fed. Cas. 223.

The word "white," as used in the United States naturalization laws, applies to the race commonly referred to as the "Caucasian race." A native of Japan is not a "white person," within the meaning of the naturalization laws. In re Takuji Yamashita, 70 Pac. 482, 483, 30 Wash. 234, 59 L. R. A. 671; In re Saito (U. S.) 62 Fed. 126.

The word "white" has a distinct signification, which ex vi termini excludes black, yellow, and all other colors. Under Civ. Prac. Act, § 394, providing that no Indian or negro shall be allowed to testify as a witness in any action in which a white person is a party, and Cr. Act, § 14, providing that no black or mulatto person or Indian shall be allowed to give evidence in favor of or against a white man, Chinese and all other peoples not white are included in the prohibition from being witnesses against whites. People v. Hall, 4 Cal. 399, 404.

Indian.

A person of half white and half Indian blood is not a "white person," within the meaning of this phrase as used in the naturalization laws. In re Camille (U. S.) 6 Fed. 256, 257.

A person the offspring of a white man and a half-breed Indian woman, being nearer white than Indian, is considered as white, so as to be entitled to the right of franchise guaranteed by the Constitution to free white citizens. Jeffries v. Ankeny, 11 Ohio, 372, 375.

Hawaiian.

"White person," as used in Rev. St. § 2169 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1333], providing that only white persons or Africans may become citizens, etc., includes only individuals of the Caucasian race, notwithstanding Act May 6, 1882, c. 126, 22 Stat. 61, § 14, declares that no court shall naturalize Chinese. In re Kanaka Nian, 21 Pac. 993, 6 Utah, 259, 4 L. R. A. 726.

Within the import of a statute prohibiting the marriage of a white person with any negro, etc., a person having but one-sixteenth or one-eighth of colored blood, is a white person. Bailey v. Fiske, 34 Me. 77.

Mixed negro blood.

The children of a white mother and a father three-fourths white, having more than one-half white blood, are "white," within the meaning of 29 Ohio Laws, 422, providing that, while a teacher is employed out of the common school fund, the school shall be free to all "white children." The term describes blood, not complexion, which would be an unsafe guide. Williams v. School Directors of Dist. No. 6 (Ohio) Wright, 578, 579.

"White children," within the meaning of the statute giving white children school rights, includes children of negro, Indian, or white blood, but of more than one-half white blood. Lane v. Baker, 12 Ohio, 237, 243.

A person nearer white than black is considered white, so as to be competent as a witness in a criminal prosecution against a quadroon. Gray v. State, 4 Ohio (4 Ham.) 353, 354.

All persons in whom white blood so far preponderates that they have less than one-fourth of African blood are within the meaning of the Constitution, limiting the elective franchise to "white male citizens." People v. Dean, 14 Mich. 406, 414.

The term "white citizen," in Const. 1851, art. 5, § 1, providing that every white male citizen of the United States at the age of 21 years, etc., shall be entitled to vote at all elections, includes persons having a mixture of African blood, but a preponderance of white blood, or being more black than white. Anderson v. Millikin, 9 Ohio St. 568, 570; Monroe v. Collins, 17 Ohio St. 665, 685.

A person having one-fourth of African blood is not a white person, but a mulatto or negro. Gentry v. McMinnis, 33 Ky. (3 Dana) 382, 385, 386.

In Louisiana, and by the Code Noir of France for her colonies, the descendant of a white and a quadroon, or a person having one-eighth part of negro blood, is accounted a white. The rule does not exist as a matter of law in South Carolina, but it may be of use to juries in their decisions, not as a rule of law, but as being founded on experience and conformity to fact. State v. Davis (S. C.) 2 Bailey, 558, 560.

Negro.

"White person," as used in Rev. St. §§ 2154, 2155, providing that whenever the property of a friendly Indian is taken in the Indian country by a white person he shall be entitled, as damages, to a sum equal to twice the value of the property taken, etc., should not be construed to mean "not an Indian," but to mean what the words ordinarily import, and to exclude a negro. United States v. Perryman, 100 U. S. 235, 238, 25 L. Ed. 645.

WHITING.

Whiting is chalk which has been dried, and afterwards levigated and again dried; and chalk, as we all know, is a soft mineral substance consisting almost entirely of carbonate of lime. United States v. Tiffany (U. S.) 117 Fed. 367.

WHO.

The word "who," in a statute providing for a board of review composed of certain persons, who shall be appointed by the judge of the circuit court, "who shall each be paid," etc., may be said to perform dual functions, serving as a pronoun and also as a conjunction, and is equivalent to the words "and they." Seller v. State, 67 N. E. 448, 449, 160 Ind. 605.

WHOEVER.

Burns' Ann. St. 1894, § 2194 (Horner's Ann. St. 1897, § 2098), providing that whoever shall sell, barter, or give away intoxicants on a certain day shall be punished, etc., applies to dealers only, and not to one giving liquor to a friend as an act of hospitality in his private rooms. Austin v. State, 53 N. E. 481, 22 Ind. App. 221.

Artificial persons.

"Whoever," as used in Rev. St. 1881, § 2204, as amended by Acts 1883, providing penalties for whoever, with intent to defraud another, designedly, by color of any false writing or pretense, obtains from any person any money or thing of value, refers to a person or persons, and should be construed to include a city as an artificial person. State v. Bruner, 35 N. E. 22, 24, 135 Ind. 419.

In construing Rev. St. c. 30, § 12, providing that whoever kills or destroys or has in possession certain game at a certain time of the year shall forfeit, etc., the court say that the statute may in general terms be broad enough to embrace corporations as well as natural persons within its prohibition. Bennett v. American Exp. Co., 22 Atl. 159, 160, 83 Me. 236, 13 L. R. A. 33, 23 Am. St. Rep. 774.

In the act relating to cruelty to animals, the words "owner," "person," and "whoever" shall be held to include corporations as well as individuals. Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 11,748; Rev. St. Utah 1898, § 4459.

Males and females.

The general terms "whoever," "any person," "any one," and the relative pronouns "he" and "they," as used in the Penal Code, include females as well as males, unless there is some express declaration to the contrary. Pen. Code Tex. 1893, art. 21.

Public officers.

Gen. St. c. 3, § 7, cl. 8, providing that "whoever" brings into and leaves any poor and indigent person in any place in the state wherein such pauper is not lawfully settled shall forfeit a certain sum, should be construed to include public officers as well as private persons. Inhabitants of Palmer v. Wakefield, 102 Mass. 214, 215.

WHOLE.

See "In the Whole."

The words "whole of the property she brought me," in a bequest to testator's wife, is plainly indicative of an intention to separate the thing bequeathed from the general property of the testator, and renders the bequest specific. The phrase clearly means all the property acquired by her in marriage. Warren v. Wigfall (S. C.) 8 Desaus. 47, 49.

A will devising the "whole of my lands" to certain persons includes land acquired by the testator after the publication of his will, when no intention to the contrary appears. Edwards v. Warren, 90 N. C. 604, 606.

WHOLE CAPITAL.

"Whole," as used in a statute providing that corporations should be subject to an annual tax at a certain rate on each dollar of the actual value of its whole capital stock of all kinds, including common, special, and preferred, was used by the Legislature for the purpose of excluding all doubt about the taxability of the various classes into which the stock might be divided, and with no reference to the character of the investments in which the capital might be employed. Commonwealth v. Lehigh Coal & Navigation Co., 29 Atl. 664, 666, 162 Pa. 603.

Sess. Laws 1866, c. 761, § 1, declares that the stockholders of any bank shall be assessed and taxed on the value of their shares of stock therein, but not at a greater rate than is assessed on other money or capital, and that in making such assessment there shall be deducted from the value of such shares such sum as is in proportion to such value as is the assessed value of the real estate of the bank to the whole amount of the capital stock of said bank. Held, that the phrase "whole amount of the capital stock" referred to its value, and not to the nominal amount of capital. People v. Taxes and Assessments Com'rs, 69 N. Y. 91, 94.

WHOLE COST.

St. Louis City Charter 1870, art. 8, § 18, providing that the city engineer shall indorse on every ordinance requiring public work to be done the "whole cost" of each street or other object respectively, and that every contract shall contain a clause that the aggregate payments thereon shall be limited by the amount of the specific appropriation for such work, does not relate to the engineer's estimate, but means the amount which is to be paid out of the city treasury for the work, distinct from the amount to be paid by adjoining property holders. Selbert v. Cavender, 8 Mo. App. 421, 424.

WHOLE DAY.

The term "whole day," as used in the common statement that on dishonor of a bill of exchange the holder is entitled to one whole day to prepare his notice, is not to be understood in its absolutely literal sense, but the holder is required to give notice during business hours of the day following that on which the bill is dishonored. Chick v. Pillsbury, 24 Ma. (11 Shep.) 458, 478, 41 Am. Dec. 394.

WHOLE ESTATE.

A will defining the residuary estate as testator's "whole estate" includes income as well as capital, and is equally broad with the term "all my estate," as used in creating a general trust; the words "all" and "whole" being both descriptive of the word "estate," and equally broad and comprehensive in their import. Equitable Guarantee & Trust Co. v. Rogers, 44 Atl. 789, 792, 7 Del. Ch. 398.

A will directing the disposition of the "whole of my estate" may be construed to include testator's real and personal estate. Carr v. Jeannerett (S. C.) 2 McCord, 66, 69.

WHOLE INCOME.

In a will providing that before any application of the net income from testator's estate should be made to the parties mentioned in his will, the executors and trustees should pay from the whole income of the estate any mortgage on the property, or any legal incumbrance on any part of the estate, the term "whole income" means that which is commonly called "gross income." Beeton v. Simpson, 21 Atl. 34, 48 N. J. Eq. (3 Dick.) 17.

WHOLE LINE OF ROAD.

Act April 19, 1873, which prohibits railroad companies from demanding and receiving for the transportation of local freight over 50 per cent. of the rate charged for the transportation of the same description of freight "over the whole line of its road," means freight which is taken on at one terminus and discharged at the other, and not the rate for freight brought from or carried to a point beyond the terminus of the road. It is the correlative of "local freight," by which is meant freight shipped from either terminus to a way station, or vice versa, or from one station to another—that is, over a part of the road only. Mobile & M. Ry. Co. v. Steiner, 61 Ala. 559, 579.

WHOLE PIECE OR TRACT.

Comp. Laws 1885, c. 80, § 630, authorizing a mechanic's lien on the "whole piece or tract" of land upon which the building or improvement is situated, confined the lien to the particular piece or tract of land upon which the building is located or improvement made; and, where the buildings are on separate tracts or lots, the liens cannot all be claimed in one statement. North & South Lumber Co. v. Hegwer, 42 Pac. 888, 390, 1 Kan. App. 623.

WHOLE QUANTITY.

The words "whole quantity," as used in Rev. St. p. 476, § 2504, Schedule M, relating to duties on imported fruit, and making an allowance for loss on decay which exceeds 25 per cent. of the whole quantity, refer to merchandise shipped by one consignor from one place, and to the particular kind of fruit damaged, and not to the whole invoice, aggregating several varieties of fruit. Phelps v. Merritt (U. S.) 15 Fed. 788, 789.

WHOLE ROOM.

Where a lease of "the lower storeroom and cellar and warehouse in rear of building" provided that the premises should be used for a single purpose, and also for the erection of partitions in the storeroom, and declared that the whole room was to be in good order for the use of the lessor, the words "whole room" should be construed to mean the entire premises covered by the lease, and hence included the cellar. Bentley v. Taylor, 47 N. W. 58, 81 Iowa, 306.

WHOLE TRUTH.

Where a witness is sworn to tell the whole truth, it means to tell so much of the truth as may be competent evidence. He also takes the oath subject to the rule of law which allows him to decline to answer questions which will criminate himself. Commonwealth v. Reid (Pa.) 1 Leg. Gaz. R. 182.

WHOLE VALUE OF VESSEL.

"Whole value of the vessel," as used in Rev. St. § 4284, providing that whenever any loss is suffered by several owners of property on the same voyage, and the whole value of the vessel and her freight for the voyage is not sufficient to make compensation to each, they are to receive compensation from the ship only in proportion to their respective losses, means her value at the close of the voyage. If there be two or more losses during the voyage for which the shipowner is liable, and the vessel, after the accruing of the liabilities and during the same voyage, is lost herself, the clear meaning of the statute is that no one shall receive compensation for his whole loss. Thommasen v. Whitwell (U. S.) 12 Fed. 891, 901.

WHOLE WORLD.

The "whole world" to which a lis pendens is notice means all men in that jurisdiction or state where the property is which is the subject of litigation. Carr v. Lewis Coal Co., 8 S. W. 907-909, 96 Mo. 149, 9 Am. St. Rep. 323.

WHOLESALE.

"Wholesale," as used in Sess. Laws 1850, c. 139, § 5, permitting suits for liquor bills only in case the sale was one at wholesale, implies the selling in or by unbroken parcels, as by the barrel, pipe, or cask, etc., as distinguished from the term "retail," which implies the cutting up or dividing such pieces or parcels or casks into smaller quantities, and selling to customers in such manner. The sale of liquors, from time to time, in six or ten gallon kegs of different kinds, cannot be called selling by wholesale. Gorsuth v. Butterfield, 2 Wis. 237, 242.

A sale of ten gallons of whisky, drawn from a cask containing a much larger quantity, is not, according to the common and popular import of the term "wholesale," a sale at wholesale. The sale here involves the idea of breaking up and dividing and parceling out the goods which are held by the seller in large parcels or packages in which he has purchased, and excludes the idea of selling a thing whole and unbroken. Tripp v. Hennessy, 10 R. I. 129, 131.

Selling at "wholesale" shall be deemed to mean and include the sale of liquor in quantities of five gallons or more, or one dozen bottles or more, and soliciting orders therefor at any one time. Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 4021.

WHOLESALE DEALER.

A wholesale dealer is one whose business is the selling of goods in gross to retail dealers, and not by the small quantity or parcel to consumers thereof. State v. Lowenbaugh, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 13, 14; Webb v. State, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 662, 665.

A dealer is one who makes successive sales as a business; and one who sells a quantity of liquors in gross is not a wholesale liquor dealer. Overall v. Bezeau, 37 Mich. 506, 507.

Where retail liquor dealers organize themselves under the style of a protective union, and sign articles pledging themselves to purchase beer through the union of brewers in another state, by which means they save two dollars a barrel, and such purchases are made through the secretary and treasurer of the union, who is paid nothing for his services, the members being charged only with freight, storage, and the like, the retail dealers become "wholesale dealers," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 3242, providing a penalty for carrying on the business of wholesale liquor dealers without a license.

United States v. Kallstrom (U. S.) 30 Fed. 184.

A general grocery merchant, who keeps spirituous liquors as a part of his stock, which he sells at wholesale, is a "wholesale liquor dealer," and liable to pay, under the revenue act of 1881, the privilege tax imposed on wholesale liquor dealers, in addition to the tax on other merchants. Kelly v. Dwyer, 75 Tenn. (7 Lea) 180, 187.

Commission merchants.

Commission merchants who, at the request of foreign correspondents, occasionally purchase liquor in quantity, and take charge of shipping the same, and duly charge the costs and their commissions on their books to the account of such correspondents, or draw upon them for the full amount of the purchase price with costs and commissions, are "wholesale liquor dealers," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 3244, placing a penalty upon every person who carries on the business of a wholesale liquor dealer without having paid a certain special tax. Quinn v. Dimond (U. S.) 72 Fed. 993, 994, 19 C. C. A. 336.

Quantity sold.

A wholesale dealer in spirituous liquors is one who makes and sells to purchasers packages or quantities for the purposes of trade or being resold. The distinction between the "wholesale dealer" and the "retail dealer" does not depend upon the quantity sold by either. State v. Tarver, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 658, 660.

One who makes sales by the quart and upwards, not to be drunk on the premises when sold, was not a "wholesale dealer in liquor," within the meaning of the act of 1881 relating to taxes. Webb v. Baird, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 667, 668.

The term "wholesale liquor dealer" includes a person selling liquor in quantities of a quart or more, though such sales are merely to accommodate the seller's customers, and not for the purpose of profit. Koopman v. State, 61 Ala. 70.

Under the express provisions of Acts 1897, p. 253, a "wholesale dealer" in liquors, within the meaning of the term as used in such statute relating to the licensing of liquor dealers, includes any person who sells in quantities of five gallons or more; a retail dealer being one who sells to consumers in quantities less than five gallons at a time. Daniels v. State, 50 N. E. 74, 79, 150 Ind. 348.

Under Rev. St. § 3244, providing that every person who sells or offers for sale malt liquors in any quantities of more than five gallons at one time shall be regarded as a "wholesale dealer," any one who sells a quantity to exceed five gallons at one time, whether the amount so sold is in one package or several, is a wholesale dealer. United States v. Clare (U. S.) 2 Fed. 55, 57.

"Wholesale dealers" of spirituous or intoxicating liquors and brewed malt and fermented liquors shall be held and deemed to mean and include all persons who sell or offer for sale such liquors and beverages in quantities of more than three gallons, or more than one dozen quart bottles, at any one time, to any person or persons. Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 5380.

Single sale.

"Wholesale liquor dealer," as defined in Rev. St. § 3244, providing that a wholesale liquor dealer, for the purpose of taxation, shall include every person who sells or offers for sale foreign or domestic distilled spirits or wines in quantities of not less than five gallons at the same time, implies that there must be a trade or business of selling, and hence a single sale is not sufficient to render a person a wholesale liquor dealer. United States v. Feigelstock (U. S.) 25 Fed. Cas. 1058, 1059.

WHOLESALE FACTORY PRICE.

A promissory note made payable in goods at the "wholesale factory prices" does not mean the cash price, but refers to some general rule known to manufacturers of such goods. Avery v. Stewart, 2 Conn. 69, 73, 7 Am. Dec. 240.

WHOLESALE PRICE.

The wholesale price is the price fixed on merchandise by one who buys in large quantities of the producers or manufacturers, and who sells the same to jobbers or retail dealers. Fawcner v. Lew Smith Wall Paper Co., 55 N. W. 200, 201, 88 Iowa, 169, 45 Am. St. Rep. 230.

WHOLESALE STOCK.

Where plaintiffs were wholesale and retail druggists carrying on both the wholesale and retail business in the same building, with only a partition separating the wholesale from the retail department, and a policy was issued "on their wholesale stock of drugs, paints, dyestuffs, and other goods on hand for sale, not more hazardous while contained in the building," the word "wholesale," as used in the policy, was supplemented, and its meaning extended to "other goods on hand for sale," not simply as the wholesale stock, but all other goods contained in the building, and therefore the policy covered the entire stock. Wilson Drug Co. v. Phoenix Assur. Co., 14 S. E. 790, 791, 110 N. C. 350.

WHOLESALE.

The word "wholesaler," as used in Comp. Laws, § 5379, providing that in all towns 8 Wds. & P.—42 ships, cities, and villages a tax of $500 per annum shall be paid for the selling of liquors, is defined by section 5380 as one who sells liquor in quantities of more than three gallons or more than one dozen quart bottles at a time to any one person. People v. Voorhis, 91 N. W. 624-626, 131 Mich. 393.

WHOLLY.

In a whole or complete manner; entirely; completely; perfectly; to the exclusion of other things; totally; fully. Webst. Dict.

WHOLLY CONFIDING.

In a will where testator makes an absolute gift of property, "trusting and wholly confiding" that it will be used in a certain way, the language quoted is sufficient to raise a trust, where the subject and object of the trust are sufficiently certain. Major v. Herndon, 78 Ky. 123, 129.

WHOLLY DEPENDENT.

In a petition in an action for damages for death of deceased, alleging that plaintiff and children were wholly dependent on deceased, the words "wholly dependent" fairly imply that deceased was the person, and the only person, whose legal and moral duty it was, and on whom they relied, to furnish the necessities of life, and hence implies a loss or damage to plaintiff. Kearney Electric Co. v. Laughlin, 63 N. W. 941, 943, 45 Neb. 390.

WHOLLY DESTROYED.

See, also, "Total Destruction"; "Total Loss."

The words "wholly destroyed" have been placed in fire insurance policies in many of the states of the Union, and the construction appears to be uniform that, as applied to buildings, they mean totally destroyed as a building, although there is not an absolute extinction of all its parts. It matters not that some debris remains which may be useful or valuable for some purposes. Havens v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 27 S. W. 718, 723, 123 Mo. 403, 26 L. R. A. 107, 45 Am. St. Rep. 570 (citing Williams v. Hartford Ins. Co., 54 Cal. 442, 35 Am. Rep. 77; Seyk v. Millers' Ins. Co., 41 N. W. 443, 74 Wis. 67, 3 L. R. A. 523; Oshkosh Packing & Provision Co. v. Mercantile Ins. Co. [U. S.] 31 Fed. 200; Great Western Ins. Co. v. Fogarty, 86 U. S. [19 Wall.] 640, 22 L. Ed. 216).

The words "wholly destroyed," within a statute relating to insurance, have necessarily a technical meaning, differing from the ordinary meaning of words in common usage. In common usage they denote a change of form or substance. We say wood is destroyed when transformed into ashes and cinders. We may say a structure is destroyed when it is resolved into its component materials. A building is partly destroyed, within the statute, when any part of it is resolved into such component materials, but wholly destroyed when no part of it above ground remains intact or substantially uninjured, and no such part of it can be utilized as a remaining standing structure in effectually restoring the structure to its entirety. Ampleman v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 35 Mo. App. 308, 316. See, also, Ampleman v. North British Mercantile Co., 35 Mo. App. 317, 318.

The phrase "wholly destroyed," when applied to the subject of insurance, does not contemplate the entire annihilation or extinction of the property insured; neither does it require that any portion of the property remaining after loss shall have no value for any purpose whatever; but it does mean only the destruction of the property insured to such extent as to deprive it of the character in which it was insured. Although some portion of the building may remain after the fire, yet if such portion cannot be reasonably used to advantage in the reconstruction of the building, or will not, for some purpose, bring more money than sufficient to remove the ruins, such building is, in contemplation of law, wholly destroyed. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Heckman, 67 Pac. 879, 881, 64 Kan. 388.

The words "wholly destroyed," as used in Rev. St. § 1943, providing that, when real property covered by insurance shall be wholly destroyed, the amount of the insurance written in the policy shall be taken conclusively to be the true value of the property when insured, and the true amount of loss and measure of damages when destroyed, refers to the thing insured, and not solely to its value. And when a building has been so damaged as to lose its specific character as such, and it can no longer be called a building, then it is wholly destroyed. And when a structure has been destroyed so as to leave nothing but badly damaged stationary walls, it has been "wholly destroyed," within the meaning of the section. Trustees of St. Clara Female Academy of Sinsinawa Mound v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co., 73 N. W. 767, 770, 98 Wis. 257, 67 Am. St. Rep. 805.

Where all the combustible material in a building was destroyed, though portions of the brick walls were left standing, yet they were useless as walls, the identity and specific character of the insured building were entirely destroyed, though there was not an absolute extinction of all the parts thereof, and it constituted an entire destruction of the building. Seyk v. Millers' Nat. Ins. Co., 41 N. W. 443, 445, 74 Wis. 67, 3 L. R. A. 523; Lindner v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 67 N. W. 1125, 1127, 93 Wis. 526; German Fire Ins. Co. v. Eddy, 54 N.

W. 856, 857, 36 Neb. 461, 19 L. R. A. 707; Trustees of St. Clara Female Academy of Sinsinawa Mound v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co., 73 N. W. 767, 770, 98 Wis. 257.

"Wholly destroyed," when applied to a building, if the building was constructed of brick or other incombustible material, from the nature of the case, when used in an insurance policy, do not refer to the debris from a building destroyed. The words, when applied to a building, mean totally destroyed as a building; that is, that the walls, though standing, are unsafe to use for the purpose of rebuilding, and must be torn down, and a new building erected throughout. German Ins. Co. v. Eddy, 36 Neb. 461, 466, 54 N. W. 856, 857, 19 L. R. A. 707.

The expression "wholly destroyed" is equivalent to "total loss," and "total loss," as applicable to a building, means not that the materials of which it is composed were all utterly destroyed or obliterated, but that the building, though some part of it may remain standing, has lost its identity and specific character as a building, and instead thereof has become a broken mass, or so far in that condition that it cannot be properly any longer designated as a building. When that has occurred there is a total destruction or loss. Oshkosh Packing & Provision Co. v. Mercantile Ins. Co. of Mobile (U. S.) 31 Fed. 200, 204; Barnard v. National Fire Ins. Co., 38 Mo. App. 106, 117.

In an action on a fire policy it appeared that the building which had been insured was a frame structure, the rear wall of which was veneered with brick, and the evidence did not show that the material of which the building was composed was transformed into cinders, smoke, and ashes by the fire. There were some pieces of material and bricks and parts of the floors and walls that were not consumed, but after the fire the building insured did not exist as a building. Held, that a verdict that the property was "wholly destroyed," within the meaning of that phrase in the policy, was supported by the evidence, inasmuch as insurance on a building is an insurance on the building as such, and not on the materials of which it is composed. Insurance Co. of North America v. Bachler, 62 N. W. 911, 914, 44 Neb. 549.

This phrase "wholly destroyed," as employed in Laws 1874, c. 347, includes a case where no portion of the broken walls of a building remaining after a fire can be used in rebuilding the building, and the foundation is not sufficient to support a building of the weight and dimensions of the one burned, and the expense of removing the fragments of the old building will at least equal the value of all the material left after the fire. Harriman v. Queen Ins. Co. of London and Liverpool, 5 N. W. 12, 23, 49 Wis. 71.

WHOLLY DISABLED.

See, also, "Total Disability."

"Total disability" or "wholly disabled," as used in an accident insurance policy, does not mean absolute physical inability to transact any kind of business pertaining to the occupation of merchant. It is sufficient if his injuries were such that common care and prudence required him to desist from transacting any such business in order to effectuate a cure. Inability to transact some kinds or branches of business pertaining to his occupation as merchant would not constitute total disability, provided he was able to transact other kinds or branches of business pertaining to such occupation; but ability to occasionally perform some trivial or unimportant act connected with some kind of business pertaining to such occupation would not render his disability partial, instead of total, provided he was unable to substantially or to some material extent transact any kind of business pertaining to such occupation. The fact that he occasionally performed some act connected with his business as a merchant would not necessarily prove that he was not totally disabled within the meaning of the policy. The frequency and nature of these acts will ordinarily be for the consideration of the jury in determining whether he was totally disabled as above defined. Lobdill v. Laboring Men's Mut. Aid Ass'n, 71 N. W. 696, 69 Minn. 14, 38 L. R. A. 537, 65 Am. St. Rep. 542.

In Hooper v. Accidental Death Ins. Co., 5 Hurl. & N. 546, it was held that though insured might continue to do something which he was in the habit of doing before the accident, nevertheless, as he was wholly incapacitated from following a very considerable part of his usual business, he was "wholly disabled" from following his usual business or occupation, within the meaning of the policy. Monahan v. Supreme Lodge of Columbian Knights, 92 N. W. 972, 974, 88 Minn. 224 (citing McMahon v. Supreme Council, Order of Chosen Friends, 54 Mo. App. 468; Scales v. Association, 48 Atl. 1084, 70 N. H. 490; Hohn v. Interstate Casualty Co., 72 N. W. 1105, 115 Mich. 79).

In commenting on the words "wholly disabled him for transacting any and every kind of business pertaining to the occupation under which he is insured," in an accident insurance policy, the court said, if such words were to be construed literally, the defendant would be liable in no case, unless by the accident the insured should lose his life or his reason. It is certain that neither party intended such a risk, and it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff's disability, which consisted of the shoulder being injured by a fall, causing pain and depriving him of the use of the arm, was not sufficient to entitle him to compensation, he being a shoe dealer, although he went to his store two or three times a week. Thayer v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 41 Atl. 182, 183, 68 N. H. 577.

In construing the words "wholly disabled," occurring in an accident policy, an instruction which in effect told the jury that insured was totally disabled if he was prevented from performing any and every kind of duty which was materially essential to his occupation in a manner reasonably as effective as it would have been performed if he had not sustained the injury, was upheld. The occupation of plaintiff in the case was that of visiting yards and ranches and buying and selling cattle, and the injuries were alleged to affect plaintiff's mental powers. In discussing the question as to whether or not a purely mental affliction, not amounting to entire loss of reason, could render a person wholly disabled, the court said: "Plaintiff's occupation was that of visiting yards and ranches and buying and selling cattle—one in which sound memory and clear good judgment were essential. Now, if the injury to his mind was such as to prevent him from exercising good judgment and drawing correct mental conclusions in a manner reasonably as effective as he could have done if he had not received the injury, then I think he was 'wholly disabled,' within the meaning of the contract, because upon these qualities of the mind depends the successful performance of the duties of his occupation. If he could not perform these mental functions as well as he did before, but substantially or reasonably as well, the disability would be only partial, but if he could perform them, though not substantially or reasonably as effectively, who could say that he could perform them rightly and correctly at all?" Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Getzendauner, 55 S. W. 179, 180, 93 Tex. 487.

The insured is "wholly disabled," within the meaning of an accident policy, where he is not able to prosecute his business, and where he is not able to do all the substantial acts necessary to be done in its prosecution. If the business requires him to do several acts and perform several kinds of labor, and he is able to do and perform one, he is as effectually disabled from performing his business as if he could do nothing required to be done, and while remaining in that condition he will suffer loss of time in the business of his occupation. Young v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 13 Atl. 896, 897, 80 Me. 244.

WHOLLY ENGAGED.

Where Laws 1880, c. 542, § 3, as amended by Laws 1889, c. 193, exempted from taxation corporations wholly engaged in carrying on manufacturing within the state, the words "wholly engaged" will not be construed so that a manufacturing corporation ceased to come within the exemption by employing a portion of its capital in a business not within its chartered powers, but that, under such circumstances, such portion, and such portion only, is liable to taxation. People v. Campbell, 38 N. E. 990, 991, 144 N. Y. 166.

The expression "corporations wholly engaged in carrying on manufacture within the state" does not include a foreign manufacturing corporation, authorized by its charter to manufacture, buy, and sell or otherwise procure electric apparatus of all kinds, and engaged in the manufacture of such apparatus, and also in buying and selling the same, within the state. People v. Campbell, 40 N. E. 239, 145 N. Y. 587.

The phrase "wholly engaged in manufacturing" does not characterize a corporation authorized by its charter to print, publish, and sell books, stationery, etc., which devotes part of its capital to the business of buying and selling foreign books. People v. Roberts, 36 N. Y. Supp. 73, 74, 90 Hun, 533.

The phrase "wholly engaged in manufacturing within the state" characterizes a foreign corporation operating a manufacturing plant in which all its capital in the state is employed, even though it maintain offices in the state where samples of its product are kept, from which sales of goods manufactured in another state are made, since such part of the business is wholly exempt from taxation as interstate commerce. People v. Roberts, 51 N. Y. Supp. 487, 489, 29 App. Div. 535.

WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

The technical phrase "for whom it may concern," in a marine insurance policy, operates to cover the interest of any person intended to be so covered by the person who effected the insurance. The Sydney (U. S.) 27 Fed. 119, 124; Duncan v. China Mut. Ins. Co., 29 N. E. 76, 77, 129 N. Y. 237.

"Whom it may concern," in an insurance policy, are technical words, meaning not anybody and everybody who may chance to have an interest in the thing insured, but such person only as is in the contemplation of the contract. They suppose an agency, and look solely to the principal, in whose behalf and on whose account the agent acts. Such principal is the person in the contemplation of the contract, and is the one whom it alone concerns, and his existence may be proved by extrinsic evidence. No person can avail himself of a policy of insurance not containing the general clause "to whom it may concern," or one of similar import, but those named in the policy as the parties insured, or on whose account it is expressed to be made; but a policy in the name of one with this general clause will cover the interest of any person for whose benefit it is intended when effected, and who either previously authorizes it or subsequently adopts it, subsequent adoption in such a case being equivalent to a prior order for the insurance. Newson's Adm'r v. Douglass (Md.) 7 Har. & J. 417, 450, 16 Am. Dec. 317.

A policy of fire insurance for the benefit of "whom it may concern" is comprehensive and broad enough to cover everything answering the description and intended to be covered. "Whom it may concern" does not necessarily cover all concerned in a loss. The parties insured by such general terms are only those for whom the insurance was intended. Richardson v. Home Ins. Co., 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. (15 Jones & S.) 138, 154.

An insurance policy insuring certain property in the name of the insured and for "whom it may concern" may inure to the benefit of the person effecting it, or the benefit of any other person for whom he intends it, and who has requested him to effect it, or who adopts it when made. De Bolle v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co. (Pa.) 4 Whart. 68, 75, 33 Am. Dec. 35; Wise v. St. Louis Marine Ins. Co., 23 Mo. 80, 84.

In a contract whereby a building contractor insured in his own name the building on which he was engaged, under an agreement between himself and the owner that the contractor should keep the building at all times fully insured against fire for the benefit of "whom it may concern," and in case of loss the indemnity shall be divided between the "parties hereto," the words "whom it may concern" meant the parties to the contract, and would not include a materialman who had a right to have filed a lien on the premises. The persons "whom it may concern" were the "parties hereto." Moesser v. Donaldson (Pa.) 10 Atl. 766, 768.

The law is well settled that where insurance is for the applicant and "whom it may concern," the terms thus employed are not intended to mean, nor do they include, every person who may have an interest in the subject insured, but only such as are in contemplation of the contract. Where the description of the party insured indicates that the policy is taken for the benefit of other persons specifically named, the interest of those described is alone covered. Cincinnati Ins. Co. v. Rieinan (Ohio) 1 Disn. 396, 397.

"Whom it may concern," as used in an insurance policy declaring that it was issued "for account of whom it may concern," evinces a purpose to keep insured the entire title to the property; and one who purchases a part interest and adopts the insurance will be allowed to recover for a loss, although a printed stipulation in the policy is inconsistent with such right. Hagan v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. (U. S.) 98 Fed. 129, 130.

A policy on a cargo in the name of a certain person on account of "whom it may concern" will inure to the interest of the party for whom it was intended, provided the party in whose name it is issued had, at the time of effecting the insurance, the requisite authority from such party, or the latter subsequently ratified it. Hooper v. Robinson, 98 U. S. 523, 536, 25 L. Ed. 219.

Belligerent property.

A policy of marine insurance, "for whom it may concern," should be construed to cover belligerent property. Buck v. Chesapeake Ins. Co., 28 U. S. (1 Pet.) 151, 158, 7 L. Ed. 90.

Insurable interest.

"For whom it may concern," or any other terms of equivalent import, will not carry the benefit of a policy to a risk or an interest not fairly within the contemplation of the parties to the policy. The result of this principle is that a person who has an interest in the property covered by such a policy at the time of the loss will be protected without any express stipulation to the effect, though he had no interest at the commencement of the risk, providing he was intended to be insured. Duncan v. China Mutual Ins. Co., 29 N. E. 76, 77, 129 N. Y. 237.

An insurance on account of "whom it may concern" is limited to those who have insurable interest in the property, and may be lawfully insured, and must further be restricted to those for whom it was intended under their prior authorization or subsequent adoption. Frierson v. Brenham, 5 La. Ann. 540, 52 Am. Dec. 603.

Knowledge of person intended.

A policy of marine insurance in the name of a special party "on account of whom it may concern" will cover the interest of the person for whom it was intended by the party who should order it, though the particular person intended was not known. It is not necessary that the person who takes out the policy should have at that time any specific individual in mind. If he intended the policy should cover the interest of any person to whom he might sell the entire or any part of the interest insured, that would be enough. Hagan v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co., 22 Sup. Ct. 862, 864, 186 U. S. 423, 46 L. Ed. 1229.

"For whom it may concern," as used in a fire policy specified to be for the benefit of those for whom it may concern, will be construed "to include all persons having an insurable interest—that is, intended to be covered by it—whether known to the insurers or not." Johannes v. Phenix Ins. Co., 27 N. W. 414, 417, 66 Wis. 50, 57 Am. Rep. 249.

Person entitled to sue.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 449, requiring every action to be brought in the name of the real party in interest, a part owner of a vessel may bring an action in his own name on a policy of marine insurance which runs "on account of whom it may concern," and which was in fact procured by his agent to whom the loss was made payable, even though the policy does not disclose such part owner's interest therein. McLaughlin v. Great Western Ins. Co., 20 N. Y. Supp. 536, 537.

Where a part owner of a vessel has it insured in his own name "on account of whom it may concern," he may sue in his own name for the benefit of all. This right is confirmed by the Code, which authorizes an action by the person with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another. Walsh v. Washington Ins. Co., 32 N. Y. 427, 440.

The use of the words "whom it may concern," in a fire policy, to designate the beneficiary, is sufficient, in the absence of statute, to authorize suit on a policy in the name of the parties intended to be within its protection. Insurance Co. of North America v. Forchelmer, 5 South. 870, 875, 86 Ala. 541.

An insertion of a clause in a marine policy that the loss should be payable to the plaintiff or "whom it might concern" was construed to authorize the insured to maintain an action for the whole of the loss, although he was not the owner of the entire vessel. Martin v. Fishing Ins. Co., 37 Mass. (20 Pick.) 389, 395, 32 Am. Dec. 220.

WHOMSOEVER IT MAY CONCERN.

"Whomsoever it may concern," as used in a policy insuring goods in favor of whomsoever it may concern, is a term used to designate whoever may be the owner of the goods at the time they are destroyed, and evidence beyond the policy is receivable to show who are the owners and entitled to receive payment under the policy. Home Ins. Co. v. Baltimore Warehouse Co., 98 U. S. 527, 543, 23 L. Ed. 868.

The insertion of the phrase "whomsoever else shall be concerned," in a fire policy taken out on partnership property by a partner, will operate to create the inference that the insurance was made on the joint account, if such appear to have been the intention of the assured. Lawrence v. Sebor (N. Y.) 2 Caines, Cas. 203, 209.

WHORE.

Webster defines a "whore" as "a woman who practices unlawful sexual commerce with men, especially one who does it for hire; a harlot"; and the synonyms given are "harlot, courtesan, prostitute, strumpet, punk, wench, concubine." In Worcester's Dictionary the word is defined: "A woman who practices illicit intercourse with men for hire; a prostitute; a harlot; a concubine; a strumpet; a punk." There is no substantial difference between the words "public whore," charged in a complaint, and "whorish bitch," proved on the trial. Zimmerman v. McMakin, 22 S. C. 372, 378, 53 Am. Rep. 720.

A whore is a woman who practices unlawful sexual intercourse with men, especially one who does it for hire. Wagner v. State, 17 Tex. App. 554, 558; Sheehy v. Cokley, 43 Iowa, 183, 185, 22 Am. Rep. 236.

A whore is a woman who prostitutes her body for hire, the word being generally used as synonymous with "harlot," "courtesan," "prostitute," and "strumpet." In its most general meaning the word includes a woman who practices or holds unlawful sexual intercourse, either for hire or to gratify a depraved passion. Peterson v. Murray, 41 N. E. 836, 837, 13 Ind. App. 420; Zimmerman v. McMakin, 22 S. C. 372, 378, 53 Am. Rep. 720.

A whore is one who has committed adultery or fornication. Michelson v. Lavin, 20 S. E. 292, 293, 95 Ga. 565.

A woman may acquire the character of a whore without being generally accessible to men. She may be the mistress of one and chaste towards all others; but in common parlance one who yields only to solicitations of her affianced cannot be justly called a whore. Sheehy v. Cokley, 43 Iowa, 183, 185, 22 Am. Rep. 236.

WHOREDOM.

"Whoredom" is a comprehensive term, including every species of illicit intercourse between the sexes, and any act of sexual intercourse between a married female and a male person not her husband, or between an unmarried female and a male person, is whoredom, and a single act of the kind makes a woman a whore. Rodebaugh v. Hollingsworth, 6 Ind. 339, 343.

WHOREHOUSE.

By common acceptance, to keep a "whorehouse" is to keep a bawdyhouse or a house of ill fame. Indeed, to charge the former is equally opprobrious and more directly and unquestionably significant, if possible, than to charge the latter. It is a coarser expression conveying the same idea. It is most clearly a charge of keeping a house for common prostitution, which is the precise definition of a bawdyhouse. It is needless to say that a charge of "keeping a whorehouse" imports a crime involving moral turpitude, and words importing such charge are actionable per se. Wright v. Paige (N. Y.) 36 Barb. 438, 440.

WHORISH.

"Where" is the synonym for a prostitute, or a lewd or incontinent woman; "whorish" means lewd, unchaste, incontinent. Scott v. McKinnish, 15 Ala. 662, 664.

The word "whorish," as defined by Webster, means "resembling a whore in character or conduct; addicted to unlawful sexual pleasures; incontinent; lewd; unchaste." Worcester's definition is, "unchaste; lewd; incontinent." There is no substantial difference between the words "public whore," charged in a complaint, and "whorish bitch," proved on the trial. Zimmerman v. McMakin, 22 S. C. 372, 378, 53 Am. Rep. 720.

WICKED.

The term "wicked man," when applied to a bishop, is actionable, because the words virtually represent him as unfit to hold that office or situation. Craig v. Brown (Ind.) 5 Blackf. 44, 46.

WICKEDNESS.

An instruction that if defendant purposely killed deceased after reflection, with a wickedness and depravity of heart toward the deceased, etc., the defendant was guilty of murder in the first degree, is sufficient as an allegation of the highest degree of malice. Lang v. State, 4 South. 193, 195, 84 Ala. 1, 5 Am. St. Rep. 324.

WIDEN.

"Widen," as used in Act 1864, p. 293, § 2, authorizing a railroad and canal company to shorten, straighten, "widen," or otherwise improve any part of the route of their road at or between its present termini, does not import any change of location. Beck v. United Jersey R. & Canal Co., 89 N. J. Law (10 Vroom) 45, 46.

Act March 17, 1869, declaring that any railroad, canal, or slack-water navigation company might "widen, enlarge, or" otherwise "improve" its line of railroad, cannot be construed to include the widening of the gauge of a railroad, though in their general sense the words are sufficient to include it, for they are used in connection with the line of the railroad, canal, and slack-water navigation company, which, as to railroads, means its right of way. Western New York & P. Ry. Co. v. Buffalo, R. & P. Ry. Co., 44 Atl. 242, 244, 193 Pa. 127.

To "widen" the street is merely to enlarge its width, and as used in Act March 6, 1890, § 1, authorizing the city council to order the widening of any street within such city, cannot, under any construction, be extended to include grading and gravelling, since to "grade" a street is to reduce it, either by filling or excavation, to a fit or established degree of ascent or descent; and to "gravel" a street is to cover the surface of a street already existing with some durable substance. Wilcoxon v. City of San Luis Obispo, 35 Pac. 988, 989, 101 Cal. 508.

WIDOW.

As personal representative, see "Personal Representative."

In common parlance, the term "widow" means an unmarried woman. In re Conway's Estate, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 332, 334.

The recognized definition of the word "widow" is a woman who has lost her husband by death; a wife that outlives her husband. Cole v. Mayne (U. S.) 122 Fed. 836, 839.

"The term 'widow' may literally mean a woman deprived of or without a man, but the legal as well as the popular signification of the word is that given by Webster—a woman who has lost her husband by death. Luke xi; Webster's Dict. (last Ed.) 'Widow.' The etymology of the word implies that she has been deprived of a husband." Wait v. Wait (N. Y.) 4 Barb. 192, 205.

A "widow" is defined to be an unmarried woman whose husband is dead; one who has lost her husband by death, and has not taken another. In re Ray's Estate, 35 N. Y. Supp. 481, 484, 13 Misc. Rep. 480.

"Widow," as used in a by-law of a mutual insurance company providing that the association, on satisfactory proof of a member's death, will pay to his widow a certain sum, cannot be construed to mean anything else than a woman whose husband is dead, and hence does not include a woman who cohabited with decedent prior to his death, but who was not legally married to him. Bolton v. Bolton, 73 Me. 299, 308.

"Widow of the deceased," as used in Acts 1887, c. 270, § 2, known as the "Employer's Liability Act," giving a right of action to the widow of the deceased, compre-hends every widow, whether citizens, residents, aliens, or nonresident aliens. Vetalloro v. Perkins (U. S.) 101 Fed. 393, 397.

The word "widow," as used in a will providing that, if either of testator's sons die without leaving lawful issue, the "widow" of the decedent should receive one-third of the rents of the real estate devised to him by the will, does not restrict the benefit of the provision to a wife living at the time of making the will or at testator's death, but the person who was the wife at the time of the son's death was entitled to the rents. Swallow v. Swallow's Adm'r, 27 N. J. Eq. (12 C. E. Green) 278, 280.

A testator devised real and personal property to trustees to pay over the income to a son during his life, and on his decease to pay the same to said son's wife during her life, and on her decease if he should leave a widow, or if he leave no widow then on his decease, to convey the property to the issue of said son then living. The son had a wife living at the time of the making of the will and the death of the testator. Held, that the clause directing the payment of the income to the son's wife during her natural life upon his decease, standing alone, will be construed to mean his wife then living only; and the further provision that on her decease if he leave a widow, or if he leave no widow then on his decease, etc., taken in connection with other clauses of the will, must be construed to refer to any wife he might have married, though possibly unborn at the time of the testator's death. Schettler v. Smith, 41 N. Y. 328, 338.

A gift to the "widows and orphans" of the parish of Lindfield was necessarily confined to such of those two classes who were within the scope of general benevolence, and was a good, charitable bequest. Attorney General v. Comber, 2 Sim. & S. 93, 94.

A devise to the "widow of my son F.," the son being alive, refers to the wife of said son at the time the will was made. Beers v. Narramore, 61 Conn. 13, 19, 22 Atl. 1061.

Deserted wife.

The term "widow," in the laws of a benevolent association providing that benefits shall be payable to the widows of deceased members, designates a wife of deceased whom he deserts, though he afterward contracts a common-law marriage which would have been valid if the first wife had not been living. Grand Lodge Order of Hermann-Soehne v. Elsner, 26 Mo. App. 108, 117.

Deserting wife.

"Widow," as used in the Tennessee homestead laws exempting as a homestead certain property for the benefit of a decedent's "widow," etc., means a person who was a member of his family in a legal sense when he died, and does not include one who has forfeited her rights as a member of his family by eloping before her husband's death and living with another man. Prater v. Prater, 9 S. W. 361, 364, 87 Tenn. (3 Pickle) 78, 10 Am. St. Rep. 623.

Within a statute providing that, whenever the widow of a deceased person shall be left in necessitous circumstances and does not possess in her own right property to the amount of $1,000, she may be entitled to receive from the succession of the deceased husband a sum which will make the total sum owned by her $1,000, the term "widow" is not used in its ordinary signification of a woman who has left her husband, and will not include an unfaithful wife who has abandoned her husband. Richard v. Lazard, 32 South. 559, 560, 108 La. 540. See, also, Armstrong v. Steeber, 3 La. Ann. 713.

Divorced wife.

Where husband and wife are divorced a vinculo, the wife, after the husband's death, is not his "widow" and entitled to dower. Whitsell v. Mills, 6 Ind. 229, 231.

A wife who had been divorced for the fault of the husband is not his "widow" on the death of the husband without his remarriage, within the meaning of Rev. St. 1894, § 2840 (Rev. St. 1881, § 2483), providing that, if the husband die leaving a widow, one-third of his real estate shall descend to her in fee simple. Fletcher v. Monroe, 43 N. E. 1053, 145 Ind. 56.

A woman obtaining a divorce from her husband on the ground of his adultery is not in any sense his widow under the New York statute, so as to entitle her to a right in a distributive share in the personal estate of her divorced husband. In re Ensign's Estate, 8 N. E. 544, 546, 103 N. Y. 284, 57 Am. Rep. 717.

"Widow," as used in Rev. St. 740, § 1, endowing a "widow" of a third of all the lands whereof her husband was seised at any time during marriage, etc., includes a woman who had secured a divorce, prior to her husband's death, upon the ground of adultery, such divorce being one a mensa et thoro merely. Wait v. Wait, 4 N. Y. 95, 107 (reversing Wait v. Wait [N. Y.] 4 Barb. 192, 205).

The term "widow," in the by-laws of a beneficial association providing that certain benefits shall be paid to the widow of a deceased member, does not include a divorced wife of a member, though she had been designated by the insured as a beneficiary. Tyler v. Odd Fellows' Mut. Life Ass'n, 13 N. E. 360, 363, 145 Mass. 134.

The word "widow" is construed to mean husbandless, and where testatrix's married daughter had a dissipated husband from whom, at the time of the death of testatrix, she had obtained a divorce, she was entitled to have ended a trust by which her mother had devised certain property in trust for her life, remainder to her children, with a proviso that if she became a widow the trust should end and the property be turned over to her absolutely. Rittenhouse v. Hicks, 10 Ohio Dec. 759.

Marriage of widow.

A "widow" is defined as an unmarried woman whose husband is dead; one who has lost her husband by death, and who has not taken another; but, as used in statutes relative to settlement of estates, it will not be limited to such persons, but will include those who have subsequently remarried. In re Ray's Estate, 35 N. Y. Supp. 481, 484, 13 Misc. Rep. 480.

"Widow," as used in Kansas statutes providing that a homestead, etc., occupied by an intestate and his family at the time of his death as a residence, and continued to be so occupied by his widow and children after his death, shall be wholly exempt from the payments of his debts, etc., should not be construed to mean that the property ceases to be subject to a homestead exemption on the remarriage of the widow. Brady v. Banta, 26 Pac. 441, 443, 46 Kan. 181.

"Widow," as used in Act April 10, 1849, exempting from the operation of the collateral inheritance tax laws property passing by will to the wife or widow of a son of any person dying seised or possessed thereof, does not include a widow of the testator's son who married again in the lifetime of the testatrix and was still married at the latter's death, the word "widow" being entirely and exclusively descriptive of an unmarried condition, having once been married. Commonwealth v. Powell, 51 Pa. (1 P. F. Smith) 438, 440.

"Widow," as used in Purd. Dig. p. 518, pl. 64, providing that the widow or the children of any decedent may retain certain property out of the estate for the use of the widow and family, should be construed to mean that the right of the widow to such property ceases when she remarries; the word meaning that she ought to be, at the time she takes the property, the person who is qualified by law to exercise that right, namely, the widow of the decedent. Appeal of Kerns, 14 Atl. 435, 438, 120 Pa. 523.

A will devising certain property to testator's widow for life, with the power of sale, "so long as she shall remain my widow," should be construed to mean "so long as she shall remain unmarried," and hence her remarriage terminated whatever interest was limited by such clause. Bodwell v. Nutter, 3 Atl. 421, 422, 63 N. H. 446.

"Widow," as used in Code, § 2971, providing that a "widow," and, if no widow, a child or children, may recover for the homicide of a husband or parent, indicates the person, not the state, and is used as synonymous with "wife." Hence the subsequent marriage of the widow of a person killed by a railroad does not take away her right of action, given by the statute, against the company, as the widow of the deceased. Georgia Railroad & Banking Co. v. Garr, 57 Ga. 277, 279, 24 Am. Rep. 492.

Widower.

"Widow," as used in Kan. Gen. St. 1889, par. 4518, giving a right of action for death by wrongful act to the "widow" of the deceased, does not include a widower. Western Union Tel. Co. v. McGill (U. S.) 57 Fed. 699, 703, 6 C. C. A. 521, 21 L. R. A. 818.

WIDOWHOOD.

See "During Widowhood."

WIDOW'S DOWER.

Where an administrator's deed conveyed by metes and bounds all the real estate of which the intestate husband died seised, "except the widow's dower," such phrase excepted only the widow's right to the use of one-third of the real estate described. "During her life" referred to the interest which the widow had in the land described, and the exception was limited to that interest. Starr v. Brewer, 58 Vt. 24, 33, 3 Atl. 479.

Where an administrator sells to a widow so much of a named lot, "except the widow's dower," the phrase "the widow's dower" does not mean the legal right to dower or the dower estate, but the parcel of land which had been set apart as dower, and of which, as a matter of fact, the widow was in possession. Wells v. Dillard, 20 S. E. 263, 264, 93 Ga. 682.

WIDOW'S ELECTION.

See "Election."

WIDOW'S SHARE.

"Widow's share," as used in Code, § 2452, providing that the widow's share cannot be affected by any will of her husband, unless she consents thereto, etc., describes the portion of the estate of the decedent which the law assures to the widow; it is called the "distributive share." Ward v. Wolf, 9 N. W. 348, 349, 56 Iowa, 465.

"Widow's share," as used in Code, § 2452, providing that the widow's share cannot be affected by any will of her husband unless she consents thereto, etc., includes both personal and real property. May v.

Jones, 54 N. W. 231, 233, 87 Iowa, 188 (citing Ward v. Wolf, 56 Iowa, 465, 9 N. W. 348; Linton v. Crosby, 61 Iowa, 401, 16 N. W. 342).

WIDOW'S THIRDS.

The words "widow's thirds" are generally used in common parlance as synonymous with the words "widow's dower," and mean the life estate which a widow has by law in one-third of the real estate of which her husband died seised. The same expressions are often used as referring to and meaning the land which had been set out to the widow and in which she has such life estate. Crosby v. Montgomery, 38 Vt. 238, 239.

WIDOWER.

A widower is "a man who has lost his wife by death." Walt v. Walt (N. Y.) 4 Barb. 192, 205 (citing Webster's Dict.).

A divorced man living with an unmarried minor son is a "widower" within the meaning of the statute providing that "husband and wife living together, a widow or widower living with an unmarried daughter or unmarried minor son may hold exempt from sale on judgment or order, a family homestead," etc. It does not require a very great strain of the English language to hold that a divorced man is a widower. True, it is not within the ordinary definition, but we find on examination that the word "widower" is derived from "widow," and that "widow" is a Sanskrit derivation, meaning "without a husband," the lack of a husband; and therefore, in its broadest terms, a "widower" may be defined to be a married man who has lost his wife, either by death or judicial decree. The separation in one case, from the legal point of view, is no more absolute than the other. Kunkle v. Reeser, 5 Ohio Dec. 422, 425.

WIDTH.

An act relating to a turnpike road, requiring that the "width" of the macadam shall not be less than 8 inches nor more than 15 inches, will be construed as a requirement that the depth of the macadam shall be as specified, as a literal interpretation would lead to an absurdity. Bird v. Kenton County Com'rs, 24 S. W. 118, 95 Ky. 195.

WIFE.

See "Common-Law Wife"; "Plural Wife"; "Surviving Wife."

The popular as well as the lexical meaning of "wife" is a woman who is united to a man in the lawful bonds of wedlock. Thompson v. Lewiston Daily Sun Pub. Co., 39 Atl.

556, 558, 91 Me. 203; United States v. Tenney, 8 Pac. 295, 301, 2 Ariz. 29; Wait v. Wait (N. Y.) 4 Barb. 192, 205; Miller v. Miller, 30 N. Y. Supp. 116, 117, 79 Hun, 197.

"Wife and children," as used by a testator in bequeathing property to the wife and children of a certain designated person, means the lawful wife and children of such person. In re Davenport's Trusts, 17 Eng. Law & Eq. 293, 295; In re Overhill's Trusts, 17 Eng. Law & Eq. 323.

A "wife" is a woman who has a husband living. To say that a person is a "wife," does not mean simply that she has been married, but that she was then and there a married woman. Names v. State, 50 N. E. 401, 20 Ind. App. 168.

The word "wife," when used in laws relating to marital fourths, contemplates a wife in fact, and not one in name merely. It is to enable a faithful wife to continue bene et honeste vivere. It does not intend to reward a woman who has disgraced herself and the family into which she has been taken. Richard v. Lazard, 32 South. 559, 563, 108 La. 540. See, also, Armstrong v. Steeber, 3 La. Ann. 713.

A testator who had a wife Mary, to whom he was married in 1834, and who survived him, in 1840 went through the ceremony of marriage with a woman whose Christian name was Caroline, and who continued to reside with him to the time of his death. Shortly before his decease he, by will, devised certain property to "my dear wife Caroline," her heirs, etc., absolutely. Held, that Caroline took under this devise, notwithstanding the entire description was not applicable to her. Gains v. Rouse, 5 Man., G. & S. *422, 428.

The terms "husband and wife" have a very definite and precise meaning. They are descriptive of persons who are connected by the marriage tie, and are significant of the mutual obligations growing from the marriage contract, and the term "wife" cannot be used to describe a woman who has been, but is no longer, married. People v. Hovey (N. Y.) 5 Barb. 117, 118.

The use of the term "wife of H.," in a notice by a town furnishing support to a pauper to the town chargeable therewith that the support has been furnished to the wife of H., is a sufficient designation of the person to whom the support was furnished. Town of Middletown v. Town of Berlin, 18 Conn. 189, 195.

Divorcee.

2 N. Y. Rev. St. 687, § 8, declaring that every "person having a husband or wife living" who shall marry again shall be adjudged guilty of bigamy, includes a person against whom a divorce has been obtained because of adultery, so long as the party obtaining the divorce lives. People v. Faber, 92 N. Y. 146, 150, 44 Am. Rep. 357.

In Act 1840, § 5, providing that where a divorce is granted by reason of the aggression of the husband, in addition to alimony, if the "wife" survive her husband she shall have dower, the word "wife" was used to designate the person who had been divorced. McGill v. Deming, 11 N. E. 118, 121, 44 Ohio St. 645.

The word "wife" does not include a woman divorced. As used in Rev. St. § 5702, providing that the "wife" may file her petition for alimony alone, such term is regarded as used to designate the person, and not the actual existing relation. Woods v. Waddle, 8 N. E. 297, 299, 44 Ohio St. 449 (citing Cox v. Cox, 19 Ohio St. 502, 2 Am. Rep. 415).

WIFE AND CHILDREN.

A life insurance policy, providing that the benefit at the death of the insured shall be paid to his wife and children, means that it shall be paid to his wife and children equally; and not that the wife shall be entitled to one half of it and the children to the other half. Felix v. Ancient Order of United Workmen, 1 Pac. 281, 282, 31 Kan. 81, 47 Am. Rep. 479.

WIFE BEATING.

Wife whipping was said by Blackstone to be the ancient privilege of giving moderate correction to wives to secure subordination in the family, and "was not admitted in the age of Judge Blackstone, or, as he says, in the polite reign of Charles the Second, except among the lower rank of the people, who were always fond of the old common law." The privilege is obsolete, and, "ancient though it be, to beat her with a stick, to pull her hair, to choke her, spit in her face, or kick her about the floor, or to inflict upon her other like indignities, is not now acknowledged by our law." Fulgham v. State, 46 Ala. 143, 145.

"The learned Judge Blackstone seems to consider the female sex a great favorite of the law of England, yet his more just editor, Christian, in his notes, expresses a fear that there is little cause to pay a compliment to our laws for their favor and respect to the female sex. The right of the husband is to beat his wife "ex causa regiminis et castigationis." It is true he was only allowed modicum castigationem, and this was never doubted until the polite reign of Charles II, yet the lower rank of people, as Blackstone observes, who were always fond of and adhere to the common law, still claim and exert their ancient privileges, and the civil law allowed the husband a larger authority over his wife, permitting him, for some misdeemeanors, "flagellare et fustibus acriter verberare uxorem." James v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 12 Serg. & R. 220, 226.

WIFE'S EQUITY.

The doctrine of a wife's equity may be briefly stated thus: That a wife is entitled to an equitable settlement out of her property, not only against her husband, but against all creditors of and purchasers from him, whenever it is recoverable only in a court of equity, or the aid of that court is actually invoked for its recovery, unless the husband has become a purchaser of the property by an antenuptial contract with the wife. If it be recoverable at law, and the aid of a court of equity be not actually invoked to recover it, her equity does not exist. And it ceases to exist, though the property be recoverable in equity, whenever it has been actually recovered or received without any claim by her to a settlement. Poin-dexter v. Jeffries (Va.) 15 Grat. 363, 368, 369 (citing 2 Story's Eq. § 1402).

"It is one of the acknowledged powers of courts of equity to compel a husband to make a settlement on a wife whenever he comes into equity for aid to enable him to reduce her estate which lies in action, pending possession." Clarke v. McCreary, 20 Miss. (12 Smedes & M.) 347, 354.

WIFE'S FAMILY.

In construing a devise to I., wife of C., for her and her family's use during her natural life, it was said that neither in common parlance nor by the technical construction of the words "wife's family," without more, is the husband contemplated. If it be asked of what family is he, the question will be answered by being informed from what person he is descended, and who is related by blood to that stock is related to and of the family of it. Heck v. Clippenger, 5 Pa. (5 Barr) 385-388.

WILD.

"Wild," as used in the rule that wild animals cannot be the subject of larceny, is used as a generic term to indicate that the animals are of a species not generally domesticated, and does not refer to their comparative docility or familiarity with men; so an animal ordinarily domestic in its nature, which has reverted to a wild state, is not properly a wild animal. Rex v. Manu, 4 Hawaii, 409, 410.

WILD BEAST.

"Wild beasts" are those which enjoy their natural liberty and go wherever they please. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 8415.

WILD-CAT TRAIN.

A "wild-cat train" is an occasional train moving without prearrangement, but by special order, without reference to any schedule or the regular trains, and conforming to no conditions save the immediate order of the owner. Such train is also known or styled as a "wild train." Sheehan v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 91 N. Y. 332, 335.

WILD FOWL.

Where an act was entitled "An act to provide for the protection of game, wild fowl and birds," the words "wild fowl and birds" will be presumed to have been added to the word "game," for the reason that "game" will be understood in its sense of including all game birds, game fowl, and game animals, and hence were intended to include species of wild fowl and birds not covered by the word "game." Meul v. People, 64 N. E. 1106, 1107, 198 Ill. 258.

WILD TRAIN.

The term "wild train" is a term used in the railroad business to describe a train consisting of a locomotive, tender, and caboose car on which no persons except the servants of the railroad company in charge of it were permitted to ride. Powers v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 59 N. W. 307, 57 Minn. 332.

A train running under telegraphic orders, but without any schedule or time card, is known in railroad parlance as a "wild train." Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Poirier (U. S.) 67 Fed. 881, 882, 15 C. C. A. 52.

A train running "wild" is a train not on the schedule time of any train. Larson v. St. Paul, M. & M. Ry. Co., 43 Minn. 423, 45 N. W. 722.

WILE.

To "wile" is defined as to cheat cunningly, mislead or lead with guile, hoodwink, lure; so that, as used in the definition of the crime of seduction as the act of persuading or inducing a woman of previous chaste character to depart from the path of virtue by the use of any species of arts, persuasion, or "wiles" which are calculated to have and do have that effect, it implies and shows that deception is an essential element in the crime of seduction. State v. Hamann, 80 N. W. 1064, 1065, 109 Iowa, 646.

WILL.

See "Against Her Will"; "Tenant at Will."

In its original sense, "will" means desire, command. Barney v. Hayes, 29 Pac. 282, 284, 11 Mont. 571, 28 Am. St. Rep. 495.

By the term "will," as used in a definition of insanity, is meant the governing power of the mind. Lowe v. State, 98 N. W. 417, 424, 118 Wis. 641.

"Will and bequeath," as used in a will declaring that the testator thereby "willed and bequeathed" his land to a devisee, without words of limitation, was sufficient to pass the fee, since the word "will," used in this connection, means "to dispose of" by will, and the word "bequeath" means "to give" by will. Technically, the word "bequeath" relates to personal property more properly than real estate. In this instance "devise" would have been the more appropriate word to use in the disposition of the real estate; but the word "devise," not being used in either item of the will itself, evidenced that there was no careful selection of words; and therefore a natural acceptance of the words would be given them, and this the more, inasmuch as a life estate of the same property had been devised to another without disposition of the remainder, and, if the devise in question should be construed to be a life estate, there would result, therefore, a partial intestacy. Mills v. Franklin, 28 N. E. 60, 61, 128 Ind. 444.

As consent.

An indictment for rape, charging that the act was committed on a girl "against her will," implies that it was against her consent, the words "will" and "consent" being synonymous in this sense, and the indictment was sufficient. State v. Gaul, 50 Conn. 578, 579.

As creating a trust.

"Willing and desiring," in a will, are frequently construed to amount to a trust; but where the uncertainty is such that the court cannot determine who are meant, it may be construed only as a recommendation to the first devisee, and to make the estate absolute in him. Harding v. Glyn, 1 Atk. 469, 470.

Commandatory terms of a will expressing a wish, will, or desire, etc., are sufficient to constitute a trust, unless there be certainty as to the parties who are to take and what they are to take. Lines v. Darden, 5 Fla. 51, 72.

The word "will," as used in a will, according to Perry on Trusts (volume 1, c. 4, § 112), in a clause that the testator desires that a legatee "will" make a certain disposition of the fund bequeathed, is a word of intention which the court will carry into effect as if the testator had used an absolute word of devise in trust, and the court will direct the donee or first taker to hold as a trustee for those whom the donor intended to benefit. Cockrill v. Armstrong, 81 Ark. 580, 589.

"Will," as used in a will reciting that it was the testator's wish and "will" that certain property should be devoted to a certain purpose, has been held to create a trust. It is undoubtedly true that this and other like precatory words will under conditions, but not invariably, raise or imply a trust. Pratt v. Trustees of Sheppard and Enoch Pratt Hospital, 42 Atl. 51, 54, 88 Md. 610.

"Will and desire," as used in a will by which testator gave all his estate to his wife and two daughters absolutely, and then declared that if his daughters should marry it was his "will" and desire that the property should not in any instance be liable for the debts of their husbands, are not merely precatory words indicating a desire or recommendation, and not creating a remainder in the children of the devisee. Collins v. Williams, 41 S. W. 1056, 1057, 98 Tenn. 525.

"Will and desire," as used in a will where testator makes an absolute gift of property, saying that it is his "will and desire" that it be used in a certain way, is sufficient to raise a trust where the subject and object of the trust are sufficiently certain. Major v. Herndon, 78 Ky. 123, 129.

"Will," as used in a will declaring that "it is my will and desire," etc., is a stronger term and evidences more clearly a "desire" that the thing willed shall become the property of the person in whose favor a bequest is made or the act thus directed shall be performed than does the word "desire," being equivalent to the word "wish," and evidences the intention of the testator to dispose of the property to such person. McMurry v. Stanley, 6 S. W. 412, 414, 69 Tex. 227.

The term "will," as used in a will creating a trust, is used in the same sense as "wish" or "direct." Bliven v. Seymour, 88 N. Y. 469, 476, 477.

WILL (Auxiliary Verb).

The terms "now" and "hereafter" signify time present and to come and from the period at which they are used. The words "shall" and "will" indicate time in the future to the same period. Chapman v. Holmes' Ex'rs, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 20, 26.

A charge that another "will swear, lie, cheat, or steal" may import that he lies, swears, cheats, and steals, and if used in the latter sense it is to be determined by the jury whether the language is actionable. Dottarer v. Bushey, 16 Pa. (4 Harris) 204, 209.

The phrase "he will steal and I can prove it" may well be taken to import a charge that plaintiff has stolen, and when properly alleged with an innuendo to that effect may sufficiently show a cause of action for slander. Cornelius v. Van Slyck (N. Y.) 21 Wend. 70.

An order in which A. directs B. to let C. have money or goods and says, "I will guarantee" that he will pay for them, is a good guaranty and effectual as soon as the goods are delivered, the use of the future tense not being of any effect, unless it appears that something further should be done on the part of the writer before the obligation is to attach. McNaughton v. Conkling, 9 Wis. 316, 320.

A letter by a principal to his agent, stating that "as you stated you could get $30,000 for the place you occupy, * * * and if you can we will sell at that price, * * * and allow you two and a half per cent. on said price," merely authorizes the agent to find a purchaser but not to sell. Grant v. Ede, 24 Pac. 890, 891, 85 Cal. 418, 20 Am. St. Rep. 237.

As executory.

"Will sell," as used in an agreement stating that the defendant will sell a certain quantity of ice for a certain sum to be paid in the manner stipulated, imports an executory contract and not a completed one. Weed v. Boston & S. Ice Co., 94 Mass. (12 Allen) 377, 379.

Where the purpose was to adjust all the property rights, a provision in an antenuptial contract that the husband "will release his interest in the wife's property" is not executory in the sense that some act remains to be done on his part. Buffington v. Buffington, 51 N. E. 328, 329, 151 Ind. 200.

As imperative.

The word "will" has not an imperative force like the word "shall." State v. Hilsabeck, 34 S. W. 38, 40, 132 Mo. 348 (citing Webst. Int. Dict.).

An instruction that if the plaintiff has, by a preponderance of the evidence, proved the material allegations of his complaint, the jury "will" find in his favor and that it is their duty to determine the amount of his damage, instead of directing them that they "may" find in his favor and "may" assess his damage, will not be construed as coercive upon the jury, and tending to deprive the jury of their freedom of action in the matter, and hence to be an invasion by the court of the province of the jury. North Chicago St. R. Co. v. Zeiger, 54 N. E. 1006, 1007, 182 Ill. 9, 74 Am. St. Rep. 157.

WILL (Testament).

A will is the legal declaration of a man's intention, which he wills to be performed after his death—Jasper v. Jasper, 22 Pac. 152, 153, 17 Or. 590 (citing Black); Mills v. Newberry, 112 Ill. 123, 133, 1 N. E. 156, 54 Am. Rep. 213; Frew v. Clarke, 80 Pa. (30 P. F. Smith) 170, 178; Holcomb v. Wright (U. S.) 5 App. D. C. 76, 83 (citing Smith v. Bell, 31 U. S. [6 Pet.] 68, 8 L. Ed. 322)—touching either the disposition of his property, the guardianship of his children, or the administration of his estate, or any or all of these things. It may consist of only one instrument, or it may consist of one instrument and one or more codicils. Herzog v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 82 N. Y. Supp. 355, 357. Kent defines it as the disposition of real and personal property to take effect after the death of the testator. Coulter v. Shelmadine, 53 Atl. 638, 639, 204 Pa. 120; Hester v. Young, 2 Ga. (2 Kelly) 31, 50.

A will is "the declaration of a man's mind as to the manner in which he would have his property or estate disposed of after his death." Leathers v. Greenacre, 53 Me. 561, 567 (citing Jarman on Wills); Tomkins v. Tomkins (S. C.) 1 Bailey, 92, 96, 19 Am. Dec. 656; Byrne v. Hume, 84 Mich. 185, 192, 47 N. W. 679, 681.

A will is a disposition of one's estate to take effect after his death. Hassell v. Basket (U. S.) 11 Fed. Cas. 788, 789; Chaney v. Same (U. S.) 5 Fed. Cas. 460, 461.

"A will is an instrument by which a person makes a disposition of his property to take effect after his death." Barney v. Hayes, 29 Pac. 282, 284, 11 Mont. 571, 23 Am. St. Rep. 495 (citing Jarm. Wills); Williams v. Noland, 82 S. W. 328, 329, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 629; Grigsby's Legatees v. Willis' Estate, 59 S. W. 574, 577, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 1. See, also, In re Bomar, 18 N. Y. Supp. 214, 215, 27 Abb. N. C. 425; Jordan v. Jordan's Adm'r, 65 Ala. 301, 305. It is in its own nature ambulatory and revocable during life. Grigsby's Legatees v. Willis' Estate, 59 S. W. 574, 577, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 1; Williams v. Noland, 82 S. W. 328, 329, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 629; Jordan v. Jordan's Adm'r, 65 Ala. 301, 305; McDaniel v. Johns, 45 Miss. 632, 641; Green v. Lane, 45 N. C. 102, 113.

A will is the just sentence of our will touching what we would have done after our death. Payne v. Sale, 22 N. C. 455, 457.

A will is the formal declaration in writing by which the maker provides for the distribution of his property after his death. Lott v. Thompson, 36 S. C. 38, 43, 15 S. E. 278.

A will is the legal declaration of a party's intention which he directs to be performed after his death. Welch v. Kinard (S. C.) Speer, Eq. 256, 263.

All the law writers, so far as we are informed, define as "wills" those dispositions made by a party which affect property after death. Williams v. Noland, 32 S. W. 828, 329, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 629.

A will is any writing whereby a person makes a disposition of his property to take effect after his death. Cover v. Stem, 10 Atl. 231, 233, 67 Md. 449, 1 Am. St. Rep. 406; Ward v. Ward, 20 Ky. Law Rep. 986, 988, 48 S. W. 411, 412.

"A will is a mere declaration or sentence of a man's mind as to what he would have to be done with his estate after his death. 5 Bac. Abr. tit. 'Of Wills and Testaments' (A) p. 497. The function of a will is to effect the disposition of property after the donee's death in accordance with a mere declaration made by the donor in his lifetime, and during his lifetime entirely inoperative; but no conveyance, contract, trust, or other disposition of property can be declared illegal or ineffectual because it practically discharges the same function as a will after the death of the person who made it." Dunn v. Houghton (N. J.) 51 Atl. 71, 79.

A "will or testamentary paper" is an instrument of writing which does not pass an interest or right in the property attempted to be thereby conveyed until the death of the maker. Reed v. Hazleton, 15 Pac. 177, 180, 37 Kan. 321.

A will is ambulatory during the life of its maker. It is in effect reiterated as his testament at each moment, and is governed by the law existing at the time when it takes effect upon the testator's death. In re Kopmeier's Will, 89 N. W. 134, 136, 113 Wis. 233.

A mutual agreement provided that the property of the intended wife should remain in her, and that she might dispose of the same "by deed, grant, bargain, desire, will or otherwise." Held, that the word "will" was implied in its technical sense as meaning the testamentary disposition. Cook v. Adams, 47 N. E. 605, 606, 180 Ill. 599.

A "will" means not barely the signing of it, and the formal publication or delivery, but proof in the language of the candid that he well knew and understood the contents thereof, and did give, will, dispose, and do in all things as in the said will contained. In re Nadal's Will, 2 Hawaiian, 400, 403 (citing Zacharias v. Collis, 3 Phil. 179).

The four requisites necessary to constitute a valid will are said to be: (1) That the instrument be in writing, signed by the testator; (2) that it be attested by two credible witnesses; (3) that it is subscribed in the presence of these witnesses; (4) that the testator be of sound mind and memory. Robinson v. Brewster, 30 N. E. 683, 685, 140 Ill. 649, 33 Am. St. Rep. 265.

As affecting after-acquired land.

"A will as affecting real estate is a disposition of lands from the heir. It is an appointment of a person who shall take the specific land. It is also an appointment of a specific estate, and so far it is in the nature of a conveyance. That a will does not operate to transfer lands acquired after its execution has been settled in England, and wherever the common law prevails unmodified by local usage, from a very early period. But this principle does not extend to wills of personal estate. A reason for the distinction is given by an eminent legal writer, Powell on Dev. 151, 152 (Jarman's Ed.). The common law, it is there said, after the introduction of feuds, appointed no heir on whom personal property should descend. If the owner died intestate, it devolved on the church. A testament was then the constitution by the testator of an heir to his personal property, the law having otherwise appointed none. An executor stood in the relation of testator to such property, and was entitled to all of it, the law not giving it to any other person. The only limitation upon his rights was that the property was subjected in his hands to the trusts of the testator. But as to freehold property, the feudal law, when feuds became inheritable, constituted an heir in his own right, whose title was inchoate when a freehold of inheritance was acquired by his ancestor, and the person next in succession was called the apparent, or presumptive, heir. A will of personal property operating, therefore, as the constitution of an heir, and a will of the lands as a disposition from an heir, the one cannot take effect in the same manner as the other does, but each must take effect according to the nature and property of the subject-matter on which it is to operate, and the time of its operation. A will does not pass land acquired by testator after the execution of the will." George v. Green, 13 N. H. 521, 524.

As an agreement.

See "Agreement."

As any testamentary disposition.

The term "will" includes every kind of testamentary act taking effect from the mind of the testator and manifested by an instrument in writing. Flood v. Kerwin, 89 N. W. 845, 847, 113 Wis. 673.

An instrument in any form, whether a deed poll, or indenture, if the obvious purpose is not to take effect till after the death of the person making it, shall operate as a "will." In re Harrison's Estate, 46 Atl. 888, 890, 196 Pa. 576.

St. 1843, c. 92, providing that any "will" of any inhabitant of the state made in any other of the United States, or in any foreign country, which might be approved and allowed according to the laws of such state or country, may be proved and recorded in the state, and be proceeded in and have the same effect as if executed conformably to the laws of the state, should be construed to include every species of testamentary act which takes its effect upon the mind of the testator requiring a sound and disposing mind and capacity, and manifested by the proper execution of an instrument in writing, and thus includes any testamentary writing which operates by way of revocation, and not by way of cancellation. A paper properly executed, written by a testator to a certain person, stating that it was his wish that the will he had made be destroyed and his estate settled according to law, should take effect the same as a will, codicil, or revocation; for it was intended to operate, as far as the testator had capacity to do it, as a testamentary declaration of a personal wish, will, and purpose to annul the will, and a like personal wish and purpose that his estate should be settled after his decease as an intestate estate. It was not intended as a mere authority to the person to whom it was addressed to cancel or destroy his will physically, but also to declare his personal will. Bayley v. Bailey, 59 Mass. (5 Cush.) 245, 249.

A will, within the meaning of the statute prohibiting witnesses to any "will" or codicil from taking, etc., cannot be limited to wills devising real property only, but includes all wills. Lees v. Summersgill, 17 Ves. 508, 511.

The "last will," says Swineburn, "is a lawful disposing of that which any one would have done after death." It is a voluntary disposition of property in mode recognized by law to take effect after death. Consequently all that is required to constitute "a paper writing appearing to be the will of a deceased person," within Code, § 2163, providing that such a paper, under certain conditions, should be sufficient to dispose of real property, is that the writing should purport to be the disposition of the writer's property after his death. Entries in a diary which either undertake to dispose of property of the writer or to control its disposition constitute a valid will if the other statutory requirements are fulfilled, and this will be true though some of the entries in the diary would be entitled to probate as a holographic will, and some as a will of personality only. All taken together, they would constitute a will. Reagan v. Stanley, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 316, 324 (citing Suggett v. Kitchell, 14 Tenn. [6 Yerg.] 429).

A paper that has not been subscribed and witnessed has no effect as a will, under the statute of Illinois. Harrison v. Weatherby, 54 N. E. 237, 240, 180 Ill. 418 (citing Rigg v. Wilton, 13 Ill. 15, 54 Am. Dec. 419).

Except where it would be contrary to the manifest intention, the word "will," as used in the chapter relating thereto, shall signify a last will or testament, codicil, appointment by will, or writing in the nature of a will, in exercise of a power, and also any other testamentary disposition. Ky. St. 1903, § 4824.

Except where it would be inconsistent with the manifest intent of the Legislature, the word "will" shall extend to a testament, and to a codicil, and to an appointment by will or by writing in the matter of a will, in the exercise of a power, and also to any other testamentary disposition. Code Va. 1887, § 2511 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1282].

The word "will" embraces a testament, a codicil, an appointment by will or writing in the nature of a will, in exercise of a power, also any other testamentary disposition. Code W. Va. 1899, p. 133, c. 13, § 17.

Codicil included.

The term "will" includes codicils, and legal provisions relating to wills must be understood as embracing codicils. Fry v. Morrison, 42 N. E. 774, 775, 159 Ill. 244.

In Fuller v. Hooper, 2 Ves. Sr. 242, Belt's Supp. 333, Lord Hardwicke said: "A will is to be considered in two lights—as the testament and the instrument. The testament is the result and effect in point of law of what is the will, and that consists of all the parts, and a codicil is then a part of the will, all making but one testament; but it may be made at different times and under different circumstances, and therefore there may be a different intention at making the one and the other. The instrument is that writing in which the will is contained." This distinction shows that, though for most purposes a will and codicil are to be regarded as making but one testament, they will not be regarded as a single instrument where a manifest intention requires otherwise. Appeal of Alsop, 9 Pa. St. (9 Barr) 374, 382.

By statute in many states it is provided that the word "will" shall include or mean a codicil. See Rev. St. Okl. 1903, §§ 2808, 6890; Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 255, subd. 15; Pol. Code Cal. 1903, § 17, subd. 5; Code Civ. Proc. Cal. 1903, § 17, subd. 5; Pen. Code Cal. 1903, § 7, subd. 14; Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 14, subd. 5; Pen. Code Ariz. 1901, par. 7, subd. 14; Comp. Laws Nev. 1900, § 3091; Rev. St. Me. 1883, p. 59, c. 1, § 6, subd. 19; Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 4971; Ky. St. 1903, §§ 463, 4824; Code N. C. 1883, § 3765, subd. 9; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, §§ 5135, 6166; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, §§ 1089, 2469; Pol. Code Mont. 1895, § 16, subd. 5; Code Civ. Proc. Mont. 1895, § 3463, subd. 7; Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 4662, subd. 6; Pen. H. 1901, p. 64, c. 2, § 22; Comp. Laws

Mich. 1897, § 50, subd. 16; Mills' Ann. St. Colo. 1891, § 4185, cl. 10; Ann. St. Ind. T. 1899, § 3620; Code Iowa 1897, § 48, subd. 17; Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 7342, subd. 17; Hurd's Rev. St. Ill. 1901, p. 1720, c. 131, § 1, subd. 13; Horner's Ann. St. Ind. 1901, § 240, subd. 8; Code W. Va. 1899, p. 133, c. 13, § 17; Rev. St. Mo. 1899, §§ 4647, 6140; Code Va. 1887, § 2511 [Va. As conveyance, contract, or gift.

A "will" is not a contract or conveyance. It is the act of one party only. It is entirely inchoate. No one is bound by it during the life of the testator, and it is revocable at his pleasure. There is no contracting party to it; no delivery and no acceptance of it, as there must be in the case of a contract or conveyance. It is not a gift inter vivos nor is it a gift causa mortis. Lewis v. Jones (N. Y.) 50 Barb. 645, 650.

"A 'will' does not and never can alienate an estate. The estate, however, when a will is executed, passes to the person designated by the will; but this passing of the estate to such person, as before stated, is not an alienation. The passing of an estate to a person must be given some other name, as a 'reception,' or a 'union,' or an 'association.' We know the text-writers have sometimes broadened the word 'alienation' so as to make it include the transfer of property by will and death and the statutes, and perhaps this use of the word in such a case is not inaccurate; but, as before stated, the efficient cause of the alienation in such a case, indeed the sole cause, is death, and the will and the statutes merely say where the title of the estate shall go. In the case of Comstock v. Adams, 23 Kan. 513, 524, 33 Am. Rep. 191, the following language is used: 'A will is never a conveyance. A conveyance operates in the lifetime of the grantor, while a will does not operate until after the death of the maker. Of course, death transfers all property, and a will says where it shall go; but this does not render a will a conveyance.'" Vining v. Willis, 20 Pac. 232, 233, 40 Kan. 609.

As there was originally no power of testamentary disposition of land, a "will" was originally defined to be "the just sentence of our will touching what we would have done after our death respecting personal estate." The disposition of lands subsequently permitted was not considered so much in the nature of a testament as of a conveyance, by way of appointment of particular lands to a particular person. Per Tarbell, J., in Clark v. Hornthal, 47 Miss. 430, 436.

A brother and sister owning separate properties made a will together, which read as follows: "I, B. C., should I be the first to die, give, devise, and bequeath to the survivor of us all the rest and residue of the decedent's estate, both real and personal, to have and to hold and enjoy the same during the life of the survivor," etc.; and directed that at the expiration of the life estate the residue should be divided into nine parts, "three of which parts I give and bequeath," etc.—the singular number being used through the whole instrument. In determining the nature of this writing the court says it is important to a correct understanding of the real ground of the controversy to bear in mind the peculiar characteristics of a contract and those of a will. A contract is an agreement between parties for the doing or not doing of some particular thing. The undertaking of one party is made in consideration of something paid or to be done by or on behalf of the other party, so that the obligation to do and the right to require performance are reciprocal. A will, on the other hand, is simply a statement of a purpose or wish of the maker as it exists at the time. As often as his purpose or wish changes he may change the expression of it, and when and why a change shall be made depends upon himself alone. He is answerable to no one for his determination to make one rather than another disposition of his property. The binding force of a contract comes from the aggregatio mentium of the parties. The binding force of a will comes from the fact that it is the last expressed purpose of the testator in regard to the disposition of his property after his own death, and in view of this principle it is held that the instrument was the separate will of each, and that the survivor as to her property had a right to make a new will containing a different disposition thereof. In re Cawley's Estate, 20 Atl. 567, 568, 136 Pa. 628, 10 L. R. A. 93.

While a "will" is a conveyance of real estate in a certain sense, we may say, in legal language, it is not so understood or referred to. The one who takes comes to his estate by purchase, and not by descent; but he is a devisee, and not a grantee; and we do not think, looking to the purpose of the Legislature, that the word "conveyances," as used in Laws 1885, c. 147, requiring conveyances in order to be valid against bona fide purchasers to be recorded, includes wills. Bell v. Couch, 43 S. E. 911, 912, 132 N. C. 346.

Deed distinguished.

A will is an instrument by which a person makes a disposition of property to take effect after his death, and as its operation is postponed during life it is ambulatory and revocable, and it is this ambulatory and revocable quality which distinguishes it from deeds, and other similar instruments of transfer or conveyance, taking effect, if at all, at the time of execution. Jordan v. Jordan's Adm'r, 65 Ala. 301, 305; McDaniels v. Johns, 45 Miss. 632, 641.

A "deed" must pass a present interest in the property although the right to possession and enjoyment may not accrue until some future time. It is distinguished from a will which does not pass any interest until after death of the maker. Thus an instrument which purports to be a deed, uses the language ordinarily implied in deeds, conveys a present interest to trustees named, and is executed and acknowledged as a deed, is a deed notwithstanding a reservation of the power of revocation, modification or substitution of the trusts thereby exercised within a certain time. President, etc., of Bowdoin College v. Merritt (U. S.) 75 Fed. 480, 483.

In order that a paper be held a deed it must convey an interest to take effect in present, though the enjoyment of this interest may rest in futuro. It is otherwise as to a will. It speaks as of the death of the testator. The instrument may be in the form of a deed. It may be supported by a consideration and by its maker be called a deed, yet, if it purports to convey a title which does not arise until the death of the maker, it is nevertheless a "will." Whether a paper is to operate as a will or deed depends upon the intention of the maker, to be gathered from its language. An instrument executed by a husband, reciting a gift of land to the wife to take effect after her husband's death and reserving the right to sell or dispose of it during his life, in which event the instrument is to be void, is a testamentary devise and not a deed, and hence did not vest any present interest in the land in the wife which would pass by her conveyance during the life of the husband. Ellis v. Pearson, 58 S. W. 318, 104 Tenn. 591.

The distinction between a "conveyance by deed" and a "will" is patent. The one is completed by the act, and the other does not become effective until the death of the maker. Macrae v. Macrae (Tenn.) 57 S. W. 423, 424.

In determining whether an instrument be a will or a deed, the main question is, did the maker intend any estate or interest whatever to vest before his death and upon the execution of the paper, or in other words did he intend that all the interest and estate should take effect only after his death? If the former it is a deed, if the latter a will, and it is immaterial whether he call it a deed or will. Whitten v. McFall, 26 South. 131, 132, 122 Ala. 619.

As last will or testament.

The words will and testament and the phrase last will and testament, are exactly synonymous by common usage all over the world. Hill v. Hill, 35 Pac. 360, 7 Wash. 409.

8 Wds. & P.—43

In common phrase any paper executed in testamentary form is called a will. In a legal sense the testator's will is a paper executed and existing under such circumstances as entitle it to probate. In this sense the word "last" adds nothing, and the phrase used in an appeal from a decree probating a will as follows "because such instrument was not the last will and testament of such deceased," is in effect a denial that the instrument was in fact a will, and constitutes a legally sufficient reason. Lane v. Hill, 44 Atl. 597, 598, 68 N. H. 398.

It is provided by statute in some states that the word "will" shall be construed to mean "last will and testament" (see Rev. Code Del. 1893, c. 5, § 1, subd. 8; Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. 1899, § 2514, subd. 4; Ky. St. 1903, § 4824), or an instrument purporting to be such (Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 6166). And in other states the word "will" is declared to include a testament. See Horner's Ann. St. Ind. 1901, § 240, subd. 8; Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 6140; Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 2724; Code W. Va. 1899, p. 133, c. 13, § 17; Code Va. 1887, § 2511 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1282]; Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 4647.

As matter of intention.

A will is defined to be the legal declaration of a man's intentions which he wills to be performed after his death. Eckford v. Eckford (Iowa) 53 N. W. 345, 346; Appeal of Lininger, 101 Pa. 161, 163; Coulter v. Shelmadine, 53 Atl. 638, 639, 204 Pa. 120; Appeal of Jameson, 1 Mich. (Man.) 99, 102; Adams v. Cowen, 20 Sup. Ct. 668, 669, 177 U. S. 471, 44 L. Ed. 851; Eckford v. Eckford, 58 N. W. 1093, 1096, 91 Iowa, 54, 26 L. R. A. 370. These intentions are to be collected from his words and ought to be carried into effect if they be consistent with law. Adams v. Cowen, 20 Sup. Ct. 668, 669, 177 U. S. 471, 44 L. Ed. 851; Eckford v. Eckford, 58 N. W. 1093, 1096, 91 Iowa, 54, 26 L. R. A. 370. It follows, therefore, that it is the duty of the court in the construction of wills to give full and complete effect to the intention of the testator. Appeal of Jameson, 1 Mich. (Man.) 99, 102.

A "will" is but the medium through which the intent of the testator is made known. That intention, within the limits of the disposable portion, is the law of the case, and if made manifest and unmistakable must have execution. Gueydan v. Montagne, 33 South. 61, 62, 109 La. 38.

Where a testator does not violate any principle or public policy, religion or morality, nor infringe on any statute, he may make such disposition of his property as he sees proper. Appeal of Lininger, 101 Pa. 161, 163.

As muniment of title.

A "will" is a muniment of title, but to be effectual to pass either real or personal property, it must be duly proved and allowed in the county court as required by statute. Hanley v. Kraftczyk, 96 N. W. 820, 821, 119 Wis. 352.

As order.

A will executed in the usual form is not an order such as is required by a stipulation of a contract of life insurance, which makes the insurance payable to a person therein designated, unless a different payee is appointed by an order acknowledged before a justice of the peace. Mellows v. Mellows, 61 N. H. 137.

Testament distinguished.

A "will" is more properly called a devise of real estate and is of an entirely different and opposite character to a testament, which in strictness concerns personal property merely. A devise is a conveyance of land and not under the same jurisdiction as a testament. 2 Bl. Comm. 501. The deviser must have reached the age of twenty-one years; and it is complete or may be executed without the appointment of an executor or administrator. Indeed, these offices are neither of them predicable of a devise of real estate. The deviser may require some future act to be done, in order to the vesting of an estate; and may, and often does, delegate the power to some friend who is to designate the devisee, and make a sale and distribution of lands already devised in fee. But in this his friend does not act as an executor. Conklin v. Egerton's Adm'r (N. Y.) 21 Wend. 430, 436.

WILLFUL—WILLFULLY.

"Willfully" is defined by Webster to mean "in a willful manner; obstinately; stubbornly; by design; with set purpose." Whitman v. State, 22 N. W. 459, 460, 17 Neb. 224; Huff v. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co., 56 N. E. 932, 934, 24 Ind. App. 492, 79 Am. St. Rep. 274; Miller v. Miller, 47 N. E. 338, 339, 17 Ind. App. 605; Dull v. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 52 N. E. 1013, 21 Ind. App. 571; Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Nash, 27 N. E. 564, 565, 1 Ind. App. 298.

"Willful" means proceeding from a conscious motion of the will; intending the result which actually comes to pass; designed; intentional; malicious. Parsons v. Smilie, 97 Cal. 647, 655, 32 Pac. 702, 704 (citing Bl. Comm.).

The word "willfully" means "willingly; designedly; purposely; and obstinately or stubbornly." Richardson v. State, 5 Tex. App. 470, 472.

"Willful" is defined by Webster to mean "obstinate; perverse; inflexible; stubborn; refractory." United States v. Three Railroad Cars (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 144, 146.

The word "willful," or "willfully," is variously construed. Abbott, in his Law Dictionary, says that it is a term used in averring or describing an act, particularly one charged as a crime, to show that it was done in the free activity of the perpetrator's will. The author also quotes from the opinion in the case of United States v. Three Railroad Cars (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 144, as follows: "To authorize a conviction under a penal statute prescribing a punishment for willfully removing an official seal from property which has been sealed up by officers of the customs, it must appear that the defendant not only intended to remove the seal, but that he had at the time a knowledge of its character. One who removes such a seal in ignorance of its character, and in the honest execution of a supposed duty in the care and transportation of the property, is not liable to the punishment under the statute, for the reason that he cannot be deemed to have acted willfully." Minkler v. State, 14 Neb. 181, 183, 15 N. W. 330, 331.

The word "willfully," when used to denote the intent with which an act is done, is a word which is susceptible of different significations, depending on the context in which it is used. It is employed in penal statutes more frequently to distinguish between those acts which are intentional and by design, and those which are thoughtless or accidental. It may sometimes mean corruptly or unlawfully, or again designedly or purposely, with an intent to do some act in violation of law. Highway Com'rs v. Ely, 54 Mich. 173, 180, 19 N. W. 940.

An estoppel exists where one by his words or conduct willfully causes another to believe in the existence of a certain state of things, and induces him to act on that belief so as to alter his own previous position. The word "willfully," as used in this connection, is not to be taken in the limited sense of the term "maliciously" or of the term "fraudulently," nor does it of necessity imply an active desire to produce a particular impression or to induce a particular line of conduct. Whatever the motive may be, if one so acts or speaks that the natural consequence of his words or conduct will be to influence another to change his condition, he is legally chargeable with an intent—a willful design—to induce the other to believe him. Preston v. Mann, 25 Conn. 118, 128.

Accidental distinguished.

The term "willfully," when used to characterize murder, means intentionally; that is, not accidentally. State v. McKenzie, 45 S. W. 1117, 144 Mo. 40; State v. Avery, 21 S. W. 193, 197, 113 Mo. 475; State v. Brooks, 5 S. W. 257, 260, 92 Mo. 542; State v. Howell, 23 S. W. 263, 267, 117 Mo. 307; State v. Fitzgerald, 32 S. W. 1113, 1115, 130 Mo. 407; State v. Schaefer, 22 S. W. 447, 450, 116 Mo.

96; State v. Harper, 51 S. W. 89, 91, 149 Mo. 514; State v. Silk, 44 S. W. 764, 766, 145 Mo. 240; State v. McMullin, 71 S. W. 221, 224, 170 Mo. 608; Strutton v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 62 S. W. 873, 877; Clark v. Commonwealth, 63 S. W. 740, 746, 111 Ky. 443; Anderson v. How, 22 N. E. 695, 697, 116 N. Y. 336; Leicester v. Hoadly, 71 Pac. 318, 319, 66 Kan. 172, 65 L. R. A. 523; State v. Stein, 51 N. W. 474, 475, 48 Minn. 466; State v. Zdanowicz, 55 Atl. 743, 746, 69 N. J. Law, 619.

"Willfully," as used in reference to homicide, means "that the act charged was intentionally done, and not the result of accident or misfortune." Anderson v. Territory, 13 Pac. 21, 25, 4 N. M. (Johns.) 108.

"A 'willful act' is defined to be an act done designedly, intentionally, or purposely, as contradistinguished from accident, inadvertence, or absence of intention or design." Commonwealth v. Perrier (Pa.) 3 Phila. 229, 232.

The word "willful," as used in connection with the charge of murder, means an intentional killing, and not an accidental killing. It means an act which results in death, that is intentionally done, and one that is not accidentally done. There is a great difference between that which is in the law accidental and that which is intentional. The law fastens intent to every act that is not an accident. Every act that produces death, that is outside of the definition of the word "accident," is intentional in the law, whether it grows out of specified design to take life, or whether it grows out of a gross carelessness, or whether it arises from a condition of mind that prompts the possessor of that mind to be engaged in some other wrongful or criminal act, and in the execution of it a life is taken. That which is an accident in the law is something that occurs after the exercise of the care that the law requires to be exercised to prevent such an occurrence. When a man exercises the amount of legal care exacted by the law, and something occurs beyond that, that is not his willful act. The law recognizes that he does not do it willfully. But when he does an act which naturally or reasonably or probably, from its nature and the way it is done, produces a certain result, that is held to be an intentional result, because the act, as done in that way, is intentional; and whenever an act is done, and it is an act that may naturally or probably produce a certain result, that act is done intentionally, the result is intentional. For example, if a man presents a gun at another and fires it at him, the fact of drawing the gun and presenting it shows that he wills what he does, shows that that act is a willful act upon his part, and, when that state of facts exists, the act of presenting and firing the gun is recognized by common observation and common experience as a willful act. If that act produced death, because there is a known connection between the act and the result, which is probable, which is usual, and which is reasonable, the party is said to have intended the result, and consequently to have willed the result. United States v. Boyd (U. S.) 45 Fed. 851, 855.

Bad purpose.

The word "willfully" means not merely voluntarily, but with a bad purpose. Potter v. United States, 15 Sup. Ct. 144, 147, 155 U. S. 438, 89 L. Ed. 214; Commonwealth v. Kneeland, 37 Mass. (20 Pick.) 206; Williams v. People, 57 Pac. 701, 702, 26 Colo. 272.

Bad motive is necessary to make an act willful, and the fact that the act of omission is done in obedience to the will is not enough. State v. Alcorn, 14 S. W. 663, 664, 78 Tex. 387.

The word "willfully," as used in Act Cong. July 12, 1882, § 13, imposing a penalty upon one who shall willfully violate, as well as upon one who shall resort to any device to evade, the provisions of the act, means not merely voluntarily, but with a bad purpose. Spurr v. United States, 19 Sup. Ct. 812, 815, 174 U. S. 728, 43 L. Ed. 1150.

The word "willful," as used in a statute providing that the act of cutting trees must be willful to authorize punishment therefor, means intentionally, malevolently, with a bad purpose, an evil purpose, without ground for believing the act to be lawful. Hateley v. State, 44 S. E. 852, 853, 118 Ga. 79 (citing King v. State, 103 Ga. 265, 30 S. E. 80).

The word "willfully," when used in a statute creating a criminal offense, means not merely voluntarily, but with a bad purpose. State of North Carolina v. Vanderford (U. S.) 35 Fed. 282, 287.

"Willfully," in the ordinary sense in which it is used in the statutes, means not merely voluntarily, but with a bad purpose. A "willful act," in the usual sense of the words, is one done designedly, intentionally, or purposely; and also "willful misconduct" means misconduct to which the will is a party. Hence it is held that, in an action against a railroad for killing stock, an allegation in the complaint that the killing was willfully done is sufficient to show an intentional killing. Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Nash, 1 Ind. App. 298, 300, 27 N. E. 564.

Capacity of party.

The word "willfully," as used in Acts 1869, No. 4, § 3, providing that, whenever any person in the state of intoxication shall willfully commit any injury upon the person or property of another, any person who, by himself, his clerk or servant, shall have unlawfully sold or furnished any part of the liquor causing such intoxication, shall be liable to the party injured, is such willfulness as a drunken person may have, and that could only have been intended by the statute. If that of a sober person had been intended, no intoxicated person would have it, and the statute would not apply to anything. If the act is the result of such capacity for determining what he will do as the intoxicated person has, it is within the meaning of the statute. The presumption in the first instance always is that a person intends to do what he does, so far as he can intend. Accordingly, proof that an intoxicated person committed an injury, if no excuse or justification appears out of the circumstances, is sufficient from which to find that he did it willfully according to his capacity, and such proof will make out his part of the case under the statute unless some excuse or justification is made to appear by way of defense. Smith v. Wilcox, 47 Vt. 537, 545.

Consciously.

In common parlance willful means intentional as distinguished from accidental or involuntary. In Black, Law Dict. 1242, "willful" is defined as follows: "Proceeding from a conscious motion of the will; intending the result which actually came to pass; designed; intentional; malicious." King v. State, 30 S. E. 30, 31, 103 Ga. 263.

"Willful," as used in criminal and penal statutes, has frequently been interpreted to mean not merely a voluntary act, but an act committed with evil intent. Hurd's Rev. St. 1889, c. 93, § 14, declaring that any injury by willful failure to comply with the provisions of the act requiring a light to be furnished at the top of every shaft of a mine shall give a cause of action for injuries received, is not in the nature of a penal statute, and provides for compensation for injuries inflicted, not punishment. An act consciously committed is willfully committed within the meaning of the word "willful," as used in this enactment. Odin Coal Co. v. Denman, 57 N. E. 192, 194, 185 Ill. 413, 76 Am. St. Rep. 45 (citing Carterville Coal Co. v. Abbott, 181 Ill. 495, 55 N. E. 131).

Corruptly and falsely distinguished.

1 Mills' Ann. St. § 2170 (Gen. St. 1883, § 787), defines perjury as testifying willfully, corruptly, and falsely. "Willfully" is a word of stronger meaning than either "corruptly" or "falsely." "Willfully," as employed in criminal and penal statutes, usually means something more than intentionally and voluntarily. It implies that the act done which it characterizes is designedly done with some bad purpose or without justifiable excuse. Williams v. People, 57 Pac. 701, 702, 26 Colo. 272.

The words "willfully," "unlawfully," and "feloniously," when used in an indictment for forgery, though not words of the same import, have a broader and more extensive signification than the word "falsely," and are more than its equivalent; so that the word "falsely" is not essential to the validity of the indictment. State v. McKiernan, 30 Pac. 831, 832, 17 Nev. 224.

"Willfully," as used in Rev. St. § 5392, which makes it of the essence of the offense of perjury that it be committed willfully, means with design, with some degree of deliberation, and, as so construed, is not the same as "corruptly," which means viciously or wickedly. Thus, an indictment charging that the testimony was corruptly given was not a good indictment alleging the offense described in the statute. United States v. Edwards (U. S.) 43 Fed. 67.

As used in an indictment, that a person "willfully, knowingly, maliciously, and falsely" said, deposed, and swore on oath is equivalent to saying that he corruptly swore; for the words used necessarily involved "corruptly." It could not have been willfully, knowingly, maliciously, and falsely, without being corruptly, done. State v. Bixler, 62 Md. 354, 356. See, also, Mills v. Glennon, 6 Pac. 116, 118, 2 Idaho (Hasb.) 105; State v. Stein, 51 N. W. 474, 475, 48 Minn. 466.

Criminal or specific intent.

A charge in an indictment that the prisoner did "willfully and feloniously" forge a certain instrument is a sufficient allegation of defendant's criminal intent. In re Van Orden, 65 N. Y. Supp. 720, 721, 32 Misc. Rep. 215.

A statute defining murder as the "willful killing," etc., of a human being means a killing where "there is a specific intent and design or purpose formed to take life." People v. Pool, 27 Cal. 572, 585.

"Willful," as used with relation to homicide, implies that the act was done by the perpetrator with the intent that the life of the party killed should be destroyed. State v. Wells, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 424, 1 Am. Dec. 211.

"Willfully," as used with relation to homicide, means on purpose, with intent that the act by which the life of a party is taken should have that effect. Anthony v. State, 19 Tenn. (Meigs) 265, 277, 33 Am. Dec. 143.

A statute defining murder in the first degree, and stating that it must be a "willful" killing, means that the murderer intended to kill. This supposes an actual condition of the mind in regard to killing when the deed takes place. Bower v. State, 5 Mo. 364, 379, 32 Am. Dec. 325.

A willful killing is simply an intended killing, and nothing could make a killing willful except the intended result of the act; and to charge in an indictment that the act was committed with a specific intent to kill and murder is equivalent to a charge that the killing was "willful," as used in Code, § 3049, defining murder in the first degree. State v. Townsend, 24 N. W. 535, 66 Iowa, 741.

The words "willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and maliciously" are properly used in an information of arson. Such words import only that criminal intent which is a necessary part of every felony or other crime, but they do not necessarily include the specific purpose to destroy the building, which is an element of the crime of arson. People v. Moonrey, 59 Pac. 761, 762, 127 Cal. 339.

"Willfully," as used in Rev. St. c. 4, § 6, which imposes a penalty on a person for willfully giving a vote at an election, knowing himself not to be a qualified voter, etc., means designedly, purposely, with an intent to claim and exercise the right of suffrage on that occasion in common with the legal voters. The word sometimes means corruptly or unlawfully. Commonwealth v. Bradford, 50 Mass. (9 Metc.) 268, 270.

The words "willful, malicious, deliberate, and premeditated," denote the intent with which killing must be done to make it murder in the first degree. Moreover, they denote not only the moral impulse, but peculiarly the mental process through which the crime is conceived and the act resolved upon. "Willful" is common in the definition of many crimes, and yet it may have a peculiar meaning in its application to murder in the first degree, because of its peculiar emphasis and intensity, as used in such connection. Cannon v. State, 31 S. W. 150, 151, 60 Ark. 564.

Deliberation and premeditation.

Pen. Code, § 606, provides that every person who willfully and intentionally breaks down or otherwise injures any public jail shall be punished, etc. Held that the word "willful," in that connection, imports that the act must be done with deliberation, and not through surprise, confusion, or bona fide mistake. "To do a thing willfully is to do it by design, with set purpose. To do a thing with deliberation is to do it after examining the reasons for and against a choice, after consideration. After indulging in this mental process, if the act is done as the result of it, it is a willful act. A purpose or willingness to commit the act renders it willful." People v. Sheldon, 9 Pac. 457, 459, 68 Cal. 434.

The word "willfully," as used in Pen. Code, § 96, defining perjury, means merely that the perjured testimony must have been given with some degree of deliberation. Krauskopf v. Tallman, 56 N. Y. Supp. 967, 969, 38 App. Div. 273.

"Willfully" means with design; with some degree of deliberation. To say that testimony was corrupt was to say that it was wicked or vicious; whereas, to say that it was willful is to aver that it was given with some degree of deliberation; that it was not due to surprise, inadvertence or mistake, but to design. United States v. Edwards (U. S.) 43 Fed. 67.

A willful act is one which presumes that the thing was done in consequence of deliberate design. If an act is a willful wrong, it does not add to the force of the consequences that that wrong may have been plotted with another. Horton v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 71 N. Y. Supp. 1060, 1062, 35 Misc. Rep. 495.

The phrase "willful violation of law" means a violation thereof knowingly and deliberately committed. Catlett v. Young, 32 N. E. 447, 448, 143 Ill. 74.

"Willfully," as used in Code, § 1062, making it a misdemeanor to unlawfully and willfully deface, damage, or injure any house, means deliberately, of purpose, and without regard to whether it is done rightfully or wrongfully. State v. Howell, 12 S. E. 569, 107 N. C. 835.

A person who deliberately does an act which he knows to be unlawful or wrongful is generally held to have done it willfully. United States v. Three Railroad Cars (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 144, 146.

"Willful" means more than mere intention. It is sometimes used to mean perverse, deliberate design and malice. Wales v. Miner, 89 Ind. 118, 127.

"Willful" means intentional or deliberate. It may mean, when used in a statute, an intentional and deliberate doing of a wrongful act. In re Maples (D. C.) 105 Fed. 919, 921.

Where an indictment charged murder committed "feloniously with malice aforethought, and with premeditation and deliberation," the omission of the word "willfully" did not render it defective as a charge of murder in the first degree. A willful killing is an intended killing. Both the words "deliberation" and "premeditation" involve a prior purpose to do the act in question. And it is impossible to conceive of a murder committed with a felonious intent that is not willful. 1 Whart. Cr. Law, § 380. The word "willful" finds its equivalent in the other terms employed. Aubrey v. State, 35 S. W. 792, 62 Ark. 368.

Design.

To do a thing willfully is to do it by design, with a set purpose. People v. Von Tiedeman, 52 Pac. 155, 158, 120 Cal. 128.

Webster defines "willful" to mean "by design or set purpose." Northern Ry. of France v. Carpenter (N. Y.) 18 How. Prac. 222, 223.

To do an act willfully is to do it willingly; by design; on purpose. People v. Boas, 1 N. Y. Cr. Rep. 132, 135 (citing Worcester Dict.).

The word "willfully" involves design and purpose. Montgomery v. Muskegon Booming Co., 50 N. W. 729, 731, 88 Mich. 633, 26 Am. St. Rep. 308.

A willful act is one done designedly, intentionally, or purposely, as contradistinguished from accident, inadvertence, or absence of intention or design. Commonwealth v. Perrier (Pa.) 3 Phila. 229, 232.

While the word "willful" might in common parlance be held to be synonymous with "intentional," there can be no doubt that to make the destruction of books a willful act, so as to raise the presumption that they were willfully suppressed as adverse evidence, the destruction must be designedly done with the purpose of suppressing evidence, and the mere fact that it was intentional was not sufficient. Hay v. Peterson, 45 Pac. 1073, 1078, 6 Wyo. 419, 34 L. R. A. 581.

The word "willful," employed in penal statutes, has not always the same meaning; but as used in Code, § 3257, which declares that any person who willfully interrupts or disturbs any assemblage of people, etc., is guilty of a misdemeanor, it is used as a synonym of intention or design, pursuant to intention or design without lawful excuse. Harrison v. State, 37 Ala. 154, 156.

"Willfully," as used in a statute imposing on railroads a penalty for willfully neglecting to post up a schedule of fixed fares, means designedly, as opposed to inadvertently. Fuller v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 31 Iowa, 187, 204.

The word "willfully," in Rev. St. c. 4, § 6, enacting that if any person, knowing himself not to be a qualified voter, shall vote at an election, he shall forfeit, etc., means designedly, purposely, with an intent to claim and exercise the right of suffrage. Commonwealth v. Connelly, 40 N. E. 862, 863, 163 Mass. 539.

The expression "willfully kill," as used in criminal law, is not equivalent to the expression "with a design to effect death." A man may willfully do an act which caused death, and yet have no design to effect death. State v. Smith, 81 N. W. 17, 78 Minn. 362.

The word "willful," as used in the statute providing for the punishment for willfully cutting and carrying away timber, means either intentional, or by design regardless of intent. Carl v. State, 28 South. 505, 510, 125 Ala. 89.

In the ordinary sense in which the word "willfully" is used in statutes, it means not merely voluntary, but designedly, perversely. State v. Stein, 51 N. W. 474, 475, 48 Minn. 466.

The use of the word "willfully" involves design and purpose. The allegation that defendant willfully left the spark arrester open, and thereby allowed sparks to escape and be carried by the wind upon plaintiff's docks, and set fire to them, implies that the act was done with a set purpose to accomplish the results which followed the act. It involves more than negligence. It implies malice. The word has no office in the count unless given its ordinary acceptation. Montgomery v. Muskegon Booming Co., 50 N. W. 729, 731, 88 Mich. 633, 26 Am. St. Rep. 308.

Evil intent, etc.

A willful act is one committed with an evil intent. Huff v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co., 56 N. E. 932, 934, 24 Ind. App. 492, 79 Am. St. Rep. 274 (citing Dull v. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co., 21 Ind. App. 571, 52 N. E. 1013; Miller v. Miller, 17 Ind. App. 605, 47 N. E. 338); Williams v. People, 57 Pac. 701, 702, 26 Colo. 272.

"Willfully," in legal parlance, signifies with evil intent or legal malice, or without legal ground to believe the act to be lawful, and the trial court, in charging the jury upon a case involving the question of false swearing, should, as an essential part of the law of the case, instruct the jury as to the legal meaning of the word "willful." Stebber v. State, 23 Tex. App. 176, 179, 4 S. W. 880, 882.

The word "willful," as used in Rev. St. 1889, §§ 3732, 3734, must be restricted to such acts as are done with an unlawful intent, and implies tort, wrong; it implies legal malice, that is, that the act was done with evil intent or without reasonable grounds to believe that the act was lawful. State v. Grassie, 74 Mo. App. 313, 316.

The term "willful," as it is used in reference to willfully disturbing a religious congregation, "means with evil intent, or without reasonable grounds for believing the act to be lawful." Holmes v. State, 45 S. W. 487, 488, 39 Tex. Cr. R. 231, 73 Am. St. Rep. 921; State v. Alcorn, 14 S. W. 663, 664, 78 Tex. 387; Owens v. State, 19 Tex. App. 242, 249; Yoakum v. State, 17 S. W. 254, 255, 21 Tex. App. 260.

The word "willfully," when used in a penal statute to characterize the forbidden act, means evil intent or legal malice, or without reasonable ground to believe the act to be lawful. Trice v. State, 17 Tex. App. 43, 46; Rose v. State, 19 Tex. App. 470, 471; Shubert v. State, 16 Tex. App. 645, 646; Thomas v. State, 14 Tex. App. 200, 205;

Lane v. State, 16 Tex. App. 172, 177; Savage v. Tullar (Vt.) Bray 223; State v. Clark, 29 N. J. Law (5 Dutch.) 96, 98; State v. Preston, 84 Wis. 675, 682; King v. State, 30 S. E. 30, 31, 103 Ga. 263; Cornellison v. State, 49 S. W. 384, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 159.

A "willful act" as the term is used in the criminal law, "is one committed with an evil intent, with legal malice, and without legal justification." High v. State, 10 S. W. 238, 241, 28 Tex. App. 545, 8 Am. St. Rep. 488; Mills v. Glennon, 6 Pac. 116, 118, 2 Idaho (Hasb.) 105.

"Willfully," as defined in 1 Bish. Cr. Law, § 428, is frequently understood as signifying an evil intent without justifiable excuse. Felton v. United States, 6 U. S. (3 Dall.) 699, 702, 24 L. Ed. 875; Potter v. United States, 15 Sup. Ct. 144, 147, 155 U. S. 438, 39 L. Ed. 214.

A willful act is one committed with an evil intent, with legal malice, and without reasonable ground for believing the act to be lawful, and without legal justification. Bowers v. State, 7 S. W. 247, 24 Tex. App. 542, 5 Am. St. Rep. 901; Ferguson v. State, 35 S. W. 369, 370, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 60.

Governed by will, not yielding to reason.

"Willful" means governed by the will, without yielding to reason. Hawes v. State, 7 South. 302, 304, 88 Ala. 37; United States v. Three Railroad Cars (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 144, 146. And such is its meaning in the definition of murder in the first degree as being any willful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated killing of a human being. Martin v. State, 25 South. 255, 257, 119 Ala. 1; Mitchell v. State, 60 Ala. 26, 28.

Intentional.

According to Bouvier, the word "willfully" means "intentionally." Northern Ry. of France v. Carpenter (N. Y.) 13 How. Prac. 222, 223.

The only definition Bouvier in his Law Dictionary gives of "willfully," is "intentionally"; and in Stratton v. Central City Horse Ry. Co., 95 Ill. 25, the Supreme Court says: "A jury would doubtless understand the word 'willfully' to mean the same as the word 'intentionally.'" Sullivan v. Dee, 8 Ill. App. (8 Bradw.) 263, 265.

The terms "willfully" and "intentionally" in law are synonyms. Bindbeutel v. Street Ry. Co., 43 Mo. App. 463, 470.

In common parlance, the word "willful" is used in the sense of designed or intentional. An intentional failure to perform a statutory duty would be a willful refusal. Leslie v. Rich Hill Coal Mining Co., 110 Mo. 31, 41, 19 S. W. 308.

"Willful" means intentional; by design; with set purpose. Northern Ry. Co. of France v. Carpenter (N. Y.) 8 Abb. Prac. 259, 261.

In common parlance, "willful" is used in the sense of intentional, as distinguished from accidental or involuntary. To make the killing of sheep a willful act, it must have been committed with an evil intent, with legal malice, and without legal justification. It is not every intentional act that is willful. Thomas v. State, 14 Tex. App. 200, 205; Lane v. State, 16 Tex. App. 172, 177.

The word "willfully," as used to denote the intent with which an act is done, is undoubtedly susceptible of different shades of meaning or degrees of intensity, according to the context and evident purpose of the writer. It is sometimes so modified and reduced as to mean little more than plain, "intentionally" or "designedly." Such is not, however, its ordinary signification, when used in criminal law and penal statutes. State v. Preston, 84 Wis. 675, 682.

The word "willful," though broader in its signification than "intentional," embraces the latter in its meaning; so that a statement that wherever there is, in committing a homicide, a specific intention to take life, there is a willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, and the offense is murder in the first degree, makes every homicide murder in the first degree where the killing is willful. State v. Bonofiglio, 52 Atl. 712, 713, 67 N. J. Law, 239, 91 Am. St. Rep. 423.

A willful act is one designedly, purposefully, or intentionally done, as contradistinguished from accident, inadvertence, or the absence of design. Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Nash, 1 Ind. App. 298, 27 N. E. 564. True, there may be a willful act, in a legal sense, without a formed and direct intention, and there may be willfulness where there is no direct or positive intention to inflict injury. In other words, there may be a constructive or implied intent. Barr v. Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co., 37 N. E. 814, 815, 10 Ind. App. 433.

"Willful," as used in 2 Rev. St. p. 696, § 38, making the willful neglect of duty by a public officer a misdemeanor, means an intentional neglect. Where the officer knew what was asked of him, and knew what he refused, there was nothing like surprise, inadvertence, or misapprehension. His refusal to act was willful. Every intentional act is necessarily a willful one. People v. Brooks (N. Y.) 1 Denio, 457, 459, 43 Am. Dec. 704.

There is considerable learning in the law on the meaning of "willfully," when used in statutes; and it seems to make a difference whether the statute is penal or not. The word "willful," as used in a statute providing for the punishment of one making a willful refusal to deliver an inventory of his property for taxation, means intentional, and nothing more. Buchanan v. Cook, 40 Atl. 102, 104, 70 Vt. 168.

In a statute punishing the willful or malicious killing or disfiguring of domestic animals, it is held that the word "willful" means intentional. Commonwealth v. McLaughlin, 105 Mass. 460, 463.

The word "willful," as used in the New York school law, means intentional. In re Light, 49 N. Y. Supp. 345, 350, 21 Misc. Rep. 737.

The word "willfully," as employed in Comp. Laws, § 6933, enacting that every mortgagor who willfully destroys, etc., the mortgaged property, is guilty of a felony, is to be construed as signifying intentionally. State v. Bronkol, 67 N. W. 680, 682, 5 N. D. 507.

The word "willfully," as used in the statute punishing any one who shall willfully interrupt or disturb an assemblage of people met for religious worship, is construed as synonymous with "intentionally" or "designedly." When any of the acts declared by the statute to be an ingredient of the offense is committed intentionally, and its natural tendency is to interrupt or disturb the assemblage, the law presumes a guilty intent. Williams v. State, 3 South. 743, 744, 83 Ala. 68.

"Willfully" is a strong word; much stronger than the word 'intentionally.' It means governed by the will; obstinate; perverse." Johnson v. State, 61 Ala. 9, 11.

The words "willfully," "intentionally," and "voluntarily" seem to be used interchangeably in relation to acts or declarations creating an estoppel. Gillett v. Wiley, 19 N. E. 287, 290, 126 Ill. 310, 9 Am. St. Rep. 587.

By "willful burning," in a charge of burning a cotton house, is meant intentional burning. Jones v. State, 5 Tex. App. 130, 131.

To constitute a willful injury, the act which produces it must have been intentional, or must have been done under such circumstances as evince reckless disregard for the safety of others and willingness to inflict the injury complained of. It involves conduct which is quasi criminal. Parker v. Pennsylvania Co., 134 Ind. 673, 679, 34 N. E. 504, 23 L. R. A. 552; Brooks v. Pittsburgh C., C. & St. L. R. Co., 62 N. E. 694, 696, 158 Ind. 62; Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Bryan, 107 Ind. 51, 53, 7 N. E. 807, 808. Whatever idea the word "willful" may express, when used in the phrase "willful negligence," it is beyond question that, to entitle one to recover for an injury to which his own negligence may have contributed, the injurious act or omission must have been purposely and intentionally committed, with a design to produce injury, or it might have been so committed under such circumstances as that its natural and probable consequences would be to produce injury to others. Belt R. & Stockyard Co. v. Mann, 107 Ind. 89, 93, 7 N. E. 893, 895.

Knowingly.

"Willfully" is equivalent to "knowingly." Fry v. Hubner, 57 Pac. 420, 421, 35 Or. 184; Catlett v. Young, 32 N. E. 447, 448, 143 Ill. 74; Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Bowman (Tex.) 25 S. W. 140, 141.

The term "willfully" implies that the act is done knowingly. North Carolina v. Vanderford (U. S.) 35 Fed. 282, 286; State v. Stein, 51 N. W. 474, 475, 48 Minn. 466.

The word "willfully" implies, on the part of the wrongdoer, knowledge, and a purpose to do the wrongful act. Potter v. United States, 15 Sup. Ct. 144, 147, 155 U. S. 438, 39 L. Ed. 214; Spurr v. United States, 19 Sup. Ct. 812, 815, 174 U. S. 728, 43 L. Ed. 1150; State v. Smith, 8 N. W. 870, 871, 52 Wis. 134.

"Willfully," as used when saying that an act was willfully done, implies that the act was done by design; done for a set purpose; and it would follow that it was knowingly done. Wong v. City of Astory, 11 Pac. 295, 296, 13 Or. 538.

"Willfully," as used in connection with an act forbidden by law, means that the act must be done knowingly or intentionally, and that the act was committed with knowledge, and that the will consented to, designed, and directed the act. Woodhouse v. Rio Grande R. Co., 3 S. W. 323, 324, 67 Tex. 416.

In common parlance, "willful" is used in the sense of "knowingly," as distinguished from "accidental" or "involuntary." Whatever one does intentionally he does willfully. The term "willful," in Act 1855, § 70, making the willful opening, breaking down, or injuring of any fences belonging to or in the possession of any other person a misdemeanor, refers only to such acts as would amount to trespass, and does not relate to an intentional opening of a fence for the purpose of going upon the land of another, if done by permission or for a lawful purpose. State v. Clark, 29 N. J. Law (5 Dutch.) 96, 98.

A "willful failure" to comply with the provisions of the mine law means that there must have been some knowledge that the party was violating it, some knowledge which should have induced him not to do what he did do, some knowledge of the fact, for instance, that the engineer operating the hoist engine in a mine was incompetent, and that he was not the kind of man who should have been put in such a place. Otherwise, the word "willful," in a clause of this kind in the law, would not have a very special meaning. Mulhern v. Lehigh Valley Coal Co., 28 Atl. 1087, 1088, 161 Pa. 270.

An indictment for perjury which charged that the defendant "feloniously, willfully, and corruptly did depose," etc., but omitted the word "knowingly," is not bad on account of the omission of such word, though it is used in the statute; the word "willfully" implying intention as well as deliberation and purpose. Johnson v. People, 94 Ill. 505, 510; Ferguson v. State, 35 S. W. 369, 370, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 60. See, also, Frantz v. Hanford, 54 N. W. 474, 475, 87 Iowa, 469.

The word "willfully," as used in the statute punishing perjury, the same being "a false statement willfully made," is synonymous with "knowingly," and distinguishes it from a statement made through inadvertence or mistake or under agitation. Garza v. State (Tex.) 47 S. W. 983.

Where the president of a corporation did not know of the obstruction of a public road, and had no part therein, he is not guilty of willfully or knowingly obstructing such road. State v. White, 69 S. W. 684, 685, 96 Mo. App. 34.

The word "willfully," as used in Code, § 4899, prescribing the punishment for one knowingly and willfully resisting an officer in serving a process, is not synonymous with "knowingly," and implies that the act is done by design or with set purpose. One might purposely do an act which would have the effect of impeding the officer in the performance of his duties, in ignorance of the capacity in which such officer was acting. An indictment, therefore, which charges that one unlawfully and willfully resisted an officer in serving process, is not sufficient. State v. Perry, 80 N. W. 401, 109 Iowa, 353.

Rev. St. art. 3393, providing that official misconduct, with reference to county officers, means any unlawful behavior in relation to the duties of his office, willful in its character, of any officer intrusted in any manner with the administration of justice or the execution of the laws, should not be construed in its most general sense, for, under that, every act done in obedience to the will may be said to have been done willfully, even if the actor, with the lights before him, honestly believed that he was discharging his duty under the law, but was mistaken in this. An official act done or omitted cannot be said to have been willful unless the officer knew or believed that it was his official duty to do or omit the act, and with such knowledge or belief obstinately, perversely, and with intent to do wrong, acted or failed to act. State v. Alcorn, 14 S. W. 603, 664, 78 Tex. 387.

To authorize a conviction under a penal statute prescribing a punishment for willfully removing an official seal from property which has been sealed up by officers of the customs, it must appear that the defendant not only intended to remove the seal, but that he had at the time a knowledge of its character. One who removes such a seal in ignorance of its character, and in the honest execution of a supposed duty, in the care and transportation of the property, is not liable to punishment under the statute, for the reason that he cannot be deemed to have acted willfully. United States v. Three Railroad Cars (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 144, 146 (cited in Highway Com'rs v. Ely, 19 N. W. 940, 944, 54 Mich. 173, 180; Minkler v. State, 15 N. W. 330, 331, 14 Neb. 181, 183; State v. Preston, 34 Wis. 675, 685).

Malice.

"Willful," as used in a penal statute, does not necessarily involve the element of malice. Parker v. Parker, 71 N. W. 421, 423, 102 Iowa, 500.

"Willfully," as used in statute imposing on railroads a penalty for willfully neglecting to post up a schedule of fixed fares, does not imply malice. Fuller v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 81 Iowa, 187, 204.

The word "willfully," when used in a criminal statute to characterize the forbidden act, implies legal malice. Shubert v. State, 16 Tex. App. 645, 646; Thomas v. State, 14 Tex. App. 200, 205; Lane v. State, 16 Tex. App. 172, 177; Rose v. State, 19 Tex. App. 470, 471; Ferguson v. State, 35 S. W. 369, 370, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 60; Bowers v. State, 7 S. W. 247, 24 Tex. App. 542, 5 Am. St. Rep. 901; High v. State, 10 S. W. 238, 241, 26 Tex. App. 545, 8 Am. St. Rep. 488; Savage v. Tullar (Vt.) Brayt, 223; State v. Clark, 29 N. J. Law (5 Dutch.) 96, 98; State v. Preston, 34 Wis. 675, 682; King v. State, 30 S. E. 30, 31, 103 Ga. 263; Cornellison v. State, 49 S. W. 384, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 159; Wales v. Miner, 89 Ind. 118, 127.

The term "maliciously" is to such an extent synonymous with "willfully" that, where the word "willfully" is used in a statute, it will be sufficient if the word "maliciously" is employed in an indictment thereunder. State v. Robbins, 66 Me. 324, 325.

The decisions and text writers upon criminal law make a marked distinction between the meaning of the words "willful" and "malicious," holding that the word "malicious" means more than the word "willful," which signifies little more than intentionally or designedly. To make "willful" imply both a wrong and malice is to give to it a force and effect beyond what it will bear either in common acceptance or its legal import. Anderson v. How, 22 N. E. 695, 697, 116 N. Y. 336.

The word "willfully" does not mean maliciously. Willfully implies that an act done in that spirit is done knowingly and obstinately and persistently, but not necessarily maliciously. Brown v. Brown, 32 S. E. 320, 321, 124 N. C. 19, 70 Am. St. Rep. 574 (citing State v. Massey, 97 N. C. 465, 2 S. E. 445). See, also, State v. Harwell, 40 S. E. 48, 129 N. C. 550.

The use of the words "willfully and unlawfully" in an indictment is not sufficient to charge malice, as the term "willfully" means only that the act was done intentionally, or that it was done purposely or deliberately, and the term "unlawfully" implies an act not done as the law allows or requires. State v. Lightfoot, 78 N. W. 41, 42, 107 Iowa, 344. See, also, State v. Gove, 34 N. H. 510, 516.

On a prosecution for arson, a charge that defendant "willfully and feloniously" set fire to the house is equivalent to a charge that the act was done "willfully, maliciously, and unlawfully." Young v. Commonwealth, 75 Ky. (12 Bush) 243, 245.

"Willfully," as used in Gen. Laws (11th Sess.) 1880-81, p. 307, providing for the punishment of the mortgagor of mortgaged property who, while such mortgage exists, willfully removes from the county where the mortgage is recorded the property mortgaged, or any part thereof, without the written consent of the mortgagee, has a well-defined signification. Bouvier says it has been decided that "maliciously" is its equivalent. This term implies not merely voluntarily or intentionally, but legal malice and evil intent; without justifiable excuse; with a bad purpose; corruptly. Mills v. Glennon, 6 Pac. 116, 118, 2 Idaho (Hasb.) 105.

The term "willfully" implies that the act is done knowingly and of stubborn purpose, but not of malice. State of North Carolina v. Vanderford (U. S.) 35 Fed. 282, 286. See, also, Benkert v. Benkert, 32 Cal. 467, 471.

"Willfully," as used in an ordinance providing that any corporation willfully violating its provision shall, on conviction, be fined, etc., was used with the understanding and acceptance of its legal definition, and was intended to punish a corporation that could, but would not, comply with the directions contemplated. The word "willful," when used or employed in the penal statute in reference to a person who neglects or fails to discharge a duty, implies that the party had the ability so to do. The word "willful" is more frequently understood to approximate the idea of the milder question of legal malice than as signifying an evil intent without justifiable excuse. City of Indianapolis v. Consumers' Gas Trust Co., 39 N. E. 943, 945, 140 Ind. 246 (citing Anderson v. How, 116 N. Y. 336, 22 N. E. 695).

Neglect, omission, or misapprehension.

Rev. St. c. 200, § 10, which provides that, if the cause of action in any action of trespass or trespass on the case has arisen from the "willful and malicious" act or neglect of the defendant, the court before whom the action is tried shall cause a certificate thereof to be made on the back of the execution issued in such action, and that in such case the defendant shall not be discharged on giving bond, applies to injuries arising from mere neglect, if it be willful and malicious, as well as to cases where the act complained of is accompanied with force, and hence an action for deceit is within the statute. Nelson v. Ladd, 47 N. H. 343, 346.

Laws 1864, c. 555, § 18, authorizing the superintendent of public instruction to remove trustees of school districts in case of "willful" disobedience of any decision or order of the superintendent, means intentional, and does not relate to any case of neglect, omission, or misapprehension on the part of the trustees. People v. Draper, 18 N. Y. Supp. 282, 284, 63 Hun, 389.

On a prosecution for "willfully intruding into a public office," contrary to Pen. Code, § 56, defendant may show that he entered under a bona fide claim of right after advice of counsel; and it is error for the court to charge that the word "willfully" means intentionally, not by inadvertence, and that, if defendant intended to do so, he did it willfully; the word "willfully" not covering a case where one entered under a bona fide claim of right. People v. Bates, 29 N. Y. Supp. 894, 896, 79 Hun, 584.

Negligence.

In Parker v. Pennsylvania Co., 134 Ind. 673, 679, 34 N. E. 504, 506, 23 L. R. A. 552, it was said "willfulness" does not consist in "negligence"; on the contrary, the two terms are incompatible. Negligence arises from inattention, thoughtlessness, or heedlessness, while willfulness cannot exist without purpose or design. No purpose or design can be said to exist where the injurious act results from negligence, and negligence cannot be of such degree as to become willfulness. Brooks v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 62 N. E. 694, 697, 158 Ind. 62; Linton Coal & Mining Co. v. Persons, 43 N. E. 651, 653, 15 Ind. App. 69; Dull v. Cleveland, C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 52 N. E. 1013, 1014, 21 Ind. App. 571.

In construing a statute providing that a railroad company failing to fence its road against live stock running at large, at all points where it has the right to fence, shall be absolutely liable to the owner of any such stock injured or killed by reason of the want of such fence, unless the injury complained of is occasioned by the willful act of the owner or his agent, the court said: "A willful act is an obstinate, stubborn, perverse act; and an act done willfully is one done stubbornly, by design, with set purpose. Now, the mere passiveness which indolently permits an act to be done through the lack of will to prevent falls very far short of that positive condition of the mind which causes an act to be done by design and with set purpose. The mere neglect of an owner of stock to repair his fence, whereby an animal escapes from the inclosure, or mere neglect to reconfine him after he has escaped, is not such a willful act as is referred to in the statute." Stewart v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 32 Iowa, 561, 563.

"Willful," in legal parlance, means intentional, though not necessarily that expressed intent characterized by premeditated design. Willful misconduct, in the law, by reason of which a person is injured, constitutes gross negligence, though it has no element of inadvertence, which is a necessary element of negligence. Where an injury is willfully inflicted, contributory negligence on the part of the injured person will not preclude his recovering damages therefor. Neither will the fact that he was, at the time of receiving such injury, a willful trespasser upon the property of the person guilty of the willful act. Bolin v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 84 N. W. 446, 450, 108 Wis. 333, 81 Am. St. Rep. 911.

The word "willfully," in a complaint against a railroad for injuries sustained at a crossing, and which complaint charged that defendant willfully violated the speed ordinance, did not amount to an allegation that the killing was willful, but amounted to no more than a charge of negligence. Hancock v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co., 51 N. E. 369, 372, 21 Ind. App. 10.

Purpose or willingness.

A willful act is one done on purpose. Leicester v. Hoadley, 71 Pac. 318, 319, 66 Kan. 172, 65 L. R. A. 523 (citing Anderson v. How, 116 N. Y. 336, 22 N. E. 695).

A wrong willfully done is a wrong purposely done. Judd v. Ballard, 30 Atl. 96, 98, 66 Vt. 668.

A wrong that is purposely done is willfully done, and, if a man intentionally deals a blow to his neighbor, the law intends that the act was willful. Mullin v. Flanders, 50 Atl. 818, 815, 73 Vt. 95.

The shooting and killing of a cow is willful when it is the development of a pre-conceived purpose, not an impulse of anger excited by unexpectedly seeing a repetition of annoying trespasses by the animal. State v. Brigman, 94 N. C. 888, 889.

The word "willful," as used in Comp. Laws, § 6402, punishing the willful disobedience of an order lawfully issued by the court, implies simply a purpose or willfulness to commit the forbidden act. Freeman v. City of Huron, 66 N. W. 928, 929, 8 S. D. 435.

To constitute willful injury, there must be design, purpose, intent to do wrong and inflict the injury. Birmingham Ry. & Electric Co. v. Bowers, 110 Ala. 328, 20 South. 345. Thus, a count in a complaint which avers that defendant's engineer, who had control of the running of the locomotive, "wantonly and willfully failed to blow the whistle or ring the bell at least one-fourth of a mile before reaching the regular station, and wantonly or willfully failed to continue to ring the bell or blow the whistle at short intervals, and because of such willfulness and wantonness the said passenger train ran into and against a passenger car of another line at its crossing," does not show that the purpose of defendant in failing to ring the bell or blow the whistle was to run into the passenger car of the other line. Nor does it aver a state of facts from which knowledge could be imputed to defendant that the natural and probable consequences of his conduct would result in the collision. Louisville & R. R. Co. v. Anchors, 22 South. 279, 281, 114 Ala. 492, 62 Am. St. Rep. 116.

To do an act willfully is to do it willingly; by design; on purpose. In order to justify a conviction for willfully excluding a vote at an election it must be shown that the action was willful; that is, if not malice, at least a decided intention designedly and purposely to exclude the vote, must be proved. People v. Boas (N. Y.) 29 Hun, 377, 379.

The word "willfully," when applied to the intent with which an act is done or omitted, implies simply a purpose or willingness to commit the act or make the omission referred to. It does not require any intent to violate law, or to injure another, or to acquire any advantage. Pen. Code Ariz. 1901, par. 7, subd. 1; Pen. Code Idaho 1901, § 4544, subd. 1; Pen. Code Mont. 1895, § 7, subd. 1; Rev. St. Utah 1898, § 4053; Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 2686; Pen. Code Cal. 1903, § 7, subd. 1; Ann. Codes & Sts. Or. 1901, § 2176; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 7713; Pen. Code S. D. 1903, § 808. See, also, Towle v. Matheus, 62 Pac. 1064, 1066, 130 Cal. 574; People v. Sheldon, 9 Pac. 457, 459, 68 Cal. 434; People v. Von Thedeman, 52 Pac. 155, 158, 120 Cal. 128; State v. Bloor, 52 Pac. 611, 614, 20 Mont. 574; People v. O'Brien, 31 Pac. 45, 47, 96 Cal. 171; Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Bryan, 7 N. E. 807, 809, 107 Ind. 51; Brooks v. Pittsburgh, O., C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 62 N. E. 694, 697, 158 Ind. 62; Pittsburgh, C., O. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Judd, 36 N. E. 775, 778, 10 Ind. App. 218; People v. Hartman, 130 Cal. 487, 490, 62 Pac. 823, 824 (citing People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 171, 176, 31 Pac. 45).

Reckless or careless.

The word "willful" imports that the act to which it refers is done intentionally, purposely. This is not necessarily so with the word "reckless." Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Crocker, 11 South. 262, 269, 95 Ala. 412.

In Harrison v. State, 37 Ala. 154, the Supreme Court drew a distinction between the words "willful" and "reckless," as used in Code 1866, § 4033, punishing any person who willfully disturbed a religious assemblage, and held that recklessness did not necessarily imply willfulness. A grossly careless act may be characterized as reckless, and serious consequences might flow therefrom, yet such consequences would not necessarily be willfully brought about. In such case the court simply asserted that the word "reckless" was not the synonym for the statutory word "willful," and therefore it was error to assert that it was enough if the disturbance was willfully or recklessly done. It was decided that there might be recklessness without willfulness. An act may be careless, heedless, rash, reckless, and still be willful. Johnson v. State, 9 South. 539, 540, 92 Ala. 82.

Whether the words "wanton," "reckless," and "careless" are taken singly or collectively, they are not the equivalents of the word "willful," and, when used in the petition in an action to recover for the death of a person caused by the willful negligence of another, they will not charge willful negligence; though it will not be said that the terms "reckless" and "wanton" may not be so used as to be equivalent to the word "willful." City of Lexington v. Lewis' Adm'r, 73 Ky. (10 Bush) 677, 680.

The word "willfully" implies an act willfully done; an operation of the mind that consents to an act; as applied in a prosecution for manslaughter, if defendant's mind approved or consented to fire the shot that killed decedent, then to this extent the act was willfully done. It does not necessarily follow that the jury must find that the defendant intended to kill decedent when he fired. If he used a dangerous and deadly weapon in a careless and reckless manner, and so killed decedent without justification, this will constitute an act willfully done, and amount to manslaughter; or if he fired the fatal shot purposely, intending to shoot decedent, and in so doing used unnecessary force and violence, this will also render the act willful and constitute manslaughter. State v. Windahl, 64 N. W. 420, 421, 95 Iowa, 470.

Reckless disregard of rights.

"Willful," as used in an indictment, signifies without reasonable ground for believing the act to be lawful, or a reckless disregard of the rights of others. Finney v. State, 15 S. W. 175, 29 Tex. App. 184.

To constitute a willful injury, the act which produces it must have been intentional, or must have been done under such circumstances as evince a reckless disregard for the safety of others, and a willingness to inflict the injury complained of. It involves conduct which is quasi criminal. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Judd, 36 N. E. 775, 778, 10 Ind. App. 213 (citing Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Bryan, 107 Ind. 51, 7 N. E. 807); Brooks v. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 62 N. E. 694, 697, 158 Ind. 62.

It is uniformly held that the term "willful" in statutes relating to the punishment of trespassers not only means intentionally or deliberately done, but with a particular or evil purpose as in violation of law, or wantonly and in disregard of the rights of others, or knowingly and of stubborn purpose, or contrary to known duty, or without authority, and careless, whether he have the right or not. Parker v. Parker, 71 N. W. 421, 423, 102 Iowa, 500 (citing State v. Massey, 97 N. C. 465, 2 S. E. 445; United States v. Three Railroad Cars [U. S.] 28 Fed. Cas. 144).

Unlawful or felonious.

See, also, "Felonious—Feloniously."

In State v. Langston, 45 La. Ann. 1182, 14 South. 137, it was held that "willfully" has a significance, and, where used in the statute as descriptive of the offense denounced, its employment in the indictment is essential. "Unlawfully" or "feloniously" has not the same meaning and import as "willfully"; neither is the equivalent of "willfully." State v. Robinson, 28 South. 1002, 1003, 104 La. 224.

The term "willfully," required to be used in charging an offense, is not supplied in substance by the words "unlawfully and maliciously." The term "unlawfully" implies that an act is done or not done as the law allows or requires. State v. Massey, 2 S. E. 445, 446, 97 N. C. 465.

"Willfully" is not synonymous with "unlawfully." "A man may do many things willfully which are not unlawful, and he may do many things unlawfully which are not willfully done." State v. Hussey, 60 Me. 410, 411, 11 Am. Rep. 206; State v. Townsell, 50 Tenn. (3 Heisk.) 6, 7.

On a trial for the "willful" and wanton killing of an animal, an instruction authorizing the jury to convict if they believe that the accused unlawfully killed the animal was erroneous, because the killing might have been unlawful and yet not willful. Jones v. State, 9 Tex. App. 178, 179.

The expression "willfully and maliciously," as used in an information alleging that defendant did "willfully and maliciously" make an assault upon a certain person, is equivalent to the term "unlawfully" as used in Cr. Code, § 17, providing for the punishment of any person who shall unlawfully assault another. Hodgkins v. State, 54 N. W. 86, 36 Neb. 160.

Voluntary.

The words "willfully," "intentionally," and "voluntarily" are synonymous terms in discussing the question of the making of declarations or performing acts from which it is alleged an estoppel arises. Gillett v. Wiley, 19 N. E. 287, 290, 128 Ill. 310, 9 Am. St. Rep. 587; The Ottumwa Belle (U. S.) 78 Fed. 643, 647.

"Willful," as used in a penal statute, is not synonymous with "voluntary." Parker v. Parker, 71 N. W. 421, 423, 102 Iowa, 500.

The word "willfully" imports something more of determination to execute one's own will in spite and defiance of the law than "voluntarily" does—some bad purpose. It does not import so much of wickedness as "maliciously" does. State v. Alexander, 14 Rich. Law, 247, 254.

The term "willfully," in an act entitled "An act more effectually to prevent trespasses," is not to be construed as synonymous with "voluntarily," but implies a tort or wrong. Savage v. Tullar (Vt.) Brayton, 223.

St. § 4087, provides that any corporation willfully failing or refusing to make the report required by section 4078 shall be fined $1,000. Held, that the term "willfully" simply means the voluntary act of a party, as distinguished from coercion, or, in other words, that he was free to report or not to report; and, in order to constitute a willful failure, it is not necessary that the corporation should have had actual knowledge of the statute. Louisville & J. Ferry Co. v. Commonwealth, 47 S. W. 877, 878, 104 Ky. 726.

Within the statute providing that any one who shall willfully furnish intoxicating drinks by sale, gift, or otherwise to any person of known intemperate habits shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, a willful act is an act that is not done by surprise or by accident, but is an act that is governed by one's will, or a voluntary act. Zeigler v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 14 Atl. 237, 238.

The word "willfully," as used in the Vermont "Act more effectually to prevent trespasses in divers cases," is not to be construed as synonymous with "voluntarily," but implies a tort or wrong. Savage v. Tullar (Vt.) Brayton, 223.

In the ordinary sense in which it is used in statutes, "willfully" means not merely voluntarily, but with a bad purpose. Felton v.

United States, 96 U. S. 699, 702, 24 L. Ed. 875 (citing Commonwealth v. Kneeland, 37 Mass. [20 Pick.] 206, 220).

"Willfully" means by design, on purpose, with set purpose, intentionally, in an obstinate manner, as being governed by will, without regard to reason or without yielding to reason. To say that an act has been done willingly and "willfully" is to indicate that it has been done voluntarily, and implies that the person doing it knew what he was doing, and acted from choice as a free agent. Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Nash, 27 N. E. 564, 1 Ind. App. 298.

"Willful" is a word of familiar use in every branch of the law, and it amounts to nothing more than this: that the person knows what he is doing, and intends to do what he is doing, and is a free agent. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Leiner, 67 N. E. 398, 400, 202 Ill. 624, 95 Am. St. Rep. 266 (citing Odin Coal Co. v. Denman, 185 Ill. 413, 57 N. E. 192, 76 Am. St. Rep. 45).

In McManus v. State, 36 Ala. 285, speaking of the word "willful" as employed in statutory murder, the court says: "'Willful' is not the synonym of 'voluntary.' In truth, they express no idea which is common to both. The former is a word of much greater strength than the latter. 'Willful' in this connection denotes governed by the will, without yielding to reason, obstinate, stubborn, perverse, inflexible. 'Voluntary,' in this connection, means willing, acting with willingness. It is the antithesis of 'involuntary.'" State v. Preston, 34 Wis. 675, 682.

The word "willfully," as used in Pen. Code, § 654, providing for the punishment of a person who willfully injures any property of another, said Judge Andrews, in Wass v. Stephens, 128 N. Y. 128, 28 N. E. 23, means something more than a voluntary act, and more also than an intentional act which in fact is wrongful. It includes the idea of an act intentionally done with a wrongful purpose or a design to injure another, or one committed out of mere wantonness or lawlessness. Yeamans v. Nichols, 81 N. Y. Supp. 500, 502.

The term "willful," in St. 1899, § 4409, directing that every county superintendent of schools shall, before the 1st day of August, settle his accounts, and that for willful failure to make the settlement as required he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, means simply the voluntary act of a party, as distinguished from coercion; or, in other words, that he was free to report or not to report. Tracy v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 76 S. W. 184, 185.

Wanton.

"Willful" is the wanton doing of an act without reasonable excuse. Meyer v. Standard Tel. Co. (Iowa) 92 N. W. 720, 721.

McClain's Code, § 4571, provides that for willful trespass in injuring trees on the land of another the perpetrator shall pay treble damages to the person entitled to protect or enjoy the property. Held, that the term "willful" in such statute does not mean willfully or purposely, but rather wantonly or without reason or excuse. "It is a mistake to suppose that a willful act which authorizes the recovery of treble damages means simply 'willingly or purposely.' It means rather an act done wantonly and without any reasonable excuse, as if the defendant in good faith believed that the road was within the lines of the fences, and the trees cut were obstructions to travel, he should be allowed so to show, in order to show that his act in cutting the trees was not wanton or malicious." Werner v. Flies, 59 N. W. 18, 19, 91 Iowa, 146.

"Willful injury," within the meaning of Gen. St. § 1433, providing that any person willfully injuring a public building, etc., is an injury done wantonly, or with an evil intent, and does not include a slight injury to a building done under an honest though erroneous belief of authority in the performance of a supposed duty. State v. Foote, 43 Atl. 488, 490, 71 Conn. 737.

St. 1862, c. 160, which provides for the punishment of any one who willfully or maliciously injures a building, "is not sufficiently defined as the willful doing of the act, but it must be done either out of a spirit of wanton cruelty or wicked revenge." Commonwealth v. Williams, 110 Mass. 401, 402.

The word "willfully" usually means stubbornly, and, as used in an indictment charging that defendant "unlawfully, willfully, and feloniously" did attempt to destroy the reputation of B. by the use of certain slanderous language, did not mean more than that defendant intentionally used such language, and it did not necessarily mean that he did so in a wanton and malicious manner. State v. Harwell, 40 S. E. 48, 129 N. C. 550. See, also, City of Lexington v. Lewis' Adm'rs, 73 Ky. (10 Bush) 677, 680.

The word "willfully" in a statute means something more than a voluntary act, and more also than an intentional act which in fact is wrongful. It includes the idea of an act intentionally done with a wrongful purpose or with a design to injure another, or one committed out of mere wantonness or lawlessness. Hewitt v. Newburger, 36 N. E. 593, 594, 141 N. Y. 538. See, also, Parker v. Parker, 71 N. W. 421, 423, 102 Iowa, 500.

In State v. Abram, 10 Ala. 928, where the mutilation by a slave of any of the members of a white person, when willfully committed, was declared by the statute to be mayhem, it was held that a mutilation could not be regarded as willfully done unless under the circumstances it could be considered as having been wantonly done, when it would be deemed willful within the meaning of the act. The courts say that it was not intended by the term "willful" to exclude those acts which were purely accidental, without blame of any kind. State v. Preston, 34 Wia. 675, 682.

Without just cause or excuse.

The word "willfully" sometimes means little more than plain "intentionally" or "designedly." Yet it is more frequently understood to extend a little further, and approximate the idea of the milder kind of legal malice; that is, as signifying an evil intent without justifiable excuse. United States v. Meagher (U. S.) 87 Fed. 875, 881.

The word "willful" has perhaps no very well-established meaning, and is to be construed in different statutes in somewhat different senses, depending on the connection in which it is used. In the statute providing that if any mortgagor of personal property, while the mortgage is unsatisfied, willfully destroys, sells, or disposes of the property without the written consent of the mortgage holder, he shall be guilty of larceny, it implies a determination to do the prohibited act with a bad intent and without justifiable excuse. Kletzing v. Armstrong, 93 N. W. 500, 501, 119 Iowa, 505.

The word "willful" in Rev. St. § 2516, imposing a punishment for the commission of a willful trespass on lands, means that the acts prohibited must have been done with an evil intent and without justifiable excuse. Tufts v. State, 41 Fla. 663, 668, 27 South. 218, 219.

"Willfully," as used in Code, § 970, providing that a husband who "willfully" abandons his wife without providing adequate support for her and their children is guilty of a misdemeanor, means more than an intention not to live with the wife. It means without a cause to justify him in refusing to live with her, and a husband who has abandoned his wife is not liable to prosecution under such statute where the wife has been guilty of adultery. State v. Hopkins, 40 S. E. 973, 974, 130 N. C. 647.

A "willful" act, as used in criminal law, means an act without legal justification, without justifiable excuse. Potter v. United States, 15 Sup. Ct. 144, 147, 155 U. S. 438, 39 L. Ed. 214; Felton v. United States, 96 U. S. 690, 702, 24 L. Ed. 875; Mills v. Glennon, 6 Pac. 116, 118, 2 Idaho (Hasb.) 105; Ferguson v. State, 35 S. W. 369, 370, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 60; Bowers v. State, 7 S. W. 247, 24 Tex. App. 542, 5 Am. St. Rep. 901; High v. State, 10 S. W. 238, 241, 26 Tex. App. 545, 8 Am. St. Rep. 488.

Without reasonable belief.

To do an act forbidden by law, without reasonable belief that it is lawful, is to do the act "willfully." State v. Nicholls, 23 South. 980, 986, 50 La. Ann. 699; Owens v. State, 19 Tex. App. 242, 249; Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Bowman (Tex.) 25 S. W. 140, 141. See, also, Trice v. State, 17 Tex. App. 43, 46; Yoakum v. State, 17 S. W. 254, 255, 21 Tex. App. 260; State v. Alcorn, 14 S. W. 663, 664, 78 Tex. 387; Holmes v. State, 45 S. W. 487, 488, 39 Tex. Cr. R. 231, 73 Am. St. Rep. 921; Shubert v. State, 16 Tex. App. 645, 646; Thomas v. State, 14 Tex. App. 200, 205; Lane v. State, 16 Tex. App. 172, 179; Rose v. State, 19 Tex. App. 470, 471; Finney v. State, 15 S. W. 175, 29 Tex. App. 184; Savage v. Tullar (Vt.) Brayton, 223; State v. Clark, 29 N. J. Law (5 Dutch.) 96, 98; State v. Preston, 34 Wis. 675, 682; King v. State, 30 S. E. 30, 31, 103 Ga. 263; Cornelison v. State, 49 S. W. 384, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 159.

The term "willfully," as used in Pen. Code, art. 405, not only covers cases in which evil intent prompts the acts, but also those in which the obstruction to a highway is made without reasonable ground to believe it lawful. Sanders v. State (Tex.) 26 S. W. 62.

WILLFUL ACT.

See "Willful—Willfully."

WILLFUL AND MALICIOUS DESERTION.

The "willful or malicious desertion" which authorizes a divorce a vinculo, under Code, § 2448, subsec. 4, means a desertion not only without any reasonable cause, but for cause of malice, and the malice contemplated by the statute is not malice in law, but malice in fact. There must be enmity of heart, or unprovoked malignity, toward the person deserted. If the party goes away and remains even without good and sufficient cause, but not of malice, the divorce a vinculo cannot be obtained. Majors v. Majors, 1 Tenn. Ch. 264, 265 (citing Stewart v. Stewart, 32 Tenn. [2 Swan] 591; Rutledge v. Rutledge, 37 Tenn. [5 Sneed] 554).

"Willful and malicious desertion," within the meaning of the phrase as used in the statute making it a ground for divorce, means a departure without adequate cause. But it is held that where a wife, on being struck by her husband, leaves the house, but without any intention of giving up her home, and on going back a day or two after finds the locks changed, so that she can enter only by breaking a window, for doing which her husband prosecutes her, after which she does not return, her absence thereafter is not a willful and malicious desertion, entitling him to divorce, his conduct indicating an intention to prevent her return. Hardie v. Hardie, 29 Atl. 886, 887, 162 Pa. 227, 25 L. E. A. 697.

A Pennsylvania statute authorizes a divorce for "willful and malicious desertion." A husband lived apart from his wife, a few squares away. There was evidence that she did not want his company, had not spoken to him for two or three years before they separated, and had rented his room in the house to a boarder. Held, that such facts do not show "willful and malicious desertion," within the meaning of the statute, so as to entitle the wife to a divorce. Graham v. Graham, 25 Atl. 766, 153 Pa. 450.

"Willful and malicious desertion" means simply intentional desertion. Actual malice need not be proved, but, if it be proved that the husband willfully absented himself from his wife, such absence is in legal acceptance "malicious," within the statute, sufficient to support a decree for divorce thereunder. Appeal of McClurg, 66 Pa. (16 P. F. Smith) 366.

"Willful and malicious desertion" without reasonable cause for the space of two years, as a ground for divorce, means a desertion with no reasonable cause to leave or remain away, which is actuated by malice against the party who is thus deserted. Rutledge v. Rutledge, 37 Tenn. (5 Sneed) 554, 556.

WILLFUL DESERTION.

From army.

"Willful desertion from the army" is an abandonment of the service permanently or for some indefinite time, unaccompanied by an intention to return. Mere absence without leave does not constitute the offense of desertion, though it is a violation of duty and punishable as such. Inhabitants of Hanson v. Inhabitants of Scituate, 115 Mass. 336, 342.

Of spouse.

"Willful desertion," in divorce laws, is a voluntary separation of one of the married parties from the other, or the voluntary refusal to renew a suspended cohabitation without justification either in the consent or the wrongful conduct of the other. Sisemore v. Sisemore, 21 Pac. 820, 821, 17 Or. 542 (citing 1 Bish. Mar. & Div. § 776).

To constitute willful desertion within the meaning of the statute of Minnesota providing that a divorce may be had for "willful desertion of one party by the other for the term of one year next preceding the filing of the complaint," the going away and refusal to return by the accused party must be without justifiable cause therefor. Stocking v. Stocking, 79 N. W. 172, 173, 76 Minn. 292.

"Willful desertion," as used in the statute authorizing a divorce for willful desertion, means intentional and wrongful cessation of matrimonial cohabitation. Benkert v. Benkert, 32 Cal. 467, 471.

The separation of a wife from her husband and living apart from him with his consent is not a "willful desertion" within the meaning of the statute constituting willful desertion as a cause for divorce. Reed v. Reed, 37 S. W. 230, 231, 62 Ark. 611.

Willful desertion is the voluntary separation of one of the married parties by the other, with intent to desert. Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 95; Civ. Code Idaho 1901, § 2024; Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 135.

WILLFUL EXPOSURE TO DANGER.

A provision in a policy of insurance, that the company should not be liable for any injury happening to the assured by reason of his "willfully and wantonly exposing himself to any unnecessary danger or peril," necessarily implied that any degree of negligence falling short of willful and wanton exposure to an unnecessary danger would not prevent a recovery. The provision would be unmeaning if the observance of due care and skill on the part of the assured constituted an element to his right of action, as it does in actions for injuries occasioned by the negligence of the defendant. Schneider v. Provident Life Ins. Co., 24 Wis. 28, 32, 1 Am. Rep. 157.

WILLFUL HOLDING OVER.

Rev. St. Mo. § 5102, providing that an action for unlawful detainer may be brought against the tenant for "willfully holding over," means any holding over by the tenant without right. The fact that he holds over in good faith is no defense to the action. Lehnen v. Dickson, 13 Sup. Ct. 481, 485, 148 U. S. 71, 37 L. Ed. 373.

WILLFUL IGNORANCE.

"Willful ignorance is equivalent in law to actual knowledge. A man who abstains from inquiry when inquiry ought to be made cannot be heard to say so and to rely on his ignorance." Mackey v. Fullerton, 4 Pac. 1198, 1200, 7 Colo. 556.

The "willful ignorance" which will prevent one from being relieved from the consequences of his failure to do some act which he was entitled to do is said, in 1 Platt, Leases, 759, to exist where a person neglects the means of information which ordinary prudence would suggest, and it is clear that ignorance of a man's own rights, conferred by an instrument actually in his possession or power, where the other party is consequently innocent of concealment, or of any conduct contributing to keep him ignorant of its contents, cannot excuse the performance of any conditions imposed on the person claiming under the instrument. Thiebaud v. First Nat. Bank of Vevay, 42 Ind. 212, 222.

WILLFUL INJURY.

See "Willful—Willfully."

WILLFUL INJURY TO PROPERTY.

Where a woman abstracted certain railway shares, with coupons attached, belonging to plaintiff, and converted the same into money and absconded with the same, there was a "willful injury to property" within Code, § 179, subd. 5, declaring that no female shall be arrested in any action except for a willful injury to person, character, or property. Northern Ry. of France v. Carpentier (N. Y.) 13 How. Prac. 222, 223. And this provision also includes a person aiding others in taking from another certificates of stock and disposing of the same, and converting them into money which they retained to their own use. Northern Ry. of France v. Carpentier (N. Y.) 3 Abb. Prac. 259, 261.

WILLFUL KILLING — WILLFULLY KILL.

See "Willful—Willfully."

WILLFUL MALFEASANCE.

"Willful malfeasance," as applied to a trustee, means a conscious, deliberate breach of trust. Van Sieten v. Bartol (U. S.) 95 Fed 793, 798.

WILLFUL MISAPPLICATION — WILLFULLY MISAPPLY.

"Willful misapplication," as used in Rev. St. § 5209 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3497], which makes "willful misapplication" of the money and funds of a national banking association an offense and punishes the same, means a misapplication of the money, funds, etc., of the association for the use, benefit, or gain of the party charged, or some company or person other than the association whose funds are so misapplied. United States v. Britton, 2 Sup. Ct. 512, 522, 107 U. S. 655, 27 L. Ed. 520.

The term "willfully," in Rev. St. § 5209 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3497], making the willful misapplication of the funds of a national bank by its president, director, officers, etc., a crime, means designedly, and the statute applies where one of the persons mentioned in the section designedly and knowingly misapplies the property of the bank. United States v. Lee (U. S.) 12 Fed. 816, 818.

The words "willfully misapplied" are insufficient to describe the act complained of in an indictment under Rev. St. § 5209 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3497], making it criminal to misapply the money, funds, and credits of a national bank; but the acts showing the misapplication must be alleged, as the words

"willfully misapplied" in the act have no settled technical meaning. Batchelor v. United States, 15 Sup. Ct. 446, 447, 156 U. S. 426, 39 L. Ed. 478.

Embezzle distinguished.

As used in Rev. St. § 5209 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3497], punishing the president, cashier, or agent of any national bank who shall embezzle or willfully misapply any of its funds, the words "embezzle" and "willfully misapply" are not synonymous. In order to misapply the funds of a bank, it is not necessary that the officer charged should be in actual possession of them by virtue of a trust committed to him. He may abstract them from the other funds of the bank unlawfully, and afterward criminally misapply them, or by virtue of his official relation to the bank he may have such control, direction, and power of management as to direct an application of the funds in such a manner and under such circumstances as to constitute the offense of willful misapplication. United States v. Northway, 7 Sup. Ct. 580, 583, 120 U. S. 327, 30 L. Ed. 664.

WILLFUL MISCONDUCT.

No degree of mere carelessness or inadvertence constitutes gross negligence or willful misconduct. Decker v. McSorley, 93 N. W. 808, 809, 116 Wis. 643.

WILLFUL NEGLIGENCE.

Willful omission distinguished, see "Willful Omission."

"Willful neglect" means the intentional disregard of a plain or manifest duty, in the performance of which the public or the person injured has an interest. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Chism, 20 Ky. Law Rep. 584, 587, 47 S. W. 251.

"Willful neglect" means an intentional failure to perform a known or manifest duty in which the public has an interest, or which is important to the person injured, either in preventing or avoiding the injury to him. Union Warehouse Co. v. Prewitt's Adm'r, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 67, 70, 50 S. W. 964.

"Willful neglect" is where the conduct of the party in fault was such as to evidence reckless indifference to the safety of the public, or an intentional failure to perform a plain and manifest duty in the performance of which the public and the party injured had an interest. Eskridge's Ex'rs v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co., 89 Ky. 367, 374, 12 S. W. 580, 582 (citing Claxton's Adm'r v. Lexington & B. S. R. Co., 76 Ky. [13 Bush] 636, 637).

The term "willful neglect," as used in the statute authorizing the recovery of punitive damages for a loss of life by the willful neglect of any person, means willful negligence. It signifies a reckless indifference to or intentional disregard of the safety of others. It is sui generis. The word "willful" was not used as synonymous with the word "gross." Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Privitt's Adm'r, 92 Ky. 223, 226, 17 S. W. 484, 485.

"Willful neglect," jeopardizing life, is, when it is the occasion of death, often a crime, and always may be treated as quasi criminal. "Willful neglect" and "wanton neglect" are nearly synonymous, each implying either actual malice or recklessness, and is within the contemplation of Act March 10, 1854, § 3, providing that if the life of a person is lost by willful neglect punitive damages may be recovered, and section 1, authorizing compensatory damages only when death has resulted from simple neglect. Board of Internal Improvement of Shelby County v. Scarce, 63 Ky. (2 Duv.) 576, 577.

"Willfully neglected and refused," in reference to the directors of a school district having willfully neglected and refused to perform their duty, is not equivalent to "neglected or refused without valid cause." If a duty be enjoined on an officer, his refusal to perform it is willful. He had no discretion as to its performance; but if he be commanded to do a certain act, unless he have a valid excuse for not doing it, and he then refuses for cause, the question is at once raised between him and his superior whether the cause is sufficient to excuse him in his disobedience. It brings the judgment and discretion of the subordinate at once under the supervision of his superior. In re Walker, 36 Atl. 148, 150, 179 Pa. 24.

"Willful neglect," within the meaning of Gen. St. c. 57, § 3, making persons or corporations liable in an action by the widow or personal representative for punitive damages for loss of life through their willful neglect, is intentional neglect or recklessness evidencing an intent to injure. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Coniff's Adm'r (Ky.) 27 S. W. 865, 866.

Willful neglect is the neglect of the husband to provide for the wife the common necessities of life, he having the ability to do so, or it is the failure to do so by reason of idleness, profligacy, or dissipation. Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 143; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 2741; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 71; Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 105; Civ. Code Idaho 1901, § 2025.

WILLFUL NEGLIGENCE.

Law writers have classified "negligence" by such distinguishing names as "slight," "ordinary," and "gross"; to these the courts have added the term "willful." Since "negligence" means inadvertence or carelessness—words implying an absence of thought, care, or intention—it has been said that the term "willful negligence" is a misnomer. Nevertheless the term has come to have a well-settled signification in the law. Victor Coal Co. v. Muir, 38 Pac. 378, 385, 20 Colo. 320, 28 L. R. A. 435, 46 Am. St. Rep. 299.

"Willful negligence" is said to be an inapt term, and means a failure to perform a manifest duty, in reckless disregard of the consequences as affecting the life or property of another. McDonald v. International & G. N. R. Co. (Tex.) 21 S. W. 774, 777; Palmer v. Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co., 14 N. E. 70, 73, 112 Ind. 250; Victor Coal Co. v. Muir, 38 Pac. 378, 385, 20 Colo. 320, 28 L. R. A. 435, 46 Am. St. Rep. 299.

By "willful negligence" is meant not strictly negligence at all, to speak exactly, since negligence implies inadvertence, and whenever there is an exercise of the will in a particular direction there is an end of inadvertence, but rather an intentional failure to perform a manifest duty which is important to the person injured in preventing the injury, in reckless disregard of the consequences as affecting the life or property of another. Such conduct is not negligent in any proper sense, and the term "willful negligence," if these words are interpreted with scientific accuracy, is a misnomer. Holwerston v. St. Louis & S. Ry. Co., 57 S. W. 770, 777, 157 Mo. 216, 50 L. R. A. 850.

Some law writers, some judges, and some courts habitually use the terms "willful negligence," "intentional negligence," and "malicious negligence," but most of them very properly repudiate such expressions as contradictory and absurd. Lockwood v. Belle City St. Ry. Co., 65 N. W. 866, 870, 92 Wis. 97.

As gross negligence.

Willful negligence is a higher degree of negligence than gross. Kentucky Cent. R. Co. v. Carr (Ky.) 43 S. W. 193, 194.

The words "willful" and "gross," as applied to negligence, are not synonymous. As used in St. § 6, providing that punitive damages may be recovered when an act causing the death of a party is willful or the negligence gross, the word "willful" is descriptive of the act, while the word "gross" is descriptive of a degree of negligence. Clarke's Adm'x v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 39 S. W. 840, 841, 101 Ky. 34.

As wanton or reckless conduct.

Conduct which is wanton and reckless in its injurious consequences is described by the term "willful negligence." Florida Southern Ry. v. Hirst, 11 South. 506, 513, 30 Fla. 1, 16 L. R. A. 631, 32 Am. St. Rep. 17.

"Willful negligence," as contemplated by a statute providing that damages may be recovered for the death of a person caused by the willful neglect of another, is such conduct as evidences reckless indifference to the safety of the public, and an intentional failure to perform a plain and manifest duty in the performance of which the public has an interest. City of Lexington v. Lewis' Adm'x, 73 Ky. (10 Bush) 677, 680 (citing Jacobs' Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 73 Ky. [10 Bush] 263).

To constitute "willful and wanton negligence," it is not always necessary to prove that the defendant's servants are actuated by ill will towards the plaintiff. Thompson, in his Commentaries on the Law of Negligence, defines "willful negligence" to be a willful determination not to perform a known duty. The true conception of willful negligence involves a deliberate purpose not to discharge some duty necessary to the safety of the person or property of another, which duty the person owing it has assumed, or which is imposed upon the person by operation of law. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Leiner, 67 N. E. 398, 400, 202 Ill. 624, 95 Am. St. Rep. 266.

Willful and wanton negligence means something more than simply negligence or even gross negligence, though it does not include the element of malice or the actual intent to injure another. When a person discovers another in a position of peril, although the latter is a trespasser and negligently placed himself in such position, and the former, after so discovering him, can by the exercise of ordinary care avoid injuring him, but omits to do so, he evinces such reckless disregard of the safety of others as to constitute in law willful and wanton negligence. Sloniker v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 79 N. W. 168, 76 Minn. 306.

WILLFUL OBSTRUCTION.

The word "willful," as used in a statute punishing the willful obstruction of a street, means that if any person shall place any obstruction upon or in any public road, of a permanent character, knowing or having good reason to know that the same was a public road, such act would in law be deemed to have been willfully done. Loyd v. State, 19 Tex. App. 321, 322.

Rev. St. c. 19, § 101, providing a penalty for willfully obstructing a highway, cannot be construed so as to embrace an obstruction directed in the most perfect good faith by the landowner, believing that no highway existed at the place, and acting under the advice and direction of the proper public officer charged by law with the general supervision and control of all the roads and highways in the town. Such an obstruction cannot be regarded as willful, even under the mildest construction which can here be put upon that term. State v. Preston, 34 Wis. 675, 682.

"Willfully," as used in Rev. St. 1858, c. 19, § 101, requiring that any person who shall willfully obstruct a highway shall be liable to an action for a penalty imposed thereby, is used in the sense of obstinately, stubbornly, and with knowledge of want of right so to do, and hence excepts from its operation the deposit of materials in a highway by a landowner in good faith and for a justifiable purpose. State v. Smith, 8 N. W. 870, 52 Wis. 134.

The word "willfully," as used in Code, § 3979, fixing the punishment for willfully obstructing any highway, means intentional, and therefore an admission that defendant placed the obstruction across the road is an admission of a willful obstruction. State v. Teeters, 66 N. W. 754, 756, 97 Iowa, 458.

WILLFUL OMISSION.

The phrase "willful omission to perform such duty," in Pen. Code, § 154, declaring that where any duty is or shall be enjoined by law upon any public officer, or upon any person holding a public trust or employment, every willful omission to perform such duty is punishable as a misdemeanor, is synonymous with the phrase "willfully neglects to perform the duty," in Pen. Code, § 117, declaring that a public officer or person holding a public trust or employment upon whom any duty is enjoined by law, who willfully neglects to perform the duty, is guilty of a misdemeanor. People v. Herlihy, 72 N. Y. Supp. 889, 892, 35 Misc. Rep. 711.

WILLFUL TRESPASS.

See "Willful—Willfully."

WILLFULLY AND OF MALICE AFORETHOUGHT.

"Willfully and of malice aforethought" was first used in the statute 23 Hen. VIII, c. 1, § 3, which took away the benefit of clergy in all cases where a homicide was committed "willfully and of malice aforethought." Prior to that time manslaughter was the only form of homicide known, and all convicted of the crime were allowed the benefit of clergy. The statute created the distinction between murder and manslaughter. State v. Lowe, 5 S. W. 889, 896, 93 Mo. 547.

The term "willfully and with malice aforethought," as applied to murder, has a meaning that is peculiar to the law, and in finding their existence it is not necessary that the proof should show that a motive for the act done existed. The law recognizes that the cause of the killing is sometimes so hidden in the mind and the breast of the party who kills that it cannot be fathomed, and, as it does not require impossibilities, it does not require the jury to find it. There is no motive that can be weighed on the one side of the scale, with the crime of wicked and deliberate murder upon the other side of it, and be pronounced by honest men as equal in weight to the crime committed. Pointer v. United States, 14 Sup. Ct. 410, 416, 151 U. S. 896, 38 L. Ed. 208.

WILLFULLY BLASPHEMY.

St. 1782, c. 8, providing that punishment shall be inflicted upon any one who shall "willfully" blaspheme the holy name of God, means not merely voluntarily, but with a bad purpose, and should be construed to import an intended design to calumniate and disparage the Supreme Being, and to destroy the veneration due him. Commonwealth v. Kneeland, 37 Mass. (20 Pick.) 206, 220.

WILLFULNESS.

Willfulness arises from the spontaneous action of the will and cannot exist without purpose or design. Huff v. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co., 56 N. E. 932, 934, 24 Ind. App. 492, 79 Am. St. Rep. 274 (citing Dull v. Cleveland, C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 21 Ind. App. 571, 52 N. E. 1013).

To establish a charge of willfulness, an actual intent to do the particular injury need not be shown; but if there is an utter disregard of consequences, this may be sufficient to supply the place of a specific intent, and constitute willfulness. Cincinnati, I., St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Cooper, 120 Ind. 469, 474, 22 N. E. 340, 6 L. R. A. 241, 16 Am. St. Rep. 334.

Willfulness which will justify a recovery notwithstanding contributory negligence may exist in a legal sense without a formal and direct intention to injure, or, in other words, there may be a constructive or implied intent without an express one. Brannen v. Kokomo, G. & J. Gravel Road Co., 115 Ind. 115, 120, 17 N. E. 202, 7 Am. St. Rep. 411.

An injury may be willful if there is such a reckless disregard of human life as to justify an inference that there was a constructive intent to inflict the injury. Indiana, B. & W. Ry. Co. v. Wheeler, 115 Ind. 253, 255, 17 N. E. 563.

By "willfulness," when used with respect to the crime of murder, is meant that the act was of purpose, with the intent that by the given act the life of the party should be taken. People v. Cox, 18 Pac. 332, 334, 76 Cal. 281; State v. Shuff (Idaho) 72 Pac. 664, 668.

Where one person negligently comes into a situation of peril, before another can be held liable for an injury to him it must appear that the latter had knowledge of his situation in time to have prevented the injury, or it must appear that the injurious act or omission was by design, and was such, considering the time and place, as that its natural and probable consequence would be to produce serious hurt to some one. To constitute a willful injury, it must have been intentional, or must have been done under such circumstances as evidenced a reckless disregard for the safety of others and a willingness to inflict the injury complained of. It involves conduct which is quasi criminal. Brooks v. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 62 N. E. 694, 696, 158 Ind. 62 (citing Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Bryan, 107 Ind. 51, 53, 7 N. E. 807, 808).

Willfulness does not consist in negligence; on the contrary, the two terms are incompatible. Negligence arises from inattention, thoughtlessness, or heedlessness, while willfulness cannot exist without purpose or design. No purpose or design can be said to exist where the injurious act results from negligence, and negligence cannot be of such degree as to become willfulness. Brooks v. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 62 N. E. 694, 696, 158 Ind. 62 (citing Parker v. Pennsylvania Co., 134 Ind. 673, 679, 34 N. E. 504, 506, 23 L. R. A. 552).

There can be no middle ground between willfulness and negligence. The authorities affirm that each of these elements is the opposite of the other. Consequently, when the facts in a given case show that the injury of which the plaintiff complains is the result of the negligent act or conduct of the defendant, then the fact that such negligence may be said to be of such a degree as to be considered gross negligence cannot support a charge that the injury was willfully or intentionally inflicted by the party accused. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Miller, 49 N. E. 445, 451, 149 Ind. 490.

WILLING.

See "Ready and Willing."

WILLINGLY.

"Willingly" means voluntarily; readily; without reluctance; in the manner of being ready to do an act; of free choice; with one's free choice or consent, as if a man inclines or is favorably disposed to do an act. To say that an act has been done willfully and willingly is to indicate that it has been done intentionally, and implies that the person doing it knew what he was doing, and acted from choice as a free agent. Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Nash, 27 N. E. 564, 1 Ind. App. 298.

"Freely and willingly," as used in a statute providing that the certificate of acknowledgment to a deed by a married woman should show that she declared that she did freely and willingly sign and seal the deed, is equivalent to "without bribe, threat, or compulsion," as used in a certificate showing that she acknowledged that she signed the deed without bribe, threat, or compulsion from her husband. Her freedom of action and willingness to make the deed have reference to and are designed to negative any improper influence or duress by the husband. She may regret to part with her property, or she may think the price inadequate, or she may be loath to change her residence, and be unwilling to execute the deed for such purposes in one sense, while she, from considerations controlling her will other than any constraint from her husband, may wish earnestly, or even anxiously, to execute the deed. Belcher v. Weaver, 46 Tex. 293, 294, 26 Am. Rep. 267.

The term "knowingly and willingly" characterizes the act of a carrier of live stock in confining animals in carriage for more than 28 consecutive hours without food or water, as prohibited by Rev. St. §§ 4386-4388 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 2995, 2996], which makes carriers liable to a penalty for knowingly and willingly failing to comply with the act, even though the act of the carrier is caused by an accident to its train, if such accident is the result of its negligence. Newport News & M. V. Co. v. United States (U. S.) 61 Fed. 488, 490, 9 C. C. A. 579.

Wittingly distinguished.

"Willingly" and "wittingly" are not synonymous words, and do not convey the same idea. The one relates to the will, and means freely or voluntarily, while the other relates to the wit or understanding, and means knowingly or designedly. Harrington v. State, 54 Miss. 490, 493.

WIND.

See "Brisk Wind."

WINDMILL.

Where, on the sale of windmill, pump, and tank to be used for the purpose of watering live stock, the seller warranted "the within ordered windmill to be well made and of good material," the term "windmill" was construed to extend to the tank as well. Fairbanks v. De Lissa, 36 Mo. App. 711, 719.

WINDOW.

See "Bay Window."

A plate-glass shop front fixed with wooden wedges, without screws, nails, or glue, and which can be removed without injuring the premises, is a "window" within the meaning of a covenant in a lease to yield up the premises at the end of the term, with all windows, etc., which then were or at any time thereafter should be thereunto fixed or belonging, although such window may not be a fixture in the ordinary sense of the term. Burt v. Haslett, 36 Eng. Law & Eq. 276, 278, 18 C. B. 162, 173; Id., 893, 901.

"Window," as used in a tornado insurance policy providing that plate glass in doors and "windows" whereof the dimensions are nine feet are not covered by insurance on the building, cannot be construed to include a pane of plate glass nine feet square in the front of a store building, it being immovable and stationary, having but one of the qualities of a window, i. e., that of admitting light into the building, but not for ventilation. A "window" is defined by standard lexicographers to be an aperture or opening in the wall of a building for the admission of light and air to the interior, and to enable those within to look out. Hale v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 46 Mo. App. 508, 510 (citing Worcester Dict. 1673; Bouv. Dict. 670).

Windows are strictly part of the house, and ordinarily affixed permanently thereto; so that a statement that a certain person stole windows from a house is not actionable as imputing a charge of larceny or even an act of malicious mischief. Wing v. Wing, 66 Me. 62, 64, 22 Am. Rep. 548.

WINDOW FRAMES.

A contract of sale of "window frames set with glass" will be construed to embrace the sashes in which the glass is set. Way v. Ryther, 42 N. E. 1128, 165 Mass. 226.

WINE.

See "Pure Sweet Wine"; "Pure Wine."

"Wine" is the fermented juice of the grape, or a preparation of other vegetables by fermentation. State v. Moore (Ind.) 5 Blackf. 118.

"Wine" is fermented liquor, defined by Johnson to be the fermented juice of grapes. Caswell v. State, 21 Tenn. (2 Humph.) 402, 403.

Worcester defines "wine" as the "fermented juice of the grape; a spirituous liquid resulting from the fermentation of grape juice; the fermented juice of certain fruits, resembling in many respects the wine obtained from grapes, but distinguished therefrom by naming the source whence it is derived, as ginger wine, gooseberry wine, currant wine," etc. Hinton v. State, 31 South. 563, 564, 132 Ala. 29; Feldman v. City of Morrison, 1 Ill. App. (1 Bradw.) 460, 462.

Hence fermented juice of blackberries is a vinous liquor. Hinton v. State, 31 South. 563, 564, 132 Ala. 29.

The word "wine," in an information charging that defendant sold wine, spirituous liquors, or other intoxicating beverages to a common drunkard, is not of the same import as the words "intoxicating beverages," and consequently the offense is charged in the alternative, and the complaint is insufficient by reason thereof. Smith v. State, 19 Conn. 493, 499.

"Wines," within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the sale of strong or spirituous liquors or wine, includes all wines used for drinking; and it is not necessary, in a prosecution for the violation of the statute, to show that the wine sold was intoxicating. Schwab v. People (N. Y.) 4 Hun, 520, 524.

The use of the word "wine" as designating the subject of a legacy is so uncertain as to render the legacy void, as the heir could liberate himself by giving a drop of wine. Succession of Trouard, 5 La. Ann. 390.

As used in an act relating to the adulteration of wines, the word "wine" means the fermented juice of undried grapes; provided, however, that the addition of pure white or crystallized sugar to perfect the wine, or the using of the necessary things to clarify and refine the wine, which are not injurious to health, shall not be construed as adulterations; but such wines shall contain at least 75 per cent. of pure grape juice, and shall not contain any artificial flavoring whatever. Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, § 4200-58.

Ale, beer, or cider.

The term "wine" includes the fermented juice of the grape, and possibly of other fruits. It does not include ale. People v. Crilley (N. Y.) 20 Barb. 246, 247.

In common parlance, cider and beer are never called vinous liquors or wine, although there may be found in works on chemistry general expressions that wine is the expressed juice of ripe fruits containing sugar, which causes it to readily undergo fermentation. Feldman v. City of Morrison, 1 Ill. App. (1 Bradw.) 460, 462.

The term "wine," in Rev. St. § 2139, prohibiting the introduction of spirituous liquor into the Indian country, does not include lager beer. Sarlls v. United States, 14 Sup. Ct. 720, 722, 152 U. S. 570, 38 L. Ed. 556.

As intoxicating liquor.

See "Intoxicating Liquor."

As spirituous liquor.

"Wine" is a fermented liquor, and does not come within the terms of a statute forbidding the sale of spirituous liquors. Caswell v. State, 21 Tenn. (2 Humph.) 402, 403; State v. Moore (Ind.) 5 Blackf. 118.

A statute authorizing the granting of licenses to persons to be innholders, with liberty to sell ale, wine, beer, and other fermented liquors, cannot be construed to authorize such holders to sell brandy, rum, or other spirituous liquors. Commonwealth v. Jordan, 35 Mass. (18 Pick.) 228.

WINE SPIRITS.

"Wine spirits" is the product resulting from the distillation of fermented grape juice, and shall be held to include the product commonly known as "grape brandy." U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2171.

WINNER.

The term "winners," in Gen. St. c. 47, § 2, providing that if any person shall lose to another at any one time, or within any 24 hours, $5 or more of property or things of value, and shall pay or transfer or deliver the same, such loser or any creditor of his may recover the same or the value thereof from the winners, applies to the proprietors of a hotel, who operate a poker room in their hotel and receive a certain percentage of the winnings to defray the expenses of the players for suppers, cigars, etc., and as profits. Triplett v. Seelbach, 14 S. W. 948, 949, 91 Ky. 30.

Stockbroker.

A broker with whom one enters into a gambling stock contract, putting up securities for margins, is, on selling the stock at a loss and retaining the securities therefor, a "winner" of the securities, within Cr. Code, § 132, providing that any one who shall lose by a wager anything amounting to more than $10 and shall pay or deliver it may recover it from the winner by action or proceedings in chancery. Jamieson v. Wallace, 47 N. E. 762, 766, 167 Ill. 388, 59 Am. St. Rep. 302; Kruse v. Kennett, 54 N. E. 965, 967, 181 Ill. 199.

Where a person enters into an optional contract with a broker, the latter to take options on such person's account, but in his own name, and in case there are losses such person is to pay them, and if there are profits he is to have the benefit of them, the broker to have a commission in any event, and losses result, in adjusting the differences the broker is a "winner," within the statute allowing recovery from the winner of money lost in gaming. Pearce v. Foote, 113 Ill. 228, 234, 55 Am. Rep. 414.

The term "winner," as used in Rev. St. Ill. 1883, c. 38, § 132, would not include a commission broker on the Board of Trade, selling grain by the orders of a principal, who meets with a loss thereby. White v. Barber, 8 Sup. Ct. 221, 238, 123 U. S. 392, 31 L. Ed. 248.

WINNING.

Winning at or upon game implies a wager of some kind. Middaugh v. State, 2 N. E. 292, 293, 103 Ind. 78.

WINTER-STRAINED LAMP OIL.

A contract for the sale of "winter-strained lamp oil" sometimes means either whale or sperm oil. By the usage of the trade it is generally understood to mean sperm lamp oil. Hart v. Hammett, 18 Vt. 127, 129.

WIPER.

A railway employé, whose duty is to clean the engines inside and outside, assist in getting them in and out of the round-house, clean out cinder pits, load coal, and do general work; hence he was in the line of his duty when coupling a car to an engine in order to remove it from the track leading to the ash pit, other wipers having been in the habit of so doing. Grannis v. Chicago, St. P. & K. O. R. Co., 46 N. W. 1067, 81 Iowa, 444.

WIRE.

"Wire," as used in instructions to the agent for a bank not to return any drafts, but, if they are not paid, to wire, means "send a telegram." Freeman v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 42 N. W. 632, 78 Iowa, 150, 4 L. R. A. 422.

Ordinarily the "wire or wiring" of an electric plant would not be taken to include reflectors, insulators, etc., and in a contract for the sale of the plant they would be construed in their ordinary meaning. Muckle v. Moore, 19 Atl. 801, 134 Pa. 608.

WISELY.

A will wherein testator directed that the residue of his estate be placed in the hands of a trustee, "to bestow as he may wisely direct," gave the trustee discretion as to the manner and person to whom the residuary estate should be given, and hence the provision was invalid, owing to the absence of a defined beneficiary. In re Foley, 10 N. Y. Supp. 12, 14, 2 Con. Sur. 298.

WISH.

Either of the words "wish," "desire," "command," or "direct" is an apt word to be used in a will to show testator's intent to make a will. Barney v. Hayes, 29 Pac. 282, 284, 11 Mont. 571.

While the words "give, devise, and bequeath" are the usual words used in wills, yet they are not essential to the validity of a gift; and if it appears that it was the intent of the testator to have the property go to the person named as legatee, even if the words "wish or desire" are used, then the intention of the testator will be followed out. In re Copeland, 77 N. Y. Supp. 931, 38 Misc. Rep. 402.

As mandatory.

The word "wish," in a will, is sufficient when standing alone to constitute an effectual bequest. Decker v. High St. M. E. Church, 50 N. Y. Supp. 260, 262, 27 App. Div. 408 (citing Phillips v. Phillips, 112 N. Y. 197, 202, 19 N. E. 411, 8 Am. St. Rep. 737).

The words "wish and desire," in a will in which testator suggested that it was his wish and desire that all his real estate should be divided between his children, was construed to be not merely the expression of a desire on the part of the testator, but to be operative words sufficient to pass the property. Brasher v. Marsh, 15 Ohio St. 103, 111.

"Wish," as used in a will reciting, "I wish" the sum of $1,000 "to have go to my daughter's children," means the same as if the testator had said "I will," or "I direct." Bliven v. Seymour, 88 N. Y. 469, 476.

The word "wish," as used in a will, stating that testator's wishes, desires, and intentions are that certain persons should share in the real estate, will be held mandatory, and used in the sense of "direct," where the will undertakes to dispose of the entire estate. Meehan v. Brennan, 45 N. Y. Supp. 57, 58, 16 App. Div. 395.

The "wish" of a testator as to a disposition expressed in writing and formally signed in his lifetime is just as effective as his "I will," or "I desire," or "I direct." His death makes the one just as imperative as the other. In re Gaston's Estate, 41 Atl. 529, 188 Pa. 374, 68 Am. St. Rep. 874.

"Wish," as used in wills, is sometimes used as a mere precatory word, and sometimes is equivalent to the word "will" or "direct," and so, as used in a will giving a husband the use of certain property, and providing that at his death "I wish the property to be divided," etc., is used in the latter sense of "will" or "direct." In re Metcalfe's Estate, 27 N. Y. Supp. 879, 880, 6 Misc. Rep. 524.

In a will bequeathing certain property to the testator's wife, and declaring that at her decease "I wish my estate to go to" certain persons, "wish" should be construed as a mandatory word, and not as a precatory word, merely expressing the wish that his wife should give or bequeath the estate to such persons. Appeal of Fox, 99 Pa. 282, 287.

The words "wish and desire," as used in a will in which the testator recited that it was his "wish and desire" that his slaves should be free at the expiration of seven years from his death, are not to be construed merely as an expression of the testator's "wish and desire," but are an actual gift of freedom to the slaves at the expiration of seven years from the testator's death. Phebe v. Quillin, 21 Ark. 490, 495.

Testator devised to his wife all his estate, real, personal, and mixed, to her sole and separate use, behoof, and control, forever, but in a subsequent item provided that it was also his "desire and wish," after his wife's death, that his house and lot should go to his daughter for her sole and separate use. Held that, while the words "wish and desire" were sometimes considered to be precatory words merely in wills, and not mandatory, as where they are used as expressing a desire for an act to be done by some person or persons named, no such presumption or construction obtains when the words are used to express the intention and will of the testator, as in the devise quoted, in which case such words are to be treated as mandatory, and hence the testator intended to give his wife only a life estate in the house and the lot, with remainder to the daughter. Taylor v. Martin (Pa.) 8 Atl. 920, 922.

As a request.

The word "wish," when used in a will in which the testator states that "it is my wish" that property should go in a certain way, generally operates as a direct bequest. Yet they will be construed to mean rather an inclination of the mind than an act of the will, where a different construction would produce inconsistency and repugnancy in the different provisions of the will. Brunson v. King (S. C.) 2 Hill, Eq. 483, 490.

"Wish to cancel," as used in a letter stating that the writers "wish to cancel" a certain contract, "imports nothing in the nature of a request for consent or deference to the views of the other party. It announces the intention of the writer to exercise a definite right." Ireland v. Dick, 18 Atl. 735, 736, 130 Pa. 299.

In a will, which, after disposing of the residuary estate of the testatrix to her husband absolutely, expressed the wish that he should so arrange his affairs that at his decease whatever might remain of the property should go to the son of testatrix, "wish" is merely a word of solicitation, and was not intended to control his discretion in the disposition of the property. Nunn v. O'Brien, 34 Atl. 244, 245, 83 Md. 198.

A testator, after making provision for the establishment of a library, stated that he did not wish any work to be excluded from the library on account of its difference from the ordinary or conventional opinions on the subjects of science, government, theology, morals, or medicine, provided they contain neither ribaldry nor indecency. Held, that the word "wish" should not be construed as a command, but that it merely expressed a preference of the testator, and was subject to the discretion of the executors and trustees. Manners v. Philadelphia Library Co., 93 Pa. 165, 172, 39 Am. Rep. 741.

As creating a trust.

The authorities are conclusive and harmonious that a trust will be created by such precatory words as "hope," "wish," request," etc., if they be not so modified by the context as to amount to no more than mere suggestions. Bohon v. Barrett's Ex'r, 2 Ky. Law Rep. 371, 374, 79 Ky. 378.

Words expressive of a wish or a desire, used in a will, may in given instances create a trust or impose a charge. The primary question in every case is the intention of the testator, and whether in the use of precatory words he meant simply to advise or influence the discretion of the devisee, or to himself control the direct disposition intended. In such cases the whole will, so far as it bears upon the inquiry, must be looked to. Phillips v. Phillips, 19 N. E. 411, 412, 112 N. Y. 197, 8 Am. St. Rep. 737.

The word "wish" has been held to create a trust, and it is undoubtedly true that this and other like precatory words will under conditions, but not invariably, raise or imply a trust. Pratt v. Trustees of Shepard & Enoch Pratt Hospital, 42 Atl. 51, 54, 88 Md. 610.

Commendatory terms of a will, expressing a wish, will, or desire, etc., are sufficient to constitute a trust, unless there be uncertainty as to the parties who are to take and what they are to take. Lines v. Darden, 5 Fla. 51, 72.

In a will, where testator makes an absolute gift of property, saying that it is his "wish and request" that it be used in a certain way, such words are sufficient to raise a trust, where the subject and object of the trust are sufficiently certain. Major v. Hernon, 78 Ky. 123, 129.

"Wish," as used in a will, wherein testator makes a devise and thereafter expresses a wish as to the disposition of the property or fund, is a precatory word, sufficient to create a trust in the property devised. Curd v. Field, 45 S. W. 92, 103 Ky. 203.

It is held that the word "wish" is a sufficient expression of testator's intention and desire to create a trust. Cook v. Ellington, 59 N. C. 371, 373, 374.

The term "wish," as used in a will creating a trust, is used in the same sense as "will" or "direct." Bliven v. Seymour, 88 N. Y. 469, 476, 477.

Testator gave to his wife all his property, amounting to about $100,000, naming her executrix, and adding: "If she finds it always convenient to pay my sister the sum of $300 a year, and to give my brother $700 per year, I wish it to be done." Held, that a trust was created, contingent only on the widow's convenience, and not on her volition, as the word "wish," in a will, is often equivalent to a command. Phillips v. Phillips, 19 N. E. 411, 412, 112 N. Y. 197, 8 Am. St. Rep. 737.

WITH.

See "Along With"; "Carry With It."

As used in a will by which testator gave to M. during her natural life a certain house, with all the household goods thereof, the word "with" was so conjoined to the devise that the devisee took only the same interest in the household goods as she was given in the house. The word "with" would have the same effect in a grant. Leeke v. Bennett, 1 Atk. 470.

The word "with" in a sheriff's deed, reciting the sale of land on execution and that in consideration, etc., the sheriff "doth hereby bargain, sell, alien, convey, and confirm with the said" D., does not affect the sense or operation of the instrument, as upon the context it is evident between or with whom the contract is, and by and to whom the estate is conveyed. Brooks v. Ratcliff, 33 N. C. 321, 326.

"With and by means of poison," in an indictment, sufficiently charges the mode of killing. State v. Labounty, 21 Atl. 730, 731, 63 Vt. 374.

An indictment alleged that the prisoner "with a certain rifle gun, charged with gunpowder and two leaden bullets, which in his hands he had and held at and against the said F., then and there feloniously," etc., "did shoot off and discharge," and it was contended that there was no sufficient averment that the gun was shot off or that the contents were discharged. Held, that the contention was of no merit, since, while to say "with a gun did shoot off and discharge" might be an unusual form of expression, it could not be said that it was inaccurate, especially as it was added that he did shoot off and discharge with a gun charged with gunpowder and leaden bullets. State v. Freeman (S. C.) 1 Speers, 57, 61, 65.

The word "with," in Rev. St. c. 148, § 2, providing that the affidavit to authorize the arrest of a debtor, "when he is about to depart and reside beyond the limits of this state, with property or means," must have been used in the sense of having or owning property or means, and not as indicating that he is about to take his property with him beyond the limits of the state. Bramhall v. Seavey, 28 Me. (15 Shep.) 45, 48.

A lease, in which a description of the premises was followed by the words "with the privileges thereto belonging as enjoyed by S.," did not subject the tenant to a covenant of S., the former tenant, not to remove erections put up during his term. Ombony v. Jones, 19 N. Y. 234, 237.

The words "to," "on," "along," "with," or "by" a mountain or ridge mean summit point, or summit line, unless otherwise expressed. Pol. Code Cal. 1903, § 3905; Pol. Code Mont. 1895, § 4105.

The words "to," "by," "along," "with," "in," "up," or "down" a creek, river, slough, strait, or bay, mean the middle of the main channel thereof, unless otherwise expressed. Pol. Code Cal. 1903, § 3906; Pol. Code Mont. 1895, § 4106.

The words "along," "with," "by," or "on" the shore line mean on a line parallel with and three miles from the shore. Pol. Code Cal. 1903, § 3907.

As at same time.

The word "with," as used in Laws Iowa 18th Gen. Assem. c. 185, § 3, providing that, before any allowance of attorney's fees shall be made by the court, the court shall be fully satisfied by affidavit of the attorney engaged in the cause, which affidavit shall be filed with the original papers, that there has been no agreement between the attorney and any other person to divide the fee, is synonymous with "at the same time," instead of "placed among." Wilkins v. Troutner, 24 N. W. 37, 66 Iowa, 557.

The Illinois statute relating to ne exeat and injunction, and authorizing affidavits filed "with" the bill and answer to be read on motion to dissolve, does not require that the affidavit and the pleadings should be filed at the same time. Hummert v. Schwab, 54 Ill. 142, 145.

In the appellate court, the affidavit of the plaintiff has two distinct effects. One is to prevent the defendant from putting in a plea, unless "he shall file with his plea an affidavit." Section 37, c. 110, "Practice,"

Rev. St. 1893. The Supreme Court in effect held, in Goldie v. McDonald, 78 Ill. 605, that "with," as to the plaintiff's affidavit, was used in the statute in the sense of Webster's second definition, "to denote association in respect of situation or environment," not simultaneous happening. Whatever meaning "with" has in one part of the section, it should have in the other. Now, in the appellate court, the defendant cannot file with his plea an affidavit, because he does not file a plea at all. As no plea is filed, nothing can be filed with it. Furness v. Helm, 54 Ill. App. 435, 436.

An affidavit of claim, filed more than 10 days before the convening of the court for the term at which the declaration is filed, will be regarded as having been filed "with the declaration." Goldie v. McDonald, 78 Ill. 605, 606.

Rev. Code, art. 44, § 28, requiring every power of attorney authorizing an agent or attorney to convey real estate to be attested and acknowledged in the same manner as a deed, and recorded "with the deed" executed in pursuance of such power, means on the proper records where the deed is recorded, and not that the recordation must be simultaneous. Rosenthal v. Ruffin, 60 Md. 324, 326.

The preposition "with" is generally used as denoting connection, appendage, company of, and concomitance. Pursuant to this definition it is held that a devise which provides that certain slaves shall be emancipated with their children as soon as they severally arrive at 30 years of age, manumits the children when the slaves designated attain that age. Hart v. Fanny Ann, 22 Ky. (6 T. B. Mon.) 49, 51.

As attached to.

Act April 9, 1868, authorizing judgment in actions upon bills, notes, etc., and on claims for the loan or advance of money, whether the same be reduced to writing or not, but that no judgment shall be entered unless the plaintiff shall, on or before the return day of the original process, file with his declaration or statement a copy of the instrument of writing, book entries, record of claim on which the action has been brought, etc., is construed to be satisfied by the filing of the affidavit at the time the declaration is filed, and not to require that it be attached to or accompany the declaration. Hossler v. Hartman, 82 Pa. 53, 55.

By synonymous.

"With" and "by" are closely allied in many of their uses, and it is not easy to lay down a rule by which to distinguish their uses. It is held that the colonial patent of October 30, 1876, to the town of Southold, lying northerly of Peconic and Gardiner's

Bays, describing the southern boundary of the grant as "on the south with an arm of the sea," does not give the town title to the lands under water in those bays, as the word "with," in the description, should be deemed synonymous with "by," and the south boundary of the patent is the high-water mark on the north side of those bays. Town of Southold v. Parks, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1078, 1079, 41 Misc. Rep. 456.

As from.

"With," as used in a declaration alleging that the commencement of the four years for the continuance of a partnership was to be with the day of the date of the contract, is equivalent to "from" as used in the articles of copartnership, stating that the commencement of the four years for its continuance was from the day of the date of the contract and includes the date. "A datu" does not exclude the date; and it was the same with "cum datu." Seignorett v. Nogulre, 2 Ld. Raym. 1241, 1242.

As in addition to.

The term "with," in a clause of the exemption statute exempting two horses, with sufficient forage for the keeping of the same, is to be construed as connecting two independent subjects, rather than as joining an independent or qualifying clause to one subject. It is the same as if the statute had read "a yoke of oxen, and, in addition thereto, forage," etc., and therefore the debtor is entitled to the forage exemption, although he does not own the designated animals. Kimball v. Woodruff, 55 Vt. 229, 231.

Under 2 Rev. St. p. 255, § 169, subd. 4, providing that all sheep to the number of ten, with their fleeces and the yarn or cloth manufactured from the same, shall be exempt from execution, etc., the fleeces, or the yarn or cloth manufactured from the fleeces, of ten sheep, are exempted from execution while in the hands of a householder, whether he be or not the owner of sheep. Hall v. Penney (N. Y.) 11 Wend. 44, 45, 25 Am. Dec. 601.

"With a reserve of the two streets," as used by one of two mutual releases by tenants in common effecting a division, by which the land was described as "lying easterly on C. street and northerly of the M. lots, containing twelve house lots of a quarter of an acre each, more or less, with reserve of the two streets contemplated by a plan" made by a certain party, did not import a reservation to the releasor, but was merely descriptive of the premises conveyed. Palmer v. Dougherty, 33 Me. 502, 507, 54 Am. Dec. 636.

As an incident to.

In an indenture demising a fee in lands, except and always reserved the woods, underwoods, and trees now growing or hereafter to grow on said premises, and the mines, quarries, and seams of clay within and under the same, with full and free authority and power to cut down and carry away the said wood, and to dig, work, and carry away the said mines, quarries, and seams of clay, the word "with" must be taken to mean "and as incident thereto." Durham & S. Ry. Co. v. Walker, 2 Adol. & E. (N. S.) 940, 968.

As join in.

The §100 act (Purd. Dig. p. 355) enacts that where the defendant is the appellant he shall be bound with surety in the nature of special bail. Held, that the word "with" was used as synonymous with "by," and hence it was not necessary that the defendant should join in the recognizance. Boyce v. Wilkins (Pa.) 5 Serg. & R. 329, 330.

"With," as used in an Oregon statute providing that the undertaking of the appellant must be given "with" one or more sureties, etc., should be construed to mean that such undertakings be executed by the appellant, as well as the sureties, and not to mean that the sureties alone should execute it. Droullhat v. Schmidt (Or.) 9 Pac. 67, 69.

St. 1 Jac. I, c. 8, providing that executions on writs of error shall not be stayed unless the person in whose name the writ of error is brought shall be "bound with sufficient sureties," means that sufficient sureties shall be given; and, if sufficient surety is entered, the execution must be stayed, though the party himself is not bound. Cavence v. Butler (Pa.) 6 Bin. 52, 53.

In an act of assembly directing that an appellant shall produce one or more sufficient sureties, who shall enter into a recognizance "with the prothonotary" in the nature of special bail, is not to be construed literally as requiring that the prothonotary himself must be bound in the recognizance, but according to the intent, which is that the appellant should give sufficient security in the nature of bail, to be filed in the office of the prothonotary, and that it should be entered into before such persons as are legally authorized to take bail in the court where the suit is depending. Jones v. Badger (Pa.) 5 Bin. 461, 462.

WITH ALL DISPATCH.

See "With All Possible Dispatch."

A charter party, providing that a cargo was to be discharged according to the custom of the port of discharge "with all dispatch," is not complied with by a discharge delayed by the fact that the charterers have a number of other vessels in the port, whose cargoes of sugar they are unloading, and to which they chose for their own convenience or business purposes to furnish all the available weighers. Smith v. Roberts (U. S.) 67 Fed. 361, 362, 14 C. C. A. 417.

WITH ALL FAULTS.

A contract for the sale of a copper-fastened vessel, to be taken "with all faults," means all faults which a copper-fastened vessel might have. Henshaw v. Robins, 50 Mass. (9 Metc.) 83, 90, 43 Am. Dec. 367.

An agreement of sale, where the buyer agreed to purchase personally with "all faults," does not mean all faults or defects such as the thing described ordinarily has, but means such faults or defects as the article might have and still retain its character and identity as the article described, as, for instance, in the sale of a copper-fastened vessel "with all faults," the term meaning such faults as a copper-fastened vessel might have, but would not cover the sale of a vessel not copper-fastened. Whitney v. Boardman, 118 Mass. 242, 247.

A sale of personal property, by which the vendee takes the article "with all faults," etc., means that the purchaser shall make use of his eyes and understanding to discover what defects there are, but the vendor is not to make use of any artifice or practice to conceal faults, or to prevent the purchaser from discovering a fault which he, the vendor, knew to exist. By the vendee's taking the article with all faults, the vendor is relieved from disclosing any faults he may know to exist in the thing sold. Smith v. Andrews, 30 N. C. 3, 6.

An offer of sale, in which the vendor, after describing the property, adds that the article is to be taken "with all faults," means all the faults which the thing described may have, consistent with its being the thing described. Smith v. Richards, 38 U. S. (13 Pet.) 26, 43, 10 L. Ed. 42; Shepherd v. Kain, 5 Barn. & Ald. 240. Thus in an advertisement for the sale of a ship, describing her as a copper-fastened vessel, adding that she was to be taken "with all faults," without any allowance for defect whatsoever, the words "with all faults" could not mean the fault of not being a copper-fastened vessel. Shepherd v. Kain, 5 Barn. & Ald. 240.

As used in a conveyance of a ship, providing that the vessel is to be taken by the purchaser "with all faults, without any allowance for any defect or error whatever," is to be construed as a declaration that the seller does not warrant the vessel in any respect. Per Pollock, C. B., in Taylor v. Bullen, 5 Exch. 779, 783.

WITH ALL POSSIBLE DISPATCH.

A charter party, providing that a cargo was to be delivered within the reach of the vessel's tackles "with all possible dispatch," means that the charterers should designate a berth for the loading and discharging of the cargo which was not occupied by any other vessel, and that they should furnish the cargo at the place of loading as fast as it might be possible for the vessel to receive it. Moody v. 500,000 Laths (U. S.) 2 Fed. 607.

A stipulation in a charter party that the vessel should proceed from Melbourne to Calcutta "with all possible dispatch" could only be construed to mean that she was to proceed directly from one place to the other. To that extent time was made of the essence of the contract. It could not include a permission to make any out of the way port. Lowber v. Banga, 69 U. S. (2 Wall.) 728, 738, 17 L. Ed. 768.

"With all possible dispatch," as used in a contract which provided that one party thereto should manufacture rifles for the other with all possible dispatch, meant within a reasonable time. Rowan v. Sharp's Rifle Mfg. Co., 33 Conn. 1, 23.

Where a charter party stipulated that the vessel should proceed with all possible dispatch to the port of loading, the phrase "with all possible dispatch" amounted to a warranty, and was not merely a representation that she would so proceed. Giuseppe v. Manufacturers' Export Co. (U. S.) 124 Fed. 663, 666.

WITH BENEFIT OF SURVIVORSHIP.

Where a bequest was made to several persons between them, share and share alike, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, with benefit of survivorship, it was held that the words "with benefit of survivorship" were not sufficient to change the tenancy in common conferred by the previous words to a joint tenancy. Haws v. Haws, 3 Atk. 523, 525.

WITH CARGO.

In a charter party describing the vessel as "now sailed or about to sail from B. with cargo to P.," the words "with cargo" implied that the vessel was loaded, since that phrase applied, not only to the words "about to sail," but to the word "sailed," and, if the vessel "had sailed with cargo," she must have had her cargo on board, and hence such representation was material, and its falsity authorized a repudiation of the charter party. The Whickham, 5 Sup. Ct. 346, 850, 113 U. S. 40, 28 L. Ed. 885.

WITH CHILD.

"Woman with child," as used in an indictment charging that the defendant administered certain medicine to the prosecutrix, she being then a woman with child, with intent to induce a miscarriage, was sufficient to meet the requirements of 3 Rev. St. p. 932, § 11, providing that every person who shall administer to any "pregnant woman" any medicine, with intent thereby to induce a miscarriage, shall be punished, since the words "woman with child" are in their ordinary sense synonymous with "pregnant woman." Eckhardt v. People, 83 N. Y. 462, 464, 33 Am. Rep. 462 (affirming 22 Hun, 525, 526).

WITH COSTS.

A judgment of reversal of a judgment against the appellant, "with costs," means all costs of both the trial and the appellate court. Schoonmaker v. Bonnie, 3 N. Y. Supp. 492, 493, 51 Hun, 34.

When the Court of Appeals grants a new trial, "with costs" to the plaintiff to abide the event, it is only the costs in the Court of Appeals which are referred to. Belt v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 53 N. Y. Supp. 363, 364, 33 App. Div. 239.

The allowance of costs in equity being discretionary, though defendants answered separately, a judgment in their favor, affirmed, "with costs," on an appeal in which they were all joined, authorizes but one bill of costs, in which should be included costs of all the defendants. Sweet v. City of Syracuse, 20 N. Y. Supp. 924, 925, 66 Hun, 629.

Where the New York appellate court reverses an order of the General Term confirming a report and award of commissioners, setting aside the report, "with costs," and directing a rehearing before new commissioners, the formula "with costs" in the final order, without more, meant only the costs of appeal to the appellate court; but where the judgment of the trial court is reversed and a new trial granted in either an equitable or legal proceeding "with costs to abide the event," all the costs incurred in either court up to that time are included. Franey v. Smith, 27 N. E. 559, 126 N. Y. 658.

WITH THE COURT.

A cause left "with the court" is one held for consideration and decision, such decision to be given at a subsequent term, and to relate back and be as of the time of the term at which the case was heard. Yatter v. Miller, 17 Atl. 850, 852, 61 Vt. 147.

WITH DESIGN TO EFFECT DEATH.

The words "with a design to effect death" do not necessarily imply murder, and are not inconsistent with manslaughter as known at the common law. At common law killing with design might be either murder or manslaughter. Malice was the distinguishing element. With malice, killing with design was murder, as killing in obedience to the dictates of a wicked and malignant heart; but manslaughter is not necessarily killing without a design to effect death. State v. Greenleaf, 54 Atl. 38, 41, 71 N. H. 606 (citing State v. Calligan, 17 N. H. 253).

WITH EACH OTHER.

"With each other," as used in Hill's Code, § 1873, providing for the punishment of any person who, being within the degrees of consanguinity within which marriages are prohibited, shall intermarry or commit adultery or fornication with each other, implies a concurrent act and the consent of both parties. If one of the parties is compelled by force to consent to the act, there can be no consent of such party, and the act cannot be committed "with each other." State v. Jarvis, 26 Pac. 302, 303, 20 Or. 437, 23 Am. St. Rep. 141.

WITH EFFECT.

See "Prosecute to or with Effect."

WITH EXCHANGE.

The words "with exchange" in a draft distrains defendant's negotiability. Nicely v. Winnebago Nat. Bank (Ind.) 47 N. E. 476, 477, 18 Ind. App. 30; Orner v. Sattley Mfg. Co., 47 N. E. 644, 645, 18 Ind. App. 122.

The business world has practically agreed that the words "with exchange" do not destroy the negotiability of paper containing them. Flagg v. Barnes County School Dist. No. 70, 58 N. W. 499, 500, 4 N. D. 30.

Under Comp. Laws Dak. 1887, tit. 15, c. 1, entitled "Negotiable Instruments," providing that a negotiable instrument must be made payable in money only, and without any condition not certain of fulfillment, and must not contain any other contract than a promise or request for the payment of a certain sum of money to order or bearer, an instrument by which the maker promises that at a certain time after date he will pay to the order of the payee therein named a specified sum, "with exchange and costs of collection," and with interest at a specified rate, is not a negotiable instrument. The phrase "with exchange and costs of collection" contains a condition other than that authorized by the statute, and also a condition not certain of fulfillment, as it is uncertain as to whether any such costs will be incurred. Second Nat. Bank v. Basuler (U. S.) 65 Fed. 58, 59, 12 C. C. A. 517.

"With exchange," as used in the following check: "Pay to the order of M. Cat-the Co. $22,000.00, with exchange"—cannot be construed to increase the amount called for by the check. The words are clearly surplusage. North Atchison Bank v. Garretson (U. S.) 51 Fed. 168, 171, 2 C. C. A. 145.

WITH FORCE AND ARMS.

See "Vi et Armis."

WITH HYPOTHESIS.

In the common parlance of the bench and bar a charge with hypothesis, "if the jury believe the evidence they will find" so and so, is also known as the general affirmative charge, though the phrase "with hypothesis" is often added in naming such an instruction. Dannelley v. State, 30 So. 452, 130 Ala. 132.

WITH INTENT.

"With intent to sell," as used in an indictment charging that defendant killed a calf less than four weeks old, with intent to sell the meat of said calf, is equivalent to the phrase "for the purpose of sale," as used in St. 1866, c. 253, § 1, making it an offense to kill a calf less than four weeks old for the purpose of sale. Commonwealth v. Raymond, 97 Mass. 567, 570.

"With intent to sell," as used in a statute which provides that no person shall own or keep any intoxicating liquors, with intent to sell the same in this state, are equivalent to the words "for the purpose of sale"; and an indictment charging that the defendant had in his possession liquors "for the purpose of sale" is a sufficient compliance with the statute. State v. Mohr, 5 N. W. 183, 184, 53 Iowa, 261.

WITH INTEREST.

A contract whereby one agrees to pay money generally, with interest, signifies interest at the statutory rate. O'Brien v. Young, 95 N. Y. 428, 430, 47 Am. Rep. 64; Hackettstown Nat. Bank v. Rea (N. Y.) 64 Barb. 176, 178.

A note promising to pay a certain amount, "with interest" at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, implies a promise to pay interest from the date of the note. Smith v. Goodlett, 21 S. W. 106-108, 92 Tenn. (8 Pickle) 230.

A judgment which gave to a party a certain sum of money, "with interest at 5 per cent. from" May 19, 1877, is equivalent to the phrase, "with interest at 5 per cent. per annum from" May 19, 1877. Brady v. His Creditors, 9 South. 59, 62, 43 La. Ann. 168.

Testator's will recited that he gave and bequeathed to a daughter $1,000 to be paid on her marriage or when she arrived at age, "with interest after" at her option, meant that interest should be reckoned on the sum named after the occurrence of one of the two events named as the time when the principal sum was to be paid. Bradford Academy v. Grover, 55 Vt. 462, 463.

WITH LEAVE.

The words "with leave," etc., following the absque hoc in a plea of covenants performed absque hoc, imply always an equitable defense such as arises out of special circumstances, which the defendant thereby intimates that he means to offer in evidence. Farmers' & Mechanics' Turnpike Co. v. McCullough, 25 Pa. (1 Casey) 803, 804.

WITH LIKE EFFECT.

See "Effect."

WITH QUICK CHILD.

"With quick child" is when the child has quickened. Reg. v. Wycherley, 8 Car. & P. 262, 264.

The phrase "with quick child" is synonymous with "quick with child," both importing that the child has quickened in the womb. State v. Cooper, 22 N. J. Law (2 Zab.) 52, 57, 51 Am. Dec. 248.

WITH RECOURSE.

The words "with recourse," indorsed on the assignment of a note, do not make the assignor a guarantor of payment, and create no liability other or different from that of an assignor. Redden v. First Nat. Bank, 71 Pac. 578, 66 Kan. 747.

WITH STRONG HAND.

The term "strong hand" is thus explained by Ryder, C. R., in Rex v. Bathurst, Sayer, 225: "The words 'manu forti' are understood to import something criminal in its nature, something more than is meant by the words 'vi et armis.' And Rolle had previously said (Style, 135) that these words distinguished 'a forcible entry with strong hand' from an ordinary trespass by entering into another's land, which is not so violent as a forcible entry is supposed to be." Butts v. Voorhees, 18 N. J. Law (1 J. S. Green) 13, 18, 22 Am. Dec. 489.

"With a strong hand," as used in an indictment charging that persons entered into a house belonging to the prosecutor, and "with a strong hand violently expelled him," means something more than common trespass. The statute uses the words "with a strong hand" as describing that degree of force which makes an entry or distrainer of lands criminal, and entitles the prosecutor under the circumstances to restitution and damages; and in an indictment under the statute it is sufficient to state that the defendants entered "with a strong hand"; it being considered that those words imply that the entry was accompanied with that terror and violence that constitutes the offense. Rex v. Wilson, 8 Term R. 357, 361. See, also, Commonwealth v. Brown, 21 Atl. 17, 138 Pa. 447.

The offense of "forcible trespass" must be done "with a strong hand," or, as otherwise expressed, "manu forti," which it is held implies greater force than is expressed by the phrase "vi et armis." Consequently it is held that a charge that the trespass was committed vi et armis is insufficient to charge a forcible trespass. State v. Ray, 32 N. C. 89, 40.

WITHDRAW.

The term "withdraw," in a corporation charter authorizing the state to withdraw privileges and franchises, means to take away what has been enjoyed; to take from. Central R. & Banking Co. v. State, 54 Ga. 401, 409.

A statute chartering a water company to supply a city with water for domestic purposes and extinguishment of fires authorized it to take water from a designated pond, and prohibited any other persons to cut below the pipes of the company, or withdraw the water, or obstruct the works. Held, that the words "withdraw the water or obstruct the works," in the connection in which they were used, should be construed to refer to the particular clause, the subject-matter in question, and that the Legislature was not deprived of the right to grant the use of water in the pond not required for the purposes named. Rockland Water Co. v. Camden Water Co., 15 Atl. 785, 789, 80 Me. 544, 1 L. R. A. 388.

Where dividends received by a stockholder impair or reduce the capital stock of the corporation, the capital stock is "withdrawn," within Comp. Laws 1897, § 7057, providing that, if the capital stock of a corporation is withdrawn and refunded to the stockholders before payment of all corporate debts for which the stock is liable, the stockholder shall be liable to corporate creditors to the amount so refunded. American Steel & Wire Co. v. Eddy, 89 N. W. 952, 130 Mich. 268.

The word "withdrawn," written in the margin of an entry book, does not prove the entry to have been withdrawn. Mills' Heirs v. Lee, 22 Ky. (6 T. B. Mon.) 91, 93, 94, 17 Am. Dec. 118.

Withhold synonymous.

Laws Wis. 1885, c. 222, authorizes the commissioners of public lands to withdraw any lands from sale, and provides that, when reoffered, the lands so withdrawn shall first be offered at public sale. Const. art. 10, § 8, empowers the commissioners to withhold any of the public lands from sale, and Rev. St. § 207, permits them at their discretion to withhold such portions as they might deem best, either before or after advertisement of sale. Held, that while etymologically there is a difference in the meaning of the words "withhold" and "withdraw," yet since, in the construction of statutes, words are taken in their more ordinary and popular meaning, without too great refinement or research into their etymology as applied to the subject-matter of these statutes, it would make little difference in the common apprehension whether it should be said "that the commissioners may withhold the land from sale," or "the commissioners may withdraw the lands from sale," and therefore the two words should be construed as synonymous. State v. Cunningham, 59 N. W. 503, 504, 88 Wis. 81.

WITHDRAWAL.

See "Voluntary Withdrawal."

The withdrawal of a certificate or other evidence of right of land contemplated by certain Texas land acts, providing that such certificate and evidence should be returned with the survey and not withdrawn, etc., is the "withdrawal" by the act of the owner or some one for him, and does not include a theft or unauthorized withdrawal of a certificate. Snider v. Methvin, 60 Tex. 487, 495.

WITHDRAWING A JUROR.

"Withdrawing a juror" describes a fiction to which a court may resort when it appears that, owing to some accident or surprise, defect of proof, unexpected and difficult question of law, or like reason, a trial cannot proceed without injustice to a party. The withdrawal of a juror is always by an agreement of the parties, and is frequently done at the recommendation of the judge, when it is doubtful whether an action will lie. Such procedure is not necessary under statutes making complete provision for stopping a case by dismissal without prejudice or continuance for cause shown. Wabash R. Co. v. McCormick, 55 N. E. 251, 222, 23 Ind. App. 258.

WITHDRAWING STOCKHOLDERS.

The term "withdrawing stockholders," as used in the by-laws of a building association, providing that no money can be drawn from the loan fund for any other purpose, except for making loans on security, and paying amounts due withdrawing stockholders, means not only those who may withdraw before the maturity of their certificates, but also those who shall withdraw at that time or afterwards. Vought v. Eastern Building & Loan Ass'n of Syracuse, 65 N. E. 496, 497, 172 N. Y. 508, 92 Am. St. Rep. 761.

WITHERITE.

See "Carbonate of Baryta."

WITHHOLD.

"Withhold," as used in an indictment charging that defendant did, with intent to deprive the true owner of certain property and to appropriate same to himself, willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously appropriate, secrete, withhold, take, steal, and carry it away, means to retain, to keep back. People v. Lammerts, 58 N. E. 22, 24, 164 N. Y. 137.

As used in Act June 17, 1878, c. 259, § 1, 20 Stat. 140, Supp. Rev. St. p. 186 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2734], providing that the Postmaster General, if satisfied that a postmaster has made default in returns of the business, may withhold commission on such returns, "withhold" implies a temporary suspension, rather than a total and final denial or rejection of the same. United States v. Dumas, 13 Sup. Ct. 872, 873, 149 U. S. 278, 37 L. Ed. 734.

The term "withheld salary," as used in Pol. Code, § 1699, providing that any teacher whose salary is withheld may apply to the Superintendent of Public Instruction, etc., means a withholding by the board of school trustees of the original warrant in favor of the teacher. The first portion of the section provides simply that any teacher whose salary is withheld may appeal to the superintendent. The next portion provides for the investigation of the facts, and then that the superintendent shall pronounce a final judgment, and that the county superintendent, if the judgment is in favor of the teacher, shall, if the trustee refuse to issue an order for said withheld salary, issue his requisition in favor of said teacher. This last portion of the section clearly informs us that the "withheld salary" results from, and consists of, the refusal of the trustees to issue their warrant in the teacher's favor. Williams v. Bag-nelle, 72 Pac. 406, 409, 138 Cal. 699.

Withdraw synonymous.

See "Withdraw."

WITHIN.

Where a statute prohibited the erection of a wooden building, or of any addition to a wooden building, having a chimney within it, the words "having a chimney within it" are to be strictly construed; and hence, where a wooden addition was put up which had a chimney without it, the case was not within the statute. Dagget v. State, 4 Conn. 60, 64, 10 Am. Dec. 100.

The phrase "within three months before the commencement of the imprisonment," strictly construed, excludes the time of imprisonment; but in an act relating to assignments by debtors, made before imprisonment, it will be taken to include it, and to mean a "period commencing three months before the imprisonment." Becke v. Smith, 2 Mees. & W. 191, 198.

An agreement that certain work was to be done "within a fortnight" before Michaelmas means during the period which elapses in the fortnight immediately before Michaelmas, and not between the time the expression was used and the commencement of that fortnight. Thomas v. Lambert, 3 Adol. & El. 61.

Where a mortgage provided that, if default should be made in the payment of interest, the mortgagor should, "within six months after such default shall have accrued, the same default still continuing," give possession, and that, if such default was made and continued, the trustee might take possession of the property, the phrase "within six months" meant a default in payment of interest which had continued for six months. Union Trust Co. v. Chattanooga Electric Ry. Co., 47 S. W. 422, 101 Tenn. 297.

Under the statute disqualifying a juror to serve when he is related to the defendant or to the prosecutor within the sixth degree, computing by the civil law, a juror related in the sixth degree to the prosecutor is incompetent, as the term "within," as a limit of time, or space, or degree, embraces the last day or degree, or entire distance, covered by the limit. Hamilton v. State, 47 S. W. 695, 696, 101 Tenn. 417.

As abutting on.

St. 11 Geo. III, c. 15, enacted for the better paving of High street, and authorizing commissioners for the defraying of expenses to rate all and every person or persons who shall inhabit, hold, occupy, possess, or enjoy any house, shop, etc., "within the said street," should be construed to mean abutting on said street; "it being clear," says Alderson, B., "that no house is, strictly speaking, 'within the street.' We must, therefore, consider the intention of the Legislature in using these words; the intention being to impose a rate on all persons whose access to their houses was improved by the paving and repairing of the street. Therefore the words 'every inhabitant within the street' meant every person whose sole access to his premises is from the street." Baddeley v. Gingell, 1 Exch. 319, 334.

As any time before.

As used in a statute requiring that the summons in a proceeding under the landlord and tenant act may be returned "within four days," the phrase quoted means it is returnable at the discretion of the justice at any time not more than four days, and does not mean "not less than four days." Hower v. Krider (Pa.) 15 Serg. & R. 43.

St. 1855, c. 231, § 2, declares that a lien on a vessel shall be dissolved unless a certificate is filed within four days from the time such ship or vessel shall depart from the port at which she was when the debt was contracted. Held, that the provision "within four days from the time," etc., was a limit beyond which the certificate could not be filed, but could not be construed as a limitation within which the certificate must be filed, so that it could not legally be filed before the departure of the vessel; and hence the certificate might legally be filed at any time before the expiration of the four days, and whether it is filed before or after the beginning of the four days is immaterial. Young v. The Orpheus, 119 Mass. 179, 185.

"Within," as used in Rev. St. Ill. c. 82, § 81, declaring that a subcontractor's notice shall be served within 40 days from the completion of the subcontract, or within 40 days after payment should have been made, is used as a preposition, and in the sense that the service of notice is to be inside the limit or compass of 40 days after the completion of the contract or the maturity of payments thereunder, and not later, and does not mean that the notice shall not be served until the subcontract has been completed or the payment fallen due. Carey-Lombard Lumber Co. v. Fullenwider, 37 N. E. 899, 900, 150 Ill. 629.

As used in a city ordinance providing that a contractor must give written notice of any balance due on his contract "at any time within 10 days after the completion" of the contract, these words do not mean that the notice cannot be given before the completion of the contract, and that the contractor is limited to the 10 days after the completion, since it might be difficult for him to know when the contract was completed, but mean that notice must be given before the expiration of the 10 days after the completion. Merchants' & Traders' Nat. Bank v. City of New York, 97 N. Y. 355, 361.

The word "within," as used in Code, § 510, requiring a writ to be returned within 60 days from its date, indicates that the writ need not be deferred until the sixtieth day, and due diligence on the part of the officers requires the return to be made promptly. Nebraska Loan & Trust Co. v. Hamer, 58 N. W. 695, 698, 40 Neb. 281. See, also, Guerney v. Moore, 32 S. W. 1132, 1136, 131 Mo. 650.

"It has always been the opinion of the profession that, while a mortgage payable within a certain time may at the option of the mortgagor be paid off at any time beyond that, a debt payable in a certain time cannot be extinguished without the consent of the creditor before the expiration of the time specified." In re Hofmann (Pa.) 14 Wkly. Notes Cas. 563, 565.

The use of the word "within," in a bond by which the obligor is entitled to a reconveyance of land if he first pay a sum of money, with interest, within a certain time, authorizes the payment of the money and a reconveyance of the land at any time within the year. Whether a party who has executed a promissory note for the payment of a sum of money, with interest, within a year, may tender the money before the expiration of the year, is questionable; but it seems that upon a contract for the delivery of specific articles within a certain period performance may be tendered before the expiration of the time. Buffum v. Buffum, 11 N. H. 451, 456.

Where a party purchases a tract of land at a price named, and pays for the same in a city lot, stipulating that said lot shall sell within one year at that price and over, and in case of its not selling for that amount he will make up the deficiency in cash, etc., the term "within" was held to include any time during the subsequent year, so that the other party is at liberty to sell the lot at a public auction at any time during the year, and if it does not bring the price stipulated the party will be liable for the deficiency. Hakes v. Peck, *40 N. Y. (1 Keyes) 505, 508.

As at or before.

"Within a certain period," "on or before a day named," and "at or before a certain day" are equivalent terms, and the rules of construction apply to each alike. Leader v. Plante, 50 Atl. 54, 95 Me. 339, 85 Am. St. Rep. 415.

As at end of.

A direction to return an execution issued by a justice of the peace "within 60 days" is equivalent to "in 60 days," or "at the end of 60 days." Adams v. Cummiskey, 58 Mass. (4 Cush.) 420, 423.

As at least.

Rev. St. § 2257, providing for the admission of recorded instruments without other or further proof of their execution, unless the opposite party shall, "within three days before the trial" of the case, file an affidavit stating that he believes such instrument of writing to be forged, means at least three days before the trial of the case. Hammond v. Connolly, 63 Tex. 62, 64.

As excluding first day.

The statutory requirement that a town liable for the support of a pauper shall cause him to be removed to the town of his settlement "within 30 days" from the time of receiving notice from another town that support has been furnished, etc., is satisfied by a removal on the 8th of April, in pursuance of a notice received on the 9th of March. "Whether the removal was in time turns on the controverted question whether the day on which the notice was received is to be counted as one of the 30. We consider it now well settled as a general rule that when an act is to be done within a given number of days from the date, or day of the date, of act done, the day of the date is excluded. Otherwise an act to be done in one day must be done on the same day, and as there is no fraction of a day such stipulation must create an obligation to do it instantaneously." Per Shaw, C. J., in Inhabitants of Seekonk v. Inhabitants of Rehoboth, 62 Mass. (8 Oush.) 371, 373. See, also, Barcroft v. Roberts, 92 N. C. 249; Miller v. Henshaw, 34 Ky. (4 Dana) 325, 327.

In computing the 20 days "within" which a writ of error is to be taken out on an award of property, either the day of filing the award or the day of filing the writ is excluded. Frantz v. Kaser (Pa.) 3 Serg. & R. 395.

Where process is made returnable "within" 30 days, the day on which the process is issued is to be excluded in computing the time. McDonald v. Vnette, 17 N. W. 319, 320, 321, 58 Wis. 619.

"Within five days," as used in Laws 1884, p. 288, § 718, providing that, if the defendant in an action before a justice of the peace be served with summons in the precinct in which the action is brought, he must appear and answer the complaint within five days, does not include the first day; that is, the day of the issue of the summons. Ducheneau v. House, 10 Pac. 427, 4 Utah, 363.

Under Gen. St. c. 123, § 57, requiring a copy of the deed and the return of the attachment of bulky and personal property to be deposited in the town clerk's office at any time "within three days" thereafter, the day of the attachment is to be excluded in the computation of the time. Bemis v. Leonard, 118 Mass. 502, 509, 19 Am. Rep. 470.

In computing the time within which suit against a boat for stores furnished should be commenced, the day on which the delivery was completed should be excluded. The Mary Blane v. Beehler, 12 Mo. 477.

Where a contract required a conditional payment of a sum of money at any time

"within five years," and provided that, if the condition did not happen "within five years from its date," then payment should be made absolutely, in computing the time, the day on which the contract was executed must be excluded. Shelton v. Gillett, 79 Mich. 173, 44 N. W. 428.

"Within two years after," as used in Rev. St. art. 3203, providing that certain actions "shall be commenced and prosecuted within two years after the cause of action shall have accrued, and not afterwards," should be construed to exclude the date on which the cause of action accrues; and hence, where a cause of action accrued on July 3, 1883, a suit brought on July 3, 1885, was not barred by the statute. Smith v. Dickey, 11 S. W. 1049, 1050, 74 Tex. 61.

Rev. St. § 3203, providing that certain actions may be commenced within two years after the cause of action shall have accrued, and not after, is to be construed as excluding the day on which the cause of action accrued. Smith v. Dickey, 11 S. W. 1049, 1050, 74 Tex. 61.

Laws 41st Sess. c. 94, § 17, providing that an appeal shall be taken from a judgment rendered in a justice's court "within" four days from the date of the rendition of the judgment, should be construed so as to exclude the first day—that is, the day on which the judgment was rendered; so that an appeal taken on the 16th of the month from a judgment rendered on the 12th was taken within four days within the meaning of the statute. Ex parte Dean (N. Y.) 2 Cow. 605, 606, 14 Am. Dec. 521.

Act March 3, 1873, § 1, providing that an appeal shall be taken "within six months" after the date of the rendition of a decree, means that the time within which the appeal is to be taken is to be computed by excluding the first day and then beginning the full number of days or months to be computed. Where a decree was rendered February 21st, and transcript filed on August 22d, the transcript was filed one day too late. Glore v. Hare, 4 Neb. 131, 132.

"Within 10 days," as used in Laws 1854, p. 611, c. 282, § 7, rendering a railroad liable for a penalty for failing to ring a bell or sound a whistle on its locomotive before crossing highways, to be collected in an action to be brought within 10 days thereafter, construed to include 10 days in addition to the day on which the act giving rise to the penalty occurred. People v. New York Cent. R. Co. (N. Y.) 28 Barb. 284, 286.

As excluding first and last days.

Where a judgment was rendered on the 27th day of April, 1858, notice of appeal served on the 28th day of April, 1859, was not "within one year" from the date of the judgment. State v. Jones, 11 Iowa, 11, 15.

Notice of filing exceptions was insufficient, as not given "within 20 days," where the verdict was rendered June 5th, exceptions filed June 25th, and notice thereof given June 26th. De Bang v. Scripture, 46 N. E. 406, 168 Mass. 91.

As for the space of.

A notice to a sheriff of a claim against him for damages for "failure to return said execution within one month from the return day expressed in said execution" is equivalent to the phrase "for the space of one month after the return day thereof" as used in a statute making a sheriff liable for the failure to return the execution for the space of one month after the return day thereof. Gore v. Hedges, 23 Ky. (7 T. B. Mon.) 520, 521.

As from date.

A written guaranty providing that the guarantor will be responsible for the hotel bill of a certain person and will see it paid "within 20 days" means within 20 days from the date of such undertaking. Patterson v. Gage, 16 Pac. 560, 562, 11 Colo. 50.

As used in Rev. St. § 2931, providing that on the entry of any merchandise the decision of the collector as to the rate and amount of duties to be paid shall be final and conclusive, unless the importer shall "within 10 days after the ascertainment and liquidation of the duties" by the proper officers, as well in cases of merchandise entered in bond as for consumption, give notice in writing to the collector if dissatisfied with his decision, cannot be construed as meaning that the ascertainment and liquidation of the duties should have been made at the date of the last final withdrawal of the merchandise covered by the bond, but the limitation of the right to complain or to appeal commences with the date of the liquidation, whenever that is made. Merritt v. Cameron, 11 Sup. Ct. 174, 176, 137 U. S. 542, 34 L. Ed. 772.

As in all parts of.

An averment by plaintiff in an action for not setting out tithes of hay, reciting that there was a certain immemorial custom as to setting out the tithe "within the parish," and the limit, bounds, and titheable places thereof, was satisfied by evidence that the custom prevailed in all parts of the parish where tithes of hay were set out, and that proof of a modus for hay in one township made no difference. Pigott v. Bayley, 6 Barn. & C. 16, 17.

As including first day.

St. 20 Geo. II, c. 37, § 2, enacting that no sheriff shall be liable to be called on to make a return of any writ, unless required to do so "within six months" after the expiration of his office, would include the day on which he went out of office in reckoning the time. Rex v. Adderley, 2 Doug. 463, 465.

"Within 20 days after," as used in the arbitration act, which provides that an appeal shall be entered within 20 days after entry of the award of arbitrators on the docket, includes the day on which the entry of award is made. Boutlier v. Johnson (Pa.) 2 Browne, 17, 19.

Gen. St. c. 44, art. 2, § 2, authorizing the setting aside of certain mortgages and transfers of property made in fraud of creditors, where the action therefor is brought "within six months" after the instrument is placed on record, means six months computed by including the day on which the instrument is placed on record. Lebus v. Wayne-Ratterman Co., 21 S. W. 652, 14 Ky. Law Rep. 794.

As including last day.

Within a certain time embraces the last day of the time limited. Union Trust Co. v. Chattanooga Electric Ry. Co., 47 S. W. 422, 101 Tenn. 297; Miller v. Henshaw, 34 Ky. (4 Dana) 325, 327.

"Within," as used in a guaranty of payment "within one year from the date hereof," includes the last day of the specified period. Fifth Nat. Bank v. Woolsey, 48 N. Y. Supp. 148, 150, 21 Misc. Rep. 757.

Rev. Code, p. 90, placing in the fifth class all claims against estates which shall be legally exhibited within one year after the granting of the first letters on the estate, will be construed to include the entire calendar day of the first succeeding anniversary, and hence a claim filed any time during said period is a claim of the fifth class. Kimm v. Osgood's Adm'r, 19 Mo. 60, 61.

As lower.

A contract providing that new tiles for fireplace fronts and hearths should be estimated at a certain sum each, the owner to have the privilege of selecting all these articles "within the above figures," means at lower figures. Harrison v. Reeves, 28 Atl. 653, 654, 160 Pa. 134.

As not beyond.

Code, § 374, requiring service of notice to be within five days if the person to be served reside "within" 50 miles of the place where the hearing is to be had, means not exceeding, not beyond. Hovey v. McCrea (N. Y.) 4 How. Prac. 31, 32.

"Within," as used in Act Dec. 12, 1888, prohibiting the selling of intoxicating liquors within three miles of a town, meant in the limits or compass of, not beyond, and prohibited the sale within the corporate limits, as well as within a three-mile radius outside of such limits. Jennings v. Russell, 9 South. 421, 423, 92 Ala. 608.

As not later than.

"Within," as used in a statute requiring claims against an insolvent estate to be filed within a certain time, means that the claim can be filed within a time not "beyond the time fixed." The word "within," as defined by Webster, is "in the limit or compass of; not beyond; used to refer to place or time; not later than." Lever v. Read, 54 Ala. 529, 531; Guerney v. Moore, 32 S. W. 1132, 1136, 131 Mo. 650.

When time is spoken of, any act is "within" the time named that does not extend beyond it. Sanborn v. Fireman's Ins. Co., 82 Mass. (16 Gray) 448, 455, 77 Am. Dec. 419.

Act 1864, providing that on the entry of any merchandise the decision of the collector as to the rate and amount of duties shall be final and conclusive, unless the importer shall, "within 10 days after the ascertainment and liquidation of the duties," give notice in writing to the collector if dissatisfied with his decision, should be construed as fixing only the terminus ad quem, the limit beyond which the notice shall not be given, and not to fix the final ascertainment and liquidation of the duties as the terminus a quo, or the first point of time at which the notice may be given. Davies v. Miller, 9 Sup. Ct. 560, 562, 130 U. S. 284, 32 L. Ed. 932.

Act March 3, 1857, c. 98, § 5, providing that on the entry of any merchandise the decision of the collector of customs at the port of importation as to its liability to duty or exemption therefrom should be final and conclusive, unless the owner or agent should "within 10 days after such entry" give notice to the collector in writing of his dissatisfaction with such decision, should be construed as fixing a terminus ad quem, and not a terminus a quo, or, in other words, as limiting the time after which a protest should not be made, but permitting it to be made as early as it could have been made under the previous law. Davies v. Miller, 9 Sup. Ct. 560, 561, 130 U. S. 284, 32 L. Ed. 932.

"Within six months after probate of the will," as used in St. 1861, c. 164, which allows a waiver by a widow of the provisions for her benefit in her husband's will to be made at any time "within six months after the probate of the will," should be construed to fix a time when her right of election shall cease, and not to mean that a widow was not entitled to make such waiver before the probate of the will. Atherton v. Corliss, 101 Mass. 40, 44.

The primary meaning of the word "within" is "in the inner part or side of." Worcester gives as examples these: "Go shut thyself within thy house. Ezek. iii, 24." "That which is within the cups and platters. Matt. xxiii, 26." But such meaning is not applicable to the word as used in a statute requiring written exceptions to be filed within 10 days, but the word is used in the sense of "beyond." Chicago, S. F. & C. Ry. Co. v. Eubanks, 32 Mo. App. 184, 189.

St. 1897, p. 201, requires every municipal contractor to file a bond providing that, if he fails to pay for the materials furnished or work done, then the sureties will pay, if the materialman or laborer shall, "within" 30 days from the time such work is completed, file with the council a verified statement that he has not been paid. It is held that the term "within" in this statute does not fix the beginning and the end of the time within which the claim must be filed, but that it merely states a limit beyond which a claim cannot be filed, but does not preclude the filing of the claim before the completion of the work. French v. Powell, 68 Pac. 92, 93, 135 Cal. 636.

Sundays excluded.

"Within six days," as used in a statute providing that appeals from justice court must be taken within six days from the rendition of judgment, is to be construed as requiring Sunday to be included in the computation of the six days. Patchin v. Bonsack, 52 Mo. 431, 434.

Sundays are excluded in computing the periods of 10 days under Const. Ill. art. 5, § 16, providing that any bill which shall not be returned by the Governor "within 10 days (Sundays excluded) after it shall have been presented" to him shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it, etc. People v. Rose, 47 N. E. 547, 548, 167 Ill. 147.

Where an act is to be done within a certain time, and the last day falls on Sunday, Sunday must be excluded, and the act done on Saturday, or it will be insufficient. Patrick v. Faulke, 45 Mo. 312, 314; Barcroft v. Roberts, 92 N. C. 249.

29th of February excluded.

Rev. St. 1843, p. 889, requiring appeals to be taken "within 30 days" after rendition of judgment, is complied with by an appeal taken March 25, from a judgment rendered February 24, 1852, since the 28th and 29th days of February are accounted but as one day. Swift v. Tousey, 5 Ind. 196, 197.

As wholly within.

As used in Blackwall Railway Act (St. 6 & 7 William IV, c. 123) § 51, providing that, if any dwelling house "situate within 50 feet of the railway" should be deteriorated by it, the owner should require the company to purchase the same, applies to a house of which a very large proportion is within 50 feet, though the entire house is not within the required distance. Walker v. London & Blackwall Ry. Co., 3 Adol. & E. (N. S.) 744, 752.

Act March 1, 1799, providing that, after a certain bridge was completed, no person should cross the lake "within three miles" of the bridge without paying the toll established by law, does not include a crossing where the person went on the ice six miles from the bridge, though he left the lake within three miles of it. To constitute a crossing of the lake "within three miles," within the meaning of the act, the place of entering on as well as leaving the lake on ice must be within three miles of the bridge, unless it appears that it was entered on or left at a greater distance for the manifest purpose of evading the act. Cayuga Bridge Co. v. Stout (N. Y.) 7 Cow. 33, 34.

WITHIN THE BOUNDS.

A statute provided that the condition of a bond to keep within the prison limits should be "that he will keep within said bounds." A bond drawn thereunder was conditioned "that he will keep within the bounds of the prison, and not walk off or depart the same." Held, that the condition of the bond added nothing to the condition required by statute, since, if he kept within the bounds of the prison, he could not walk off or depart the same. Camp v. Allen, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 1, 17.

"Within the bounds of the hemlock timber," as used in a receipt reciting that the signer had sold to a certain person and received payment in full for the hemlock, bark, timber, and wood on one acre, more or less, "within the bounds of the hemlock timber," are descriptive of the locality from which the acre should be selected, and should not be construed as meaning all the timber within the bounds of the hemlock timber. Smith v. Rock, 9 Atl. 551, 552, 59 Vt. 232.

WITHIN THE CITY.

A franchise of a gas company, authorizing it to supply heat to the public from gas within the city of P., is to be construed to mean any kind of gas within the city, and does not authorize the corporation to go outside the city to get its gas. Emerson v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 15 Pittsb. Leg. J. (N. S.) 273, 275.

Ferry boats of a corporation incorporated in one state, carrying passengers, etc., forward and back across a river to a city situated in another state, are not taxable under a law taxing boats "within the city," where the relation of the boats was simply that of contact with the city at one of the termini of the voyage. City of St. Louis v. Wiggins Ferry Co., 78 U. S. (11 Wall.) 423, 431, 20 L. Ed. 192.

The expression "criminal cases within the city," in Laws 1882, c. 324, § 57, providing that justices of the peace elected in such city shall not have jurisdiction to hear complaints or conduct examinations or trials in criminal cases within the city, means criminal offenses that are committed within the city, and has no application to such criminal offenses as are committed outside of the city limits, but within the county, even though they are prosecuted and tried before a justice of the peace residing, elected, and having office within the city. State v. Bilder, 62 N. W. 415, 416, 90 Wis. 10.

WITHIN HIS VIEW.

The statement that a sheriff must have the goods "within his view or under his control," in order to validate a levy thereon, means such actual possession of the goods or dominion over them as would make him a trespasser in the absence of the writ. A mere view of the goods, without control, is not sufficient; and hence, where a sheriff went to the defendant's factory and attempted to levy on defendant's goods, which were locked up within the warehouse, and, without effecting an entrance, made an incomplete inventory of them by partial view through a small opening in a window, the attempt to make a levy was a failure, and created no levy on the goods. Nelson v. Van Gazelle Mfg. Co., 17 Atl. 943, 944, 45 N. J. Eq. (18 Stew.) 594.

WITHIN THE INCLOSURE.

Where plaintiff's horse, being in the street, was destroying the fence surrounding defendant's inclosure, he was liable to be distrained as doing damage "within the inclosure," under the provisions of Rev. St. c. 51, § 1. Pettit v. May, 34 Wis. 666, 673.

WITHIN THE JURISDICTION.

The phrase "within the jurisdiction of this state," as used in Rev. St. Ind. 1894, § 8410, providing that all property within the jurisdiction of this state, not expressly exempted, shall be subject to taxation, includes property in the hands of a receiver of a mutual benefit and assessment society organized under the laws of the state and having its principal office in the city of Indianapolis, but doing business without as well as within the limits of the state. Schmidt v. Failey, 47 N. E. 326, 327, 148 Ind. 150, 37 L. R. A. 442.

WITHIN LEASE.

An assignment, indorsed on a lease, that for value received the lessor did hereby assign, transfer, and set over the "within lease," etc., cannot be construed to convey the fee of the house and lot leased. If anything was intended more than the instrument, it is at least to be the lessor's interest in the premises during the term. But until the term was ended the lessee could not be called on to surrender the possession of the premises in good repair. All the interest and authority of the lessor during the term was to collect the rent. Demarest v. Willard (N. Y.) 8 Cow. 206, 210.

WITHIN THE LIMITS.

A tract of ground within the exterior boundaries of a city is not necessarily "within the limits" of the city, so as to become a part thereof; so that as to an addition to a city, the exterior boundaries of which were marked "Reserved," such portion did not become a part of the city by reason of the acceptance of such addition. Farlin v. Hill, 69 Pac. 237, 239, 27 Mont. 27.

WITHIN NOTE.

An indorsement on a note of a promise to pay the amount of the "within note" is a valid obligation to pay to the payee therein named, although it does not name the person to whom payment is to be made. Bullen v. McGillicuddy, 32 Ky. (2 Dana) 90, 91.

WITHIN POLICY.

Where a policy of insurance, in which fire and ice are accepted perils, is renewed by an indorsement on the policy in which it is stated that it is understood that the assured is not entitled to claim for any loss or damage arising from ice, a second renewal by indorsement, in which it is stated that "the within policy is renewed," applies to the original policy, and not to the said policy as renewed by the first indorsement. Honnick v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 22 Mo. 82, 85.

WITHIN THE POWER OF.

"Within the power of," as used in 1 Rev. Code 1855, p. 365, declaring that when it shall be shown to the court by the oath or affidavit of the party wishing to use a copy, or of any one knowing the fact, that such instrument is lost or not "within the power" of the party wishing to use the same, the record thereof or the transcript of such record may be used without further proof, means within the possession of the party wishing to use a copy; that is, the possession of the party, his agent, servant, or bailee, or other person under his control. Barton v. Murrain, 27 Mo. 235, 238, 72 Am. Dec. 259.

WITHIN A RADIUS.

A contract for the sale of a business bound the seller not to practice "within a radius of ten miles of L." Held, that such words, quoted as used in the contract, included a territory within a circle the center of which was the center of the village of L.

and the circumference 10 miles distant from such point in every direction. Cook v. Johnson, 47 Conn. 175, 177, 38 Am. Rep. 64.

WITHIN THE STATE.

See "Property Within the State."

Failure to pay a loss under a contract of a foreign insurance company with a non-resident, where the loss is payable in the state, creates a cause of action "within the state," under Code, § 423, giving circuit courts jurisdiction of actions by nonresidents against foreign corporations. Carpenter v. American Acc. Co., 2 S. E. 500, 501, 46 S. C. 541.

The phrase "within the state," in Code Civ. Proc. § 432, subd. 3, providing that, in the absence of the principal officers of a foreign corporation, service may be made on a managing agent within the state, cannot be construed to only mean performing the function of their office within the state, but includes any temporary presence within the state. Porter v. Sewell Safety Car Heating Co., 7 N. Y. Supp. 166, 167.

Commerce or transportation.

Rev. St. 1874, § 86, providing that, if any railroad corporation in the state shall charge, collect, demand, or receive more than a fair and reasonable rate of toll or compensation for transportation of passengers or freight, or for the use and transportation of any railroad car upon its track, or any of the branches thereof, or upon any railroad "within this state," it shall be deemed guilty of extortion and dealt with in a certain manner, refers to the roads which a railroad company may operate in the state. The use of the words "within this state" cannot by any fair construction be held to limit the unjust discrimination to charges for the transportation of freight wholly within the state. People v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 104 Ill. 476, 484.

A railroad earnings tax on all sums upon or charged for the business done "within the state" means "business begun and ended in the state, and includes only intrastate, and not interstate, commerce. Interstate commerce is not business done within the state. It is business done between two or more states." Pacific Exp. Co. v. Selbert, 44 Fed. 310, 316. The interjection of intensifying words, such as "wholly" and "entirely," would not alter the phrase or change its legal effect, since "within the state" means done entirely within the boundaries of the state. Western Union Tel. Co. v. City of Fremont, 58 N. W. 415, 423, 39 Neb. 692, 26 L. R. A. 698.

The words "within the state," in a statute authorizing the taxation of the gross earnings of a railroad company in the use of certain cars between points within the state, "are not apt words to describe the crossing of the state from an adjoining state on one side into an adjoining state on another side; nor does it aptly describe the act of going from a point within the state to a point outside thereof, nor from a point outside to a point within the state." State v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 23 N. W. 871, 64 Wis. 89.

Personal property.

The statute providing for the taxation of personal estate within this state was not intended to subject to taxation personal security actually in another state, held, managed, or controlled and under the protection of the laws of that state, and there subject to taxation and in the hands of agents. It cannot be supposed that the Legislature intended that our citizens should be subject to taxation here and in another state, also, upon the same property, or that it would tax, in the hands of agents here, securities belonging to nonresident owners, while it denied the right of other states to tax the securities in the hands of agents there. People v. Smith, 88 N. Y. 576, 582.

The Court of Appeals, in People v. Commissioners of Taxes, 23 N. Y. 224, 225, in construing 1 Rev. St. p. 387, § 1, requiring the taxation of property "within the state," has held that the personal property within the state which was taxable pursuant to the law was only that which had its actual situs in the state, and where the property was actually situated outside of the state, so that it might in fact be subject to taxation in another jurisdiction, it is not properly to be taxed in this state. But Judge Comstock, in delivering the opinion of the court, took pains to say that it was undoubtedly within the power of the Legislature to tax all personal property of residents of the state wherever found, but that it had clearly not intended to exercise that power, because, if it had, it would undoubtedly have said so, and, since it had not, it could not be inferred that any such intention existed. This case seems to have been received as the law of this state for many years. It was followed in 1882, in the case of People v. Smith, 88 N. Y. 576, but after that case Laws 1896, c. 908, § 3, was enacted, which declared that all personal property situated or owned "within the state" is taxable, under which statute money deposited without the state on bills receivable for goods sold to persons without the state, and bonds of a corporation of a foreign railroad kept without the state, are taxable within the state, as the statute at section 2, subd. 4, defines personal property as including all debts due from solvent debtors. People v. Feitner, 68 N. Y. Supp. 769, 771, 54 App. Div. 217.

Property which is in the state merely for a purpose which is essentially temporary in its character cannot be considered as within the state for the purpose of taxation. Robinson v. Longley, 18 Nev. 71, 73, 1 Pac. 377.

WITHIN THEIR JURISDICTION.

The words "within their jurisdiction," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 24b, 80 Stat. 553 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 8431], providing that the Circuit Court of Appeals has jurisdiction in equity to revise in matters of law proceedings of inferior courts in bankruptcy "within their jurisdiction," manifestly relates to territorial limits confining courts to the exercise of jurisdiction conferred to superintend and revise in matters of law the proceedings of civil courts in bankruptcy in a particular circuit; and therefore the Circuit Court of Appeals has jurisdiction of an appeal from a court of bankruptcy within its circuit, where, though objections to the jurisdiction of the court below were presented there by the appellee, other grounds of defense were also presented by him, and the court did not ground its decision in his favor on the question of jurisdiction. In re Seebold (U. S.) 105 Fed. 910, 914, 45 C. C. A. 117.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 24, subd. "b," 80 Stat. 553 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 8432], providing that the several Circuit Courts of Appeals shall have jurisdiction to superintend and revise in matters of law the proceedings of the several inferior courts in bankruptcy within their jurisdiction, does not apply to the term "courts of the territories," as by the express provision of the section it is confined to the Circuit Courts of Appeals of the United States. In re Stumppf, 60 Pac. 96, 97, 9 Okl. 639.

The phrase "within their jurisdiction," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 24b, 80 Stat. 553 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 8431], giving Circuit Courts of Appeals jurisdiction of the proceedings of courts of bankruptcy "within their jurisdiction," has reference to an existing jurisdiction and an existing appellate jurisdiction, and is to be construed the same as if it read "within their appellate jurisdiction." In other words, the phrase "within their jurisdiction" means jurisdiction over courts from which appeals lie to the United States Circuit Courts of Appeals. In re Blair (U. S.) 106 Fed. 662, 665, 45 C. C. A. 530.

WITHOUT.

"Without," as used in a complaint alleging that the defendant kept a dog, without such dog being licensed, is a word of sufficiently positive negation to make the allegation of the same legal import and effect as would be an allegation that he kept a dog not licensed or a dog not being licensed.

Commonwealth v. Thompson, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 507, 508.

The phrase "without any cost, or expense, or other charges," as used in Gen. St. c. 58, § 13, providing that all the public schools in the state shall be open to the children of officers and soldiers of the United States during the late Rebellion, without any cost, or expense, or taxes, or other charges imposed for purposes of public education, does not exempt the estate of such officers or soldiers from taxes levied for school purposes; the intention of the Legislature merely being to relieve the children of the classes of persons named from the payment of rate bills, which, under the provisions of the law existing at the time of the enactment of the provision, were liable to be, and were in fact, assessed on scholars attending public schools. Carpenter v. Hopkinton School Trustees, 12 R. I. 574, 576.

WITHOUT ACCOUNTABILITY.

See "Accountability."

WITHOUT BEING MARRIED.

In a will leaving property to children, but providing that, in the case of the death of any of the children "without being married" or having children, the share of such child so dying should be divided among the survivors, the expression "without being married" must be construed as "without having ever been married." Lord Alvanley, in Maberly v. Strode, 3 Ves. 450, says that is the common acceptance of the word "married." Bell v. Phyn, 7 Ves. 453, 458.

WITHOUT BRAINS, CREDIT, OR CAPITAL.

To say of a citizen that he is "without brains, credit or capital" is libelous, for it impugns his business capacity and his business standing and character in the community. Wood v. Boyle, 35 Atl. 853, 854, 177 Pa. 620, 55 Am. St. Rep. 747.

WITHOUT BRIBE, THREAT, OR COM-PULSION.

"Without bribe, threat, or compulsion," as used in the certificate of acknowledgment of a deed by a married woman that she signed the deed without "bribe, threat, or compulsion" from her husband, is equivalent to "freely and willingly sign," as used in the form of the certificate as prescribed by the statute. Belcher v. Weaver, 46 Tex. 293, 294, 26 Am. Rep. 267.

WITHOUT CHILDREN.

See "Die Without Children."

WITHOUT CONSENT.

"Without her consent," as used in definitions of rape, means exactly the same thing as "against her will." Commonwealth v. Burke, 105 Mass. 376, 377, 7 Am. Rep. 531.

Where an ordinance of Congress providing that the lands of Indians should never be taken from them "without their consent" was construed to exempt such lands from taxation, the words "without their consent" should be construed to imply a parting with the privilege if consent be given to a conveyance of the lands, so that, where such lands are repurchased by an Indian without a former conveyance by an Indian to a white man, they are not exempt from taxation. Revoir v. State, 36 N. E. 1109, 1110, 187 Ind. 332.

WITHOUT CONTRADICTION.

A statement that a witness was allowed to give certain testimony, which was "without contradiction," is not equivalent to a statement that the court found his testimony to be true. Birch v. Hutchings, 12 N. E. 192, 194, 144 Mass. 561.

WITHOUT DEDUCTION FOR BENEFITS.

The Constitution of Ohio, when authorizing the condemnation of land for railroad purposes, requires that full compensation be paid, "irrespective of benefits." The Bill of Rights requires full compensation to be paid for land taken for public purposes, "without deduction for benefits." In construing these provisions, the court held that they were identical, and that they meant that in determining the consideration the jury have nothing to do but ascertain the fair market value of the property taken, and that nothing shall be deducted from that value on account of the benefits of the improvement. Giesy v. Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co., 4 Ohio St. 308, 320.

WITHOUT DEFALCATION.

See "Defalcation."

WITHOUT DELAY.

A charter party providing that a vessel which was at Genoa should "proceed without delay to Baltimore to enter upon this charter, the vessel having permission to take cargo of coals as ballast out," means without such delay as would arise from taking cargo on board. Antole v. Gill (U. S.) 5 Fed. 128, 129.

"Without delay," in Wood's Dig. p. 183, § 125, directing that the sheriff shall execute a writ of attachment without delay, "does not mean that the sheriff shall, the instant he receives process of this sort, lay aside all other business and proceed to execute it, unless some special reasons of urgency exist. The rule is thus stated by the Supreme Court of New York in Hinman v. Borden, 10 Wend. 367, 25 Am. Dec. 568, a sheriff is bound to use all reasonable endeavors to execute process." Whitney v. Butterfield, 13 Cal. 335, 339, 73 Am. Dec. 584.

WITHOUT DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

See "Due Process of Law."

WITHOUT FAULT.

"Without fault," within the meaning of Code, § 3066, authorizing an employé to recover from a railroad company for injuries he sustains by reason of the negligence of other employés when he is without fault or negligence, means that the party suing must not have done anything to contribute to his injury and must have done everything to prevent the consequences of the company's negligence. In other words, he must show that he did nothing he ought not to have done and neglected to do nothing he ought to have done. Central R. & Banking Co. v. Lanier, 10 S. E. 279, 280, 83 Ga. 587.

An averment that plaintiff was without fault or negligence is equivalent to saying that he was in exercise of due care. Goldrick v. Union R. Co., 37 Atl. 635, 20 R. I. 128.

WITHOUT FEAR OR COMPULSION.

The use of the words "without fear or compulsion" from her husband, in a certificate of acknowledgment of the execution of a deed by a married woman, is a mode "of stating that the acknowledgment was freely made." If the wife executes the deed without fear or compulsion, she manifestly does it freely, and the object of the statute requiring a private examination apart from her husband in such cases is fully secured. Dennis v. Tarpenny (N. Y.) 20 Barb. 371, 376.

WITHOUT FURTHER PROOF.

See "Evidence Without Further Proof."

WITHOUT GRACE.

"Without grace," as used in the body or margin of a note, means that the note is due or shall be due on the day of its maturity according to its face, without the allowance of any days of grace. Perkins v. President, etc., of Franklin Bank, 38 Mass. (21 Pick.) 483, 485.

WITHOUT HEIRS.

See "Die Without Heirs."

WITHOUT INTEREST.

A promissory note, which recites that it is to be "without interest," only means "without interest" until maturity. After maturity the note will bear interest, unless there is a contract in plain terms to the contrary. Roberts v. Smith, 64 Tex. 94, 97, 53 Am. Rep. 744.

WITHOUT ISSUE.

See "Die Without Issue."

WITHOUT JUST COMPENSATION.

The phrase "taken without just compensation being made," in Const. 1816, art. 1, § 7, providing that no property shall be taken without just compensation being made therefor, was construed to preclude title to property taken from passing from the owner thereof till the payment of compensation; but it was held that possession of the property could be taken before such payment. Kennedy v. Indianapolis, 103 U. S. 599, 26 L. Ed. 550.

WITHOUT THE KNOWLEDGE OR PRIVACY.

A loss occasioned to passengers on an excursion barge from the inability of such barge to withstand a thunderstorm of no unusual severity cannot be said to occur "without the knowledge or privacy" of the corporation owning the barge, so as to limit its liability under Rev. St. § 4283 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2943], when it appears that the president thereof himself undertook to make an examination of the barge at the beginning of the season, but failed to discover weakness which a thorough examination would have disclosed. The Republic (U. S.) 61 Fed. 109, 113, 9 C. C. A. 386.

WITHOUT LEAVING CHILDREN.

See "Die Without Leaving Children."

WITHOUT LEAVING ISSUE.

See "Die Without Leaving Issue."

WITHOUT LIVING ISSUE.

See "Die Without Living Issue."

WITHOUT NEGLIGENCE.

An averment that plaintiff was without fault or negligence is equivalent to saying that he was in the exercise of due care. Goldrick v. Union R. Co., 37 Atl. 635, 20 R. I. 128.

The phrase "without negligence," in Code, art. 77, § 1, providing that, where property is destroyed by fire from a locomotive, the burden is on the company to show that the fire was occasioned without negligence, means the exercise of reasonable care and diligence on the part of the company to avoid so far as possible injury to property by having its engines properly constructed, in good condition, and in the care of skillful persons. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Shipley, 39 Md. 251, 254.

Where a bill of lading provides that the carrier shall not be liable for loss by fire, the law incorporates and makes a part of the contract the words "without negligence on the part of the carrier," and what the law inserts as an implied proviso of the bill is as much a part of the contract as what is expressly written in it. When, therefore, the plaintiff makes out a prima facie case of negligence by proving that the goods were not delivered, which was rebutted by proof that they were not delivered by reason of a fact which may have existed and the carrier still have been negligent, the carrier must still prove freedom from negligence, or that the act did not arise by reason of negligence. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Lawler, 58 N. W. 968, 976, 40 Neb. 358.

WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

"The words 'without waiver or prejudice' have in the legal profession and among business men a well-understood value. They import into any writing in which they appear that the parties have agreed that, as between themselves, the receipt of the money by one, and its enjoyment by the other, shall not, because of the facts of the receipt and payment, have any legal effect upon the rights of the parties in the premises; that such rights will be as open to settlement by negotiation or legal controversy as if the money had not been turned over by the one to the other." Genet v. President, etc., of Delaware & H. Canal Co., 63 N. E. 350, 351, 170 N. Y. 278.

In adjournment of cause.

A stipulation entered into in justice court on the return day that the cause should "stand adjourned and without prejudice to either party" does not waive the requirement of the statute that, if the defendant interpose a counterclaim or set-off, "a copy of his account or statement of his demand intended to be set off shall be delivered to the justice on or before the day to which the hearing shall be first adjourned." The natural import of the words "without prejudice," as they were used in the stipulation, was that no harm should result to the rights of either party by reason of his consent to the adjournment at that time. As used, the words would probably save the right to make an objection to irregularity in the service of process, which would otherwise be waived by the appearance and consent, or would prevent the parties from raising the objection that the cause was adjourned before the return day. The right of the defendant to file his set-off, and his duty to do so on the first adjourned day, existed without regard to whether the adjournment was made by the consent of the parties (as first adjournments usually are), or by the order of the court without consent. The defendant was in no way prejudiced in this respect, either by the adjournment or by the agreement to adjourn. An agreement which is intended to dispense with any statutory requirements, and permit an opposite party to disregard the rule of practice laid down by the statute for the guidance of the court, should be clear and unambiguous. The court is bound to conform strictly to the requirements of the statute. If it fails to do so, it is error. This is especially so if it permits a deviation from a statutory practice in favor of one party against the objection of the other party or his counsel. If the present agreement had stated that the adjournment therein provided for should not be regarded as an adjournment so far as it would affect the defendant's right to file a set-off, or if it had stated that it should be regarded as an extension of the return day, then it would have been plainly visible to the court that the agreement was a waiver of the statutory requirement that the plea should be filed on the day to which this adjournment was made. A mere agreement that the adjournment be without prejudice does not contain such an understanding, either expressly or impliedly. State v. Taylor, 17 Atl. 291, 292, 51 N. J. Law (22 Vroom) 307.

In denial of application.

Where a court denies an application "without prejudice" as to a renewal before another judge, it was not an extension of the time in which the application might have been made as authorized by statute, but simply relieved the person making the motion from the possibility of a charge of contempt in making a second application to another judge. Wallace v. Lewis, 24 Pac. 22, 23, 9 Mont. 399.

In dismissal of appeal.

Where, on appeal, it was discovered that the statement prepared was not settled by the judge below as required, and appellant moved for leave to withdraw it for the purpose of correcting the omission, and in conformity with the application an order was made dismissing the appeal "without prejudice," in view of such phrase, a contention that the dismissal operated as an affirmation of the judgment was error. Cooper v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 7 Nev. 116, 119, 8 Am. Rep. 705.

In dismissal of bill.

The purpose and effect of the words "without prejudice," in a decree dismissing a bill without prejudice, is to prevent the defendants from availing themselves of the defense of res judicata in any subsequent proceeding by the same plaintiffs on the same subject-matter. This is the doctrine of Story, Eq. Pl. § 793, of 1 Daniell, Ch. Prac. p. 659, and of Beach, Eq. Prac. §§ 643, 644. O'Keefe v. Irvington Real Estate Co., 39 Atl. 428, 87 Md. 196; Taylor v. Slater, 41 Atl. 1001, 1003, 21 R. I. 104.

The entry, "dismissed without prejudice," in an action of divorce brought by a husband on the ground of adultery, indicates that the libel was not dismissed upon the merits of the case, upon the ground that the evidence showed the libelee to be innocent of the charge made against her, but for some insufficiency in the allegations, or in the service of the libel, where it might be proper to allow the libelant to bring a new libel for the same cause. This would not be done in any case where the evidence showed the libelee to be free from fault and from suspicion. Therefore the fact of this entry shows that the libelant failed upon some technical point in the case, rather than that the libelee succeeded in proving her innocence of the charge made against her. Ray v. Adden, 50 N. H. 82, 84, 9 Am. Rep. 175.

The words "without prejudice," contained in a decree dismissing a bill, indicate a right or privilege to take further legal proceedings on the same subject, and show that the dismissal is not intended to be res judicata of the merits. Seamster v. Blackstock, 2 S. E. 36, 38, 83 Va. 232, 5 Am. St. Rep. 262.

"A dismissal without prejudice leaves the parties as if no action had been instituted. It gives to a complainant the right to state a new and proper cause, if he can; but it takes away no right of defense to such suit on any ground other than that of the judgment as a bar." Taylor v. Slater, 41 Atl. 1001, 1003, 21 R. I. 104.

A general entry of "Bill dismissed," with no words of qualification, such as "dismissed without prejudice," or "without prejudice to an action at law," or the like, is conclusively presumed to be on the merits, and is a final determination of the controversy. Foote v. Gibbs, 67 Mass. (1 Gray) 412, 413.

Where a libel for divorce is dismissed for want of jurisdiction, and the dismissal decree states that it is without prejudice, and there is no limitation upon the effect of such words, "they must be taken to have been used generally, and to mean without prejudice to the right of the libelant to bring a new suit, and to try it as if the questions involved were all presented for the first time." Burton v. Burton, 5 Atl. 281, 283, 58 Vt. 414.

A dismissal of a suit without prejudice is no decision of the controversy on its merits, and leaves the whole subject of litigation as much open to another suit as if no suit had ever been brought. Newberry v. Ruffin, 45 S. E. 733, 102 Va. 73.

The use of the term "without prejudice," in a decree dismissing a bill without prejudice, has reference to the effect and operation of the decree itself, and is equivalent to a permission to file another bill in the same cause of action. When the right is not so reserved, the decree of dismissal is conclusive, and another bill cannot be filed. Cochran v. Couper, 2 Del. Ch. 27, 81.

When a bill brought to obtain a divestiture of the legal title of defendants to real property is dismissed "without prejudice," the effect of the reservation is to prevent the decree from constituting a bar to another bill brought upon the same title; but it by no means compromises the court as a judicial determination in favor of such title. Lang's Heirs v. Waring, 25 Ala. 625, 639, 60 Am. Dec. 533.

A dismissal of a bill in equity without prejudice will not be reviewed, unless the error is very clear. Ordinarily an order dismissing a bill or petition is not considered final, and hence cannot be reviewed; but where the petition and answer properly submit a question to the court which should have been passed upon, and a party was entitled to relief on the facts, he was prejudiced by having the petition dismissed, and the mere addition of the words "without prejudice" cannot prevent him from prosecuting such appeal. Yakel v. Yakel, 53 Atl. 914, 916, 96 Md. 240.

In Kempton v. Burgess, 136 Mass. 192, it was said: "It is a matter of course to permit a plaintiff to dismiss his bill at any time before hearing, upon payment of the costs. Such an order of dismissal is in the nature of a nonsuit at law, and not a bar to another bill. When a bill is dismissed upon the motion of the plaintiff, it is a safe and convenient practice to dismiss it without prejudice." While the term "without prejudice" is properly inserted in a decree in which a bill is dismissed by plaintiff before hearing on the merits, the use of such term is not necessary, and the judgment or decree constitutes no bar to a new proceeding for the same cause of action between the same parties, even if the words are omitted. Richards v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. (Ill.) 16 N. E. 909, 124 Ill. 516; Chamberlain v. Sutherland, 4 Ill. App. (4 Bradw.) 494. A refusal to dismiss a bill without prejudice at complainant's cost, on a motion made before any proof has been introduced, and where it has not been made manifest that defendant is entitled to a decree, is an abuse of discretion, and erroneous.

Bates v. Skidmore, 48 N. E. 962, 963, 170 Ill. 233.

A plea in bar, stating a dismissal of a former bill, is conclusive against a new bill, if the dismissal was upon hearing, and if that dismissal be not in direct terms without prejudice. Bigelow v. Winsor, 67 Mass. (1 Gray) 229, 301.

In publication of testimony.

The use of the words "without prejudice," in a consent by parties to the publication of testimony, operates by the common understanding of solicitors and chancellors as a reservation of the right to take additional testimony. Dixon v. Higgins, 2 South. 289, 291, 82 Ala. 284.

In withdrawal of appearance.

The term "without prejudice," in a leave to withdraw an appearance in the case without prejudice, means that the position of the withdrawing party is not to be unfavorably affected by the act of withdrawal. Crelighton v. Kerr, 87 U. S. (20 Wall.) 8, 12, 22 L. Ed. 309.

WITHOUT PREJUDICE TO THE CHARTER PARTY.

A charter party provided that the master might sign bills of lading at any rate of freight "without prejudice to the charter party," which provided for the payment of a lump sum for the whole voyage. It was held that an assignee of goods with notice of the terms of the charter party was not entitled to the goods merely upon payment of the amount of the freight specified in the bill of lading, but that the owner of the ship was entitled to a lien on such goods for the entire charter freight. Kern v. Deslandes, 10 O. B. (N. S.) 205, 224.

Where a vessel was chartered to G. by a charter party for a specified sum for a voyage to Cuba and return, and G., at Cuba, loaded the vessel with molasses, which he bought there from P., but the purchase was not absolute, the transfer of title to the molasses depending on the payment of drafts drawn by P. on G., and the molasses was shipped in the name of P., and a bill of lading was signed therefore by the master, which stated that the cargo was to be delivered to the order of P., at a specified rate of freight, to be paid by him or his assigns, but contained at its foot the words, "without prejudice to charter party," and afterwards R. advanced, on the security of the bill of lading, the money to take up the drafts and took an assignment of the bill of lading, held, on a libel filed by the owner of the vessel against the molasses for the charter money, that the molasses was liable only for the freight specified in the bill of lading; the words "without prejudice to the charter party" being intended only to guard against any waiver of the charter money as between the charterers and the owner. In re 406 Hogsheads of Molasses (U. S.) 9 Fed. Cas. 591.

WITHOUT PROTEST.

The expression "without protest," as used in the following statement, signed on the back of a note: "I hereby guaranty the payment of the within note without protest"—has no other effect than to so qualify the contract as to exclude the specific defense that by not protesting the note the indorsers are released. If either of the indorsers continued liable to the payee, notwithstanding the note was not protested, he must still be considered the principal, and the guarantor has a right to insist that such principal shall be first exhausted before recourse is had to him on his guaranty. Zahm v. First Nat. Bank of Lancaster, 103 Pa. 576, 580.

An indorsement of a promissory note by the payee thereof, stating that he holds himself "responsible for the within note without notice or protest" is only "to be construed as a waiver of protest and notice as a necessary step to fix the payee's liability in case the drawer should fail to pay the note at maturity." Halley v. Jackson, 48 Md. 254, 261.

WITHOUT RECOURSE.

The words "without recourse," as used in an instrument by which a judgment creditor transfers his right, title, and interest in the judgment without recourse, "clearly indicate the absence of any intention to warrant the validity or value of the judgment, or that it was collectible." Scofield v. Moore, 31 Iowa, 241, 245.

The words "without recourse," in an assignment of a promissory note, without any express representations, do not release the seller from an implied warranty for a deficiency in the amount recoverable on the note, on account of its bearing usurious interest. Drennan v. Bunn, 16 N. E. 100, 102, 124 Ill. 175, 7 Am. St. Rep. 354.

The words "sans recours" or "without recourse" have no exact legal significance, except when employed by an indorser to limit his liability on a negotiable instrument which has been, by the act of indorsement by him, assigned to a third person. An indorsement followed by this phrase relieves the indorser of liability for the payment of such a paper in the event it is dishonored by the maker or acceptor. Thompson v. First State Bank, 29 S. E. 610, 611, 102 Ga. 696.

Many authorities say that the transfer of a note or bill without recourse is a sale.

Brittin v. Freeman, 17 N. J. Law (2 Har.) 191, 227.

When the indorsement of a note is "without recourse," the indorser specially declines to assume any responsibility for its payment. According to the meaning of the term in the law merchant, this is the express condition of the contract, as much as if stated in detail in so many words. Youngberg v. Nelson, 53 N. W. 629, 51 Minn. 172, 38 Am. St. Rep. 497; Palmer v. Courtney, 49 N. W. 754, 756, 32 Neb. 773.

The expression "without recourse," in the indorsement of a note, merely rebuts the insurer's liability to the indorsee and subsequent holders. The indorsement transfers the whole interest. Richardson v. Lincoln, 46 Mass. (5 Metc.) 201, 204.

The words "without recourse," in an indorsement on a promissory note, do not imply "without value," nor do they alter the effect of an assignment of the note. Wilson v. Codman, 7 U. S. (3 Cranch) 193, 203, 2 L. Ed. 408.

An indorsement of a promissory note "without recourse" is evidence of an unwillingness to be answerable for the solvency of the maker—a prudent precaution, particularly where the note has a long time to run before it matures. Such indorsement passes the note, with all its negotiable qualities. Epler v. Funk, 8 Pa. (8 Barr) 468, 469.

An indorsement on a bill of exchange "without recourse" negatives and repudiates any liability on the part of the indorser. Watsan v. Chesire, 18 Iowa, 202, 205, 87 Am. Dec. 382.

"Without recourse," as used in an indorsement of a note, means that the indorser is not to be liable for its payment in case of its dishonor at maturity, as he would be, by the law merchant, on an unqualified indorsement. Charnley v. Dulles (Pa.) 8 Watts & S. 353, 361.

An indorsement on a note of the words "without recourse" is an express declaration of the absence of responsibility. It is no more than the expression of the implication of the law from a transfer by delivery merely, and, except as passing the legal title to instruments which under the statute are made assignable, and are not by the law merchant negotiable by delivery, its obligations and effect, as between transferor and transferee, is that of a transfer by delivery. Bankhead v. Owen, 60 Ala. 457, 461.

Where the payee of a note agrees to deliver the notes of a corporation, such agreement is complied with by delivery of notes "without recourse." Seeley v. Reed (U. S.) 28 Fed. 164.

An assignment "without recourse" of a note executed for the purchase money of land does not carry with it the vendor's lien. Johnson v. Nunnerly, 30 Ark. 153.

The indorsement of a negotiable certificate of deposit by the payee before due "without recourse" is not, of itself, sufficient to serve the purchaser with notice of defenses of the maker. First Nat. Bank v. Security Nat. Bank, 51 N. W. 305, 306, 34 Neb. 71, 15 L. R. A. 386, 33 Am. St. Rep. 618.

An indorsement of a note qualified by the words "without recourse" is not out of due course of trade, and does not throw any suspicion upon the character of the paper. A note continues negotiable notwithstanding the words "without recourse." Hatch v. Barrett, 8 Pac. 129, 134, 34 Kan. 223; New York Security & Trust Co. v. Lombard Inv. Co. (U. S.) 65 Fed. 271, 277. Such an indorsement does not indicate in any case that the parties to it are conscious of any defect in the security, or that the indorsee does not take on the credit of the other party or parties to the note. On the contrary, he takes it solely on their credit, and the indorser only shows thereby that he is unwilling to make himself responsible for the payment. New York Security & Trust Co. v. Lombard Inv. Co. (U. S.) 65 Fed. 271, 277.

An indorser may qualify his indorsement with the words "without recourse," or equivalent words, and upon such indorsement he is responsible only to the same extent as in the case of a transfer without indorsement. Civ. Code Idaho 1901, § 2879.

Warranty of genuineness.

Whilst the words "without recourse," accompanying an indorsement, clearly indicate that the party making the transfer does not intend to assume the position of an unconditional indorser, or to incur any liability if the note is not paid at maturity upon due demand, or even if all the parties to the papers should prove to be wholly insolvent, they cannot be construed as importing more than this. At least, they do not divest such indorser of his character as a vendor of the note, nor exempt him from the liability arising from a transfer by delivery, where the note is capable of being thus transferred. He warrants by implication, unless otherwise agreed, that he is the lawful holder and has a just and valid title to the instrument, and a right to transfer it by delivery, also that the instrument is genuine, and not forged or fictitious. Dumont v. Williamson, 18 Ohio St. 515, 517, 98 Am. Dec. 186.

An indorsement "without recourse" is nevertheless an implied warranty of the genuineness of the signatures to the paper. Challiss v. McCrum, 22 Kan. 157, 164, 31 Am. Rep. 181; see, also, Charnley v. Dulles (Pa.) 8 Watts & S. 353, 361—unless it is expressly understood at the time of the sale that he refused to guaranty their genuineness. Brown v. Ames, 61 N. W. 448, 449, 59 Minn. 476.

An "indorsement without recourse" of a past-due note impliedly warrants that the note is genuine, and that it is what it purports to be on its face—a living debt. New York Security & Trust Co. v. Lombard Inv. Co. (U. S.) 65 Fed. 271, 277.

"The indorser without recourse contracts that the bill or note is in every respect genuine, and neither forged, fictitious, nor altered. Undoubtedly, and by universal admission, this principle applies to the signatures of the drawer, acceptor, and maker of the bill or note, who are the original parties, and it is often expressed in language to the effect that the indorser warrants that it is a genuine instrument—citing many authorities." Palmer v. Courtney, 49 N. W. 754, 756, 82 Neb. 773.

An assignment of a negotiable instrument without recourse only relieves the assignee of the responsibility by reason of the insolvency of the obligors, but there is an implied warranty that the signatures are genuine, and the assignee is not required to use the same diligence in testing the genuineness of the paper as is required in testing the solvency of the obligors in case of a mere assignment for value. Maze v. Owingsville Banking Co., 63 S. W. 428, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 574.

WITHOUT RELIEF.

The phrase "without relief," in any judgment, contract, execution, or other instrument of writing or record, shall be taken, held, and deemed to mean "without the benefit of valuation laws." Horner's Rev. St. Ind. 1901, § 1286.

WITHOUT THE STATE.

The phrase "without the state," in the eighth section of the limitation statute, does not characterize one who, having property outside the state, leaves the state for a period of eight months for the purpose of taking charge of a store, but intends at his departure and during his absence to return to the state, and that his absence shall only be of a temporary character. Sage v. Hawley, 16 Conn. 106, 118, 41 Am. Dec. 128.

WITHOUT TRANSFER.

See "Through Without Transfer."

WITHOUT VALID CAUSE.

"Without valid cause," as used in reference to the directors of a school district having neglected or refused to perform their duty without valid cause, does not import the same thing as "willfully neglected and refused." If a duty be enjoined on an officer, his refusal to perform it is willful. He has no discretion as to its performance. But if he be commanded to do a certain act, unless he have a valid excuse for not doing it, and he then refuses for cause, the question is at once raised between him and his superior whether the cause is sufficient to excuse him in his disobedience. In re Walker, 36 Atl. 148, 150, 179 Pa. 24.

WITHOUT WARRANT OF LAW.

The term "without warrant of law," as used in a motion to vacate an attachment on such grounds, signifies the same thing as "irregular," and, where an affidavit for attachment fails to state the conditions on which the law authorized its issuance, it is irregularly issued and without warrant of law. Addison v. Sujette (S. C.) 27 S. E. 631, 634.

WITHOUT THE WRITTEN CONTRACT.

The words "without the written consent," in a contract for farming lands on shares, providing that none of the products of the farm shall be sold or removed until a division thereof, without the written consent of the owner of the farm, do not refer to a division of what may be produced, but simply prohibit a removal of the products or produce from the premises before they have been divided, unless the owner shall have consented in writing. Smith v. Roberts, 43 Minn. 342, 343, 46 N. W. 836.

WITNESS.

See "Adverse Witness"; "Attesting Witness"; "Competent Witness"; "County Witnesses"; "Credible Witness"; "Disinterested Witness"; "Nonresident Witness"; "Prosecuting Witness"; "State Witness."

Expert witness, see "Expert."

A witness is one who has knowledge of a fact. State v. Desforages, 17 South. 811, 820, 47 La. Ann. 1167 (citing Webst. Dict.).

A witness is one who has knowledge of a fact or occurrence sufficient to testify in respect to it. In the case of a will, a witness must have knowledge that the paper is a will by the declaration of the testator; that it has been signed by either seeing the signature written, or by seeing the signature with an accompanying acknowledgment by the testator that it is his signature. In re Losee's Will, 34 N. Y. Supp. 1120, 1121, 18 Misc. Rep. 298.

"Witness," in its strict legal sense, means one who gives evidence in a cause before a court. Barker v. Colt (Conn.) 1 Root. 224, 225.

A witness is one, who being sworn or affirmed according to law, deposes as to his knowledge of facts in issue between the parties in the case. 1 Bouv. Law Dict. 658. Johnson defined the word as "one who gives testimony." Richardson defines it as "one who witteth or knows; one who tells what he knows, sees, or has seen; to give evidence or testimony." The word "witness" is a most general term, including all persons from whose lips testimony is extracted to be used in any judicial proceeding. Bliss v. Shuman, 47 Me. 248, 251, 252.

A witness is a person whose declaration under oath is received as evidence for any purpose, whether such declaration be made on oral examination or by deposition or affidavit. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. 1903, § 1878; Ann. Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 721; Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 5657; People v. Lem Deo, 64 Pac. 265, 266, 132 Cal. 199.

Affiant or deponent.

The word "witness" embraces deponents, as the term is used with us, and affiants equally with persons delivering testimony to a jury. The affiant or deponent is always a witness, but a witness is not necessarily an affiant or deponent. Bliss v. Shuman, 47 Me. 248, 251, 252.

Documentary evidence.

The word "witness," as used in Code 1873, § 4421, providing that no witness can be examined in support of an indictment who shall not be examined by the grand jury, unless written notice be given before the trial, refers to a person, and not to an inanimate object or thing. The signature of defendant to the application for a continuance is not a witness, therefore, and may be used as a standard of comparison. State v. Farrington, 57 N. W. 606, 609, 90 Iowa, 673.

Legal evidence is not confined to the human voice or oral testimony, but includes every tangible object capable of making a truthful statement, such evidence being roughly classified as "documentary evidence." In oral evidence the witness is the man who speaks; in documentary evidence the witness is the thing that speaks. In either case the witness must be competent—that is, must be deemed competent to make a truthful statement—and in either case the competency of the witness must be proved before the evidence is admitted; the difference being that in oral evidence the competency is proved by a legal presumption, and in documentary evidence the competency must be proved by actual testimony; and the further difference that in oral evidence the credit of the witness is tested by his own cross-examination, while in documentary evidence the credit of the witness is tested by the cross-examination of those who must be called to prove its competency. Curtis v. Bradley, 31 Atl. 591, 594, 65 Conn. 99.

Evidence synonymous.

"Witnesses," in a technical sense, are persons sworn to testify, or offered to testify, in a cause. But in Act April 10, 1818, § 41, c. 90, § 18, requiring a justice, after an appeal has been made from his court to the court of common pleas, to return to that court the proceedings before him, and, among other things, the names of the witnesses sworn and examined and the names of those offered and rejected, the expression is used in a more comprehensive sense, and as synonymous with "evidence." The object of the statute is to confine the parties to the same evidence examined before the justice, with the single exception of testimony offered and improperly excluded by the justice. McCheeney v. Lansing (N. Y.) 18 Johns. 388, 389.

Identification of person.

Within the meaning of the Constitution declaring that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a "witness against himself," these words would not include the compelling of the party to stand up during the trial for identification by one of the witnesses. People v. Goldenson, 19 Pac. 161, 170, 76 Cal. 328.

Party.

The word "witness," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 2980, giving a justice court power to issue commissions to take the deposition of a witness, includes a party to the action. Murphy v. Sullivan, 77 N. Y. Supp. 950, 951.

Person summoned merely.

Abbott's Law Dictionary defines the word "witness" as a person who, being present before a court, magistrate, or examining officer, orally declares what he has seen or heard or done relative to a matter in question. The word as used in our statutes embraces more than simply those who actually testify, as is manifest from the reading of the sections, Rev. St. § 1301, providing, "all witnesses in civil cases shall be allowed the following fees, etc.," and section 1302 providing, "witnesses attending under recognition or subpoena issued by order of the prosecuting attorney or defendant," etc., and section 1303 reading, "each person summoned as a witness," etc. There would seem to be no doubt that in each of these sections there is included in the word "witness" each person either subpoenaed for the purpose of examination, or appearing to testify, whether actually examined or not. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. v. Carnahan, 10 O. C. D. 225, 226.

Code Cr. Proc. art. 636, subd. 6, provides that a witness in the case is obnoxious to challenge for cause. Held, that a "witness" within the meaning of the statute is one who bears testimony or furnishes evidence or proof, and not one who has been merely summoned to attend as a witness. Seals v. State, 32 S. W. 545, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 138.

Prosecutor distinguished.

A prosecutor is one who proffers an accusation against a party whom he suspects to be guilty. The party who appears in response to a subpoena is not a prosecutor, but only a witness. State v. Millain, 3 Nev. 409.

As witness duly sworn.

The word "witness," in Pub. Laws, c. 816, § 11, providing that any licensee may be summoned before the commissioners in certain instances, "when he and the witnesses for and against him may be heard," means a witness duly sworn. Board of License Com'rs v. O'Connor, 17 R. I. 40, 41, 19 Atl. 1080, 1081.

WITNESS FEES.

As costs, see "Cost."

WITTINGLY.

Webster defines the word "wittingly," as "knowingly, with knowledge, by design." As used in Gen. St. 1875, p. 489, § 5, giving a right of action against one who "shall wittingly and unlawfully throw down or leave open any bars, gate or fence," it means with knowledge and by design, excluding only cases which are the result of accident or forgetfulness, and including cases where one throws down another's fence through an erroneous belief that it obstructs his right of way. Osborne v. Warren, 44 Conn. 357, 359.

Willingly distinguished.

"Wittingly" and "willingly" are not synonymous words, and do not convey the same idea. The one relates to the wit or understanding, and means knowingly or designedly, while the other relates to the will, and means freely or voluntarily. Harrington v. State, 54 Miss. 490, 493.

WOE

The word "woe" is defined in the Century Dictionary as follows: "Grief, sorrow, misery, heavy calamity." As used in the Old and New Testaments, it is used sometimes as prophetic of calamity or affliction, and sometimes as denunciatory. A letter directing a person to deposit a sum of money in a certain place, and stating that "should you fail to comply with our request, woe be unto you and yours," does not contain a sufficient threat upon which to predicate an information under Rev. Cr. Code, art. 966, making it criminal to send a letter threatening to kill or injure the person of another. Hanson v. State, 34 S. W. 929, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 593.

WOMAN.

See "Bad Girl or Woman."

Any woman, see "Any."

The word "woman," within St. 1874, c. 274, § 2, enacting that any woman of the age of 21 years who resides at any place in the state for five years without receiving relief as a pauper shall thereby gain a settlement in such place, denotes only an unmarried woman. City of Somerville v. City of Boston, 120 Mass. 574, 575.

In Myers v. State, 84 Ala. 11, 4 South. 291, it was held that the words "female" and "woman" were identical in meaning. Jackson v. State, 34 South. 611, 137 Ala. 80.

"Woman," as used in Ky. St. c. 36, § 1158, making unlawful taking any woman against her will, with intent to have carnal knowledge with her, a crime, is used generically, and embraces every female of the human race. It includes a girl of 12 years. Couch v. Commonwealth, 29 S. W. 29, 16 Ky. Law Rep. 477.

A "woman" is a female who has passed the age of puberty. Before that time she is a child. She may thus become a woman before attaining her majority. Blackburn v. State, 22 Ohio St. 102, 110.

The word "woman" or "women," as used in the statutory provisions relating to police matrons, shall mean any person or persons of the female sex. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 944, c. 108, § 35; Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 3497.

The expression "women," as used in the act relating to charities and charitable and reformatory institutions, means female persons of 18 years of age and upward. Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 6650.

The term "woman," as used in all laws relative to the employment of labor, shall mean a woman 18 years of age or over. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 917, c. 103, § 8.

The expression "woman," as used in the article relating to factories, means a woman of the age of 18 years and upward. Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 10,104.

The word "woman," as used in the Penal Code, is used to signify a female person of any age. Pen. Code Tex. 1895, art. 21.

As citizen.

See "Citizen."

WON.

Gen. St. c. 254, § 13, making a person who shall receive any "money or property won upon any bet or wager" liable in assumption to the person losing the same, does not include money paid to hire or procure another to make a bet or wager. Johnson v. Ferris, 49 N. H. 66, 67.

Pub. St. c. 246, § 16, providing that all bonds, notes, judgments, mortgages, deeds, or other securities, as well as promises given or made for "money won at any game," shall be utterly void, will be construed to include money won by betting on the game, as well as money won by playing it. McGrath v. Kennedy, 2 Atl. 438, 439, 15 R. I. 209.

WOOD.

See "Soft Wood."

"Wood," in vegetable anatomy, is that more or less hard and compact substance which makes up the bulk of the trunk and branches of a tree or shrub, and is concealed from view by the bark. When cut transversely, the wood is found to consist of numerous concentric layers, very distinct in the fir, and in trees of cold or temperate countries in general; less so in those appropriated to a tropical climate. Patterson v. McCausland (Md.) 3 Bland, 69, 75 (citing Rees' Cyclo. v. "Wood," in "Vegetable Anatomy").

One definition of the word "wood" is the hard substance of a tree or shrub as cut for use. This is its most common meaning. The old maxim is, "Arbor dum crescit, lignum cum crescere nescit"—a tree while it grows, wood when it cannot grow—that is, when it is cut down. Darling v. Clement, 37 Atl. 779, 780, 69 Vt. 292.

In Acts 1868, c. 448, providing that no person shall throw into the Penobscot river any slab, board, or lath edgings, or "refuse wood," or timber of any sort, "wood" is used in its generic sense as the substance of trees or of the logs to be manufactured, and does not mean trees cut or sawed for fuel. State v. Howard, 72 Me. 459, 465. It does not include wood coming within the description of "timber." Per Tenterden, J. Leigh v. Heald, 1 Barn. & Adol. 622, 623.

Lumber and bark.

"Wood," as used in a deed providing that, if the grantee should cut from the land other wood than was necessary for sugar wood and for the making of fences on the premises, the avails thereof should be applied on the purchase note, comprehends lumber and bark, as it was used in a generic sense, including all the growing trees on the lot. Hutchinson v. Ford, 18 Atl. 1044, 62 Vt. 97.

Soil.

"Under a grant of 'wood,' used as synonymous with the Latin word 'boscus,' not only the trees, but the soil upon which they are, will pass; and where there was a lease of a manor, 'always excepting the wood and underwood,' it was held that the soil itself was excepted; but where the grant or exception is of timber trees, no soil passes or is excepted, save so much as is necessary for the nutriment of the granted trees." Boults v. Mitchell, 15 Pa. 371, 380 (quoting Whistler v. Parslow, Cro. Jac. 487; Leigh v. Heald, 1 Barn. & Adol. 622).

WOOD ALCOHOL.

"Wood alcohol" is obtained by the destructive distillation of wood, and is ranked as a narcotic poison, and if drank either pure, or adulterated or reduced many times its weight in water, other alcohol, or fluid, it kills the person drinking it. It was not intended to be used as a beverage, and is not included in the term "intoxicating liquors," as used in V. S. c. 187, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquor. Fabor v. Green, 47 Atl. 391, 72 Vt. 117.

WOOD HOUSE.

A policy of insurance on a dwelling house and "wood house" covers a building built at one time with a single frame and roof, and designed for one building, for a carriage house and wood house, of which the woodroom constitutes two-thirds, and is separated from the carriage room by a loose partition extending to the eaves on one side and halfway to the roof on the other. White v. Mutual Fire Assur. Co., 74 Mass. (8 Gray) 566, 571.

WOOD LEAVE.

"Wood leave" is the right to cut down, remove, and use standing timber. Osborne v. O'Reilly, 9 Atl. 209, 212, 42 N. J. Eq. (15 Stew.) 467.

WOOD PULP.

Wood macerated with water against stones revolving vertically until it is converted into a soft coherent mass is commercially known as "wood pulp." Goldman v. United States (U. S.) 87 Fed. 193, 194.

WOODEN BUILDING.

A "wooden building," as used in an ordinance prohibiting the erection of a wooden building within a city, means a building constructed entirely of wood, and hence one composed in part of brick and in part of wood is not within the ordinance. Stewart v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 10 Watts, 306, 309.

WOODLAND.

Though in 1756, under a devise of woodland, 6 per cent. was allowed for roads, a devise in 1814 of 50 acres of the adjoining woodland carries but 50 acres, strict measure. Blaine's Lessee v. Chambers (Pa.) 1 Serg. & R. 169, 171.

"Woodland" is not synonymous with, and does not mean one and the same thing with, "prairie land." Buxton v. St. Louis & L. M. R. R. Co., 58 Mo. 55, 56.

All lands now owned or controlled or which may be hereafter owned or controlled by the state, and which are now or shall hereafter be covered with forest growth or devoted to forest uses, are, for the purpose of the act relating to woodlands and forestry, declared to be "woodlands." Mills' Ann. St. Colo. 1891, § 1997.

WOODS.

Within the meaning of a statute imposing a penalty of $50 for setting fire to "woods," the term "woods" means forest lands in their natural state, and is used in contradistinction to lands cleared and inclosed for cultivation. It does not include the burning of log heaps in one's own inclosed field. Averitt v. Murrell, 49 N. C. 322, 323.

An old field which had formerly been cleared, inclosed, and cultivated, but the fences surrounding which were down, and the land, in the common parlance of the county, said to be "turned out," and grown up in broom sedge and pine bushes, some of which was as tall as a man's waist and others as high as his head, was "woods" within the meaning of a statute imposing a penalty for setting fire to woods, etc. Such old fields are as properly contradistinguished from lands cleared and inclosed for cultivation as forest lands in their natural state. Each is a species of woods or woodland, and, as the mischief likely to result from burning the one is as great as that of the other, the statute never could have intended to make any difference between them. The word "woods" in the statute is not confined to lands never before cleared, inclosed, or cultivated. Hall v. Cranford, 50 N. C. 3, 5.

A field grown over with broom sedge and wire grass, surrounded by an old fence, and used as a pasture, cannot be construed to be "woods" within the meaning of Bat. Rev. c. 13, § 1, forbidding any one from setting fire to his woods unless two days' written notice is first given to all persons owning adjoining land. Achenbach v. Johnston, 84 N. C. 264, 265.

WOOL.

"Wools on the skin," as used in Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, c. 1244, par. 387, 28 Stat.

8 Wds. & P.—46

595, do not include raw Angora goatskins with the hair on, being for all commercial purposes undressed fur skins, it being unprofitable to separate the hair from the skin and to use the hair as wool. United States v. Bennet (U. S.) 66 Fed. 299, 18 C. C. A. 446.

WOOL ELASTIC WEBBING.

"Wool elastic webbing" is webbing made of India rubber, wool, and cotton, as distinguished from union elastic webbing and cotton elastic webbing, and is used for gores and gussets in the manufacture of Congress boots, and without the rubber would not be adaptable to that use. In its manufacture it is not wrought by hand or braided by machinery, but is woven in a loom. Beard v. Nichols, 7 Sup. Ct. 548, 120 U. S. 260, 30 L. Ed. 652.

WOOL GREASE.

"Wool grease" is of a brown color and a viscous consistency. It is extracted from wool washings, and consists of cholesterin and other fats and volatile fatty acids. It contains from 15 to 30 per cent. of potash, and emits a rank, disagreeable odor. It resembles molasses and tar mixed together, and is imported in return petroleum barrels. As used in Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, c. 1244, par. 316, 26 Stat. 588, it does not include lanolin. Movius v. United States (U. S.) 66 Fed. 734, 735.

"Wool grease" is the recovered grease which is excreted by a sheep, and is recovered from the suds after the wool has been scoured. It is commonly brown, though sometimes of a lighter color. It has somewhat the consistency of molasses or soft lard. United States v. Leonard (U. S.) 100 Fed. 288.

"Brown grease," as used in Customs Act 1897, par. 279, is equivalent to what is known commercially as "wool grease." Wool fat is the natural grease contained in sheep's wool. In the course of preparing the raw wool for spinning, this grease is removed by means of dilute soap solutions or by extraction with volatile solvents. The suds from wool scouring are collected in large tanks, and by acidulating with mineral acids brown grease is obtained. United States v. Leonard (U. S.) 108 Fed. 42, 43, 47 C. C. A. 181.

WOOL MILLS.

Property insured as part of a manufactory of wool fabrics—carpets made of wool—is properly within the designation "wool mills," as used in a list of special rates. Smith v. Mechanics' & Traders' Fire Ins. Co., 32 N. Y. 399, 403.

WOOL SORTER'S DISEASE.

The term "wool sorter's disease" has been used to designate the disease commonly known as "malignant pustule," "charbon," or "anthrax," because it happens among people that handle wools and hides, such as tanners, butchers, and herdsmen, as those people are engaged in business where they come in contact with that sort of thing. It is a disease caused by the infliction upon the body of putrid animal matter containing poisonous bacillus anthrax. Bacon v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 25 N. E. 399, 123 N. Y. 804, 9 L. R. A. 617, 20 Am. St. Rep. 748.

WOOL WASTE.

As employed in the tariff acts imposing a duty on wool waste, etc., "wool waste" signifies such parts or particles of wool as are thrown off in the several processes of manufacture of wool in wool or worsted fabrics, and does not include wool which has been prepared for spinning and artificially and intentionally made into a form like such parts or particles, even if sometimes called "waste" by the trade. United States v. Patton (U. S.) 46 Fed. 461, 464.

WOOLEN.

"Woollen flannel sheet," as used in an indictment charging a defendant with stealing one white "woolen flannel sheet," means a sheet composed of wool, and not one part cotton and part wool, called a "cotton and woollen blanket." Alkenbrack v. People (N. Y.) 1 Denio, 80.

The term, "woolen goods," within the meaning of Tariff Act Aug. 28, 1894, c. 349, par. 297, 26 Stat. 531, suspending till January 1, 1895, the reduction of duties on such goods, includes mohair braids made of hair of the Angora goat. Wolff v. United States (U. S.) 113 Fed. 1001.

WORD.

See "Actionable Words"; "In a Word"; "In Words and Figures as Follows, To Wit"; "Precatory Words." All words, see "All."

A "word" is a combination of articulate sounds by which men communicate with each other. It must exist in speech before it can be signified in letters or characters. The impulses by which a word extends itself from the usage of one people to that of another, the laws of comparative philology by which a transliteration—when the elemental sounds of one language are signified by written signs unknown in the other—is explained and held to be accurate, and the arrangement of English letters which reproduce the word, are subject to the exclusive dominion of no man. Dadirrian v. Yacubian (U. S.) 72 Fed. 1010, 1013.

"Words" are the common signs that mankind make use of to declare their intentions to one another, and, when the words of a man express his meaning plainly, distinctly, and perfectly, there is no occasion to have recourse to any other means of interpretation. Lake County v. Rollins, 9 Sup. Ct. 651, 653, 130 U. S. 662, 32 L. Ed. 1060.

Words are merely the symbols parties to a contract employ to manifest their purpose, that it may be carried into execution. Morrison v. Baechtold, 48 Atl. 926, 930, 93 Md. 319.

Where the meaning of words and phrases has been ascertained in a statute, they are to be construed in the same sense when used in a subsequent statute. People v. Liscomb (N. Y.) 8 Hun, 760, 769, 770.

Figures and letters.

In enrolling a summons in a plea in abatement, it was said to be in the "words following," and it was objected to the plea that the summons as so enrolled contained words, figures, and letters instead of merely words. The court said: "The allegation in the plea is in accordance with the general forms in such cases, and, we think, sufficient." Smith v. Butler, 25 N. H. (5 Post.) 521, 524.

Written or printed words.

"Words," in 2 Hill's Code, p. 648, § 17, providing that a libel is a defamation of a person made public by any words, etc., means either written or printed words, and does not include words spoken orally. State v. McArthur, 32 Pac. 367, 368, 5 Wash. 558.

WORDS OF ART.

The term "head of water," as occurring in a contract calling for water power to be used in propelling a mill, being a technical term in hydraulics, constitutes "words of art," and as such may be properly explained by an expert witness. Cargill v. Thompson, 59 N. W. 638, 640, 57 Minn. 534.

WORDS OF CONDITION.

In 4 Kent, 126, Chancellor Kent defines a distinction between "words of limitation" and "condition" as follows: "Words of limitations mark the period which is to determine the estate, but when words of condition render the estate liable to be defeated in the intermediate time, if the event expressed in the condition arises before the determination of the estate or completion of the period described by the limitation, the one specifies the utmost time of continuance, and the other marks some event which, if it takes place in the course of that time, will defeat the estate." Summit v. Yount, 9 N. E. 582, 583, 109 Ind. 506; Ludlow v. New York & H. R. Co. (N. Y.) 12 Barb. 440, 443.

WORDS OF DESCRIPTION.

As warranty, see "Warranty."

WORDS OF LIKE IMPORT.

Under a statute (Laws Ky. § 1540) providing that no nuncupative will shall be established when the value exceeds ten pounds, unless it be proved by two witnesses that the testator called on some person present to take notice or bear testimony that such was his will, or "words of like import," it was held that if the attention of the witnesses was so called to the subject by any form of words as to enable them to prove such purpose and intention, as well as the terms of the will, clearly and unequivocally, the requisitions of the statute embraced in the terms "or words of like import" were substantially complied with. Portwood v. Hunter, 46 Ky. (6 B. Mon.) 538, 539.

WORDS OF LIMITATION.

Words of condition distinguished, see "Words of Condition."

"Words of limitation" are such as do not give the estate imported by them originally to the heirs, etc., described, but only extend the ancestor's estate to an estate of inheritance descendible to the heirs described. Ball v. Payne (Va.) 6 Rand. 73, 75.

Words of limitation mark the period which is to determine the estate. It specifies the utmost time of continuance of the estate. In a devise of land by a husband to his wife so long as she remains his widow, the words "so long as she remains his widow" are used as "words of limitation," marking the duration of the estate, and not "words of condition." Summit v. Yount, 9 N. E. 582, 583, 109 Ind. 506.

WORDS OF PURCHASE.

"Words of purchase" are such as give the estate originally to the heirs, etc., and not through the inheritance of, or by descent from, the ancestor. Ball v. Payne (Va.) 6 Rand. 73, 75.

WORDS TO THAT EFFECT.

See "Effect."

WORK.

See "Additional Work"; "In Work"; "Iron Works"; "New Work"; "Ordinary Work"; "Team Work."
All work within the county, see "All."
Working the quarry, see "Quarry."

"Work," as used in Acts 23d Gen. Assem. c. 14, § 6, providing for the issue of bonds in payment of street improvements from time to time as the work progresses, will be held to designate labor, or the product of labor and material combined, required to make the improvement, as separate and distinct from the acts of the agents of the city preliminary to, and which terminate in, the formal execution of the contract. Eagle Mfg. Co. v. City of Davenport, 70 N. W. 707, 708, 101 Iowa, 493, 38 L. R. A. 480.

A city charter providing that, whenever any of the above-mentioned work (referring to street improvements) shall have been fully completed under authority of the ordinance, the city engineer or other officer having charge of the "work" shall compute the cost thereof and assess it at a special tax against the adjoining property fronting on the improvement, includes all the work done under the contract, and hence the assessment could not be made and the special tax bills enforced until the entire contract was completed. City of St. Louis, to the Use of McGrath, v. Clemens, 49 Mo. 552, 555.

The word "work," as used in a personal injury action, permitting the plaintiff to prove what was the work of brakemen, meant nothing else than "duty," in which sense the words are convertible terms and mean the same thing. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Bragonier, 7 N. E. 688, 693, 119 Ill. 51.

"Work," as used in Pen. Code, § 1039, providing that a misdemeanor is punishable by a fine not to exceed $1,000, "imprisonment not to exceed six months, to work in the chain-gang on the public works, or such other works as the county authorities may employ the chain-gang," does not necessarily mean hard labor, and a sentence on a conviction under such section of the Code to work at hard labor is inappropriate. Screen v. State, 33 S. E. 393, 394, 107 Ga. 715.

"The word 'work' may comprehend all labor, whether corporeal or mental, but in its popular sense it is applied solely to bodily labor, or that in which such labor is the principal ingredient." It is so used in the provision of the New York City charter requiring the various departments to advertise for sealed proposals for contracts for all work involving an expenditure exceeding $250; hence such provision does not apply to contracts for professional services. People v. Flagg (N. Y.) 5 Abb. Prac. 232, 235.

One who erects a shanty in which is put an illicit still, but who did not "work" in or about the distillery after the still was set up, does not come under U. S. Rev. St. § 3279, providing that "every person who works in any distillery" on which no sign is placed and kept shall be fined. United States v. Burgess (U. S.) 33 Fed. 833.

An application for insurance on a mill stated that no watch was kept in or about the building, but that the mill was examined "thirty minutes after work"; and to another question it was stated that the hours of work extended from 5 o'clock a. m. to 8:30 p. m.; "sometimes extra work will be done in the night." Held, that the words "examined thirty minutes after work" related as well to the time succeeding the termination of "extra work" as the time at which the work was generally stopped in the evening, and hence assured was obligated to examine the building 30 minutes after the termination of such extra work, as well as after the general closing hour. Houghton v. Manufacturers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 49 Mass (8 Metc.) 114, 125, 41 Am. Dec. 489.

"Work," within the meaning of a statute authorizing a municipal subscription to a railroad company, but requiring that corporate bonds shall not be delivered until an amount of work shall be done on the railroad in the town equal in value to the amount of the bonds, will be construed not as referring to earth work alone, but as embracing all that enters into the construction of the roadbed complete for cars. Illinois Midland R. Co. v. Town of Barnett, 85 Ill. 313, 316.

A contract to sell wheat, part of which was threshed and in the granary, and the remainder of which was in a course of preparation for the market, was a contract of sale within the meaning of the statute of frauds, rather than a contract for work and labor, though it was also agreed that the vendor should clean the wheat already threshed and thresh out the remainder, and within six days deliver the total amount. Downs v. Ross (N. Y.) 23 Wend. 270, 272.

The terms "work" and "working," as used in the chapter relating to road superintendents, includes the opening and laying out of new roads, widening, constructing, draining, repairing, and everything else that may be done in and about any road. Rev. St. Tex. 1895, art. 4784.

A power of attorney which, in consideration of a prescribed royalty, appoints a party sole agent for the purpose of "working and developing the business of said patents," does not authorize a sale of the patents. Johnson R. Signal Co. v. Union Switch & Signal Co. (U. S.) 59 Fed. 20, 23.

A power of attorney which, in consideration of a prescribed royalty, appointed a party sole agent to "work and develop" the business of such patents, does not give the agent power to grant an exclusive license which would transfer substantially the entire interest in the patent, but it does authorize him to grant nonexclusive licenses to manufacture and sell. Union Switch & Signal Co. v. Johnson R. Signal Co. (U. S.) 61 Fed. 940, 943, 10 C. C. A. 176.

In mechanic's lien laws.

The term "work," in a mechanic's lien statute authorizing liens for work, does not include loss of time for men, or delay, risk, and inconvenience to contract work. Lee v. Brayton, 26 Atl. 256, 18 R. I. 232.

The word "work," as used in Gen. St. 1883, § 31, providing a lien for whoever shall do work or furnish material for the construction or repair of a building, includes labor of every kind, whether skilled or unskilled; and therefore a superintendent of the construction of a building performs work, and is therefore entitled to a lien therefor. Fischer v. Hanna, 47 Pac. 303, 309, 8 Colo. App. 471.

For the purpose of the act relating to mechanics' liens, the term "work" shall be deemed to include labor of every kind, whether skilled or unskilled. Mills' Ann. St. Colo. 1891, § 2867.

Same—Architect's services.

The statute giving all persons, who perform work for or about the construction of a building, a lien thereon for their services, cannot be construed to include the drawings and specifications for such building made by an architect. The drawing of plans or specifications of itself is not "work," within the meaning of the statutes, in the ordinary sense of the term. Price v. Kirk (Pa.) 13 Phila. 497, 498, 90 Pa. 47, 49.

Code, § 318, providing that a person who has done "work or labor" on a building or improved land may have a lien on the building and lot of land on which it is erected, should be construed to include the services of an architect in preparation of drawings, plans, and specifications for a building, and in superintending the erection thereof. Hughes v. Torgerson, 11 South. 209, 96 Ala. 346, 16 L. R. A. 600, 38 Am. St. Rep. 105.

"Work done," as used in Act June 15, 1836, giving a lien for work done or materials furnished for or about the construction of a building, means any work which contributed to the beauty, substance, and convenience of the edifice; and hence an architect making plans and drawings for a building, and who oversees and directs its erection, is entitled to a lien. Bank of Pennsylvania v. Gries, 35 Pa. (11 Casey) 423, 426.

In mining law.

"Work," within the meaning of a federal statute in reference to the assessment work requisite to hold a mine, includes work done outside of the claim, if done as a purpose or means of developing or prospecting the claim, as in the case of tunnels. Harrington v. Chambers, 1 Pac. 362, 3 Utah, 94.

A power to "manage and work" a mine will not be held to include power to mortgage it, and is inconsistent with the idea of imposing a personal charge on the principal, except for such expenses as may be incurred in its management. Golinsky v. Allison, 46 Pac. 295, 296, 114 Cal. 458.

"Work," as used in Const. Choctaw Nation, art. 7, § 18, providing that any citizen of the nation who may find any mine shall have the exclusive right to work the same, means that the person who finds the mineral may extract it from the earth—may mine it. McCurtain v. Grady, 38 S. W. 65, 70, 1 Ind. T. 107.

A covenant in a lease of a mine to "work the mine" is to be construed to mean work the mine during the term of lease if minerals remain therein, although it cannot be profitably worked, but it cannot be construed to require a working thereof if the mine becomes entirely exhausted. Walker v. Tucker, 70 Ill. 527, 542.

"Work," within the meaning of a statute requiring a certain amount of work on a mining claim in order to hold it, does not include the services of a watchman looking after buildings erected to work a mine, though the mine is idle at the time. Not all expenditures made with a view of working a mine would be considered work expended upon the mine; for instance, work done at a distance from the mine in the construction of a mill. Altoona Quicksilver Min. Co. v. Integral Quicksilver Min. Co., 45 Pac. 1047, 1049, 114 Cal. 100.

The term "work or labor," in a statute giving a lien for work and labor in mines, includes the services of the foreman of a mine, who is employed to boss the men at work in the mine, keep their time, and give them orders for their pay. Capron v. Strout, 11 Nev. 304, 310.

Sess. Laws 1872, p. 147, § 4, which declares that all miners, laborers, and others who work or labor, to the amount of $25 or more, in or upon any mine lode or deposit, shall have a lien, etc., includes the work of the superintendent in planning and superintending development work upon the mines, and in planning and supervising the erection of the mills and machinery, but it would not include the work of such superintendent in keeping the books and disbursing the funds of the mining company. Rara Avis G. & S. Mining Co. v. Bouscher, 12 Pac. 433, 434, 9 Colo. 385.

In Sunday laws.

In construing a statute declaring that "there shall be no servile labor or working on the Lord's Day, except works of necessity or charity," the court said: "I consider that this provision treats 'servile labor' as one distinct class of what is forbidden, and 'working,' without the adjective, as another; that it has adopted the latter phrase as the most comprehensive that the language can supply to cover the action and employment of mind or body in the pursuits of business." Campbell v. International Assur. Soc. of London, 17 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Bosw.) 298, 316.

The terms "traveling," "servile labor," or "working," within the meaning of a statute prohibiting such acts on a Sabbath, do not include the act of arbitrators in making an award. Story v. Elliot (N. Y.) 8 Cow. 27, 30, 18 Am. Dec. 423.

The hiring of a horse on Sunday to attend a funeral is not a violation of a statute prohibiting work and business, except works of necessity or charity, on Sunday. Horne v. Meakin, 115 Mass. 326, 331.

Rev. St. c. 118, § 1, declares that no person shall do any "work, business, or labor of his secular calling, to the disturbance of others, on the first day of the week, commonly called the 'Lord's Day.'" Held, that the phrase "work, business, or labor of his secular calling" meant any secular labor, whether within one's regular, ordinary calling or not. George v. George, 47 N. H. 27, 38.

Same—Giving promissory note.

"Labor, business, or work," within the meaning of the statute prohibiting any labor, business, or work, except works of necessity and charity, on the Lord's Day, includes the giving of a promissory note on Sunday in consideration of articles purchased on that day. Towle v. Larrabee, 26 Me. (13 Shep.) 464, 466.

The making and delivery, on a secular day, of a promissory note dated and to take effect on a subsequent Lord's Day, is not "work or labor" prohibited by the Massachusetts Statutes for the observance of the Lord's Day. Stacy v. Kemp, 97 Mass. 166, 168.

WORK EVENLY.

A warranty that cattle will work evenly on the yoke is broken if they will not so work when driven by a person of ordinary skill in the management of oxen. Woodruff v. Weeks, 28 Conn. 328, 329.

WORK HORSE.

"Work horse," as used in the statutes exempting work horses and work beasts from execution, means "an animal of the horse kind which may be rendered fit for service, as well as one of mature age and in actual use." It is synonymous with "work beasts" as used in the section. Winfrey v. Zimmerman, 71 Ky. (8 Bush) 587, 588.

Code, § 2462, exempting from levy and sale a "work horse" belonging to the debtor, means one that "performs the common drudgery of the homestead, as to haul wood, to draw the plow, to carry the family to church, etc., either under the saddle or in traces. It is not necessary that he shall have performed this service, if he has performed a part of it, and is intended as such a drudge. If the only horse belonging to the head of a family was used to ride to mill, to carry the children to school, or any other equally necessary or convenient service, it is a work horse. If a horse is kept in the prosecution of a business or livelihood outside of the comforts, the wants, and requirements of the family and of its several members, it is not a work horse. The statute does not withhold its protection unless the chief or main employment of the horse shall be in the service of the family; nor is it necessary that any service shall have been rendered to the family if there be a bona fide intention that the horse shall be put to such use." Allman v. Gann, 29 Ala. 240, 242.

A stallion kept by a farmer for breeding purposes is not exempt from forced sale under Code, § 3072, as one of a team by which the farmer habitually earns his living. Smith v. Dayton, 62 N. W. 650, 653, 94 Iowa, 102.

WORK IN PROGRESS.

See "In Progress."

WORK OF DRAINAGE.

The expression "work of drainage," as used in Act Feb. 14, 1871, § 9, relating to the draining and reclaiming of certain swamp lands, providing that all property, not money, so received, should be held in trust for the payment of a certain company, and ultimately for the benefit of New Orleans, should the same not be required for the work of drainage, are not restricted to the property required for the work of drainage under the system of drainage contemplated by the act, so as to leave all property not in accordance with that system to be held in trust for the payment of the debts of the company named. Peake v. City of New Orleans (U. S.) 60 Fed. 127, 130, 8 C. C. A. 516.

WORK OF NECESSITY.

See "Necessity."

WORK OXEN.

The use of the word "work" in a statute exempting a yoke of work oxen does not operate to give the statute a different meaning than if it had been merely an exemption of a yoke of oxen. The exemption covers cattle which are being kept and intended by the owner for oxen, though only two years old and having never been worked, except yoked together. Nelson v. Fightmaster, 44 Pac. 213, 215, 4 Okl. 33.

WORK WELL.

The term "work well," in a contract warranting a harvest machine to work well, includes the draft of the machine, and a side draft or too great a draft may constitute a breach thereof. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Russell, 53 N. W. 310, 311, 86 Iowa, 556.

WORKED.

The term "worked," as applied to marble, implies something more than the sawing of it into slabs. It implies that the thing is fashioned or prepared for some general or particular use. Bancroft v. Peters, 4 Mich. 619, 625.

The term "worked," as used in Rev. St. p. 520, providing that every public highway laid out, that shall not be opened and worked within six years after being laid out, shall cease to be a road, does not require the road to be worked in every part, but it must be worked sufficiently to be passable for public travel. Beckwith v. Whalen, 70 N. Y. 430, 435.

WORKHOUSE.

Workhouses and jails, being both used for the purpose of penal confinement, are not unfrequently regarded as identical, but they are entirely distinct in their origin, object, and government. Workhouses were originally designed for the relief and employment of the poor. They were maintained by the parishes and under the charge of the church wardens and overseers of the poor of the parish. Jac. Law Dict. "Poor." The first public institution of workhouses in the state of New Jersey, excepting those created by special acts for particular towns, was under the act of 1790. They were authorized to be built by the board of chosen freeholders of the several counties, and put under their superintendence and government. They were made a place of confinement for persons sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor, for disorderly persons, and for disobedient and intemperate slaves or servants. State v. Ellis, 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 219, 220.

As used in Sess. Laws 1868, c. 26, subc. 4, § 3, subsec. 36, authorizing the city to provide for punishment of offenders against city ordinances by imprisonment in any workhouse established by the city, the word "workhouse" has a well-defined, popular significance. It is a place or prison where persons convicted of minor offenses and misdemeanors may be confined and kept at labor. Hence an ordinance establishing a House of the Good Shepherd as a workhouse for female prisoners is void. Farmer v. City of St. Paul, 67 N. W. 990, 992, 65 Minn. 176, 83 L. R. A. 199.

A workhouse is a "public building," within the meaning of St. 34 Geo. III, c. 98, providing that public buildings shall be free from all parliamentary and parochial taxes, etc. Justices of Bedfordshire v. Bedford Improvement Com'rs, 14 Eng. Law & Eq. 424, 425.

WORKING CAPITAL.

The working capital of a corporation is a sum or fund to be devoted to the development of the corporate property, and usually raised by setting aside for sale, at some established price, a portion of the capital stock. Kohler v. Agassiz, 33 Pac. 741, 743, 99 Cal. 9.

WORKING CATTLE.

"Working cattle" is synonymous with "steers." Wessels v. Territory, 1 Kan. (Dass. Ed.) 525, 527.

A statute exempting from attachment one pair of working cattle includes a bull used by the owner as a beast of burden, when the owner has no other working cattle. Bowzey v. Newbegin, 48 Me. 410.

WORKING CONTRACTS.

The term "working contracts" is sometimes used to designate what is properly known as a "building contract"—that is, a contract for furnishing work or materials in erecting buildings, etc., which may become the basis of a mechanic's lien. Carey-Lombard Lumber Co. v. Jones, 58 N. E. 847, 849, 187 Ill. 203.

WORKING DAYS.

See "Weather Working Days."

The expression "working days" has "in commerce and jurisprudence a settled and definite meaning. It means days as they succeed each other, exclusive of Sundays and holidays." When such term is used in a charter party allowing so many working days for loading, it excludes holidays and Sundays. Pedersen v. Eugster (U. S.) 14 Fed. 422; Field v. Chase (N. Y.) Lalor's Supp. 50, 52.

The term "working days," as ordinarily used in charter parties, excludes Sundays and holidays, but not rainy nor stormy days. Hagerman v. Norton (U. S.) 105 Fed. 996, 997, 46 C. C. A. 1 (citing Wood v. Keyser [U. S.] 84 Fed. 688, 692); Sorensen v. Keyser (U. S.) 52 Fed. 163, 164, 2 C. C. A. 650; The Cyprus (U. S.) 20 Fed. 144, 145.

"Working days," within the usage of the salt trade, in reference to the number of working days to be allowed to unload a cargo of salt, does not include rainy days, as salt is not removable without damage during such weather. Houge v. Woodruff (U. S.) 19 Fed. 186, 188.

WORKING HOURS.

A charter party providing that payment of hire should cease for any damage that prevents the working of the steamer for more than 24 "working hours" means those hours during which work was ordinarily done about the business to which the clause relates, and, if it was the usual practice of the port to work day and night consecutively during good weather, the words should be construed to mean consecutive hours during such weather. The Principia (U. S.) 34 Fed. 667, 668.

A contract which gave to one party the right to draw through the gate of a reservoir dam, at any and all times during "working hours," a certain amount of water per second, would entitle the party to draw water during the night if required for the purpose of running his mill. Phoenix Cotton Mfg. Co. v. Hazen, 118 Mass. 350, 354.

A contract between the separate owners of mills and of a dam and reservoir, built for the purpose of supplying water to the mills, providing that one of them might have the right to use water from the reservoir, but that he should not draw therefrom at other times than "during working hours," meant the usual working hours of the mill on that stream; and the party, having subsequently changed the mill from a cotton mill to a paper mill, which ran day and night, was not entitled to use water during the night. Binney v. Phoenix Cotton Mfg. Co., 128 Mass. 496, 499.

WORKING LAY DAYS.

In the absence of any custom to the contrary, Sundays are computed in the calculation of lay days at the port of discharge of a vessel (Brown v. Johnson, 10 Mees. & W. 331); but, where a contract specifies "working lay days," Sundays and holidays are excluded in computation (2 Bouv. Law Dict. 663). Brooks v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 481, 483.

WORKING TEAM.

"Working team," as used in a statute exempting the working team of a debtor from execution, etc., includes a horse or other animal trained and used by the judgment debtor for his work or service, without its being associated with any harness or trappings or other articles of property. Finnin v. Malloy, 33 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Jones & S.) 382, 392.

WORKING TOOLS.

Laws 1859, p. 343, c. 134, exempting "working tools" from execution, means such tools as are necessary to the debtor's business, and without the possession of which he is powerless to carry on his calling. As thus construed, the term "working tools" includes a net and boat, the property of a fisherman, who used such boat and net to support his family. Sammis v. Smith (N. Y.) 1 Thomp. & C. 444, 446.

A threshing machine is not exempt from execution, under Act 1842, as a working tool. Ford v. Johnson (N. Y.) 34 Barb. 364, 365.

Pub. St. c. 209, § 4, exempting from attachment the "working tools of a debtor," meant only such utensils as the debtor is accustomed to use in manual work or labor in his usual occupation. It would not extend to a library of lawbooks. In re Church, 9 Atl. 761, 15 R. L. 245.

"Working tools and team," within the meaning of the statute exempting from execution the working tools and team of a debtor, includes a buggy wagon used by a physician in visiting his patients. Van Buren v. Loper (N. Y.) 29 Barb. 388, 389.

The term "working tools," in a statute exempting working tools from execution, does not ordinarily include a watch, but, when the employment of the debtor is such that a watch is necessary to the prosecution of the business by which he earns a livelihood, it is included within the meaning of the term. Bitting v. Vandenburg (N. Y.) 17 How. Prac. 80, 83. See, also, Serven v. Lowerre, 23 N. Y. Supp. 1052, 1058, 3 Misc. Rep. 113.

WORKINGMAN.

The Century Dictionary defines "workingman" as a laboring man or one who earns his living by manual labor. A bookkeeper is not a "workingman," within Laws 1897, c. 415, § 8, preferring the wages of workingmen of insolvent corporations. Cochran v. A. S. Baker Co., 61 N. Y. Supp. 724, 30 Misc. Rep. 48.

"Workingmen," as used in Gen. St. p. 3678, §§ 1, 2, 5, enacting that associations of workingmen may adopt, for their protection, labels and trade-marks announcing that goods manufactured by members thereof are so manufactured, has a very broad significance—a significance perhaps broader than fairly belongs to it—and, conceding it to include all who work, whether with their hands or their minds, cannot be held to embrace partnerships, some of whose members contributed capital only, or corporations, engaged in manufacturing or trading. Schmalz v. Wooley, 39 Atl. 539, 542, 56 N. J. Eq. 649.

WORKINGS.

The term "workings," as used in the act relating to mines and mining, includes all the excavated parts of a mine, those abandoned as well as the places actually at work. P. & L. Dig. Laws Pa. 1894, vol. 2, col. 3110, § 193.

WORKMAN.

See "Day Workman"; "No Workman."
See, also, "Workingman."

A "workman" is defined by Webster to be a man employed in labor, whether in tillage or manufacture; a worker; hence, especially, a skillful artificer or laborer. The Century Dictionary gives the definition as a man who is employed in mental labor, whether skilled or unskilled; a worker; a toiler; specifically, an artificer; a mechanic or artisan; a handicraftsman. Bouvier defines a "workman," generally, as "one who labors; one who is employed in some business for another"; and that is the meaning of the word in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b, 30 Stat. 563 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3447], according to priority of payment out of bankruptcy estates to wages due workmen. In re Scanlan (U. S.) 97 Fed. 26, 27, 3 Am. Bankr. R. 202.

The essential idea conveyed by the word "workman," as commonly used, is that of a subordinate whose occupation has nothing to do with correspondence or books of account, but requires him to use his hands to a suitable degree in manufacturing, or building, or in similar pursuits. He may be skilled or unskilled; he may or may not be aided by tools or machinery; but he does not belong to the same class as the man that is neither making goods nor erecting buildings nor accomplishing similar results, but is engaged exclusively in the sale of a finished product. In re Greenwald (U. S.) 99 Fed. 705.

The words "workman, clerk, or servant," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b, 30 Stat. 563 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3447], providing as to priority of payment of certain claims, must be construed to mean what they are popularly understood to mean, and do not include a claim based upon the use of building, ground, machinery, furnishings, and the labor of employés. In re Rose (U. S.) 1 Am. Bankr. R. 68, 76.

Contractor.

A person contracting to do a certain amount of work for a certain sum of money cannot recover a greater sum for the reason that he has worked over eight hours a day in performing such work. Billingsley v. Marshall County Oom'rs, 49 Pac. 329, 5 Kan. App. 435.

General manager or president.

Ordinarily a "workman" is understood to be one who labors; one who is employed to do business for another; a laborer; one who is employed in labor. As used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b, 30 Stat. 563 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3447], according to priority of payment out of bankrupt estates to wages due to workmen, it doubtless means a workman laboring for some person who sustains to him the relation of an employer or master, and does not include the general manager of a mercantile corporation, who has supreme authority in managing and directing its daily business affairs, and who is also a stockholder and director. In re Grubbs-Wiley Grocery Co. (U. S.) 96 Fed. 183, 184.

The president of a business corporation, who has supreme authority in managing its affairs, and receives a salary of $700 a year, is not a "workman, clerk, or servant," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b, 30 Stat. 563 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3447], giving priority of payment out of bankrupt estates to wages due to such persons. In re Carolina Cooperage Co. (U. S.) 96 Fed. 950, 953, 3 Am. Bankr. R. 154.

Miner.

"Workman," as used in Hurd's Rev. St. 1899, p. 1167, requiring every owner, agent, or operator of coal mines to keep a supply of timber for use as props and cap pieces, and deliver them as required, so that a workman may secure the workings for his safety, should be construed to include a miner opening an entry with a high and dangerous roof, for which he is being paid by reason thereof a price exceeding the scale fixed by the union to which he belongs. Mt. Olive & S. Coal Co. v. Herbeck, 60 N. E. 105, 106, 190 Ill. 39.

Officer or employé on salary.

"Workmen," as used in Sess. Laws 1891, c. 114, making it unlawful for laborers, workmen, mechanics, or other persons employed by the state of Kansas to work more than eight hours per day, does not include an officer or employé for whom an annual salary has been specifically named and appropriated by the Legislature. State v. Martindale, 27 Pac. 852, 853, 47 Kan. 147 (cited and approved in Billingsley v. Marshall County Com'rs, 49 Pac. 329, 5 Kan. App. 435).

Teamster.

The term "mechanics, workmen, and laborers employed by the company," in an act incorporating a slate company, which provides that the stockholders shall be individually liable for debts due mechanics, workmen, and laborers employed by the company, does not include a teamster using his own team and contributing his own time in hauling slate for the company for certain compensation, nor of a wagonmaker repairing wagons for the company, as the liability cast on the stockholders was with a view to an additional security to the operatives of the establishment, who were the producers—the life of it. It is generally only to such that liens are extended in the mining districts. Moyer v. Pennsylvania Slate Co., 71 Pa. (21 P. F. Smith) 293, 298.

Traveling salesman.

A creditor of a bankrupt employed by the bankrupt as a traveling salesman at an annual salary is not a "workman," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b, 30 Stat. 563 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3447], according to priority of payment out of bankrupt estates to wages due to workmen. In re Scanlan (U. S.) 97 Fed. 26, 27; In re Greenwald (U. S.) 99 Fed. 705.

WORKMANLIKE MANNER.

See "Good and Workmanlike Manner."

The court in instructing the jury, in an action against a county for injuries received on a highway, that the law puts on the county commissioners "the duty of constructing bridges on the public highways across streams in a reasonably safe and workmanlike manner," and "it was the duty of the defendant, in constructing the bridge, to do so in a workmanlike manner, and so maintain it that persons might drive over it with safety, and, if necessary to make it ordinarily safe, to put up guard rails," did not impose on the county a higher degree of care or diligence than does the law, and it was evident that the court meant that the duty imposed on the county was that of constructing and maintaining the bridge in a reasonably safe condition for travelers to pass over it with safety, and was not error. Bibb County v. Ham, 35 S. E. 656, 657, 110 Ga. 340.

"Workmanlike manner," in a contract requiring timber to be cut in a workmanlike manner, means the customary way of cutting timber in the locality where the contract is to be performed. Shores Lumber Co. v. Stitt, 78 N. W. 562, 564, 102 Wis. 450.

"Workmanlike manner," in a lease providing that the tenant should cultivate the farm in a workmanlike manner, means in a farmerlike manner, or as good farmers usually do. Auginbaugh v. Coppenheffer, 55 Pa. (5 P. F. Smith) 347, 349.

"Workmanlike manner," in a contract providing that lumber shall be manufactured in a good and workmanlike manner, includes lumber manufactured by a portable mill. Grice v. Noble, 26 N. W. 688, 689, 59 Mich. 515.

A building contract reciting that the work shall be done in a "plain, substantial, and workmanlike manner" implies that the work shall be done perfectly for the character of the job contemplated. Smith v. Clark, 58 Mo. 145, 146.

A contract to construct a house in a workmanlike manner is in legal effect a contract that the work shall be done with sufficient skill to conform to the received rules of the art, and so as to proximately effect the desired end. Somerby v. Tappan (Ohio) Wright, 229, 230.

A condition in a lease of a coal mine requiring the lessee to work the mine in a sound, safe, and workmanlike manner is broken by allowing the mine to fill with water and remain in that condition for months, if the result is injurious to the mine. Consolidated Coal Co. v. Schaefer, 25 N. E. 788, 135 Ill. 210.

WORKS.

See "Wagon Work."

A contract for the sale of a lot, one-half the price to be paid one year after a specified manufacturing company shall have its main building under roof, and the balance in two years from that time, contained a condition avoiding the contract if the vendor should fail to cause the company to transfer its works from another city and locate them in the addition in which the lot was situated. Held, that the contract did not depend for its validity on the condition that the factory should be put in actual operation as a going concern, but only on the removal of the plant and the erection of the building specified. In discussing the meaning of the word "works" used in the contract, the court says: "The word 'works' is often used as meaning an establishment for manufacturing or for performing industrial labor of any sort, generally in the plural, including all the buildings, machinery, etc., used in the required operations, as ironworks. The word was, we think, used in this sense here; that is to say, meaning the buildings and machines of the plant." South St. Joseph Land Co. v. Pitt, 21 S. W. 449, 450, 114 Mo. 135.

The words "works, mines, and manufacturing," in the statute preferring claims of laborers against the owners, etc., of any works, mines, or manufacturing, import, ex vi termini, complete and independent branches of business and of a fixed and permanent character, as opposed to a temporary employment that is merely incidental to any particular branch of business. The business of cutting sawlogs and driving them to the place of manufacture is not such as is contemplated by the act. Appeal of Pardee, 100 Pa. 408, 412, 13 Wkly. Notes Cas. 201, 203.

"Works," as used in St. 1888, c. 270, § 1, authorizing actions for the death of employés, caused "by reason of any defect in the condition of the ways, works, or machinery connected with or used in the business of the employer," means existing and completed works, and not those in the course of construction. Conroy v. Inhabitants of Clinton, 33 N. E. 525, 158 Mass. 318.

The word "works," as used to describe the works of a manufacturing company, means an establishment for manufacturing or for performing industrial labor. Hanna v. South St. Joseph Land Co., 128 Mo. 1, 12, 28 S. W. 652.

Insurance.

Dubuque City Charter, c. 210, § 7, par. 18, authorizes the city to license, tax, and regulate auctioneers, traveling merchants, sporting houses, bankers, dealers in money, and other evidences of indebtedness, and works of all kinds. Held, that the words "works of all kinds" did not include the business of insurance agents or insurance brokers, and hence an ordinance prohibiting persons from soliciting insurance without payment of the license tax was not authorized under such charter by such provision. State v. Smith, 31 Iowa, 493, 496.

Railroad, rolling stock, etc.

"Works," as used in St. 6 Geo. IV, c. 77, § 34, imposing rates for the lighting of the town of Chesterfield with gas, on the tenants or occupiers of all houses, warehouses, shops, cellars, vaults, stables, coachhouses, counting houses, brewhouses and all buildings, erections, works, tenements, etc., applies to a line of railway within the limits of the town, although such a work was not contemplated at the passing of the act. Reg. v. Midland Ry. Co., 30 Eng. Law & Eq. 399, 400.

The word "works" is one of very extensive signification. In military engineering it means fortress, fortifications, ramparts, bastion, and the like. In civil engineering it is often applied to depots, engine houses, bridges, embankments, and other structures essential to the franchise and the proper conduct of a railway or other work of public improvement. City of Richmond v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (Va.) 21 Gratt. 604, 608.

The term "works," as used in a contract, referring to all works, materials, and plant in use in or about the construction or operation of a railroad, etc., does not necessarily include rolling stock; in fact, rolling stock is not usually referred to as "works." Central Trust Co. v. Condon (U. S.) 67 Fed. 84, 92, 14 C. C. A. 314.

WORKS OF ART.

Works of art may be divided into four classes: (1) The "fine arts," properly so called, intended solely for ornamental purposes, and including paintings in oil and water upon canvas, plaster, or other material, and original statuary of marble, stone, or bronze. (2) Minor objects of art, intended also for ornamental purposes, such as statuettes, vases, plaques, drawings, etchings, and the thousand and one articles which pass under the general name of "bric-a-brac," and are susceptible of an indefinite reproduction from the original. (3) Objects of art which serve primarily an ornamental, and incidentally a useful, purpose, such as painted or stained glass windows, tapestry, paper hangings, etc. (4) Objects primarily designed for a useful purpose, but made ornamental to please the eye and gratify the taste, such as ornamented clocks, the higher grade of carpets, curtains, gas fixtures, and household and table furniture. United States v. Perry, 13 Sup. Ct. 28, 28, 146 U. S. 71, 36 L. Ed. 890.

WORKS OF INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT.

See "Internal Improvement."

WORKSHOP.

As shop, see "Shop."

Under the express provisions of Laws 1893, p. 99, the words "manufacturing establishment, factory, or workshop," wherever used in such act, which declares that no female shall be employed in any manufacturing establishment, factory, or workshop, etc., more than eight hours in any one day, etc., shall be construed to mean any place where goods or products are manufactured, or repaired, cleaned, or sorted, in whole or in part, for sale or for wages. Ritchie v. People, 40 N. E. 454, 455, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315.

The term "workshop," in the charter of a railroad company providing that the real estate held by the company for workshop location should be exempt from taxation, was construed to embrace foundries, engine houses, depots, machine shops, necessary offices, and all the usual appliances for the manufacture and repair of engines and other stock required for the operation of the road. Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Commissioners of Alabama, 84 N. C. 504, 506.

80 Ohio Laws, p. 188, making it the duty of the owner of any factory or workshop more than two stories high to provide a convenient exit from the upper stories of the building, refers to the owner of the factory or workshop, and not the owner of the building in which such business is carried on. Lee v. Smith, 42 Ohio St. 458, 460, 51 Am. Rep. 839.

The term "workshop," as used in all laws relative to the employment of labor, shall mean any premises, room, or place, which is not a factory, wherein manual labor is exercised by way of trade or for purposes of gain in or incidental to a process of making, altering, repairing, ornamenting, finishing, or adapting for sale any article or part of an article, and to which or over which premises, room, or place the employer of the persons working therein has the right of access or control; but the exercise of such manual labor in a dwelling house or private room by the family dwelling therein, or by any of them, or, if a majority of the persons therein employed are members of such family, shall not of itself constitute such house or room a workshop within this definition. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 917, c. 106, § 8; Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 6650; Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 2264; Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 10,104.

WORLDLY.

The word "worldly," in statutes prohibiting worldly employment or business, is contrasted with "religious." Commonwealth v. Nesbit, 34 Pa. (10 Casey) 398, 409.

WORLDLY BUSINESS OR EMPLOYMENT.

In a statute prohibiting worldly employment or business, the word "worldly" is contrasted with "religious," and the worldly employments are prohibited for the sake of religious ones. Of course, therefore, no religious employments are forbidden. Hence funerals, as religious rites, are allowed on Sundays, and all the functions of undertakers, grave diggers, hearse and carriage drivers, and others, though such persons use such employment as a means of livelihood. Hence, also, while purely civil contracts are forbidden on Sundays, marriage is not so, because it is not purely a civil, but also a religious, contract. Commonwealth v. Nesbit, 34 Pa. (10 Casey) 398, 409.

The phrase "worldly employment or business," in a statute forbidding such employment on Sunday, renders void any transaction which, if performed on a week day, would be enforceable in a court of justice. Reeves v. Butcher, 31 N. J. Law (2 Vroom) 224, 226.

A statute forbidding the exercise of any worldly employment or business on Sunday includes driving an omnibus as a public conveyance. Johnston v. Commonwealth, 22 Pa. (10 Harris) 102, 108; Commonwealth v. Jandell (Pa.) 2 Grant, Cas. 506, 511.

In construing an Alabama statute prohibiting worldly business or employment, it was held in O'Donnell v. Sweeney, 5 Ala. 467, 468, 39 Am. Dec. 336, that the sale of a horse or any other chattel on Sunday, whether public or private, was "worldly business or employment," within the meaning of the statute. Tucker v. West, 29 Ark. 386, 390.

"Worldly employment or business," within the meaning of a statute prohibiting worldly employment or business on Sunday, includes the collection of a compulsory admission fee at the entrance gate on camp meeting grounds on Sunday. Commonwealth v. Weidner, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 437.

"Worldly business or employment," in the statute prohibiting worldly business or employment on Sunday, includes the hiring on Sunday of horses to be used on an excursion of pleasure, either on that or any other day. Berrill v. Smith (Pa.) 2 Miles, 402, 403.

WORLDLY ESTATE.

The words "worldly estate," as used in a will in which the testator said as to all his worldly estate he devised, bequeathed, and disposed of it in the manner following, though not of themselves sufficient to pass a fee, are always carried down to the devising clause to show the intention. Appeal of Miller, 6 Atl. 715, 716, 113 Pa. 459.

WORLDLY GOODS.

A will providing that testator's wife should enjoy all his "worldly goods" during her life, and that the testator's "worldly goods" consisted of household furniture, clothing, beds, bedding, money, and cattle, also debts to him, and likewise the house and lot which the testator occupied, cannot be construed to include the testator's real property other than the house and lot occupied by him, and the words must be restricted to mean personal property. Farish v. Cook, 78 Mo. 212, 219, 47 Am. Rep. 107.

Where testator gave his worldly goods in trust, his wife to have possession of all while she lived, until she married, and then gave to his eldest son, his heirs and assigns, £20 and a close of land, and to the rest of his children the residue of his worldly goods, the words "worldly goods" passed all the lands not specifically devised. Wright v. Shelton, 23 Eng. Law & Eq. 509, 510.

WORLDLY LABOR.

"Worldly labor," as used in a statute prohibiting persons from pursuing their ordinary callings or performing any worldly labor on Sunday, is not confined to a man's ordinary calling, but applies to any business he may carry on, whether it is his ordinary calling or not. Smith v. Sparrow, 4 Bing. 84.

WORN.

Tariff Act Aug. 30, 1842 (5 Stat. 549), levying a duty of 40 per cent. on articles "worn" by men, women, and children, means some article of clothing or some garment used or worn upon the person, as distinguished from an article carried or used about the person for convenience or ornament. "A hat, coat, or shoe is an article 'worn' in the proper sense of the word, and a cane, snuff-box, or a lady's fan is an article not worn, but carried." Richardson v. Lawrence (U. S.) 20 Fed. Cas. 717, 718.

WORRY.

"Worry," as used in statutes providing that any one finding a dog, not on the premises of its owner, worrying, wounding, or killing any sheep, may kill the dog, means, "to run after; to chase; to bark at." Johnson v. McConnell, 22 Pac. 219, 221, 80 Cal. 545.

"Worrying" implies chasing or barking. It is impossible to conceive how a dog can worry chickens in any other way than by running after, chasing, or barking at them. Marshall v. Blackshire, 44 Iowa, 475, 477.

"Worrying" does not imply tearing with the teeth, and, if a dog pursues and barks at the sheep, it is a "worrying," under the statute. Campbell v. Brown (Pa.) 1 Grant, Cas. 82, 83.

WORSHIP.

See "Place of Worship"; "Public Worship"; "Religious Worship"; "Stated Worship."

"Worship" is defined by Webster as "the act of paying honor to the Supreme Being; religious reverence or homage; adoration paid to God, or a being viewed as God." Worship may be that of an individual, and for that reason, if not for others, the definition of the word is not sufficiently comprehensive to be accepted as the definition of the words "public worship," as used in a statute exempting property used for public worship from taxation; and an association formed to promote growth in grace and Christian fellowship expressly by and for young men, and to seek out and aid worthy poor, was not an association formed for purposes of religious worship. In re Walker, 66 N. E. 144, 146, 200 Ill. 566 (citing Hamsher v. Hamsher, 132 Ill. 273, 22 N. E. 1123, 8 L. R. A. 556).

"Worship" includes any and every mode of worshipping Almighty God. Webster has defined it as "the act of paying divine homage to the Supreme Being; religious reverence and homage; adoration paid to God, or a being viewed as God. Worship of God is an eminent part of religion, and prayer is the chief part of religious worship." Worcester defines it as "adoration; a religious act of reverence; homage paid to the Supreme Being, or by heathen nations to their deities. Worship consists in the performance of all those external acts and observance of all those rites and ceremonies in which men engage with a professed and sole view of honoring God. Honor; respect; civil deference." The Imperial Dictionary defines it as "chiefly and eminently an act of paying divine honors to the Supreme Being; reverence and homage paid to Him in religious exercises, consisting in adoration, confession, prayer, thanksgiving, and the like." The reading of the Bible in the public schools is an act of "worship," as such term is used in the Constitution. State v. District Board, 44 N. W. 967, 979, 76 Wis. 177, 7 L. R. A. 330, 20 Am. St. Rep. 41.

The term "worship," in Const. art. 1, § 4, providing that all persons have the natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences, and also in the second provision of section 4 of the Enabling Act, which provides that perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and no inhabitant of said state shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship, does not apply to the exercise of the art of healing for compensation, whether exacted as a fee or expected as a gratuity. State v. Buswell, 58 N. W. 728, 729, 40 Neb. 158, 24 L. R. A. 68.

WORSHIPPING ASSEMBLY.

An assemblage of persons for the organization and conduct of a Sunday school where the Bible and the precepts of religion are taught is a "worshipping assembly," in the sense of the Tennessee statute which makes the willful disturbance of public worship indictable. Martin v. State, 65 Tenn. (6 Baxt.) 234. See, also, State v. Stuth, 39 Pac. 665, 666, 11 Wash. 423, sustaining a conviction for disturbing a Salvation Army meeting.

WORSTED.

Worsted is material made out of wool by combing, whereby it becomes a distinct article, and one well known in commerce. Elliott v. Swartwout, 85 U. S. (10 Pet.) 137, 150, 9 L. Ed. 373.

"Worsted stuff goods," as used in Tariff Act May 22, 1824, c. 136 (4 Stat. 25), includes only the lighter sort of goods composed wholly of worsted, such as bombazettes, plaids, bindings, etc. United States v. Clarke (U. S.) 25 Fed. Cas. 456, 457.

By the tariff acts of 1890 and 1894, the distinction made in the previous tariff laws between "woolens" and "worsteds" was no longer recognized; and, as worsteds are in fact made of wool, the provision in paragraph 297 of the act of 1894, declaring that the reduction of rates therein provided for on "manufactures of wool" should not take effect until January 1, 1895, included worsted goods. United States v. Klumpp, 169 U. S. 209, 212, 18 Sup. Ct. 311, 42 L. Ed. 720.

WORTH.

All I am worth, see "All."

In an instruction in an action on a contract for the construction of a school building, requiring the jury to determine what the building was worth, "worth" is synonymous with the value of the work done and materials furnished. School Dist. No. 46 v. Lund, 33 Pac. 595, 596, 51 Kan. 731.

The worth of anything is just so much money as it will bring. Commonwealth v. Edgerton Coal Co., 30 Atl. 125, 126, 164 Pa. 284.

An instruction telling the jury that, if insured items were each worth the amount of insurance thereon, their verdict should be so and so, is equivalent to telling them that, if they believed the cash value of the property at the time of the loss equaled the amount of the insurance, their verdict should be as directed. Snappington v. St. Joseph Town Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 77 Mo. App. 270, 271.

Where a horse was to be paid for, "$10 in cash and a buggy wagon worth $60," the value of the wagon was a part of the express contract, and an essential part of it, and not simply matter of description. The contract could not be performed by the delivery of a wagon worth only $25. Brown v. Sayles, 27 Vt. (1 Williams) 227, 232.

"Worth not less than nine hundred dollars," as used in a contract by which a certain party covenanted to buy a slave, "to be worth not less than nine hundred dollars," etc., should be construed as words descriptive of the property, and not the sum to be laid out in its purchase. Anders v. Ellis, 87 N. C. 207, 208.

WORTHY.

A will bequeathing property to selectmen in trust for the special benefit of a "worthy, deserving poor" of a certain town was not an indeterminate and uncertain phrase, but one which the selectmen might well determine. Beardsley v. Selectmen of Bridgeport, 3 Atl. 557, 558, 53 Conn. 489, 55 Am. Rep. 152.

WOULD.

In an instruction that the care required in certain circumstances is such as men of ordinary prudence and caution would have exercised under similar circumstances, "would," imports the same meaning as the word "should," the best authorities using them interchangeably. The measure of care exacted is in accordance with what prudent and cautious men usually do in like circumstances, and upon failure to do which they are no longer entitled to be called prudent and cautious. Hence it may be said that they would or should not do something which the particular exigency required. Blyth v. Birmingham Waterworks, 11 Exch. 781.

WOULD SEE.

See "See."

WOUND.

See "Mortal Wound."

The definition of "wound" in criminal cases is an injury to the person by which the skin is broken. Moriarty v. Brooks, 6 Car. & P. 684, 686; State v. Leonard, 22 Mo. 449, 451.

The word "wound," as used in a declaration for personal injuries, means any injury breaking or cutting the skin. Montgomery v. Lansing City Electric Ry. Co., 61 N. W. 543, 548, 103 Mich. 46, 29 L. R. A. 287.

To constitute a wound it is necessary that there should be a separation of the whole skin, and a separation of the cuticle or upper skin only is not sufficient, within St. 1 Vict. c. 85, § 2. Reg. v. McLoughlin, 8 Car. & P. 635.

As used in Rev. St. c. 125, § 13, enacting that if any robber shall wound or strike the person robbed he shall suffer punishment, etc., the word "wound" does not include a slight scratch on such robbed person's face, by rupturing the cuticle only, without separating the whole skin. Commonwealth v. Gallagher, 47 Mass. (6 Metc.) 565, 568.

The term "wound," as used in an application for a life policy, in which the applicant states that he has never received any wound, hurt, or serious bodily injury, means an injury to the body causing an impairment of the health or strength, or rendering the person more liable to contract disease or less able to resist its effects. Bancroft v. Home Ben. Ass'n, 23 N. E. 997, 999, 120 N. Y. 14, 8 L. R. A. 68.

As hurt or bruise.

Dr. Johnson defines "wound" to be a hurt by violence. State v. Leonard, 22 Mo. 449, 451.

A "wound" is a hurt given by violence, and includes a bruise. It is not a technical word, but one of common parlance. State v. Owen, 5 N. C. 452, 455, 4 Am. Dec. 571.

A "wound" is any injury, breaking, or cutting of the skin; and a declaration stating that the plaintiff was "hurt, bruised, and wounded" is no more definite than one using the words "hurt and bruised." Shaddock v. Alpine Plank Road Co., 44 N. W. 158, 159, 79 Mich. 7.

Nature of instrument used.

A wound is a hurt by violence, no matter with what kind of a weapon. State v. Owen, 5 N. C. 452, 455, 4 Am. Dec. 571.

A blow with a blunt instrument, which broke through the skin, would be properly described in an indictment either as a bruise or an incised wound. Commonwealth v. Woodward, 102 Mass. 155, 160.

If a person strike another with a bludgeon and break the skin and draw blood, it is a "wound," within St. 7 & 8 Geo. IV, c. 31, § 11. Rex v. Payne, 4 Car. & P. 558.

St. 9 Geo. IV, c. 81, § 11, for the punishment of any one who shall stab, cut, or wound any person with intent to maim, disfigure, or disable such person, includes a wounding of a person by throwing a sledgehammer at him, though it was not an instrument calculated to inflict a wound. Rex v. Withers, 4 Car. & P. 446.

St. 9 Geo. IV, c. 81, § 12, for the punishment of any person who shall stab, cut, or wound any person, would not include injuries made with a hammer and other blunt iron instruments, whereby the person assaulted had his collarbone broken and his head and back bruised. Rex v. Wood, 4 Car. & P. 381.

St. 9 Geo. IV, c. 81, § 12, relating to stabbing, shooting, cutting, or wounding, was intended to apply to wounding produced by some instrument. Biting off the end of a person's nose is not a "wounding," within the meaning of the statute, nor is biting off a joint of a person's finger. Rex v. Harris, 7 Car. & P. 446.

WRAPPER.

"Wrapper," within the meaning of 25 Stat. 496, c. 1039, § 3, making it criminal to mail any matter with an outside cover or wrapper, containing any indecent, defamatory, or threatening language, and making such matter unmailable, means the package wrapper which for convenience and mailing surrounds all the copies of newspapers, etc., sent to one office, rolled or wrapper together in one package. United States v. Burnell (U. S.) 75 Fed. 824, 829.

Where a notice or other paper occupies only one of the halves of the sheet, the other half, on which the letter is directed, if the sheet remain entire, is a sufficient "wrapper," within the meaning of the fourth rule of May term, 1840, requiring such notice or paper, when served by mail, to be enclosed in a wrapper. Chautauqua County Bank v. Risley (N. Y.) 6 Hill, 375, 376.

"Wrappers," when used with reference to leaf tobacco, are leaves suitable for the outside finish of a cigar. Falk v. Robertson, 137 U. S. 225, 231, 11 Sup. Ct. 41, 84 L. Ed. 645.

WRECK.

See "Shipwreck."

In Johnson v. Chapman, 19 C. B. (N. S.) 578, it is said that the term "wreck" properly means that which has been rendered useless or irrecoverable by peril of the seas. Gibson v. Jessup & Moore Paper Co. (Pa.) 15 Phila. 447, 449, 450. A vessel's spars and sails blown overboard by a gale, and lying alongside of the vessel, is not a "wreck." The Margarethe Blanca (U. S.) 12 Fed. 728, 732.

Distinguished from lost.

There is a difference in the words "lost" and "wrecked" in their marine signification. A vessel lost is one that has totally gone from the owners against their will, so that they know nothing concerning it, either whether still existing or not, or one which they do know is to them no longer within their use and control, either from capture by enemies or pirates, or by unknown foundering, or by a sinking by a known storm or collision, or by a total destruction by shipwreck. But a vessel is wrecked by being stranded or cast upon the shores, snags, and rocks. The consequence may be a total loss, or a partial loss, or a temporary disability. A loss, then, is consistent with the fact that a vessel, raft, or other property, being still in existence, though its location be unknown to the owner, and therefore as to him it is lost, may be found and become the subject of salvage under our statute, providing that "when any boat, vessel, raft, or other property shall be lost or wrecked, and in a perishable condition, upon any river, any person may take up and secure the same at or near the place where found." So, that a wreck may be within the statute, its condition must be such as its owner is ignorant of at the time the person claiming salvage saves it; otherwise, it could not be said to be found. A steamboat lying at the levee, having no person on board it, which breaks loose from her moorings in broad daylight, but is not secured before it had drifted over 60 feet without injury, is not lost or wrecked, within the meaning of the statute. Collard v. Eddy, 17 Mo. 354, 355.

Goods.

The words "wrecks and shipwrecked goods," in their ordinary legal meaning, are confined to ships and goods cast on shore by the sea, and cannot be extended to a boat or other property afloat, not appearing to have ever been cast ashore or thrown overboard or lost from a vessel in distress. Chase v. Corcoran, 106 Mass. 286, 288.

A "wreck" is defined to be such goods as after a shipwreck are cast upon land by the sea and left there, for they are not wrecks so long as they remain in the sea in the jurisdiction of admiralty. By the common law all wrecks belong to the crown, and the property in them was lost to the owner. Baker v. Hoag, 7 N. Y. (3 Seld.) 555, 558, 59 Am. Dec. 431.

"Wreck," in its legal significance, is confined to such goods as shall be wrecked at sea, and are by the sea cast upon the land, and none of the goods coming under the definition of flotsam, jetsam, or ligan can be called or deemed wrecks so long as they remain on or in the sea, but if they are cast on the land by the sea they can then become wrecks, and are then subject to common-law jurisdiction only; but if they are taken up at sea, and brought on shore, they are subject to admiralty jurisdiction. Lacaze v. State (Pa.) 1 Add. 59, 64.

Ship.

A ship becomes a "wreck" when, in consequence of the injury she has received, she is rendered absolutely unnavigable or unable to pursue her voyage without repairs exceeding half of her value. Peele v. Merchants' Ins. Co. (U. S.) 19 Fed. Cas. 98, 104.

A ship becomes a wreck when, in consequence of the injury she received, she is absolutely unnavigable or unable to pursue her voyage without repairs exceeding the half of her value. The condition of the ship must be by reason of injury received from some peril, and not the result of age or natural decay; and although the material of which she is composed may remain, yet if the ship is so disabled that she can no longer retain her character as a navigable vessel she is a wreck. A vessel which was driven on the rocks and overturned, and was filled with water and sunk, but soon after was righted and made navigable, and was carried to the port of her destination, and made fast to a wharf, was not a wreck. Wood v. Lincoln & Kennebeck Ins. Co., 6 Mass. 479, 482, 4 Am. Dec. 163.

In answer to a contention that money taken out of a vessel by her captain while she was cast away in the bay, a mile away from the shore, was "wreck," the court said, "the word 'wreck' in the proceedings must be taken in its common and natural sense. 'Wreck' is defined to be the ruins of a ship which has been stranded or dashed to pieces on a sharp rock or driven ashore by tempestuous weather." It appears by the whole proceedings that it could not be a wreck in the legal sense if the captain and mariners were safe, and therefore by this circumstance the legal import of the term "wreck" is controlled. Repubblica v. Lecaze (Pa.) 1 Yeates, 55, 59 (citing Weskett, Ins. 606; 1 Bl. Comm. 292, 293).

WRECK OF THE SEA.

The term "wreck of the sea," as used in the common law excluding the jurisdiction of admiralty over a "wreck of the sea," does not mean what in the sense of the maritime and commercial law is deemed wrecked or shipwrecked property, but wreck of the sea in the purely technical sense of the common-law, constituting a royal franchise and a part of the revenue of the crown in England, and often granted as a royal franchise to lords of manors. United States v. Coombs, 37 U. S. (12 Pet.) 72, 77.

"Wreck," or "wreck of the sea," in the strict technical sense of wrecked goods which the sea casts upon land, is excluded from admiralty jurisdiction, but there is another more lax sense in which it is used for shipwrecked or wrecked goods in general, and in this sense it includes jetson, flotsam, and ligan, which are subjects of admiralty jurisdiction. Lacaze v. State (Pa.) 1 Add. 58, 99.

WRECKED IN THE UNITED STATES.

A Swedish vessel abandoned at sea, picked up by a steamer and towed into New York, is not a "vessel wrecked in the United States," so as to be entitled to an American register, under the act of December 23, 1852. In order for a vessel to be considered as wrecked in the United States, it must be actually wrecked within the waters of the United States. Such has long been the construction put upon the act by the department of the treasury, and this construction appears in the treasury regulations. United States v. The Victoria Perez (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 374, 375.

WRECKED PROPERTY.

"Wrecked property," as used in 1 Rev. St. 8690, declaring that no vessel that shall be cast by the sea upon the land shall be deemed to belong to the people of the state as wrecked property, but may be recovered by the owner on the payment of salvage, relates exclusively to such property as in the common law is known as "wrecks," and the charges on such property are salvage. Whatever was wrecked property at common law is wrecked property under the statute. Baker v. Hoag, 7 N. Y. 555, 59 Am. Dec. 431, 7 Barb. 113, 115. It included only such goods as after the shipwreck are cast upon the land by the sea, and did not include property found sunk in the channel of a navigable river. Baker v. Hoag (N. Y.) 7 Barb. 113, 115.

WRECKING.

One who stated in his application therefor and who was insured as a farmer, and who was drowned by the capsizing of a boat while rescuing the crew of a shipwrecked schooner, was not employed in "wrecking," within the insurance policy providing that the benefit should not extend to death caused while employed in "wrecking." Tucker v. Mutual Ben. Life Co., 4 N. Y. Supp. 505, 506, 50 Hun, 50.

WRIT.

See "Alias Writ"; "Alternative Writ"; "Judicial Writ"; "Original Writ"; "Prerogative Writs"; "Unexecuted Writ."

Any writ, see "Any."

Every writ, see "Every."

The word "writ" has application to civil proceedings. State v. McCann, 67 Me. 372, 374.

A "writ" is the judicial notice to a debtor that his creditor demands justice. Hyams v. Boyce (S. C.) 1 McMul. 95, 98.

A "writ" may be defined to be a mandatory direction to the officer to which it is addressed, requiring him to perform a particular act, as to summon the defendant, or to sell property under the decree of the court. In every case the writ itself contains the directions as to what is required to be done. Moore v. Fedawa, 14 N. W. 170, 13 Neb. 379.

The term "writ," as used in the Connecticut statutes, generally means process in a civil suit, while that in a criminal case is usually denominated a "warrant." Stoddard v. Couch, 23 Conn. 238, 240.

The word "writ," as used in the Penal Code, signifies any order or precept in writing issued in the name of the state or of a court or judicial officer. Pen Code Mont. 1895, § 7, subd. 15; Code Civ. Proc. Mont. 1895, § 3463, subd. 5; Pol. Code Mont. 1895, § 16, subd. 6; Pen. Code Ariz. 1901, par. 7, subd. 15; Pol. Code Cal. 1903, § 17, subd. 6; Pen. Code Cal. 1903, § 7, subd. 15; Code Civ. Proc. Cal. 1903, § 17, subd. 6; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 5152; Code Civ. Proc. S. D. 1903, § 8; Rev. St. Utah 1898, § 2498; Sand. & H. Dig. Ark. 1893, § 7221; Gowdy v. Sanders, 11 S. W. 82, 88 Ky. 846.

Writs and processes of the courts may be divided into two classes: First, those which point out specifically the property or thing to be seized; second, those in which the officer is directed to levy the process upon property of one of the parties to the litigation, sufficient to satisfy the demand against him, without describing any specific property to be thus taken. Phillips v. Spotts, 15 N. W. 332, 334, 14 Neb. 139.

Complaint distinguished.

See "Complaint."

Execution.

The term "writ," in Act April 4, 1873, as amended by Act June 20, 1883, prohibiting foreign insurance companies from doing business unless a stipulation is filed that any and every writ may be served on the agent of the company in the state, includes execution process. Kennedy v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 30 Atl. 724, 725, 165 Pa. 179.

Act 1777, c. 8, § 5, providing a penalty against a sheriff if he fails to execute all "writs and other process" legally issued and directed to him within his county, should be construed to include executions as well as original writs, for the language includes every description of process which by law could come into the hands of the sheriff to be executed. Harman v. Childress, 11 Tenn. (3 Yerg.) 321, 329.

Fee bill.

The term "writ" in Const. art. 4, § 7, providing that all process, writs, and other proceedings shall run in the name of the people of the state of Illinois, includes a fee bill. Reddick v. Cloud's Adm'r, 7 Ill. (2 Gilm.) 670, 678.

Rule to show cause.

The term "writ" or "process," within the meaning of a statute requiring writs and processes to have a teste and to be under the seal of the court, does not include a rule to show cause. Taylor v. Henry, 19 Mass. (2 Pick.) 397, 398.

Summons.

By the common-law definition a "writ" requires a sale, but independently of this it is held that, under a federal statute requiring writs or other original process in courts of record to be stamped, a summons issued by a justice of the peace is not a writ within the meaning of the statute. Baird v. Pridmore (N. Y.) 29 How. Prac. 253, 254.

WRIT DE COMMUNICATO CAPIENDO.

To excommunication, in England, certain civil disabilities are attached. To aid in carrying into effect a sentence of excommunication, a "writ de excommunicato capiendo" may issue out of chancery, which has been said by some to be a writ grantable ex debito justitiæ, by others ex gratia. This writ is said to be a privilege peculiar to the Church of England, above all the realms of Christendom, as being more sure and effectual than any other aid of the secular power afforded elsewhere. When a person was taken in custody on such a writ, the regularity of the proceedings of the court passing such sentence might be inquired into on habeas corpus (1 Salk. 293), and the party be relieved if the proceedings were irregular. Smith v. Nelson, 18 Vt. 511, 555, 556.

WRIT DE RATIONABILI PARTE BONORUM.

The "writ de rationabili parte bonorum" was a writ used in the ancient common law, by which the wife and children could recover their reasonable parts in the goods of the husband and father, which he had bequeathed away without regard to their rights. Hopkins v. Wright, 17 Tex. 30, 36; Crain v. Crain, 17 Tex. 80, 93.

WRIT OF ASSISTANCE.

As process, see "Process."

A writ of assistance is a summary proceeding, its object being to put a person who purchases at a judicial sale into the possession of the premises. Emerick v. Miller (Ind.) 62 N. E. 284, 285; Jones v. Hooper, 50 Miss. 510; Kerr v. Brawley, 61 N. E. 1057, 1058, 193 Ill. 205.

The writ of assistance is the ordinary process used by a court of chancery to put a party, receiver, sequestrator, or other person into possession of property when he is entitled thereto, either on a decree or interlocutory order. The most familiar instance of its use is where land has been sold under a decree for foreclosure and mortgage, but it is also employed wherever a court of equity having jurisdiction of the persons and property has determined title or possessory rights to real estate. Hagerman v. Heltzel, 58 Pac. 580, 21 Wash. 444.

The writ of assistance, so far as foreclosures are concerned, is an old chancery writ which exists independent of the statute. It may be had to enforce any judgment or order awarding the possession of real property other than a common judgment in a direct action for land. A writ of assistance is in ordinary cases the process for giving possession of land under an adjudication, and will be granted on the sale being confirmed and proof that the purchaser has received a deed of conveyance from the master, which has been shown to the party in possession, accompanied by a demand of possession which has been refused. O'Connor v. Shaeffel, 19 Civ. Proc. R. 378, 379, 11 N. Y. Supp. 737.

"A writ of assistance may be termed an equitable habere facias possessionem, for it is only issued from courts of chancery, and only in these cases when the courts have by their decree caused lands to be sold, in which case they will complete the sale by putting the purchaser in possession when it is withheld by the defendant or any one who has come in possession pendente lite, and is never issued except when the case is clear and upon notice to the person in possession, and it is held to be the appropriate remedy to place the purchaser of mortgaged premises under a decree of foreclosure in possession after he has obtained a sheriff's deed." Knight v. Houghtalling, 94 N. C. 408, 410. It will never be issued where there is any real prospect that the party in possession may make a successful defense of his possession, either in law or by aid of a court of equity. Kerr v. Brawley, 61 N. E. 1057, 1058, 193 Ill. 205 (citing Flowers v. Brown, 21 Ill. [11 Peck] 270).

A writ of assistance is an appropriate process to issue from a court of equity to place a purchaser of mortgaged property under its decree in possession after he has received the master's deed, as against parties who are bound by the decree, and who refuse to surrender possession pursuant to its direction or to the order of the court. Daggs v. Wilson (Ariz.) 59 Pac. 150, 153 (citing Terrell v. Allison, 88 U. S. [21 Wall.] 289, 22 L. Ed. 634).

A writ of assistance is used to place in possession parties who have obtained judicial title to real estate. State v. Superior Court of Thurston County, 58 Pac. 572, 21 Wash. 469. The power to issue the writ results from the principle that the jurisdiction of the court to enforce its decree is coextensive with its jurisdiction to determine the rights of the parties and to subject to sale the property mortgaged. It is a rule of that court to do complete justice when that is practicable, not merely by declaring the right, but by affording a remedy for its enjoyment. Terrell v. Allison, 88 U. S. (21 Wall.) 289, 291, 22 L. Ed. 634.

Discretionary writ.

The issuance of a writ of assistance rests in the sound discretion of the court, and will be issued only when the right is clear or there is no bona fide contest as to the possession. Hagerman v. Heltzel, 58 Pac. 580, 21 Wash. 444.

Issued against parties only.

The writ of assistance can only issue against parties bound by the decree, and the owner of the property mortgaged which is directed to be sold can only be bound when he has had notice of the proceedings for its sale, if he acquired his interest previous to their institution. Terrell v. Allison, 88 U. S. (21 Wall.) 289, 291, 22 L. Ed. 634. It will only issue against a party to a suit, or one who has come into possession pendente lite. Gilcreest v. Magill, 37 Ill. 300, 301; Kerr v. Brawley, 61 N. E. 1057, 1058, 193 Ill. 205.

The writ of assistance is issued only against parties to a suit, or persons in privity with them, who have been concluded by a decree, and yet refuse to permit the purchaser at judicial sale under such decree to take possession. It is error to award a writ of assistance against a person who entered upon the land pendente lite claiming an independent title not derived from or in succession to any of the parties to the suit or their privies. Merrill v. Wright, 91 N. W. 697, 698, 65 Neb. 794.

Kinds.

There are various kinds of writs of assistance: First, there are the writs of assistance most usually called "writs of aid," issuing from the Court of Exchequer, addressed to the sheriff, and commanding him to aid; second, writs to the sheriff to assist a receiver, sequestrator, or other party to a suit in chancery to get possession under a decree of the court of lands withheld from him by another party to a suit; third, writs of assistance to seize unaccustomed goods. 1 Quincy (Mass.) Append. 401.

Possessory writ.

A writ of assistance is only issued when the question of the right to possession arises, and the question of title cannot be tried under it. Kerr v. Brawley, 61 N. E. 1057, 1058, 193 Ill. 205.

WRIT OF ASSIZE.

The writ of assize is a writ calculated to try the mere possessory title to an estate in lands, tenements, or hereditaments, which has succeeded to such real actions as had previously existed for the trial of title to real estate. The writ was a remedy which the law provided to recover the freehold of land when it had been unjustly taken away. Thus, if A. grants land charged to B. and his heirs, not only the grantee, but his heirs in infinitum, in case of a disseisin, may forever pursue their assize by writs of disseisin. Farley v. Craig, 11 N. J. Law (6 Halst.) 262, 272 (citing Gilb. Rents, 125).

WRIT OF DEBT.

A writ of debt properly lieth where a man oweth another a certain sum of money by obligation, or by bargain for a thing sold, or by contract, etc. Lacaze v. State (Pa.) 1 Add. 58, 85, 86, 89.

WRIT OF ERROR.

A writ of error is a proceeding prosecuted to reverse a judgment of an inferior court. Longworth v. Sturges, 4 Ohio St. 690, 708.

A writ of error is a commission by which the judges of one court are authorized to examine a record upon which a judgment is given in another court, and upon such examination to affirm or reverse the same according to law. Chipman v. City of Waterbury, 22 Atl. 289, 59 Conn. 496; Comstock v. Van Schoonhoven (N. Y.) 3 How. Prac. 258, 259; Cohens v. Virginia, 19 U. S. (6 Wheat.) 264, 409, 5 L. Ed. 257; McLellan v. Crofton, 6 Me. (6 Greenl.) 307, 326.

A writ of error, under our law, is a writ debito justitie, wherever, by reason of error, a judgment of a court of record ought not to stand, and an appeal is not provided by statute. Ex parte Thistleton, 52 Cal. 220, 224.

A writ of error is a writ issued out of a court of competent jurisdiction, directed to the judges of a court of record in which final judgment has been given, and commanding them to send the record to the court of competent and appellate jurisdiction therein named, to be examined in order that some alleged error in the proceedings may be corrected. MacLachlan v. McLaughlin, 18 N. E. 544, 545, 126 Ill. 427; Allen v. City of Savannah, 9 Ga. 286, 292; Comstock v. Van Schoonhoven (N. Y.) 3 How. Prac. 258, 259.

A writ of error is in the nature of a commission to the judges of the same or a superior court, by which they are authorized to examine the record on which the judgment was given, and on such examination to affirm or reverse the same according to law. Gauldin v. Shehee, 20 Ga. 531, 535.

A writ of error is a writ issued from a superior court to an inferior court, commanding it to send up the record, and is a writ allowable at common law. Reece v. Knott, 24 Pac. 759, 3 Utah, 436.

Under the common law the writ of error was the method by which a judgment in a criminal cause could be reviewed, and a criminal cause could be reviewed in no other way. The remedy by writ of error is now concurrent with the remedy by appeal. Borrego v. Territory, 46 Pac. 349, 351, 8 N. M. 448.

A writ of error is an original writ. Allen v. City of Savannah, 9 Ga. 286, 292; Lynes v. State (Ala.) 5 Port. 236, 239, 30 Am. Dec. 557; Gauldin v. Shehee, 20 Ga. 531, 535.

A writ of error is a legal remedy, nothing more. Sayres v. Commonwealth, 88 Pa. 291, 308.

Const. art. 3, § 1, providing that the Supreme Court has jurisdiction alone for the trial and correction of errors in law and equity from the superior courts of the several circuits brought before it by writs of error, contemplates the writ of error as known to the common law, without regard to the specific form thereof, which Blackstone defines to be "a writ which lies for some supposed mistake in the proceedings of a court of record, and which only lies on matter of law arising on the face of the proceedings." Mr. Sergeant Williams, in a note to Jaques v. Sesar, 2 Saunders, R. 101, note 1, said: "A writ of error is an original writ issuing out of the Court of Chancery, in the nature as well of a certiorari to remove a record from an inferior into a superior court, as of a commission to the judges of such superior court to examine the record, and to affirm or reverse it according to law." Lowe v. Morris, 13 Ga. 147, 148.

The object of a writ of error is not to try the question between the parties; it is rather to try the judgment of the court below. Its object is to review and correct an error of law which is not amendable at common law or cured by any of the statutes of jeofails. It is considered a new suit, and it is less an action between the original parties than a question between the judgment and the law. Kelly v. Strouse & Bros., 43 S. E. 280, 285, 116 Ga. 872 (citing Allen v. City of Savannah, 9 Ga. 293).

The words "appeal" and "writ of error," in section 5 of Court of Appeals Act, which provides that appeals or writs of error may be taken from the district court or from the existing circuit court to the Supreme Court in any case in which the jurisdiction of the court is an issue, are understood to be within the meaning of those terms as used in a prior act of Congress relating to the appellate power of the Supreme Court, and in the long-standing rules of practice and proceedings of the federal court. Taken in that sense, these terms mean the proceedings by which a cause for which there must be a final settlement is removed from a court below the appellate court for review, reversal, or confirmation. MacLeod v. Graven (U. S.) 79 Fed. 84, 85, 24 C. C. A. 449 (citing McLish v. Roff, 141 U. S. 661, 12 Sup. Ct. 18, 35 L. Ed. 893). It lies where a party is aggrieved by any error in the foundation, proceedings, judgment, or execution of a suit in a court of record. Lynes v. State (Ala.) 5 Port. 236, 239, 30 Am. Dec. 557; Lowe v. Morris, 13 Ga. 147, 148; Gauldin v. Shehee, 20 Ga. 531, 535.

"A writ of error lyeth when a man is grieved by any error in the foundation, proceeding, judgment, or execution, and thereupon it is called 'breve de errore corrigendo'; but without a judgment, or an award

In nature of a judgment, no writ of error doth lie, if the words of the writ be, 'Si iudicium redditum sit.' Therefore, to maintain a writ of error, there must have been an action and judgment, and no writ of error lies to an order punishing a contempt. Johnston v. Commonwealth, 4 Ky. (1 Bibb) 598, 599.

A writ of error lies only after judgment. Downe v. Stimpson, 2 Mass. 441, 445.

Bill of review distinguished.

Certiorari distinguished.

The writ of error is the appropriate writ for the removal of a cause after judgment, while certiorari is the appropriate writ for a removal before judgment. Commonwealth v. Simpson (Pa.) 2 Grant, Cas. 438, 439.

A writ of certiorari is in some respects similar to a writ of error, and in others dissimilar. The former, unlike the latter, is not a writ of right, and it lies where the proceedings sought to be revised are not according to the course of common law. Inhabitants of Levant v. Penobscot County Com'rs, 67 Me. 429, 433.

In some respects there is a difference between a writ of error and a writ of certiorari, and in some respects there is a strong resemblance. The former lies where the proceedings are according to the course of common law; in other cases a writ of certiorari is the proper writ. A writ of error is a writ of right; a writ of certiorari is not; it is a matter of sound discretion to grant or refuse it. They are alike in this: that no one but a party to the record, or one who has a direct and immediate interest in it or is privy thereto, can maintain either of the writs. Bath Bridge & Turnpike Co. v. Magoun, 8 Me. (8 Greenl.) 292, 293.

The difference between writs of error and certiorari is not well defined in our practice, but, so far as there is any general rule on the subject, the former is the appropriate remedy where the proceedings are according to the course of the common law, the latter where the proceedings are of a different character. In either case there must have been, however, what is equivalent to a final order or judgment of the inferior tribunal, before the writ can be issued. Ewing v. Hollister, 7 Ohio, pt. 2 (7 Ham.) 138, 140.

A certiorari is a writ of error within the meaning of Const. art. 6, § 20, providing that no writ of error shall be brought upon any judgment but within five years after the rendering of the same, unless the person entitled to the writ shall be an infant. King v. Wright (Del.) 2 Har. 135.

As method of appeal.

"A writ of error is but a cumulative method of invoking the appellate jurisdiction of this court, and of seeking revision of the same cause and same question as could be adjudged if the appellate jurisdiction was invoked by means of an appeal." Gainesville, H. & W. Ry. Co. v. Lacy, 28 S. W. 413, 414, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 63.

As a new suit.

A writ of error is considered a new action. International Bank v. Jenkins, 104 Ill. 143, 151; Fitzpatrick v. Graham, 119 Fed. 353, 354, 56 C. C. A. 95. But it is not the action which is to be judged, but the judgment. Allen v. City of Savannah, 9 Ga. 286, 292.

A writ of error is a continuation of the original litigation, and not the commencement of a new action. Westervelt v. Jones, 52 Pac. 194, 195, 7 Kan. App. 70.

A writ of error "is a new action brought in a superior court, founded upon a judgment of an inferior court, for the purpose of supervising it and correcting any error there may have been in the proceedings of the court below." Gibbs v. Belcher, 30 Tex. 79, 84.

A writ of error is in the nature of a new suit brought to obtain redress against an erroneous adjudication or proceeding, and is commenced by a writ which, after suggesting in the most general terms that in the record and rendition of judgment manifest error hath intervened, commands the court below to send that record, with all things touching the same, to the court of review. Hinchman v. Cook, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 271, 273.

A writ of error is a new suit, in which an original process is issued and new pleadings are made up. The assignment of error stands in the place of the declaration, and it is still necessary, in the form of a motion, to allege and show an error in fact, and for the opposite party to have notice. An issue is made up, and there must be a finding and a judgment. Mitchell v. King, 55 N. E. 637, 638, 187 Ill. 452.

A writ of error is not such a new and original suit as to require the same strictness and rigidity in the service upon defendant therein of notice of its institution as is required at the institution of a new and original action, but it is rather a continuation of the original suit. A statute, therefore, providing for constructive notice only of its institution and pendency, does not violate the provision of the Constitution prohibiting the deprivation of property without due process of law. State v. Canfield, 23 South. 591, 594, 40 Fla. 36, 42 L. R. A. 72.

Parties.

It was not restricted as an appeal to the parties to an action. It might be brought by any one privy to the record, or any one injured by the judgment or who would be benefited by its reversal; and, now that by statute a right to a writ of error was extended to suits in chancery, the common-law rules, as to who is entitled to the writ, are applicable. Anderson v. Steger, 50 N. E. 665, 666, 173 Ill. 112.

Questions examined.

A writ of error is of common-law origin, and removes nothing for re-examination but the law. Lyles v. Barnes, 40 Miss. 608, 610; United States v. Murphy (U. S.) 84 Fed. 609, 621; United States v. Goodwin, 11 U. S. (7 Cranch) 108, 111, 3 L. Ed. 284. It does not raise questions of fact. United States v. Goodwin, 11 U. S. (7 Cranch) 108, 111, 3 L. Ed. 284.

The object of the writ of error is to review and correct an error of law not amendable at common law, or barred by any of the statutes in jeofails. Allen v. City of Savannah, 9 Ga. 286, 292.

The writ of error was the common-law method of reviewing judgments at common law, and brought up for review only errors of law excepted to at the trial. Anderson v. Steger, 50 N. E. 665, 666, 173 Ill. 112.

"On this writ the judgment is reviewed with reference to alleged errors which are pointed out by exceptions taken to the action of the trial court at the time when the rulings are made, and, as a general rule, the power of the Supreme Court is limited to the questions so raised." Rand v. King, 19 Atl. 806, 807, 134 Pa. 641.

A writ of error embraces all matters which the judgment brought up for review covers, and great care must be observed in determining what is independent and distinct matter not embraced within the adjudication. State v. Hull, 20 South. 762, 764, 37 Fla. 579.

Laws 1899, c. 139, providing that, whenever a writ of error shall be issued out of the Court of Errors and Appeals to review a judgment founded upon the verdict of a jury, the plaintiff in error may assign for error that the verdict is against the clear weight of evidence and is excessive, and directing said court to consider the grounds so assigned as fully as like grounds are considered in the Supreme Court on a rule to show cause why a new trial should be granted, does not authorize the Court of Errors and Appeals, on writ of error to a judgment of the Supreme Court in a civil action founded on the verdict of a jury, to weigh the evidence and consider whether the amount of the verdict is excessive. For the Court of Errors and Appeals to consider and adjudicate upon such assignments of error in such a case would impair the jurisdiction of a constitutional court by depriving its judgment of the attribute of finality as to fact. Flanigan v. Guggenheim Smelting Co., 44 Atl. 762, 763, 63 N. J. Law, 647.

As supersedeas or reversal.

At common law a writ of error operated as a supersedeas, and no security was required for the prosecution of the writ. Lum v. Reed, 53 Miss. 71, 72.

At common law a writ of error was a supersedeas by implication, but since the judiciary act of 1879, providing that such a writ shall be a supersedeas only where it is served, a service of the writ is essential. McCarley v. McGhee (U. S.) 108 Fed. 494, 495. The writ does not of itself reverse the judgment, and, until its propriety is finally determined by the appellate court, no proceedings can be had in the trial that will undo what is there adjudicated. State v. Hull, 20 South. 762, 764, 37 Fla. 579. It does not vacate the judgment below; that continues in force until reversed, which is only done when errors are found in the record on which it rests, and which were committed previous to its rendition. United States v. Murphy (U. S.) 84 Fed. 609, 621.

"Pending a writ of error, a judgment in reversal of the judgment of the trial court remains and is a subsisting, valid, and binding judgment in that court, and may be resorted to and used as evidence of a present indebtedness." In re Sheehan (U. S.) 21 Fed. Cas. 1219, 1220.

As writ of right.

"A writ of error is a writ of right, both by the common law and statute, as to any one who is a party to a record, or who is shown by the record to be prejudiced by the judgment." Singer & Talcott Stone Co. v. Hutchinson, 51 N. E. 622, 623, 176 Ill. 48. See, also, Drowne v. Stimpson, 2 Mass. 441, 445.

In Nebraska, a writ of error is a writ of right, which is available to any person convicted of crime, for the purpose of having the case reviewed in the Supreme Court. Green v. State, 10 Neb. 102, 104, 4 N. W. 422.

A writ of error was a writ of right at the common law, and, as a general rule, may be prosecuted as a matter of right in all civil cases. Unknown Heirs of Langworthy v. Baker, 23 Ill. (13 Peck) 484, 487; Hammond v. People, 32 Ill. 446, 464, 83 Am. Dec. 286; Haines v. People, 97 Ill. 161, 166; McIntyre v. Sholty, 29 N. E. 43, 44, 139 Ill. 171; Anderson v. Steger, 50 N. E. 665, 666, 173 Ill. 112.

WRIT OF ERROR CORAM NOBIS.

Bouvier says: "It is a writ of error issued out of a court of competent jurisdiction, directed to the judges of a court of record, and commanding them, in some cases themselves to examine the record, in others to send it to another court to be examined. The first is called a 'writ of error coram nobis.'" Comstock v. Van Schoonhoven (N. Y.) 3 How. Prac. 258, 259. See, also, Allen v. City of Savannah, 9 Ga. 286, 292.

The writ of error coram nobis is now but little in use. In practice the same end is generally accomplished by motion. The office of the writ is to correct an error of fact in respect to a matter affecting the validity and regularity of the proceedings in the same court in which the judgment was rendered, and where the record is, when the error assigned is not for any fault of the court; those errors which precede the judgment—as error in the process or through default of the clerk; where an infant appears by attorney, and not by guardian; where the defendant was insane at the time of the trial, or died before judgment. Howard v. State, 24 S. W. 8, 58 Ark. 229.

"The office of the ancient remedy of the writ of coram nobis was to have a judgment corrected by an examination, by the court rendering it, into some question of fact affecting the validity and regularity of the proceedings, such as the death of one of the parties before verdict or judgment, or the infancy or insanity or coverture of the defendant, and which was not made an issue and determined in the action. * * * The writ has become obsolete, having been superseded by the modern practice of applying to the court by motion for the relief sought." Billups v. Freeman (Ariz.) 52 Pac. 367.

The writ of error coram nobis lies only to correct the record of the trial itself in matters of fact existing at the time of the pronouncement of the judgment, but in respect of which the court was unadvised, but of which, had it been advised, the judgment would not have been pronounced. The unvarying test of the writ is mistake, the lack of knowledge of facts inhering in the judgment itself. It has never been granted to relieve from consequences arising subsequently to the judgment. In Asbell v. State, 62 Kan. 209, 61 Pac. 690, it was denied for the reason that the facts on which the application was predicated were known during the progress of the trial, or were available on motion for new trial, and it was held that the office of the writ is to bring to the attention of the court, for correction, an error of fact, one not appearing on the face of the record, unknown to the court or the party affected, and which, if known in season, would have prevented the judgment challenged; so that the writ will not lie to vacate a judgment of conviction because of the inability of the accused within the statutory time to prepare a record on appeal, showing the errors of which complaint was made. Collins v. State, 71 Pac. 251, 66 Kan. 201, 60 L. R. A. 572, 97 Am. St. Rep. 361.

A right to maintain a proceeding in the nature of a writ coram nobis is not abolished by the statute in the state of Indiana, says Cowan, J., in Smith v. Kingsley (N. Y.) 19 Wend. 620. There is no statute expressly and in terms repealing this power, nor any which does so by necessary implication. The power, therefore, remains as at common law, except as to the mere form coram nobis resident, because the fiction of the record remaining before the King himself is gone. We have therefore lost the name of the writ, but nothing more. Sanders v. State, 85 Ind. 318, 327, 44 Am. Rep. 29.

WRIT OF FALSE JUDGMENT.

A writ of false judgment is one issuing where the complaint is of a false judgment rendered in the court below, and commands the sheriff to go to the court below and record the plaint, etc., if in a court where he did not preside. Anonymous, 2 N. C. 469, 470.

WRIT OF FORMEDON.

Coke says: "The writ of formedon, a forma donationis, is so called because the writ doth comprehend the form of the gift." It has no reference to the nature of the estate which it seeks to recover, for it is applied as well to the recovery of estates in fee simple as of estates in fee tail. Orndoff v. Turman (Va.) 2 Leigh, 200, 241, 21 Am. Dec. 608.

WRIT OF INQUIRY.

A writ of inquiry is a writ issued by the court to the sheriff, after default by defendant, commanding him by 12 men to inquire into the damages and make return into court. Lennon v. Rawitzer, 19 Atl. 334, 335, 57 Conn. 533.

A writ of inquiry is a judicial writ directed to the sheriff, stating the former proceedings, and then saying, "Because it is unknown what damages the plaintiff has sustained, you are commanded, by the oath of 12 honest and lawful men of your county, diligently to inquire after the same and return the inquisition into court." *Havens v. WRIT OF REVIEW.

Petition for, as civil action, see "Civil Action—Case—Suit—Etc."

"A writ of review is a writ of right to hear errors in a record or process remaining with the court. * * * It is sometimes used in the form of a capias and attachment, and with the same efficacy, and seems, therefore, to be to some purposes an original writ." Burrell v. Burrell, 10 Mass. 221, 222.

"A writ of review in civil actions is provided by statute to correct errors in judgments rendered on verdicts, and is unknown to the common law. Either party against whom two verdicts have not been found may sue his writ of review as of right." Swett v. Sullivan, 7 Mass. 342, 346.

A writ of review is issued by an order of the court applied to, after a hearing, upon a petition; a process is made and served upon the other party, and entered in court; and thereon the parties are heard, and a judgment rendered. The object is to revise and correct or restrain the proceedings of courts or individuals, claiming to have therefor legal authority, but which are alleged to be erroneous or defective. Hopkins v. Benson, 21 Me. 399, 401.

The provisions of the Constitution of Louisiana relating to the writ of review confer upon the Supreme Court the discretion as to whether to grant or withhold the writ. Article 101 of the Constitution does not invest the Supreme Court with appellate jurisdiction over the courts of appeals, or grant to litigants a further and additional right of appeal. And the writ of review will issue only in exceptional cases, mainly to secure uniformity of jurisprudence. West v. De Moss, 24 South. 325, 326, 50 La. Ann. 1349.

Certiorari.

The writ of certiorari is essentially a writ of review, and its function in matters of taxation is to review the action or refusal to act of the tax commissioners. Consequently, no objections are brought up for review except such as were presented to the commissioners on the application for correction. People v. Feitner, 80 N. Y. Supp. 140, 141, 39 Misc. Rep. 463 (citing In re Winegard, 78 Hun, 58, 28 N. Y. Supp. 1039).

A writ of certiorari is undoubtedly designed to be a writ of review. Its undoubted and only legitimate purpose is to enable a party who has been aggrieved by an action of some inferior tribunal to secure a reconsideration of the judgment and a reversal of the findings. It cannot be issued, however, according to the express limitation of Code Civ. Proc. § 323, except where the inferior tribunal is entirely without jurisdiction, and there is no appeal or other plain, adequate, and speedy remedy. Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Bowler, 34 Pac. 940, 941, 4 Colo. App. 25.

The term "writ of review," as used in Comp. Laws 1887, c. 585, providing that the writ of review shall issue from the circuit court to an inferior court, officer, or tribunal in the exercise of judicial functions where the same appears to have exercised such functions erroneously, or to have exceeded its jurisdiction, to the injury of some substantial right of the plaintiff, is the equivalent of the common-law writ of certiorari, which is defined as a writ issuing from a superior court to an inferior court, tribunal, or officer exercising judicial powers whose proceedings are summary or in course differing from the common law, commanding the latter to return the records of a cause pending before it to the superior court. California & O. Land Co. v. Gowen (U. S.) 48 Fed. 771, 775.

The office of the writ of review, which, under the Oregon Code, is a special proceeding and sustains the same relation to the Code of Civil Procedure that the writ of certiorari sustains to the common-law practice, is to review the records and proceedings of inferior courts, officers, or tribunals acting in a judicial capacity, and in no other. It is not the office of the writ to bring up the proceedings of any other bodies or classes of public officers. Burnett v. Douglas County, 4 Or. 388, 389.

Under Comp. Laws 1888, § 3778, it is provided that a writ of certiorari may be denominated a writ of review. It is apparent that the writ here designated is the common-law certiorari, and hence the power of the court under it is the same as at common law, except as narrowed or enlarged by statute. Gilbert v. Board of Police & Fire Com'rs, 40 Pac. 264, 268, 11 Utah, 378.

The writ of certiorari may be denominated the writ of review. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. 1903, § 1067; Comp. Laws Nev. 1900, § 3530.

WRIT OF SEIZURE AND SALE.

The writ of seizure and sale is the final process to enforce payment of a claim by the sale of property antecedently mortgaged to secure the debt, and operates only on the property hypothecated. American Nat. Bank v. Childs, 22 South. 384, 386, 49 La. Ann. 1359.

WRITE—WRITING.

See "Indorse in Writing."

To write is to express our ideas by letters visible to the eye. The mode or manner of impressing those letters is no part of the substance or definition of "writing." Clason v. Bailey (N. Y.) 14 Johns. 484, 491.

"Writing is the method of originally developing a composition, and of adding copies made singly, letter by letter." Keene v. Wheatley (U. S.) 14 Fed. Cas. 180, 192.

An averment, in a libel suit, that defendant "composed, uttered, wrote, and sent" to a third person certain libelous words concerning the plaintiff, is a sufficient allegation of publication. Benedict v. Westover, 44 Wis. 404.

The provision of Comp. St. p. 274, § 10, that no agent or attorney shall "write" or draw up the deposition of any witness, etc., does not prohibit a writing or drawing up of a deposition which is a mere copy, but has reference to the composing or inditing of it. Moulton v. Hall, 27 Vt. 233.

A person paying a tax stated orally to the clerk of the treasurer of a city that he paid it under protest, and wished the clerk to make a note of it. The clerk, acting under instructions from the treasurer to make a note of all protests, written or oral, wrote upon the receipt given for the tax that it was paid under protest, and made a memorandum to that effect on the books of the treasurer. Held, that there was not "a protest in writing" by the person paying, within Gen. St. c. 12, § 58. Knowles v. City of Boston, 129 Mass. 551, 554.

An order, signed by a judge, to the clerk of the court, for its adjournment to a time mentioned, by telegraph, is a "written order" for such adjournment, within the meaning of the statute requiring such orders to be in writing. In this connection the court says that it makes no difference if the writing is done with a steel pen an inch long attached to an ordinary penholder, or whether the pen be a copper wire a thousand miles long. State v. Holmes, 56 Iowa, 588, 592, 9 N. W. 894, 41 Am. Rep. 121.

Marks.

Perpendicular marks drawn across the letters of the signature of a testator to his will were not "writings," within Laws 1890, c. 36, and Laws 1888, c. 555, permitting the comparison of writings by experts. In re Hopkins' Will, 65 N. E. 173, 174, 172 N. Y. 360, 65 L. R. A. 95, 92 Am. St. Rep. 746 (reversing 73 App. Div. 550, 77 N. Y. Supp. 178, and 35 Misc. Rep. 702, 72 N. Y. Supp. 415).

Pencil.

A will written and signed with lead pencil is "in writing," within Act April 8, 1833, requiring wills to be in writing, to be valid. Myers v. Vanderbelt, 84 Pa. 510, 513, 24 Am. Rep. 227; In re Tomlinson's Estate, 19 Atl. 482, 133 Pa. 245, 19 Am. St. Rep. 137.

A writing in pencil is "writing" within the common law and within the custom of merchants, and a statute requiring a contract to be in writing does not require that the same be written in ink. Geary v. Physic, 5 Barn. & C. 234, 238; Olason v. Bailey (N. Y.) 14 Johns. 484, 491.

The word "writing" embraces writing with a pencil, and hence an indorsement on a note with pencil is valid. Closson v. Stearns, 4 Vt. 11, 23 Am. Dec. 245.

The word "writing" does not necessarily mean a writing with ink, and hence, where a book of original entries is offered in evidence, the fact that the entries are written in lead pencil is not a valid ground of objection. Hill v. Scott, 12 Pa. (2 Jones) 168, 169.

Printing, typewriting, engraving, or lithographing.

The term "written words" includes printed words. Chaffin v. Lynch, 1 S. E. 803, 807, 83 Va. 106.

Printed votes are "written votes," within the meaning of Const. art. 3, c. 1, § 3, providing that "every member of the House of Representatives shall be chosen by written votes." Henshaw v. Foster, 26 Mass. (9 Pick.) 312, 319. See, also, Opinion of Justices, 7 Me. (7 Greenl.) 492, 495; Temple v. Mead, 4 Vt. 535, 541; Fritts v. Kuhl, 17 Atl. 102, 107, 51 N. J. Law (22 Vroom) 191.

In the requirement that an olographic will must be in the writing of testator, "writing" does not include printing, but must be taken in its ordinary sense, as meaning to set down legible characters with pen and ink. Succession of Robertson, 21 South. 586, 587, 49 La. Ann. 868, 62 Am. St. Rep. 672; In re Rand's Estate, 61 Cal. 468, 473, 44 Am. Rep. 555. Hence a will partly printed and partly written is not a compliance with the statute. In re Rand's Estate, 61 Cal. 468, 473, 44 Am. Rep. 555.

A writing which is the subject of forgery may include instruments printed or engraved, as well as those traced by the pen. Commonwealth v. Ray, 69 Mass. (3 Gray) 441, 447. See, also, In re Benson (U. S.) 34 Fed. 649, 652.

Where deeds, bonds, tickets, and the like are required to be in writing, the term "writing" should be held to include printing as well as script. Benson v. McMahon, 8 Sup. Ct. 1240, 1246, 127 U. S. 457, 32 L. Ed. 234.

1 Comp. Laws, p. 235, § 15, requiring notice in "writing" to be posted prior to an application for changing township boundaries, "may be construed to include printing, engraving, and lithographing." Pelton v. Ottawa County Sup'rs, 18 N. W. 245, 246, 52 Mich. 517.

"Written," as used in Code 1876, § 4354, providing that any person who sells or conveys any personal property upon which he has a written mortgage, lien, or a deed of trust, and which is then unsatisfied in whole or in part, is guilty of a misdemeanor, will be construed to mean written or printed. Johnson v. State, 69 Ala. 593, 596.

The word "writing," in Election Law 1891, § 23, authorizing a voter to prepare his ballot by writing in the name of the candidate in the blank space on the ticket, and making a cross opposite thereto, does not include the act of inserting the name of the candidate by using a paster upon which the name of the candidate is printed. McSorley v. Schroeder, 63 N. E. 697, 700, 196 Ill. 99.

A forged order requiring the person to whom it was addressed to pay another for corn, partly printed and partly written, the signature for which was not completed until the blank for the attestation of the weigher was filled in by him with his initials, is a "written instrument," within section 129 of the act relating to crimes and punishments. State v. Lee, 4 Pac. 653, 656, 32 Kan. 360.

A written statement includes a printed form with its blanks properly filled in in writing. Winn v. State, 5 Tex. App. 621, 623.

"Writing," as used in Gen. St. § 1094, providing that in actions against the representatives of deceased persons no acknowledgment or promise shall be sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract to take the case out of the statute of limitations, unless the same be contained in some writing made or signed by the party to be charged thereby, is not limited to words traced with a pen or pencil, but may include typewriting. In re Deep River Nat. Bank, 47 Atl. 675, 677, 73 Conn. 341.

The word "writing" or "written" includes printing. Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, §§ 2724, 5190; Code Civ. Proc. Mont. 1895, § 3463; Pen. Code Mont. 1895, § 7; Pol. Code Mont. 1895, § 16; Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 4662; Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, §§ 1536-907, 3178, 4947, 6794; Rev. St. Okl. 1903, §§ 2696, 5147; Pen. Code Tex. 1895, art. 30; Rev. St. Fla. 1892, § 1; *Gen. The word "writing" includes printing and typewriting. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. 1903, § 17; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, §§ 7723, 8506; Code Cr. Proc. S. D. 1903, § 639; Pen. Code S. D. 1903, § 818; Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 14.

The word "writing" includes printing, writing, and typewriting. Rev. St. Utah 1898, § 2498.

In the construction of statutes the words "written" and "in writing" may include printing, engraving, lithographing, and any other mode of representing words and letters; but, when the written signature of a person is required by law, it shall always be the proper handwriting of such person, or, in case he is unable to write, his proper mark. Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 255, subd. 16. See, also, Rev. Code Del. 1893, c. 5, § 1, subd. 14; Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 89, c. 8, § 5, subd. 25; Code N. C. 1883, § 3765, subd. 10; Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 2724; Code Miss. 1892, § 1520; Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 7342, subd. 18; Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 50, subd. 17; Mills' Ann. St. Colo. 1891, § 4185, cl. 11; Horner's Ann. St. Ind. 1901, § 240, subd. 9; Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 4160; Shannon's Code Tenn. 1896, § 62; Comp. Laws N. M. 1897, § 2900; V. S. 1894, 20; Pub. St. N. H. 1901, p. 64, c. 2, § 23; Code Iowa 1897, § 48, subd. 18; Code W. Va. 1899, p. 133, c. 13, § 17; Pub. St. R. I. 1882, p. 78, c. 24, § 20; Hurd's Rev. St. Ill. 1901, p. 1720, c. 131, § 1, subd. 15; Fletcher v. Wall, 50 N. E. 230, 233, 172 Ill. 426, 40 L. R. A. 617; Ames v. Schurmeier, 9 Minn. 221, 222 (Gil. 206, 208); Brown v. McCormick, 28 Mich. 215, 217.

The terms "writing" and "written" include every legible representation of letters upon a material substance, except when applied to the signature of an instrument. Laws N. Y. 1892, c. 677, § 12.

The words "written" and "in writing" shall be construed to include any representation of words, letters, or figures, whether by printing or otherwise. Code Va. 1887, § 5 [Va. Code 1904, p. 7]; Rev. St. Tex. 1895, art. 3270.

The words "writing" and "written" include "printing" and "printed," except in the case of signatures, and where the words are used by way of contrast to printing. Writing may be made in any manner, except that, when a person entitled to require the execution of a writing demands that it be made with ink, it must be so made. Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 2810. See, also, Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 5137; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 2471; Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 2810.

In the construction of statutes, the word "writing" includes printing and numerals. Pen. Code Ga. 1895, § 2.

The words "written" and "in writing" may be construed to include printing, engraving, lithographing; and any other mode of representing words and letters; but in all cases where the written signature of any person is required by law it shall always be the proper handwriting of such person, or, in case he is unable to write, his proper mark, or his name written by some person at his request and in his presence. Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 4971.

An instrument partly written and partly printed, or wholly printed, with a written signature thereto, and any signature or writing purporting to be a signature of or intended to bind an individual, a partnership, or corporation, or association, or an officer thereof, is a written instrument or a "writing," within the provisions of this chapter (Pen. Code, c. 92a). Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 6694.

Reading written notice.

The word "writing," within the meaning of the act of Rhode Island (Dig. 1822, p. 246, § 3) providing that "no guardian shall be appointed or removed under this act unless all persons interested have had reasonable notice in writing, signed by the clerk and served by the town sergeant or constable," imports more than the mere rendering of the order of the court. "I understand that the notice must be a notice in writing, and that the officer must leave with the party a written notice from the clerk, or at least a certified copy in writing thereof." Hart v. Gray (U. S.) 11 Fed. Cas. 686, 687.

Shorthand.

"Writing," as used in Act 1876, No. 94, relating to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court when the depositions of witnesses have not been taken in writing in the inferior court, embraces testimony taken on the trial of a case by a phonographer, though the phonographic notes of the officer may never afterwards have been transcribed or translated into ordinary writing owing to some accident. Nichols v. Harris, 82 La. Ann. 646, 648.

Stamp.

The word "writing," in law, not only means words traced with a pen or stamped, but printed or engraved or made legible by any other device. Haven v. Foster, 26 Mass. (9 Pick.) 112, 19 Am. Dec. 353. A stamped indorsement of an assignment of a bill of lading held a sufficient compliance with the Arkansas statute requiring such assignments to be in writing. Horner v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 70 Mo. App. 285, 291.

Rev. St. § 1140, providing that the county clerk or treasurer may assign tax certificates "by writing his name in blank on the back thereof," cannot be construed to require that such writing be the "written signature" of the official, but the statute is complied with by a stamped signature. Dreutzer v. Smith, 14 N. W. 465, 467, 56 Wis. 292.

Writing on slate.

The term "writing," within the meaning of the statute requiring wills to be in writing, does not include a writing on a slate, although, strictly speaking, the term "writing" is broad enough to include such a writing, as a writing on a slate would not accomplish the purposes intended to be accomplished by the statute, which was to avoid the uncertainty attending proof of nuncupative wills. Reed v. Woodward (Pa.) 11 Phila. 541, 542.

WRITING—WRITINGS.

See "False Writing"; "Public Writing." Affidavit as, see "Affidavit." Other writing, see "Other."

Worcester defines "writing" to mean anything written; a written paper of any kind. Thomas v. State, 2 N. E. 808, 811, 103 Ind. 419.

Memorandum books containing entries of one's experiences and observations at different times and places in the line of his business, valuable to him for reference, are "writings," within Rev. St. § 4281 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2042], providing that, if a shipper shall lade writings as freight on any vessel without giving notice of the true character and value thereof, the owner of the vessel shall not be liable therefor. The St. Cuthbert (U. S.) 97 Fed. 340, 341.

In construing the statute providing "that when a declaration or other pleading alleges that any person made, indorsed, assigned, or accepted any writing, no proof of the handwriting of such person shall be required, unless the fact be denied by an affidavit with the plea which puts it in issue," the court said: "I see no reason why the broad words 'any person made any writing' should not be interpreted to include a letter concerning the matter in controversy, alleged in any pleading to have been written by any person"; and held that where a defendant in a chancery suit in his answer alleged that a third person wrote a letter touching the matter in controversy, and filed with his answer what purported to be the original letter, such letter would be regarded by the court as genuine, without any proof of the handwriting, unless the fact of the writing of such letter by the person by whom it is purported to have been written is denied by an affidavit. Robinson v. Dix, 18 W. Va. 528, 542.

The rule that a writing itself is the best evidence thereof, as applied to a telegraph message, is indicative of the original message written by the sender and filed with the telegraph company. Howley v. Whipple, 48 N. E. 487, 489.

In criminal law.

The first question to be determined in considering whether a forgery has been committed is the legal signification of the term "writing," which appears in the definition of forgery as the making or alteration of a writing to the prejudice of another man's rights. To say that any writing may be the subject of a forgery, disconnected from the effect which this writing is to produce upon others, is simply an absurdity, and therefore the definitions restrict the meaning of the word, and define the various writings, the fraudulent making or alteration of which will amount to forgery. To make or alter a writing which either at common law or by statute was the subject of forgery, with intent to defraud another or to the prejudice of another man's right, or which, if genuine, would operate as the foundation of another's liability or the evidence of his right, is forgery. Therefore, for a clerk or bookkeeper to alter figures in journal entries so as to conceal his defalcation or abstraction of his employer's funds in his charge is forgery. Commonwealth v. Biles (Pa.) 3 Phila. 350, 351.

"Writing," as used in Pen. Code, §§ 514, 515, providing that an officer of a corporation who falsifies or unlawfully alters any writing appertaining to its business, or any other person who alters any writing with fraudulent intent, etc., belonging or appertaining to the business of a corporation, is guilty of forgery, etc., means an executed instrument under the express provisions of section 513, and does not include a written instrument of a claim for loss, falsified before it was signed by the claimant, and passed off on the company as the true settlement. People v. Underhill, 86 N. E. 1049, 1051, 142 N. Y. 38.

"Writing," as used in a statute providing for the punishment of every person who, with intent to cheat or defraud another, shall by color of any false writing obtain the signature of any person to a written instrument, or obtain any valuable thing, means some instrument, or at least letter—something in writing, purporting to be the act of another, or certainly of some person. It cannot mean anything written on paper, not purporting to be of any force or efficacy, but some instrument in writing or written paper purporting to have been signed by some person. People v. Gates (N. Y.) 13 Wend. 311, 320.

The word "writing" includes a bill of costs of a justice of the peace, as used in Code, § 5492, defining forgery as the fraudulent making or alteration of any writing to the prejudice of another's rights. It is a writing authorized, and in fact required, by law, to entitle a justice to receive payment of his costs. If it is genuine, it has undoubted legal efficacy, and is the foundation of legal liability; and if it be in due form, though not genuine, it may and will, if used, operate to the prejudice of another's rights. Luttrell v. State, 1 S. W. 886, 887, 85 Tenn. (1 Pickle) 232, 4 Am. St. Rep. 760.

The words "writing" or "instrument," as used in the Code of Criminal Procedure relating to passing, uttering, and publishing forged instruments, covers every instrument or writing not within the special definition and scope of prior sections; and a draft is an instrument or writing within the statute. State v. Foster, 2 Pac. 628, 629, 30 Kan. 365.

In copyright law.

"Writings," as used in Const. art. 1, § 8, conferring on Congress power to secure for limited times, to authors, the right to their respective writings, means the fruits of intellectual labor, embodied in the form of books, prints, engravings, and the like. Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 82, 94, 25 L. Ed. 550.

By the word "writings" in a statute relative to copyrights is meant the literary productions of authors. Burrow-Giles Lithographic Co. v. Sarony, 4 Sup. Ct. 279, 281, 111 U. S. 53, 28 L. Ed. 349.

A musical composition is a "writing," within St. 8, Anne, vesting the copyright of printed books and writings in the authors. Bach v. Longman, 2 Cowp. 623, 624.

"Writing," as applied to a literary composition, is a method of originally developing the composition and of adding copies made simply letter by letter, as opposed to printing, which is a process of multiplying the copies by sheets. Keene v. Wheatley (U. S.) 14 Fed. Cas. 180, 192.

Same—Label or trade-mark.

"Writings," as used in the federal Constitution, securing to authors and inventors for a limited time the exclusive right to their respective writings, etc., does not include mere labels, whose object is only to indicate the contents of the package to which they are affixed. Higgins v. Keuffel, 11 Sup. Ct. 731, 732, 140 U. S. 428, 35 L. Ed. 470.

The term "writing," within the meaning of Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 8, which confers on Congress the power to secure for a limited time, to authors and inventors, the exclusive right to their respective writings, inventions, and discoveries, does not include a trade-mark. Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 82, 93, 25 L. Ed. 550.

In postal laws.

In construing the statute prohibiting the mailing of obscene books, pamphlets, pictures, papers, writings, prints, or other publications, etc., the United States Supreme Court say: "In the statute under consideration the word 'writing' is used as one of a group or class of words—'book,' 'pamphlet,' 'picture,' 'paper,' 'writing,' 'print'—each of which is ordinarily and prima facie understood to be a publication, and the enumeration concludes with the general phrase 'or other publication,' which applies to all the articles enumerated, and defines each with the common quality indicated. It must therefore, according to a well-defined rule of construction, be a published writing which is contemplated by the statute, and not a private letter on the outside of which there is nothing but the name and address of the person to whom it is written." United States v. Chase, 10 Sup. Ct. 756, 757, 135 U. S. 255, 34 L. Ed. 117; United States v. Warner (U. S.) 59 Fed. 355.

The term "writing," in the act of 1825 forbidding a writing or memorandum from being written on a newspaper or other printed paper, pamphlet, or magazine transmitted by mail, does not include a single letter or initial on the wrapper of a newspaper. Teal v. Felton, 53 U. S. (12 How.) 284, 291, 13 L. Ed. 990.

Same—Letter.

The term "writing," in the federal statute prohibiting the mailing of obscene writings, includes a letter or any writing, sealed or unsealed, having in it or upon it any obscene, etc., thing, sign, or suggestion. United States v. Morris (U. S.) 18 Fed. 900, 901; United States v. Hanover (U. S.) 17 Fed. 444; Thomas v. State, 2 N. E. 803, 811, 103 Ind. 419; United States v. Thomas (U. S.) 27 Fed. 682.

In construing Rev. St. § 3893, as amended by Act July 12, 1876, c. 186 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2658], making it criminal to mail lewd, lascivious, and obscene writings, it was said that because the context contains the word "letter" in another connection is no reason for argument that the word "writing," as used in the statute, refers to some other form of literature than a letter. The word "letter" means anything written or expressed in letters. A "letter" is defined as a written or printed message. United States v. Britton (U. S.) 17 Fed. 731, 732.

The word "writing," in Rev. St. § 3893 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2658], means a writing that is not sealed, but exposed to public view, and does not include a sealed letter, on the envelope of which no indication is made of its indecent contents. United States v. Comerford (U. S.) 25 Fed. 902, 903.

The term "writing," in the postal laws, does not include a private letter on the outside of which there is nothing but the name and address of the person to whom it is written. The word "writing," as used in this statute, does not include the word "letter."

United States v. Chase, 10 Sup. Ct. 756, 757, 135 U. S. 255, 34 L. Ed. 117.

WRITINGS FOR PAYMENT OF MONEY.

Wag. St. p. 917, § 9, prescribing a limitation of 10 years for an action on any "writing, whether sealed or unsealed, for the payment of money or property," embraced all kinds of written instruments, without regard to their form or phraseology, which implied a promise or an agreement to pay money, and did not mean merely such as had the requisites of promissory notes, or such as contained an express promise or agreement to pay. Shelton v. Wyman, 1 Mo. App. 130, 133 (citing Reyburn v. Casey, 29 Mo. 129).

Doubts have arisen as to what writings ought to be interpreted to create obligations for the payment of money or property, within the meaning of Rev. St. 1899, § 4272, providing that no action shall be barred on a writing for the payment of money or property under 10 years. In Reyburn v. Casey, 29 Mo. 129, it was said that the broad and comprehensive language of the statute evidently embraces all kinds of written instruments, without regard to their form and phraseology, which imply a promise or agreement to pay money, and is not restricted to such as have the requisites of promissory notes, or to such as contain an express promise or agreement upon their face to pay. It is sufficient if the words import a promise or agreement, or that this can be inferred from the terms employed. Howe v. Mittelberg, 70 S. W. 396, 397, 96 Mo. App. 490.

A rule of court requiring an affidavit of defense in actions on bills, records, and other "writings for the payment of money" cannot be construed to include a sheriff's recognizance, for it is for the performance of a collateral condition. Commonwealth v. Hoffman, 74 Pa. (24 P. F. Smith) 105, 109.

WRITING OBLIGATORY.

The words "writing obligatory" are technical, and imply a written instrument under seal. Clark v. Phillips (U. S.) 5 Fed. Cas. 908; Stull v. Wilcox, 2 Ohio St. 569, 573.

"Writing obligatory" is practically synonymous with "bond," and implies and includes the ideas of signing and sealing. Denton v. Adams, 6 Vt. 40, 42.

A writing obligatory is a bond, or some written obligation under seal. It is a term that is never applied to simple contracts, though they may be in writing. Luna v. Mohr, 1 Pac. 860, 864, 3 N. M. (Johns.) 56.

The word "deed" or "writing obligatory" was said, in Jackson v. Perkins (N. Y.) 2 Wend. 308, 317, to imply the sealing and delivery of the deed, and therefore all that is necessary in a pleading is to allege the execution of the deed or writing obligatory, and it is not necessary to allege sealing or delivery. Egan v. Horrigan, 51 Atl. 246, 248, 96 Me. 46.

"Writing obligatory" has not come into common use in a sense different from its technical one. The expression is rarely used, even by the profession, except in pleading, and then always as signifying a writing under seal. Watson v. Hoge, 15 Tenn. (7 Yerg.) 344, 351.

In Denton v. Adams, 6 Vt. 40, the court held that the words "writing obligatory," in a declaration for a jail bond, imported that the instrument was signed and sealed, since it would not become a writing obligatory without signing and sealing. These words are of the same import as "deed in writing," which clearly imports both signing and sealing. Ide v. Passumpsic & C. R. R. Co., 82 Vt. 297, 298.

WRITING THE RISK.

"Writing the risk," as used in a policy of fire insurance providing that it might be terminated at the request of the insured by repaying the company the customary short rates, together with the expenses of "writing the risk," is not synonymous with, and does not in insurance parlance mean the same thing as, "writing the policy." State Ins. Co. v. Horner, 23 Pac. 788, 14 Colo. 391.

WRITTEN BALLOTS.

Chief Justice Parker, in Henshaw v. Foster, 26 Mass. (9 Pick.) 312, declared that, if an enlarged sense of any particular form of expression should be necessary to accomplish so great an object as the convenient exercise of a fundamental right, such sense should be attributed to it, and in that view was lead to hold that the words "written votes" in the Massachusetts Constitution included both written and printed votes. Fritts v. Kuhl, 17 Atl. 102, 107, 51 N. J. Law (22 Vroom) 191.

"Written," as used in Const. art. 2, § 2, providing that elections for governor, senators, and representatives shall be by written ballots, means expressed by letters, and hence a printed ballot is within the provision. Opinion of Justices, 7 Me. (7 Greenl.) 492, 495. So, also, under the Constitution of Vermont. Temple v. Mead, 4 Vt. 535, 541.

WRITTEN CONSENT.

Where a statute chartering a water-power company gave it a right to divert the water of a river on the "written consent" of those owning lands or water privileges, the "written consents" were substituted for, and were equivalent to, the deeds required by common law in order to create incorporeal hereditaments. Raritan Water-Power Co. v. Veghte, 21 N. J. Eq. (6 C. E. Green) 463, 469.

WRITTEN CONSTITUTION.

A written constitution is in every instance a limitation upon the powers of government in the hands of agents, though there never was a written republican constitution which delegated to functionaries all the latent powers which lie dormant in every nation, and are boundless in extent and incapable of definition. State v. Ah Chuey, 14 Nev. 79, 101, 33 Am. Rep. 530 (citing Cooley, Const. Lim. [3d Ed.] marg. p. 37).

A written constitution marks the only degree of restraint which, to promote stable government, the people put upon themselves. They resolve, in such an instrument, in substance: We will not do certain things, and we will do certain things; and generally in the same instrument any change in the course of government thus marked out is rendered difficult by the formalities and lapse of time which must attend an amendment of it. Commonwealth v. Reeder, 33 Atl. 67, 68, 171 Pa. 505, 33 L. R. A. 141.

WRITTEN CONTRACT.

A written contract is one which in all its terms is in writing. Bishop, Cont. § 163. Railway Passenger & Freight Conductors' Mut. Aid & Ben. Ass'n v. Loomis, 32 N. E. 424, 426, 142 Ill. 560 (Bishop, Cont. § 163); Ames v. Moir, 22 N. E. 535, 130 Ill. 582; Wood v. Williams, 40 Ill. App. 115, 117.

A contract in writing is none the less so because it expresses, and its operation depends upon, a contingency. When the contingency happens, the minds of the parties meet as to all the terms which the contract expresses, and to write them over again would be one of those useless acts which the law does not require. Insurance Law Bldg. Co. v. National Bank of Missouri, 5 Mo. App. 333, 336.

Code 1852, § 211, requiring suits on contracts in writing to be brought within 20 years, means a contract in which "the parties thereto, as well as its entire terms and stipulations, can be gathered from the instrument itself, or some other written instrument referred to therein, without the aid of parol evidence to ascertain either." Board of Com'rs of Marion County v. Shipley, 77 Ind. 553, 555.

The term "obligation or written contract," in the provision of the statute declaring that an obligation or written contract of several persons shall be joint and several, unless otherwise expressed, held not to embrace or apply to promissory notes or bills of exchange. Gale v. Myers (Del.) 4 Houst. 546, 547. The term includes a contract stating that one person has bought goods from another, describing the goods and giving the price and condition of the sale, though signed only by the purchaser. Ames v. Moir, 22 N. E. 535, 130 Ill. 582.

Whether parties have committed their entire contract to writing is a question for the determination of the court. In this determination the writing itself is the guide. If, on its face, it imports to be complete—that is, if it contains such language as imports a complete legal obligation between the parties—it is complete, so that parol evidence will never be admitted to extend its obligations to cover matters upon which the writing is silent. Ehrsam v. Brown, 67 Pac. 867, 869, 64 Kan. 468.

An appeal bond conditioned to pay a money judgment is a "written contract for the payment of money," within Horner's Ann. St. 1897, § 293, cl. 5, barring actions on written contracts for the payment of money in ten years. Taylor v. Smith, 53 N. E. 1048, 1049, 22 Ind. App. 418.

A written contract creates a specified relation between the parties, and, when the duties of that relation are not fully defined in the contract, the law defines them according to the circumstances. In a carrier case it defines the duty in part by implying the exception against inevitable accident. Morrison v. Davis, 20 Pa. (8 Harris) 171, 177, 57 Am. Dec. 695.

Oral contracts compared.

There is no difference between the character of a written and verbal contract; the only difference being that in the one case the evidence of the terms of the contract is in writing, while in the other they are not. Musgrove v. City of Jackson, 59 Miss. 390, 392.

WRITTEN EVIDENCE.

As the term is used with reference to a contract, it does not mean everything which is in writing relating to the contract, but that only which is of a documentary nature, containing the terms of a contract between the parties, and designed to be the repository and evidence of the final intentions. Cohen v. Jacobolice, 59 N. W. 665, 667, 101 Mich. 409 (citing 1 Greenl. Ev. c. 15).

WRITTEN INSTRUMENT.

See, also, "Instrument."

An "instrument of writing" is defined to be something reduced to writing as a means of evidence. Abb. Law Dict. Webster defines it to be a writing expressive of some act, contract, process, or proceeding, as a deed, contract, writ, etc. Webst. Dict. State v. Kelsey, 44 N. J. Law (15 Vroom) 1, 34.

An instrument of writing, "ecritura," is every deed that is made by the hand of a public "escribano," or notary of a corporation, or counsel, "concejo," or sealed with the seal of the king or other authorized person. United States v. King, 48 U. S. (7 How.) 833, 887, 12 L. Ed. 934.

Code Civ. Proc. § 339, requiring actions on a contract, obligation, or liability not founded on an "instrument of writing" to be commenced within two years, refers to contracts, obligations, or liabilities arising in or growing out of written instruments, not remotely or ultimately, but immediately; that is, to such contracts, obligations, or liabilities as arise from instruments of writing executed by the parties sought to be charged in favor of those who seek to enforce the contracts, obligations, or liabilities. Lattin v. Gillette, 30 Pac. 545, 547, 95 Cal. 317, 29 Am. St. Rep. 115.

An instrument partly written and partly printed, or wholly printed, with a written signature thereto, and any signature or writing purporting to be a signature of or intended to bind an individual, partnership, corporation, or association, or an officer thereof, is a "written instrument," or a writing, within the provisions of the Penal Code. Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 6694.

The words "instrument in writing," as used in the article defining and punishing forgery and other offenses affecting written instruments, include every writing purporting to make known or declare the will or intention of the party whose acts it purports to be, whether the same be of record or under seal or private signature, or whatever other form it may have. It must be upon paper or parchment, or some substance made to resemble either of them. The words may be written, printed, stamped, or made in any other way or by any other device; and the words "in writing," "write," or "written" include all these modes of making. An instrument partly printed or stamped and partly written is an instrument in writing. Pen. Code Tex. 1895, art. 533.

By "instrument in writing," as used in the chapter defining and punishing false certificate, authentication, or entry by an officer, is meant any deed, conveyance, transfer, release, obligation, or other written instrument, of any kind or description whatever, which such commissioner is by law authorized to authenticate for record. Pen. Code Tex. 1895, art. 247.

Abstracter's certificate of title.

In Code Civ. Proc. § 339, limiting the commencement of an action upon a contract not founded on such an instrument to two years, the expression "instrument of writing" does not include an abstracter's certificate of title. Lattin v. Gillette, 30 Pac. 545, 95 Cal. 317, 29 Am. St. Rep. 115.

Accounts.

The term "instrument in writing" is said by Bouvier to include bills, bonds, conveyances, leases, mortgages, promissory notes, and wills, but scarcely accounts, ordinary letters, or memoranda. To the same effect see And. Law Dict. So that, under a statute making it forgery to falsely make, etc., any promissory note and other enumerated instruments, "or any other instrument in writing," an account is not subject to forgery. State v. Heaton, 49 Pac. 493, 495, 17 Wash. 310.

Agreement for assignment of contract.

Comp. Laws, § 3450, providing that interest shall be allowed on all moneys after they become due on any bond, bill, promissory note, or "other instrument in writing," includes a written agreement for the assignment of a contract for the construction of railroad tunnels. Simms v. Hampson, 12 Pac. 686, 687, 2 Ariz. 233.

Certificate of notary.

The expression "instrument in writing," as used in Pasch. Dig. art. 2093, providing that he is guilty of forgery who, without lawful authority and with intent to injure or defraud, shall make a false instrument in writing purporting to be the act of another, etc., does not include the certificate of a notary public purporting to authenticate the acknowledgment of a conveyance or transfer. Rogers v. State, 8 Tex. App. 401, 403.

Check.

See "Check."

County warrant.

Rev. Code 1845, p. 371, providing that every person who shall forge, etc., any "instrument in writing" purporting to be the act of another, shall be punished, etc., should be construed to include a county warrant. State v. Fenly, 18 Mo. 445, 449.

Indorsement on note.

The phrase "written instrument," as used in Comp. Laws Dak. § 3538, subd. 2, providing that a written instrument is presumptive evidence of a consideration, embraces the writing, "Extended to December 1, 1891," placed by the payee thereof on a promissory note pursuant to the agreement with the maker to extend the time of payment. Corbett v. Clough, 65 N. W. 1074, 1075, 8 S. D. 176.

Interest coupons.

Coupons for installments of interest on a mortgage will not draw interest after they become due as "written instruments," within the meaning of Rev. St. Ill. c. 74, § 2, providing that creditors shall be allowed interest at 6 per cent. on instruments in writing after due. United States Mortgage Co. v. Sperry (U. S.) 26 Fed. 727, 729.

Judgment.

It has been repeatedly and uniformly held by our courts that a judgment is not a written instrument, within Rev. St. 1894, § 365, permitting an exhibit to be filed with a pleading founded upon a written instrument, and a copy of a judgment so filed does not become a part of the pleadings by reference. First Nat. Bank of Indianapolis v. Hanna, 39 N. E. 1054, 1056, 12 Ind. App. 240; Morrison v. Fishel, 64 Ind. 177, 180; Wilson v. Vance, 55 Ind. 584, 588; Dumbould v. Rowley, 15 N. E. 463, 465, 113 Ind. 353; Lytle v. Lytle, 37 Ind. 281, 283; Wyant v. Wyant, 38 Ind. 48, 49.

Act 1823, which, after enumerating several descriptions of claims that shall be entitled to a preference in the distribution of an intestate's estate where the same is insufficient to pay all the debts, provides that the executors, etc., shall then pay a balance on the legal demands in equal proportions according to their amount, without regard to the nature of such claims, not giving preference to any debts on account of the "instruments of writing" on which the same may be found, does not include a judgment recovered previous to the passage of the act; hence the judgment will be entitled to preference the same as before. Woodworth v. Payne's Adm'r, 1 Ill. (Breese) 374, 376.

The phrase "written instrument for the payment of money only," as used in St. Minn. 1856, which provides that when a pleading is verified by the attorney or other person, except the party, he shall set forth in the affidavit his knowledge or the grounds of his belief on the subject, and the reason why it is not made by the party, except when the action or defense is founded upon a "written statement for the payment of money only," and such instrument is in the possession of the agent or attorney, refers to and includes bills of exchange, notes, bonds, contracts, or any instrument, the creature of contracting parties, containing a stipulation for the payment of money only, but does not include judgments. Smith v. Mulliken, 2 Minn. 319, 322 (Gil. 273, 276).

Mechanic's lien.

Burns' Ann. St. 1894, § 8006, requiring the recorder to record all deeds, bonds, etc., and other "instruments of writing" delivered to him which by law he is bound to record, should be construed to include a mechanic's lien. State v. Phillips, 62 N. E. 12, 14, 157 Ind. 481.

The term "written instrument," as used in Code Kan. § 108, which provides that, "in all actions, allegations of the execution of written instruments, and indorsements thereon, of the existence of a corporation or partnership, or of any appointment or authority, shall be taken as true," etc., includes a mechanic's lien. Hayner v. Eberhardt, 15 Pac. 168, 169, 37 Kan. 308.

Memorandum of tax receipts.

Memoranda of the receipt of taxes made in the margin of the assessment books, with the name of the defendant signed to them, are not "written instruments," within the meaning of Laws 1867, c. 64, and are not admissible to charge him with such taxes, unless in some way authenticated as his entries. Board of Mower County Com'rs v. Smith, 22 Minn. 97, 115.

Note, mortgage, etc.

In Gale v. Myers (Del.) 4 Houst. 546, the Supreme Court of Delaware declined to consider promissory notes as included in the statutory expression "obligation or written instrument." Exchange Bank v. Streeter (Colo.) 4 Pac. 746, 750.

"Written instrument," as used in 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 104, § 78, which provides that, when any pleading is founded on a written instrument, the original or a copy thereof must be filed with the pleadings, includes deeds, mortgages, bonds, written contracts, promissory notes, bills of exchange, etc. Lytle v. Lytle, 37 Ind. 281, 283; Wyant v. Wyant, 38 Ind. 48, 49.

A mortgage not under seal is within the meaning of McCl. Dig. p. 733, § 10, providing that actions "upon any contract, obligation, or liability, founded upon an instrument of writing not under seal," must be commenced within five years after the cause of action accrued. Hope v. Johnston, 9 South. 830, 832, 28 Fla. 55.

Receipt.

A receipted voucher, showing the amount agreed upon as due and an acknowledgment of its payment, is a "written instrument" by which a pecuniary obligation is not only created and acknowledged, but is defeated and discharged. It is a proof of the debt, an obligation conceded, and is personal property, within Gen. St. 1894, § 6842, providing that "personal property," as used in the Penal Code, shall embrace the written instruments by which any pecuniary obligation or right is created, acknowledged, or transferred. State v. Scanlon, 94 N. W. 686, 89 Minn. 244.

Returns of marriages, births, and deaths.

Within Act Feb. 6, 1817, providing that the Secretary of State is entitled to receive for the filing of every bond or instrument of writing of a public nature a certain sum, the returns of marriages, births, and deaths.

which are required by law to be filed by the Secretary of State, are not instruments of writing. State v. Kelsey, 44 N. J. Law (15 Vroom) 1, 34.

Stenographer's report of testimony.

The stenographer's report of oral testimony, though filed in court, is not a written instrument, within the meaning of the Code, allowing written instruments to be brought into the record by reference in a skeleton bill of exceptions. Patterson v. Churchman, 122 Ind. 379, 22 N. E. 662, 23 N. E. 1082; Doyal v. Landes, 20 N. E. 719, 119 Ind. 479. The words have reference rather to bills, bonds, conveyances, leases, etc. They have a restrictive connotation, from being associated with the words "documentary evidence," and mean papers of that class. Patterson v. Churchman, 23 N. E. 1082, 1083, 122 Ind. 379.

Tax duplicate.

A tax duplicate is not a written instrument. Hazzard v. Heacock, 39 Ind. 172-174.

WRITTEN LAWS.

"The written laws of a kingdom are statutes, acts, or edicts." People v. Tiphaine (N. Y.) 3 Parker, Cr. R. 241, 244 (quoting 1 Bl. Comm. 85).

Los Angeles City Charter, p. 506, § 1889, declared by Const. art. 11, § 8, to be the organic law of the city, is a "written law." Frick v. City of Los Angeles, 47 Pac. 250, 251, 115 Cal. 512.

A "written law" is that which is promulgated in writing and of which a record is in existence. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. 1903, § 1896; Ann. Codes & Sts. Or. 1901, § 733.

WRITTEN OPINION.

Prac. Act, § 340, relating to any "written opinion" placed on file in rendering judgment, does not refer to findings of fact, but probably refers to the reason or argument for any decision, judgment, or order, and is not synonymous with "written decision." Corbett v. Job, 5 Nev. 201, 205.

WRITTEN STATEMENT.

"A written statement is a series of facts or particulars expressed on paper." State v. Laughton, 8 Pac. 344, 350, 19 Nev. 202.

"Written statement," within the meaning of the statute defining an indictment to be the written statement of a grand jury, etc., includes a printed form with its blanks properly filled in writing. Winn v. State, 5 Tex. App. 621, 623.

The "written statement" mentioned in Township Organization Act, art. 7, § 7, requiring the judges of an election to make a written statement or certificate of the number of votes cast, is equivalent in meaning to the word "certificate," as used in the act. The term does not include a written statement not signed by the judges of election. People v. Nordheim, 99 Ill. 553, 560.

WRITTEN VOTES.

WRONG.

See "Contributing Wrong"; "Malicious Wrong"; "Private Wrong"; "Public Wrong."

Personal wrong, see "Personal Injury."

In Cooley, Torts, 98, the learned author says: "A wrong is an invasion of right, to the damage of the party who suffers it. It consists in the injury done, and not commonly in the purpose or mental or physical capacity of the person or agent doing it. It may or may not have been done with bad motive. The question of motive is usually a question of aggravation only. Therefore the law, in giving redress, has in view the case of a party injured and the extent of his injury, and makes what he suffers the measure of compensation. In its most usual sense, according to Mr. Blackstone (3 Bl. Comm. 158), wrong signifies an injury committed to the person or property of another, or to his relative rights, unconnected with contract; and these are committed with or without force. McDonald v. Brown, 51 Atl. 213, 214, 23 R. I. 546, 58 L. R. A. 768, 91 Am. St. Rep. 659.

The fathers of the common law, in saying that for every wrong there should be a remedy, by wrong meant a violation of the municipal law, the law of civil conduct, not a transgression of the divine law, as such, nor a breach of etiquette. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ferguson, 60 N. E. 674, 676, 157 Ind. 64, 54 L. R. A. 846.

A wrong is a violation of one's right, and for the redress of every wrong there is a remedy. Want of right and want of remedy are justly said to be reciprocal. When, therefore, there has been a violation of right, the person injured is entitled to an action. Parker v. Griswold, 17 Conn. 288, 303, 42 Am. Dec. 739.

A wrong is a breach of a legal duty, and where there is no wrong there is no cause of action. Riddell v. Peck-Williamson Heating & Ventilating Co., 69 Pac. 241, 243, 27 Mont. 44.

"Wrong" means any deprivation of right, breach of contract, or injury done by one person to another. O'Connor v. Dils, 26 S. E. 354, 355, 43 W. Va. 54.

"Wrong" and "injury" are generally used as synonymous terms in the law. People v.

Quanstrom, 53 N. W. 165, 166, 93 Mich. 254, 17 L. R. A. 723.

"Wrongs" are divided into two sorts: Private wrongs and public wrongs. The former are an infringement or privation of the private or civil rights belonging to the individuals, considered as individuals, and are therefore frequently termed "civil injuries." The latter are a breach and violation of public rights and duties, which affect the whole community considered as a community, and are distinguished by the harsher appellation of "crimes and misdemeanors." Cullinan v. Burkhard, 84 N. Y. Supp. 825, 827, 41 Misc. Rep. 321; McDonald v. Brown, 51 Atl. 213, 214, 23 R. I. 546, 58 L. R. A. 768, 91 Am. St. Rep. 659.

Clearly, the word "wrong," in its broad sense, includes every injury to another, independent of the motives causing the injury; yet, taken as used in an instruction that, if the jury find from the evidence that the defendant has done wrong and caused an injury thereby, a prima facie case of compensation is made out, unless they further find that the negligence of the plaintiff contributed directly to the injury complained of, it meant and could mean nothing but the kind of wrong the court was defining to the jury. In defining "negligence" as the failure to exercise great or extraordinary care, or as a want of that care which an ordinarily prudent man would ordinarily exercise, or as the want of slight diligence, and the failure to take this kind of care, where others are liable to injury, was the wrong, the court was charging the jury that as to an injury caused thereby there was a prima facie case of compensation made out. Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Henry, 14 Pac. 1, 3, 36 Kan. 565.

WRONGDOER.

The term "wrongdoer" embraces every one who violates an express statute. In re Long, 15 N. Y. Supp. 657, 659, 60 Hun, 585.

WRONGFUL—WRONGFULLY.

Where one heedlessly, recklessly, and carelessly injures trees of another, the act is wrongful, within the meaning of the statute allowing prosecution for wrongful injury to property. Daily v. State, 37 N. E. 710, 713, 51 Ohio St. 348, 24 L. R. A. 724, 46 Am. St. Rep. 578.

An allegation that an arrest was "wrongful" states but a conclusion of law. Connolly v. American Bonding & Trust Co., 69 S. W. 959, 961, 113 Ky. 903.

Three things are necessary to constitute a "wrongful attachment," viz.: want of proper cause, malice in the defendant, and damage to the plaintiff. Parmer v. Keith, 20 N. W. 103, 16 Neb. 91.

Dishonesty.

The word "wrongfully," as used in an entry upon the records of a society which was printed and sent to its subordinate lodges, ordering that a claim for the balance of salary be rejected, and that, if the claimant should institute suit therefor, a cross-action be brought against him to recover the amount "wrongfully" obtained by him upon a claim of salary for a time subsequent to the termination of his office, does not impute dishonesty, so as to make the matter libelous. The words "wrongfully obtained" import no more than the words "illegally obtained" or "obtained without right." The substance of the statement is that after the termination of his office the person in question obtained money on a claim of salary that should not have been paid to him. Keyer v. Rives (Ky.) 56 S. W. 4.

Knowledge and intention.

The phrase "wrongfully and illegally conveyed away a slave" is not of the same import as the phrase "guilty of conveying away such slave," as it lacks the essential ingredients of knowledge and intention. Boice v. Gibbons, 8 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 324, 330.

Negligence.

"Wrongful" is a more comprehensive term than the word "negligence." As used in Const. § 241, giving a right to recover damages whenever the death of a person shall result from an injury inflicted by negligence or "wrongful act," the words denote or embrace all acts, other than those constituting mere negligence, which are wrong and inflict an injury resulting in death. Clarke's Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 39 S. W. 840, 841, 101 Ky. 34.

Unauthorized.

Where the board of equalization increases an assessment without authority, such unauthorized interference was wrongful, within the meaning of Rev. St. 1881, § 3813, providing that, where a person shall make it appear to the board of commissioners that any taxes were assessed wrongfully, the board shall order the same refunded. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Marion County Com'rs, 49 N. E. 51, 53, 19 Ind. App. 58.

Laws 1873, c. 263, § 1, fixing the rule of damages in actions brought to recover the value of logs "wrongfully" cut from the lands of another at the highest market value of such logs or timber between the time of such cutting and the trial of the action, means any unlawful or unauthorized cutting of logs or timber on the lands of another, or by any act of this description which is a civil wrong or without right. Such cutting may be wrongful, and yet done by mistake. Webber v. Quaw, 49 N. W. 830, 831, 46 Wis. 118.

Unlawfully.

The words "wrongfully" and "unlawfully" are not synonyms or equivalents of each other, nor convertible terms; so that, under a statute authorizing an action for personal property which has been wrongfully taken or unlawfully detained, it is held that an allegation that the property was wrongfully detained was not sufficient. Louisville, E. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Payne, 2 N. E. 582, 584, 103 Ind. 188.

The phrase "wrongfully detained," as used in Gen. St. 1875, § 1, providing that an action of replevin may be maintained to recover goods "wrongfully detained in any manner," is of a more extensive meaning than the phrase "unlawfully detained," which phrase would only imply a detention contrary to law, while the phrase "wrongfully detained in any manner" would include any detention which does wrong to another, whether or not it were under color of authority, as the detention of goods under levy of execution. Hilton v. Osgood, 49 Conn. 110, 112.

Wanton or malicious.

Const. § 241, provides that, when death results from wrongful act, the damages shall be prosecuted by the personal representative of the deceased. Held, that the words "wrongful act" applied only to acts from which negligence could arise, and hence did not apply to Gen. St. c. 1, § 6, giving a right of action for damages to the widow of the person killed by the wanton or malicious use of firearms. McClure v. Alexander (Ky.) 24 S. W. 619.

The word "wrongful," as used in Code Tenn. §§ 3471, 4289, providing that plaintiff in attachment shall give a bond conditioned that he will prosecute the attachment with effect, or, in case of failure to so prosecute it, he will pay such damages as the defendant sustains by the wrongful suing out of the attachment, means a mere failure to prosecute with effect, and the court is not authorized, in any suit for statutory damages, to import from the common law any element of malice or want of probable cause, for the suit does not require it, and its object is to create a right or remedy to prescribe its limitations and conditions; but, if there be malice and want of probable cause, the defendant may also recover punitive damages. Jerman v. Stewart (U. S.) 12 Fed. 266, 270.

The word "wrongful," as used in a bond conditioned on the payment of all costs and damages that plaintiff might sustain by wrongful suing out of a writ of ne exeat, is not synonymous with the word "malicious," and the writ may have been wrongfully sued out, though it was done without malice. Spivey v. McGehee, 21 Ala. 417, 422.

Under a statute providing that, when the death of one is caused by the wrongful act or omission of another, the personal representatives of the former may sue, etc., it is held that the word "wrongful" is not used in the sense of "willful" or "malicious." McLean v. Burbank, 12 Minn. 530, 533 (Gil. 438, 443).

The words "wrongful act," as used in Const. § 241, and Ky. St. § 6, giving a right of action for the death of a person resulting from injury inflicted by wrongful act, are comprehensive enough to include negligent acts, but they were intended primarily to cover cases where the act was wantonly or intentionally committed, or where one may have counseled or procured another to do it, when in contemplation of law the act of counseling or advising makes the wrongful act his own; and hence a recovery for the death of a servant, resulting from the master's breach of contract to furnish a guard to protect him from assault by others, cannot be sustained. Lewis v. Taylor Coal Co., 23 Ky. Law Rep. 2218, 2219, 66 S. W. 1044, 112 Ky. 845, 57 L. R. A. 447.

Without sufficient grounds.

Within Code Civ. Proc. § 200, providing that plaintiff in attachment shall give an undertaking conditioned to pay all damages by reason of the attachment, if the order be wrongfully obtained, an attachment will not be held wrongful because dissolved on account of defects in the forms of proceeding, or mere omissions, irregularities, or informalities which the officer may have committed in the issuance of the process, but that the attachment was resorted to without sufficient ground. Storz v. Finklestein, 69 N. W. 856, 50 Neb. 177.

WROUGHT.

A railroad's classification and tariff, fixing a certain rate for marble "wrought," does not necessarily mean worked or worked upon. Marble sawed into slabs is never used in that condition for any purpose, but is sawed into slabs preparatory to being worked or fitted for some particular use or purpose, and is not "wrought" within the meaning of the tariff rate. Bancroft v. Peters, 4 Mich. 619, 625.

WROUGHT BY HAND.

Astrakhan trimmings, with no evidence of hand work save the turning down of the hem and the basting thereof, are not "dress trimmings wrought by hand," within Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, c. 1244, par. 398, 26 Stat. 597, imposing a duty on such articles. In re Downing (U. S.) 56 Fed. 815, 817.

X

A complaint charged that the defendant answered an inquiry to the plaintiff in figures, words, signs, and abbreviations as follows: "Gentlemen: Could you furnish the following: 40 Brack. 8x5, 8 Mem.; 36 Brack. 12x8, 8 Mem.? At what price, and how soon?" The complaint averred that by the usages and customs of the business of manufacturing, buying, and selling dressed lumber and brackets, the abbreviation "brack." is intended to and does mean "bracket"; that the character "x" is a substitute for and means "by"; and that the abbreviation "mem." stands for the word "member." Held, that the terms in the complaint were per se intelligible in themselves, and hence plaintiff properly alleged their meaning in the trades and business in which they were used, and that he was entitled to prove such meaning by parol at the trial. Jaqua v. Witham & A. Co., 100 Ind. 547, 548, 7 N. E. 314, 315.

Y

YACHT.

As barge, see "Barge."

YARD.

See "Gravity Yard"; "In Yard"; "Railroad Yard"; "Square Yard."

The word "yard," by common and current acceptation, is an inclosure within which any work or business is carried on. In an insurance policy on lumber in yard, it does not include lumber in a clearing in a forest. Cook v. Loew, 69 N. Y. Supp. 614, 84 Misc. Rep. 276.

Webster's definition of the word "yard" is an inclosure, usually a small inclosure in front of or around a house or barn. The word "yard," as generally used in speaking of a dwelling, does not necessarily mean or suggest the idea to the American mind of an inclosure, but rather the plat immediately surrounding and upon which is situated the dwelling and other buildings used in connection therewith for domestic purposes. State v. Bugg, 72 Pac. 236, 66 Kan. 668.

"Yard," as used in Act 1876, known as the jury law, prohibiting the summoning of jurors within the courthouse or yard, does not include an uninclosed public square used as an open market and public resort, though situated only 20 feet from the courthouse. Matthews v. State, 6 Tex. App. 23, 39.

YARD FIXTURES.

The term "yard fixtures," in a fire policy excepting store and yard fixtures, etc., does not include an awning attached to the front of the insured building. Commercial Fire Ins. Co. v. Allen, 1 South. 202, 207, 80 Ala. 571.

YEAR.

See "Calendar Year"; "Current Year"; "Each Year"; "Fiscal Year"; "Full Year"; "Half Year"; "Previous Year." See "By the Year."

Agreement to be performed within a year, see "Perform."

The term "year" means a period of 365 days. Pol. Code Cal. 1903, § 3257.

Fractions of a year are to be computed by the number of months, thus: Half a year is six months. Fractions of a day are to be disregarded in computations which include more than one day and involve no questions of priority. Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 5132; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 2466.

Time shall continue to be computed in this state according to the Gregorian or new style. The first day of each year after the year 1752 is the 1st day of January, according to such style. For the purpose of computing and reckoning the days of the year in the same regular course in the future, every year, the number of which in the Christian era is a multiple of four, is a bisextile or leap year, consisting of three hundred and sixty-six days, unless such number of the year is a multiple of one hundred and the first two figures thereof treated as a separate number is not a multiple of four, and every year which is not a leap year is a common year, consisting of three hundred and sixty-five days. The term "year," in a statute, contract, or other public or private instrument, means three hundred and sixty-five days; but the added day of a leap year and the day immediately preceding shall for the purpose of such computation be counted as one day. In a statute, contract, or public or private instrument the term "year" means twelve months, the term "half year" six months, and the term "a quarter of a year" three months. Laws N. Y. 1892, c. 677, § 25.

Under a statute for the relief of persons robbed of their goods, and providing that no person should take any benefit thereby unless he should commence his suit or action within one year next after such robbery, the day when the robbery was committed was to be included in computing the year. Rex v. Addersly, 4 Doug. 463, 465.

A will in which testator gave to his son all his real estate, on condition that he pay "in one year next after my decease" certain legacies, should not be construed to include the day of the testator's death in the computation of the time within which the son was required to make the payment of money mentioned in the devise. Sands v. Lyon, 13 Conn. 18, 25.

Such words as "eighteen hundred and seventy-one," as used in an indictment, in stating the time of the alleged offense, immediately following the month and day of the month, sufficiently denote the year, though the word "year" is not used. State v. Munch, 22 Minn. 67, 71.

The words "eighteen hundred and fifty-eight," immediately following the month and day of the month, in an indictment or complaint, in stating the time of the alleged offense, sufficiently denote the "year," though the words "the year of our Lord" are omitted. Commonwealth v. Doran, 80 Mass. (14 Gray) 37, 38.

Laws N. Y. 1892, c. 677, as amended by Laws 1894, c. 447, § 25, declare that the term

"year" in a statute, contract, or any public or private instrument means 365 days, and also means 12 months. Aultman & Taylor Co. v. Syme, 57 N. E. 168, 169, 163 N. Y. 54, 79 Am. St. Rep. 565.

There is no real difference between "one whole year" and "one whole year at the least." An occupation of premises beginning on September 30th in one year and ending on September 29th in the next year, thus making 365 days, will be deemed "one whole year," within the meaning of a statute relating to landlords and tenants. Reg. v. St. Mary, Warwick, 18 Eng. Law & Eq. 309, 314.

The service to gain settlement must be for a whole year, though it happens to be leap year, and consists of 366 days. A hiring from the 13th day of May, 1819, to the 13th of May, 1820, and service under it till May 12, 1820, namely, 365 days, was not sufficient to give a settlement. Rex v. Inhabitants of Roxby, 10 Barn. & C. 51.

As calendar year.

A year at common law, in the absence of anything showing a different meaning, was construed to mean a calendar year. Fretwell v. McLemore, 52 Ala. 124, 145.

The term "year," as used in a contract, does not necessarily mean a calendar year, but its meaning is gathered from the subject-matter of the contract and the connection in which the term is used. Williams v. Bagnelle, 72 Pac. 408, 410, 138 Cal. 699 (citing Brown v. Anderson, 77 Cal. 236, 19 Pac. 487).

While "year" ordinarily means a calendar year, that signification is not always to be given the word; but the meaning of the word "year" in a statute is to be determined by the subject-matter and the context, so as to concur with the intention of the party using it. Thornton v. Boyd, 25 Miss. 598, 605.

The word "year" in Comp. Laws 1897, c. 25, art. 16, § 1, making it unlawful for any board of county commissioners or county clerk to issue county warrants or orders in any one year to a greater amount than the amount of the county tax levied in the same year to defray county expenses, means a calendar year, and not a fiscal year. Garfield Tp., Finney County, v. Dodsworth Book Co., 58 Pac. 565, 567, 9 Kan. App. 752.

"Year," as used in Comp. Laws 1879, c. 25, art. 16, § 1, and chapter 25, § 220, will be construed to mean the calendar year; following Garfield Tp. v. Dodsworth Co., 58 Pac. 565, 567, 9 Kan. App. 752; Garfield Tp. v. Hubbell, 59 Pac. 600, 9 Kan. App. 785.

"Year," when used in the statute, is construed to mean a calendar year, unless a different intent can be gathered from the context or otherwise. United States v. Dick- son, 40 U. S. (15 Pet.) 162, 10 L. Ed. 689; Engleman v. State, 2 Ind. 91, 52 Am. Dec. 494. And hence, as used in Act 25th Gen. Assem. Iowa, c. 62, providing for an annual tax for sale of intoxicating liquors, and section 7, providing for a rebate in the tax in case the sales of intoxicating liquors had not been continued for more than six months in the year for which taxes were assessed, then the total tax for the year, exclusive of costs, may be reduced pro rata, the word "year" means calendar year, or from January to January. David v. Hardin County, 73 N. W. 576, 578, 104 Iowa, 204.

Code, § 3898, limiting the service of a juror to "four weeks in a year" means a calendar year, and although a juror may have served four weeks during a term of court which began in December, yet he would not be disqualified from another week of service in the succeeding year, although at the same term, which continued into the year. Atlanta & C. Air Line Ry. v. Ray, 70 Ga. 674, 676.

"Section 8 of our Code provides that the word 'year,' when used therein, means a calendar year; and we hold that an agreement for a performance of a year's service means a year, to commence on the next day. This construction is in accordance with the ordinary rule for the computation of time, which excludes fractions of a day; and it is in harmony, too, with section 14 of the Revised Code, which provides that, in computing the time within which any act is required to be done, there must be an exclusion of the first day and an inclusion of the last." Dickson v. Frisbee, 52 Ala. 165, 166, 23 Am. Rep. 565.

The term "year," when used in any statute, means a calendar year, unless a contrary intention be expressed. Code Miss. 1892, § 1521; Rev. St. Tex. 1895, art. 3270; Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 4662, subd. 4; Code Civ. Proc. Mont. 1895, § 3463, subd. 4; Pol. Code Mont. 1895, § 16, subd. 4; V. S. 1894, 12; Code Va. 1887, § 5; Civ. Code Ala. 1896, § 8; Hurd's Rev. St. Ill. 1901, p. 1719, c. 131, § 1, subd. 10; Gen. St. Conn. 1902, § 1; Horne's Rev. St. Ind. 1901, § 240, subd. 4; Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 2724; Mills' Ann. St. Colo. 1891, § 4185; Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 4971; Rev. St. Me. 1883, p. 59, c. 1, § 6, subd. 10; Pen. Code Ga. 1895, § 2; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 5132; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 2466; Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 88, c. 8, § 5, subd. 11; Rev. Code Del. 1893, c. 5, § 1, subd. 8; Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 255, subd. 9; Rev. St. Okl. 1908, § 2805; Code W. Va. 1899, p. 132, c. 13, § 14; Pub. St. R. I. 1882, p. 77, c. 24, § 11; Code Iowa 1897, § 48, subd. 11; Code N. C. 1883, § 3765, subd. 3; Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 7342, subd. 11; Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 50, subd. 10; Pub. St. N. H. 1901, p. 63, c. 2, § 8; Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 4160; Gen. St. N. J. 1895, p.

3195, § 34; Shannon's Code Tenn. 1896, § 64; Ky. St. 1903, § 452.

As crop year.

A year is a period of time, and it does not necessarily mean the period commencing with the 1st day of January and ending with the 31st day of the succeeding December. When the term is used in a contract, its meaning is to be determined from the connection in which it is used and the subject-matter of the contract. As used in an agreement for the purchase of certain fruits, providing that portion of the purchase price was to be paid when the crop was taken off at the end of the "year," was meant the end of the fruit season, and not the end of the calendar year. Brown v. Anderson, 19 Pac. 487, 488, 77 Cal. 236.

As fiscal year.

Unless otherwise expressed, the word "year" is always intended to mean the calendar year; but, where applied to matters of revenue, the presumption is in favor of its referring to a fiscal year. Glasgow v. Rowse, 43 Mo. 479, 487.

As license year.

"Year," as used in 1 Rev. St. p. 679, § 5, prescribing the time during which license to sell liquors shall remain in force, refers to the license year, and not to the calendar year. Disbrow v. Saunders (N. Y.) 1 Denio, 149, 150.

As theatrical season.

"Years," as used in a contract whereby a party agreed to perform at another's theater, and the latter agreed to engage her for three years, etc., according to the uniform usage of a theatrical profession, means simply the theatrical season; that is, the time when the theater is open for performance. Grant v. Maddox, 15 Mees. & W. 737, 745.

As 12 calendar months.

The word "year" is interpreted to mean 12 calendar months. Muse v. London Assurance Corp., 108 N. C. 240, 244, 13 S. E. 94.

The term "year" does not necessarily mean the period commencing with the 1st day of January and ending with the 31st day of the succeeding December. When the word "year" is used, 12 calendar months are usually intended, but not necessarily 12 months commencing with the first and ending with the twelfth month of the calendar arranged by St. Geo. II. When the word "year" is used, its meaning is to be determined from the subject-matter of the contract and the connection in which it is used, and which will carry into effect the intention of the parties. Knobe v. Baldrige, 73 Ind. 54, 55 (citing Thornton v. Boyd, 25 Miss. 598; Inhabitants of Paris v. Inhabitants of Hiram, 12 Mass. 262).

Const. art. 2, § 2, providing that no person should at any time be allowed to vote in the election of the city council of the city of Providence, or upon any proposition to impose a tax, or for the expenditure of money in any town or city, unless he shall "within the year next preceding" have paid a tax assessed upon his property therein, valued at least at a certain sum, does not mean the preceding calendar year, but only the preceding 12 months. In re Providence Voters, 13 R. I. 737, 740.

As year of office.

Although it is true that in ordinary dealings and discourse, when the period of a year is mentioned, it will be intended that a calendar year was spoken of, yet that signification is not necessary always and at all times to be given to the word. On the contrary, the period of time intended to be designated by the term "year" is to be determined by the subject-matter in the context, and that signification is to be given which accords with the intention of the party using it. Thus, in a statute fixing the term of office of certain officers, the word "years" was construed to mean political years from the general election, including the time between one general election and the succeeding general election. Thornton v. Boyd, 25 Miss. 598, 604.

The expression "one whole year," as used in a statute, must be understood to be a political, or, rather, a municipal, year, which may sometimes exceed and sometimes fall short of a calendar year. As used in St. 1793, c. 34, art. 6, § 2, providing that any person, being chosen and actually serving "one whole year" in certain offices in any town or district, shall thereby gain a settlement therein. Inhabitants of Paris v. Inhabitants of Hiram, 12 Mass. 262, 263.

By charter the capital burgesses and common council of a borough were authorized every year, on Monday next before Michaelmas, to elect and nominate one of the capital burgesses to be mayor for one whole year thence next ensuing; and he, before he were admitted to execute that office, or in any way to intermeddle in the same office, was, on Friday next after the feast of St. Michael next ensuing such nomination and election, not only to take this corporal oath well and faithfully to execute the office, but also all the oaths appointed by a mayor to be taken; and after such oath so taken, he might execute the office of mayor of the borough for one whole year then next ensuing. It was then provided that none who should have once borne the office of mayor should be again elected and preferred to be mayor within the space of three years next ensuing the end and determination of his office of mayoralty. Held, that the words "three years," mentioned in the prohibitory clause, imported years of office, and not calendar years, and therefore a person who had once served the office of mayor might be again promoted to the same office as soon as three mayoralties had intervened. King v. Swyer, 10 Barn. & C. 486.

As used in Act April 20, 1818, c. 118, relating to the compensation of the receivers of public moneys, providing that the whole amount which any such officer shall receive shall not exceed for any one year a certain sum, means a year commencing from the date of his appointment, instead of calculating it by the fiscal year, which commences with the calendar year on the 1st day of January in every year. United States v. Dickson, 40 U. S. (15 Pet.) 141, 160, 10 L. Ed. 689.

As year of our Lord.

The word "year," when used in any statute, is equivalent to the expression, "year of our Lord." Rev. St. Utah, 1898, § 2498; V. S. 1894, 12; Code Va. 1887, § 5 [Va. Code 1904, p. 6]; Hurd's Rev. St. Ill. 1901, p. 1719, c. 131, § 1, subd. 10; Horner's Rev. St. Ind. 1901, § 240, subd. 5; Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 2724; Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 4971; Rev. St. Me. 1883, p. 59, c. 1, § 6, subd. 11; Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 88, c. 8, § 5, subd. 11; Rev. Code Del. 1893, p. 43, c. 5, § 1, subd. 8; Code W. Va. 1899, p. 132, c. 13, § 14; Code Iowa 1897, § 48, subd. 11; Code N. C. 1883, § 3765, subd. 3; Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 7342, subd. 11; Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 50, subd. 10; Pub. St. N. H. 1901, p. 63, c. 2, § 8; Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 4160; Ky. St. 1903, § 452; Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 225, subd. 9.

Under Rev. St. c. 1, § 4, cl. 11, providing that the word "year," when used for a date, means "year of our Lord," an indictment alleging that the crime was committed in the year 1859 was not defective for failure to state in what era the year occurred. State v. Bartlett, 47 Me. 388, 393.

"It is a fact, historically known, that Christian nations have generally adopted the Gregorian calendar, numbering the years from the birth of Christ. This is a Christian state, and has adopted the same, and when the year is mentioned in our legislative or judicial proceedings, and no mention is made of the Jewish, Mohammedan, or other system of reckoning the time, all understand the Christian calendar to be used." Engleman v. State, 2 Ind. (2 Cart.) 91, 92, 52 Am. Dec. 494.

YEAR OF OUR LORD.

The expression "year of our Lord" has a well-settled meaning, and indicates a year of the Christian calendar, which begins January 1st and ends the 31st of the succeeding December. Garfield Tp., Finney County, v. Dodsworth, 58 Pac. 565, 567, 9 Kan. App. 752.

YEAR TO YEAR.

See "Tenant from Year to Year."

YEARLING.

See "Short Yearling."

"Yearling," as used by dealers in cattle has a well-defined meaning, viz., cattle from 10 months to 18 months of age. Vassau v. Campbell, 81 N. W. 829, 830, 79 Minn. 167.

Any animal in the second year of its growth is a yearling. Stollenwerk v. State, 55 Ala. 142.

In defining the word yearling, Webster uses as an illustration the term "yearling heifer." In Montana, when an animal of the bovine species has reached the age of one year, it is usually called a yearling. Milligan v. Jefferson County, 2 Mont. 543, 546.

YEARLY.

As used in a lease at the rate of a "yearly" rent of £42, followed by the provision that the first payment should be for the period from April 19th to June 24th, being the proportion of rent to that date, followed by the regular habendum clause, "until one of the said parties shall give unto the other six calendar months' notice in writing to quit," the word "yearly" was only a word of calculation, and did not fix the term. Doe v. Grafton, 18 Adol. & E. (N. S.) 496, 501.

A power under which a lease was granted, providing that a rent should be reserved and "made payable yearly," did not require that there should be one entire yearly payment, but the words were the same as "payable every year." Doe v. Wilson, 5 Barn. & Ald. 363.

YEARLY INCOME.

"Yearly income," within the meaning of St. 1793, c. 34, § 2, cl. 4, giving a settlement to persons having a freehold of the clear yearly income of £3 and taking the rents and profits thereof three years successively, means not the sum actually received annually by the owner of the estate as rents and profits, but the yearly value thereof as a rentable estate. Inhabitants of Pelham v. Inhabitants of Middleborough, 70 Mass. (4 Gray) 57, 59.

"Yearly income," within the meaning of St. 1793, c. 34, giving a settlement to persons having an estate of inheritance or freehold of the clear yearly income of £3 and taking rents and profits thereof three years successively, means an actual annual income of a designated amount in each and every year for three years. Inhabitants of Western v. Inhabitants of Leicester, 20 Mass. (3 Pick.) 198.

A "yearly income," within Settlement Act Mass. 1793, c. 34, providing that the occupant of a freehold estate by a clear yearly income of $10 has a settlement, etc., is to be ascertained by deducting all expenses to which the income might necessarily or legally be subjected, and must be valued as if the property had been subject to taxation, when forbearance to tax it has been on account of the poverty of the occupants. Inhabitants of Freeport v. Inhabitants of Sidney, 21 Me. (8 Shep.) 305, 306.

YEARLY MEETING.

"Yearly meeting," as used in a will giving land to the yearly meeting of people called "Quakers," means the assemblage composed of representatives from the quarterly meetings, and such other members of the society within its limits as might be present and the individuals composing it. The devise was not to any certain individuals, but to the members of an assembly, meeting together annually, and to such other members of this variable body in endless succession as by delegation should compose it. Greene v. Dennis, 6 Conn. 293, 299, 16 Am. Dec. 58.

YEARLY PRODUCE.

"Yearly produce," as used in a demise of a farm, whereby it was agreed to furnish the owner with one-half of the yearly produce of such farm, did not comprehend the wood and timber of the farm cut thereon, but only such crops as are annually gathered. Ladd v. Abel, 18 Conn. 513, 518.

YEARLY VALUE.

See "Clear Annual or Yearly Value."

The "yearly value of a widow's dower" in real estate, when it is not susceptible of division, and when she is to take an annual sum in lieu of dower, under Rev. Code, p. 435, §§ 28, 29, is net annual product, without the expenditure of money or labor upon it, after deductions have been made from its gross income, of all the charges to which it is subject, such as taxes and repairs. Riley v. Clamorgan, 15 Mo. 331, 334.

YEARS.

Estate or tenancy for years, see "Estate for Years."

YIELD.

The word "yield," used in the sense of yielding up the possession of an estate, means to give as claimed of right, to resign, to surrender, or to give place to. Drake v. Curtis, 55 Mass. (1 Cush.) 395, 405.

The word "yield," in a stipulation that the capital stock of a company should yield annually certain dividends, implies a natural accretion from the business of the corporation. Struthers v. Clark, 30 Pa. (6 Casey) 210, 213.

YIELDING AND PAYING.

"Yielding and paying," as used in a lease requiring the yielding and paying of rent, created a liability, and not an express covenant, for the payment of rent. Fanning v. Stimson, 13 Iowa, 42, 49.

The words "yielding and paying," in a lease for years, were construed at common law as creating a covenant by the lessee to pay rent. Young v. Hargraves' Adm'r, 7 Ohio, 63, 69, pt. 2.

The expression "yielding and paying rent," in a lease, expresses the thing to be done, and in that sense the contract is express; but the words, being introduced in form as a condition of the demise, are susceptible of such construction, and the covenant arising out of the words "yielding and paying" is an implied one, and the lessee is not liable on it for rents accruing after an assignment of his term. Kimpton v. Walker, 9 Vt. 191, 198.

As used in a lease of land, the lessee "yielding and rendering" therefor a certain amount of rent, and providing that, if not paid at the day appointed, it should be recovered as an action of debt, import a covenant, and not a condition. De Lancey v. Ganong, 9 N. Y. (5 Seld.) 9, 20 (citing Jackson v. McClallen [N. Y.] 8 Cow. 295; 2 Bac. Abr. 556; Boone v. Eyre, 2 W. Bl. Rep. 1314).

In case of an indenture or deed executed by both the lessor and lessee, or grantor and grantee, a covenant to pay the rent therein reserved arises on the words "yielding and paying," and there are some authorities which hold that the words create an express covenant to pay the rent. It is a covenant which runs with the land, and will be binding on the assignee without his being specially named, and as long as he continues to be assignee he is liable for the rent in the same manner as the lessee or original grantee was. Royer v. Ake (Pa.) 3 Pen. & W. 461, 464.

YOKE OF OXEN.

Single ox.

"Yoke of oxen," as used in Gen. St. p. 474, § 3, cl. 5, providing that two cows, ten hogs, one yoke of oxen, etc., shall be exempt from sale on execution, when owned by a person engaged in farming and who is head of a family, includes a steer which is only 20 months old and has never yet been worked, or broke to work, and does not necessarily relate only to cattle already broke to work. Mallory v. Berry, 16 Kan. 293, 294.

"Yoke of oxen," as used in Acts 1833, c. 80, exempting from execution a horse, mule, or yoke of oxen in the hands of the head of a family, should be construed to include a single ox. Wolfenbarger v. Standifer, 35 Tenn. (3 Sneed) 659, 660.

Unbroken oxen.

Gen. St. 1878, § 310, subd. 6, exempting from execution a "yoke of oxen," should be construed to include a pair of two-year-old steers, fit to be used for light work, though not yet broken. The general tendency of the courts is to hold that, where a statute exempts oxen, young animals of the species and description, that by time and subsequent growth would become such within a popular sense, are within the meaning and import of these terms as used in the statute. Berg v. Baldwin, 18 N. W. 821, 822, 31 Minn. 541 (citing Dow v. Smith, 7 Vt. 465, 29 Am. Dec. 202; Freeman v. Carpenter, 10 Vt. 433, 33 Am. Dec. 210; Mundell v. Hammond, 40 Vt. 641; Carruth v. Grassie, 77 Mass. [11 Gray] 211, 71 Am. Dec. 707; Mallory v. Berry, 16 Kan. 293).

"Yoke of steers," as used in Gen. St. c. 47, § 13, exempting from execution a "yoke of steers" such as the debtor may select, should be construed to include a yoke of steer calves less than a year old; the words of the statute not being limited in meaning to steers of the age when they are usually put to service, or to such as were actually put to use as a team. Mundell v. Hammond, 40 Vt. 641, 642.

In Mundell v. Hammond, 40 Vt. 641, two calves less than a year old were held to be exempt under a statute exempting a "yoke of oxen" or steers. The only distinction between this statute and ours is that they use the term "yoke of oxen," while ours uses the term "yoke of work oxen." We think they both mean the same. A yoke of oxen means a pair of cattle used for work, suitable for work, and that are fit for working together. A yoke of work oxen means the same thing. Nelson v. Fightmaster, 44 Pac. 213, 215, 4 Okl. 38.

YOU.

"You have got my money on your shelves," as spoken and published of a plaintiff who was a merchant, implied clearly an act of fraud, if not a flagrant act of dishonesty, committed by such plaintiff in regard to the procurement of his goods. Davis v. Davis (S. C.) 1 Nott & McC. 290, 291.

YOU ARE MY PRISONERS.

The use of the words, "You are my prisoners. Surrender!"—by an officer to persons whom he is attempting to arrest, is a sufficient notice of his character as a police officer. People v. Pool, 27 Cal. 572, 578 (citing Roscoe, Cr. Ev. 755; 1 Russ. Crimes, 627; 1 Hale, P. C. 461; Mackalley's Case, 9 Ooke, 68b, 68a).

YOU SHALL HAVE YOUR MONEY.

A statement by a person, when asked about the settlement of certain books, that the matter ought to have been settled long ago, and "you shall have your money" within 10 days, means no more than the words, "I will pay you all I owe you," and are insufficient to remove the bar of the statute of limitations. Ward v. Jack, 33 Atl. 577, 172 Pa. 416, 51 Am. St. Rep. 744.

YOUR ACCOUNT.

"Your account," as used in a letter reciting, "As there was no time set for the payment of your account, and J. thought it would be an accommodation to him, etc., I will be surety for the payment," are ambiguous, and may mean either a past or future account. Walrath v. Thompson (N. Y.) 4 Hill, 200, 201.

YOUR UNDERWRITERS.

"Your underwriters," as used in a contract for the equipment of a certain factory with automatic sprinklers, providing that the sizes of pipe should conform "to the schedule required by your underwriters," means the insurance companies to whom the owners of such factory might apply for insurance, or those companies who should furnish such insurance. United States Sugar Refinery v. Providence Steam & Gas Pipe Co. (U. S.) 62 Fed. 375, 379, 10 C. C. A. 422.

YOUNG.

The expression "young person," as used in the article relating to factories, means a person of the age of 14 years and under the age of 18 years. Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 10,104.

The term "young person," as used in all laws relative to the employment of labor, shall mean a person of the age of 14 years and under the age of 18 years. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 917, c. 106, § 8.

Pub. Laws Me. 1885, c. 275, making it unlawful to fish for, catch, buy, sell, expose for sale, or possess, between certain days, any "young lobster" less than 10½ inches in length, means any lobster under the prescribed length, without regard to its age. The inhibition is against taking anything under the prescribed length. The word "young" is used in a presumptive or assumptive sense merely. Thompson v. Smith, 8 Atl. 687, 688, 79 Me. 160.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATIONS.

As public charity, see "Public Charity."

YOUNGER.

The addition of the word "younger" is no part of a name, and its being found in one case attached to the name, and not in another, raises no doubt of the identity of the person, when the change is readily accounted for on other grounds. Blake v. Tucker, 12 Vt. 39, 45.

The word "younger" or "2d" is affixed to a man's name to distinguish one individual from another whose names are the same, and the purpose may be supplied by any other description, or wholly dispensed with, when no other person of the same name resides in the same town or vicinity. Isaacs v. Wiley, 12 Vt. 674, 678.

YOUNGEST.

A testator devised his farm to the children of his son W. as a class, other children that W. might have to share equally in the benefits of the provision. He also desired that the farm should not be divided, but carried on under the direction of W., the executor, until W. should die, if that should occur before W.'s youngest child came of age, and, if not, the farm to be kept together until the youngest child came of age, when it should be divided equally among them. Held, that the term "youngest child" meant the youngest child named in the will or living at testator's death, and not the youngest child that might be born to W. Arnold v. Arnold, 19 S. E. 670, 674, 41 S. C. 291.

As used in a will providing that the testator's interest in a business concern should be continued, and the profits paid to his executors, until the majority of the youngest child, and should then be divided between the testator's wife and children, does not mean that one of the testator's minor children which shall live to first reach majority, but means the youngest child living at the time of the testator's death, and the effect of the provision is simply to prevent a division of the estate until the child shall attain the age of 21 years or previously depart this life. In re Sands, 3 N. Y. Supp. 67, 69, 1 Con. Sur. 259.

The phrase, "youngest child of all my said children," in a will devising property to testator's children in trust "until the youngest child of all my said children shall have attained the age of 21 years," to apply the net proceeds of the property to the education of testator's grandchildren, means testator's youngest child, and not the youngest of testator's children. Otterback v. Bohrer, 12 S. E. 1013, 1014, 87 Va. 548.

By the words "youngest child," in a devise providing that no division of certain real estate should be made among testator's children until the youngest child should become of age, is meant, not the youngest child which shall live to majority, but the youngest child living when the will took effect, at the death of the testator. Simpson v. Cook, 24 Minn. 180, 186.

The term "youngest," as used in the chapter relating to homesteads, is construed to mean the decedent's child, whether by birth or adoption, last to attain majority. Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 3627.

"Youngest grandchild," as used in a will devising the estate of the testatrix to her executors in trust, to hold during the lives of her son-in-law and youngest grandchild then living, for the purpose of investing the rents and profits of the real estate for the benefit of her grandchildren living at her death or subsequently born, and providing that on the death of the son-in-law and the arrival of her youngest grandchild at the age of 21 the real estate so devised should go to her grandchildren then living, cannot be construed to mean a grandchild not yet born, but means the youngest grandchild mentioned in the will, since to construe it as meaning a grandchild not yet born would make the trust invalid by extending the suspension of alienation beyond two lives in being. Roe v. Vingut, 1 N. Y. Supp. 914, 917, 49 Hun, 607.

YOUTH.

"Youth," as used in a will bequeathing property for the establishment of a free English school for the instruction of youth, wherever they may belong, should be construed to include children and youth of both sexes, and does not limit the school to the instruction of either to the exclusion of the other. The term "youth" often means "young men." When used with the indefinite article (a youth) that is its proper meaning; but, used by an inhabitant of Massachusetts in reference to the establishment of a free school for the purpose of affording general instruction, the word "youth" includes youth of both sexes. This is the sense in which it is generally understood by educated men; a sense not derived from any one source or authority or course of reasoning, but, as all our knowledge of the sense of vernacular language is derived, from good usage. The word "youth" differs from the word "children" only by referring to and embracing young persons of somewhat more advanced age and proficiency. Nelson v. Cushing, 56 Mass. (2 Cush.) 519, 533.

Z

ZANTE CURRANTS.

"Zante currants" is a well-known commercial expression among importers, dealers, and growers of raisins, and relates to and comprehends a kind of raisin made from a small, seedless grape, grown not only on the island of Zante, but also, and to a much greater extent, on the mainland of Greece and other neighboring localities. It derives the name of "currants" from the fact that in times past it was shipped from the city of Corinth, Greece. In German it is called "Korinthen"; in French "raisin de Corinthe"; in Spanish "pasas de Corinto." It is a raisin grape, as distinguished from the shrub currant, with which its name may be confounded, but from which it is entirely distinct; the former belonging to the grapevine family of plants, the latter to the shrubs. "Zante Currants" (U. S.) 73 Fed. 183, 187.

ZINC ORE.

By the term "zinc ores" is meant those veins or lodes in which the ore of zinc is the predominating ore. Boston Franklinite Co. v. New Jersey Zinc Co., 13 N. J. Eq. (2 Beasl.) 322, 344.

Zinc ore means a mineral body containing so much of the metal of zinc as to be worth smelting. New Jersey Zinc Co. v. New Jersey Franklinite Co., 13 N. J. Eq. (2 Beasl.) 322, 346 (cited in Lehigh Zinc & Iron Co. v. New Jersey Zinc & Iron Co., 26 Atl. 920, 922, 55 N. J. Law [26 Vroom] 350).

The term "zinc," in a deed conveying all the zinc and other ores, except franklinite, may be explained by evidence, when a dispute exists between the grantor and the grantee as to whether a certain vein of ore is zinc or franklinite. New Jersey Zinc Co. v. Boston Franklinite Co., 15 N. J. Eq. (2 McCart.) 418, 420.

ZONE.

"Zone" has been defined to be an air space so arranged that, in case of a breakage of any wire at any point, that wire would come in contact with the wire of another system, either by being blown against it or by falling directly on it by weight of gravity. Where two leads of wire are said to be in the same zone, they are in that proximate relation to each other that a contact is possible between the two systems by falling wires. Chicago Telephone Co. v. Northwestern Telephone Co., 65 N. E. 329, 340, 199 Ill. 324.

APPENDIX.

CONTAINING DEFINITIONS IN CASES REPORTED SINCE THE MAIN COMPILATION WAS CLOSED.

ABANDON—ABANDONMENT.

The word "abandoned," as used in Act 1890, p. 248, c. 220, providing that whenever on an unfinished railroad a right of way, or location on any part thereof, remains for 10 years unused for railroad purposes, the same shall be held to be abandoned, and shall be liable to be used and appropriated by another railroad company on purchase or condemnation in a manner provided by law, cannot import such an abandonment as would cause a reversion to the first owner, for the reason that such a construction would be to take from the railroad company property obtained by condemnation and paid for, without compensation, and therefore raise a constitutional question. Its more reasonable construction would be that it is to be applied to cases only where there has been no use of the property for railroad uses, and in such a case there has been such an abandonment that authority is granted to another railroad to take condemnation proceedings to secure it for its use without further special legislative permission so to do. Canton Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (Md.) 57 Atl. 637, 640

Whether the act of the party constitutes an abandonment of property previously occupied by him depends entirely upon the intention with which it is done. An abandonment of property held by possessory title takes place instantly when the occupant deserts it without an intention of ever reclaiming it for himself, and careless of what may thereafter become of it. Mere absence and nonuser of the property do not prove an intention to abandon, although conduct of that kind may continue unexplained for such length of time as not to be consistent with any other hypothesis. Farmers' Irr. Dist. v. Frank (Neb.) 100 N. W. 286, 292; Farmers' Canal Co. v. Same, Id.; Walker v. Same, Id.

An easement may be lost, as provided in Civ. Code 1895, § 3068, by abandonment or nonuser, if the abandonment or nonuser continued for a term sufficient to raise the presumption of release or abandonment. Nonuser of a street for a period of some 40 years raises a very strong presumption of abandonment. Kelsoe v. Oglethorpe, 48 S. E. 366, 367, 120 Ga. 951.

ABATEMENT.

See "Plea in Abatement."

"Abatement" is defined as "a suspension of proceedings in a suit from the want of proper parties capable of proceeding therein." The Telegraph v. Lee (Iowa) 98 N. W. 364, 365 (quoting Bouv.).

ABDUCTION.

The word "abduction," as used in Rev. Codes 1899, § 2718, providing that the rights of personal relation forbid the abduction of a husband from his wife or the abduction of a wife from her husband, means the taking away by either violence, fraud, or persuasion. A married woman may maintain an action against another woman to recover damages for the alienation of the affections of her husband and his consequent abandonment of her. King v. Hanson (N. D.) 99 N. W. 1085, 1088.

ABILITY.

See "Inability."

Solvency distinguished from ability to purchase, see "Solvency."

ABLE.

See "If Able."

ABODE.

See "Permanent Abode."

ABOUT.

See "On or About."

ABOUT TO SIGN.

The expression "about to sign" in an entry in a house journal under the caption "Signing of Bills," reciting that the speaker announced that he was about to sign certain bills, denotes that the speaker was at that time engaged in the act of signing the several bills described in the entry. State v. Cahill (Wyo.) 75 Pac. 433, 441.

ABSOLUTE.

A contingent claim does not become absolute, within the meaning of the decedent's act, until it becomes a claim proper to be presented to the county court for final adjudication as a claim against the estate. Hazlett v. Blakely (Neb.) 97 N. W. 808, 811.

ABSOLUTE GIFT.

"An absolute gift is one where not only the legal title but the beneficial ownership as well is vested in the donee. A gift in trust is one where the subject of the gift is transferred to the donee, not for the purpose of vesting both the legal title and beneficial ownership of the subject in the donee, but that it may be held and applied to certain uses for a third party, the beneficiary." A gift which vests both the legal title and the beneficial ownership of the subject of the gift in the donee is not one in trust, even if it be a conditional one. Such a gift is an absolute one. A gift by deed, devise, or bequest to an existing corporation, or to one to be thereafter organized within the time limited by law, with directions or conditions as to the use or management of the subject-matter of the gift, which are reasonably consistent with the purposes of the donee, is not a gift in trust, but an absolute one to the corporation, within the meaning of the statute of uses and trusts. Watkins v. Bigelow (Minn.) 100 N. W. 1104, 1109.

ABSTRACT.

"To abstract" means to take from or to withdraw from, so that to abstract the moneys, funds, or credits of the bank, or of a portion of them, is to take or withdraw from the possession and control of the bank such moneys, funds, or credits. United State v. Breese (U. S.) 131 Fed. 915, 921.

Charges are abstract when they assert propositions of law not legitimately arising out of the testimony itself or the inferences deducible therefrom. Gilliam v. State, 50 Ala. 145, 146.

ABSTRACTION.

"Abstraction," under section 5209, Rev. St. [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3497], is the act of one who, being an officer of a national banking association, wrongfully takes or withdraws from it any of its moneys, funds, or credits, with intent to injure or defraud it, or some other person or company, and without its knowledge and consent, or that of its board of directors, converts them to the use of himself, or of some person or company other than the bank. No previous lawful possession is necessary to constitute the crime, nor does it matter in what manner it is accomplished. It may be done by one act, or by a succession of acts. It may be done under color of loans, discounts, checks, and the like. The means used do not change the nature of the act. United States v. Breese (U. S.) 131 Fed. 915, 921.

ACCESSORY.

Under a statute providing that an accessory is one who, knowing that an offense has been committed, conceals the offender or gives him aid, that he may evade arrest, trial, or the execution of his sentence, in order that a person may be an accessory he must render to the principal some overt, active assistance. Chenault v. State (Tex.) 81 S. W. 971, 972.

ACCIDENT—ACCIDENTAL.

See "Pure Accident"; "Such Accident"; "Unavoidable Accident."

"A casualty cannot be classed as a pure accident, for which no one is to blame, merely because it would happen infrequently, if the danger of its occurrence was present to the mind of the party who was charged with the duty of taking care to avert the casualty, or if by reasonable prudence he could have known there was danger of its occurrence." Rogers v. Meyerson Printing Co., 78 S. W. 79, 82, 103 Mo. App. 683.

Kidney disease produced in a servant by handling infected rags in the discharge of her duties is within an employer's liability policy, insuring against loss from liability on account of bodily injuries accidentally suffered. Columbia Paper Stock Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 78 S. W. 320, 323, 104 Mo. App. 157.

Death resulting from disease which follows as a natural consequence, though not the necessary consequence, of physical injury which is accidental, is an "accidental death," within the terms of an accident insurance policy; the death being deemed the proximate result of the injury, and not of disease as an independent cause. Delaney v. Modern Acc. Club, 97 N. W. 91, 95, 121 Iowa, 528, 63 L. R. A. 603.

A death resulting from a self-inflicted knife cut made by an insured while trimming a corn, which was followed by blood poisoning, is one from an "accidental, external, and violent" injury, within the meaning of an accident policy. Nax v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 985.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

Employer's liability insurance may from its very nature appropriately be classified with and peculiarly belongs to what is commonly known and designated as accident insurance, inasmuch as such insurance has for its primary purpose indemnification against the effects of accidents resulting in bodily injury or death. State v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 69 N. E. 608, 610, 69 Ohio St. 317.

ACCOMMODATION INDORSER.

An accommodation indorser is one who indorses a bill or note in order to enable another to obtain credit or money on it. Citizens' Commercial & Savings Bank v. Platt (Mich.) 97 N. W. 694, 695.

The provision in Act April 11, 1848 (Pub. Law 536), authorizing a married woman to make any contract in furtherance of the general power granted in a preceding section, but declaring that she shall not become accommodation indorser, maker, guarantor, or surety for another, applies only to technical contracts of indorsement, guaranty or suretyship included in the words of the act. Herr v. Reinsoehl, 58 Atl. 862, 863, 209 Pa. 483.

ACCOMPLICE.

One who knowingly, voluntarily, and with common intent with the principal offender unites in the commission of a crime is an accomplice. Rev. Cr. Code, § 364, declares that a conviction cannot be had from the testimony of an accomplice unless it be corroborated. An accessory after the fact is not an accomplice, within the meaning of the statute. State v. Phillips (S. D.) 98 N. W. 171, 173 (quoting Whart. Cr. Ev. 440).

A detective who, at the sheriff's instigation, purchases beer in violation of the local option law for a fixed sum is not an "accomplice" by the direct provisions of Pen. Code 1895, art. 447, as amended by Acts 1903, p. 57, c. 40, providing that a person purchasing intoxicating liquors sold in violation of law shall not be an accomplice of the seller. Terry v. State (Tex.) 79 S. W. 320.

ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

Where a claim is unliquidated or in dispute, and the creditor has tendered a less sum than is claimed upon the condition that if it be accepted it must be in entire satisfaction of his claim, his acceptance of the claim is an accord and satisfaction. Hillestad v. Lee, 97 N. W. 1055, 1056, 91 Minn. 335 (citing Marion v. Heimbach, 62 Minn. 215, 64 N. W. 386).

ACCOUNT.

See "Long Account."

A claim for damages resulting from personal injuries is in no sense an "account" made up of items, within Comp. Laws 1897, § 2754, providing that every account against a village shall exhibit in detail all the items making up the amount claimed and the true date of each. Hunter v. Village of Ithaca (Mich.) 97 N. W. 712, 713.

The law does not require an account to be kept in any particular language. Books of account, in order to be admissible in evidence, are not required to be in any particular language, or to conform to any particular system of bookkeeping, so long as they conform to the provisions of the statute regulating the reception of such books in evidence. Cather v. Damerell (Neb.) 99 N. W. 35, 36.

ACCOUNT STATED.

An "account stated" is, in effect, an admission of indebtedness. Stagg & Conrad v. St. Jean, 74 Pac. 740, 741, 29 Mont. 288.

"An account stated is an account balanced and rendered, with an assent to the balance, express or implied; so that the demand is essentially the same as if a promissory note had been given for the balance." The cause of action upon an account stated is based entirely upon an agreement that the amount sought to be recovered was found to be due after a mutual adjustment of the accounts between the parties, and that there was then either an express or implied promise to pay it. The right to a recovery depends in no way upon the obligation originally created when the items of indebtedness arose, and for that reason it is unnecessary in such an action to set forth in the complaint or prove upon the trial the subject-matter of the original debt. Hall v. New York Brick & Paving Co., 88 N. Y. Supp. 582, 583, 95 App. Div. 371 (quoting Volkening v. De Graaf, 81 N. Y. 268).

An "account stated" must be based upon previous dealings and transactions between the parties, and while it is not necessary, in order to support a count upon account stated, to show the nature of the original debt, or to prove the specific items constituting the account (Jacksonville, M. P. Ry. & Nav. Co. v. Warriner, 35 Fla. 197, 16 South. 898), it must appear that at the time of the accounting there had been previous transactions and dealings between the parties of and concerning which an account was stated. Daytona Bridge Co. v. Bond (Fla.) 86 South. 445, 447.

An "account stated" involves a promise, express or implied, to pay a real indebtedness agreed upon as due. The consideration which places such promise on the plane of a contract is the agreement of one party, for the agreement of the other, that a certain amount, and that only, is due on the matters embraced in the settlement, wherefrom the law raises a new obligation on the part of the one against whom the balance stands, to pay that balance. Ivy Coal & Coke Co. v. Long, 86 South. 722, 724, 139 Ala. 535.

ACCUSATION.

The term "accusation," as used in reference to trials in courts having jurisdiction of misdemeanor cases, is but the equivalent of an information at common law. Wright v. Davis, 48 S. E. 170, 173, 120 Ga. 670 (quoting Gordon v. State, 102 Ga. 679, 29 S. E. 446.)

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

Payment is regarded as an acknowledgment of an existing obligation, and from such acknowledgment a promise to pay may be implied. Whether payment be a part of the principal or the interest, it is an acknowledgment of an existing indebtedness, from which the promise to pay will be implied. A payment of interest on a note constitutes a sufficient acknowledgment to pay to toll the statute of limitations, and where a sufficient payment on a note secured by a mortgage was made to take the note out of the statute of limitations the payment was effective to prevent the mortgage securing the debt from being barred. MacMillan v. Clements (Ind.) 70 N. E. 997, 998.

ACQUAINTANCE.

See "Intimate Acquaintance."

ACQUAINTED.

See "Made Acquainted."

ACQUIRE.

The word "acquire," as used in a statute providing that where a person transacts business as a trader without disclosing the name of his principal all the property, stock, money, and choses in action used or acquired in such business shall be liable for his debts, means obtain, procure, to get as one's own; and the proceeds of a policy of insurance on goods of the trader for an undisclosed principal is obtained and procured in such business and is applicable to the payment of his debts. Meridian Land & Industrial Co. v. Ormond, 85 South. 179, 180, 82 Miss. 758.

ACQUISITION

Where the general purpose of an irrigation act, as indicated by the caption, is to provide means for the acquisition and conveyance of water to be used for the several purposes mentioned in the act, a statement in the caption that one of the purposes of the act is to provide for the acquisition of the right to the use of water does not, when considered with the whole of the caption, prohibit an incorporation in the act of a provision conferring the right of eminent domain over land. The expression, "to provide for the acquisition of the right to the use of water," does not convey the idea that the right of eminent domain, or the power to condemn water owned exclusively as private property, as distinguishable from the riparian rights of the owner of land upon streams or water courses, was intended to be conferred, and no such right is given in the act. Borden v. Trespacios Rice & Irrigation Co. (Tex.) 82 S. W. 461, 465.

ACQUIT.

See "Autrefols Acquit."

ACROSS.

A city ordinance providing that trains shall not be allowed to stand or remain "across" any street longer than a certain time is not violated by allowing a train to stand so that the head end reaches slightly into the street, but not in such a way as to obstruct public travel. Crowley v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co. (Wis.) 99 N. W. 1016, 1017.

ACT.

See "Constituted by the Act"; "Healing Act"; "Judicial Act"; "Ministerial Act"; "Overt Act"; "Wrongful Act." Work synonymous, see "Work."

ACT OF BANKRUPTCY.

The giving of a mortgage by an insolvent, subsequently and within four months adjudged a bankrupt, to secure money borrowed at the time for the purpose of preferring certain of his creditors, where the lender knew or had reason to believe that such was his purpose, was an "act of bankruptcy," under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67e, 30 Stat. 564 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3449]. In re Pease (U. S.) 129 Fed. 446, 447.

A mortgage made by an insolvent, and recorded within four months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against him, if given with intent to prefer a creditor, constitutes an act of bankruptcy. In re Edelman (U. S.) 130 Fed. 700, 701.

ACT CHARGED.

Though the time be stated in an information for incest, the prosecutor has the right to select, among all the acts of the kind which he could prove to have been committed between the parties within the period alluded to and within the jurisdiction, any one of those acts before evidence has been introduced as the "act charged" in the information. In other words, until evidence of some such act has been given the charge in the information is floating and contingent, aimed as much at one as at another, and at no one act in particular, and it remains for the evidence to point the charge to a particular act intended. But when evidence has been introduced tending directly to the proof of one act, and for the purpose of procuring a conviction upon it, from that moment that particular act becomes the "act charged." What has till then been floating and contingent has now become certain and fixed. People v. Jenness, 5 Mich. 305, 327.

ACTION.

See "Cause of Action"; "Chose in Action"; "Civil Action — Case — Suit — etc."; "Local Action"; "Penal Action"; "Subject of Action."

Any action, see "Any."

A proceeding upon a writ of scire facias to revive a judgment is not an "action," but simply a continuance of a former suit. Bick v. Tanzey, 80 S. W. 902, 904, 181 Mo. 515.

A proceeding for leave to issue execution on a judgment charging land with owelty in partition is an "action," within the statute of limitations. Ex parte Smith, 47 S. E. 16, 18, 134 N. C. 495; Appeal of Hamilton (N. C.) 47 S. E. 16, 18.

A proceeding by mandamus to compel public officers to perform an official act is an action, within Rev. St. 1898, § 2918, which provides that costs shall be allowed of course to the plaintiff in an action in the circuit court on a recovery in certain specified cases, and section 2920, which declares that costs shall be allowed of course to the defendant in the actions mentioned in the two preceding sections, unless the plaintiff was entitled to costs therein. State v. Board of Trustees of Policemen's Pension Fund, 98 N. W. 954, 959, 121 Wis. 44.

The word "action," defined by Rev. Code Civ. Proc. § 12, as being an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice by which a party prosecutes another party for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense, does not include a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage by advertisement, because no right is litigated between the parties, nor is the power of a court of law or equity invoked. Stevens v. Osgood (S. D.) 100 N. W. 161 (citing Hall v. Bartlett [N. Y.] 9 Barb. 297).

ACTION FOR USE AND OCCUPATION.

An action for use and occupation depends upon the existence or the implication of a contract whereby the relation of landlord and tenant may be created. Ettlinger v. Degnon-McLean Contracting Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 394, 42 Misc. Rep. 215.

8 Wds. & P.—49

ACTION FOR THE VIOLATION OF A LAW.

Acts 1887, p. 225, No. 127, providing that in all actions against railway companies for the violation of any law, regulating the transportation of freight or passengers, the plaintiff, if successful, shall recover a reasonable attorney's fee, to be taxed according to the costs, refers to actions against railroad companies for violation of statutory regulations of the state in regard to transportation of freight and passengers, for to hold it applicable to all actions against railroads in the carriage of freight or passengers, whether or not any statute was violated, would doubtless render it unconstitutional. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Marx (Ark.) 80 S. W. 579, 580.

ACTION ON A NOTE.

A declaration contained two special counts, in effect declaring on a note, and also contained the consolidated common counts. The special pleas all began by stating that the causes of action in the several counts were the same as contained in the special counts, and the evidence all related to the special counts. Defendant, the guarantor of the note, pleaded failure of consideration, and contended that there was a contemporaneous written agreement with the note, and referring to it, which was specially pleaded by plaintiff. It was held that the suit was an "action on a note," within 2 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, p. 2802, c. 98, § 9, declaring that in such actions defendant may plead failure of consideration. Ewen v. Wilbor, 70 N. E. 575, 578, 208 Ill. 492.

ACTIONABLE NEGLIGENCE.

"Actionable negligence, or negligence which constitutes a good cause of action, grows out of a want of ordinary care and skill in respect to a person to whom the defendant is under an obligation or duty to use ordinary care and skill. The owner of land and of buildings assumes no duty to one who is on his premises by permission only, and is a mere licensee, except that he will refrain from willful or affirmative acts which are injurious." Means v. Southern California Ry. Co. (Cal.) 77 Pac. 1001, 1003 (citing Gibson v. Leonard, 143 Ill. 182, 189, 32 N. E. 182, 183, 17 L. R. A. 588, 36 Am. St. Rep. 376).

ACTIVE MEMBER.

The by-laws of a police relief association required $2 per annum as dues from active members, and $8 per annum from those who had honorably left the force, and also made a distinction as to sick benefits between active and retired members of the force. The rules of the board of police commissioners, which had authority to define plaintiff's Status, required plaintiff, though on the pension roll, to be subject to call by day or night. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to pay dues and receive sick benefits as an active member of the force. Nickerson v. Providence Police Ass'n (R. I.) 57 Atl. 1057, 1058.

ACTIVE TRUST.

An active trust was created where the property was devised to a trustee to sell and convey, and invest the proceeds as he deemed best, and he was further authorized to hold, manage, control, care for, lease, and re-invest during a period of five years, and to pay the income to the children of testatrix. Harris v. Ferguy, 69 N. E. 844, 207 Ill. 534.

ACTUAL COST.

The phrase "actual cost," as used in St. 1890, c. 428, §§ 3-7, providing for the abolition of grade crossings by a railroad company, declaring that commissioners were to decide what alterations were necessary, and providing that the company should pay a specified per cent. of the actual cost of the alterations, including in such cost the cost of the hearing and the compensation of the commissioners and auditors for their services, and all damages for the taking of the land necessary to carry out the alterations that have been ordered, means "cost of what is described, though, where damages are incurred in taking land to carry out the report of the commissioners, counsel fees and extra work done by selectmen paid by a town in defending or settling a claim for such damages for land taken for the purpose of abolishing grade crossings have been held to be included." Interest paid on money borrowed by the railroad company to make the alterations is not a part of the actual cost. In re Directors of Old Colony R. Co., 70 N. E. 62, 63, 185 Mass. 160.

ACTUAL DAMAGES.

As used in a libel law providing that, before any proceedings shall be brought for the publication in a newspaper of a libel, plaintiff shall serve a written notice on defendant, specifying the article and the statements which he alleges to be false, and that, if it appears on trial that the article was published in good faith, that its falsity was due to an honest mistake in fact, and that there were reasonable grounds for believing that the article was true, and that within ten days after the service of notice a fair and full retraction was published, plaintiff shall recover only actual damages, the term "actual damages" means compensatory damages, and includes pecuniary loss, direct or indirect, or special damages, damages for physical pain and inconvenience, damages for mental suffering, and damages for injury to reputation. It does not include punitive damages. Os- born v. Leach, 47 S. E. 811, 813, 135 N. C. 628, 66 L. R. A. 648.

ACTUAL EXPENSE.

"Actual expense," in Sess. Laws 1899, pp. 405, 406, § 1, providing that the sheriff shall be allowed, in addition to his salary, the actual and necessary expense for care of each prisoner, means the actual outlay or payment of money for benefits furnished the prisoners. Mombert v. Bannock County (Idaho) 75 Pac. 239, 241.

ACTUAL KNOWLEDGE.

The word "notice," as used in a provision in the bankruptcy act, that judgment of discharge does not bar such debts as have not been duly scheduled with the name of the creditor, if known, unless such creditor has notice or actual knowledge of the bankruptcy proceedings, etc., means the same as "actual knowledge." The terms are merely convertible. Fields v. Rust (Tex.) 82 S. W. 331, 333.

ACTUAL MARKET VALUE.

The best test of actual market value is a sale on a market under circumstances calculated to elicit full and free bidding by intending purchasers. Opinions as to what a thing would bring are necessarily less convincing as to its value than the fact of what it did bring. Francis v. Million (Ky.) 80 S. W. 486, 487.

ACTUAL NOTICE.

"Notice is actual when the purchaser knows of the existence of the adverse claim, or perhaps when he is conscious of having the means of knowledge, and yet does not use them; and it is immaterial whether his knowledge results from direct information, or is gathered from facts and circumstances." Clark v. Lambert (W. Va.) 47 S. E. 312, 318.

Within the rule of law that "actual notice" must be given to persons dealing with a partnership, of the retirement of a partner, so as to relieve the retiring partner of liability, one who sells his business, which he has conducted under a firm name, to another, such other continuing the business under the same name, must give actual notice of the sale to those who have dealt with him. Publication of the sale in a newspaper, and changing the name of the proprietor on the sign at the place of business, is not actual notice. Werner Co. v. Calhoun (W. Va.) 46 S. E. 1024, 1026.

ACTUAL OCCUPANCY.

Laws 1885, p. 482, c. 283, § 9, declaring that the forest commission shall have the

"care, control, and superintendence" of the forest preserve, and Laws 1900, p. 62, c. 20, § 220, subd. 1, declaring that it shall have the "care, control, and supervision" thereof, do not place the commission in the actual occupancy of the wild and vacant lands within the preserve. People v. Kelsey, 89 N. Y. Supp. 416, 96 App. Div. 148.

ACTUAL POSSESSION.

"'Actual possession,' as a legal phrase, is put in opposition to the other phrase, 'possession in law' or 'constructive possession.' Actual possession is the same as pedis possessio or pedis positio, and these mean a foothold on the land, an actual entry, a possession in fact, a standing upon it, an occupation of it, as a real, demonstrative act done. It is the contrary of a possession in law, which follows in the wake of title." People v. Kelsey, 89 N. Y. Supp. 416, 418 (citing Churchill v. Onderdonk, 59 N. Y. 134).

ACTUAL REBELLION.

"Actual rebellion or insurrection," in its ordinary acceptation, means a resistance to the established order of things. State v. McDonald (Ala.) 4 Port. 449, 457.

ACTUAL RESIDENT.

Whether a person is an "actual resident" of a particular school district, within the meaning of Gen. St. 1894, § 3697, must depend upon the special facts of each particular case. State v. Board of Education of Independent School Dist., 97 N. W. 885, 886, 91 Minn. 268.

ADDITION.

See "In Addition to."

ADDITIONAL.

"Additional" means given with or joined to some other, and embraces the idea of joining or uniting one thing to another, so as to form an aggregate. Kadderly v. City of Portland, 74 Pac. 710, 717, 44 Or. 118 (citing Anderson's Law Dict.; State v. Hull, 53 Miss. 626, 645; Brooks v. Whitmore, 139 Mass. 356, 81 N. E. 731).

ADDITIONAL AMENDMENT.

An amendment, though not on the same subject or article, is an "additional amendment" within Const. art. 17, § 2, prohibiting the proposal of any additional amendment or amendments of the Constitution while one is awaiting action of a second Legislature or of the electors. Kadderly v. City of Portland, 74 Pac. 710, 717, 44 Or. 118.

ADDITIONAL SERVITUDE.

The construction, maintenance, and operation of a telephone system on the streets of a city in such a manner as not to cause unnecessary injury or inconvenience to property owners is not an additional servitude for which an abutting owner is entitled to compensation. Kirby v. Citizens' Telephone Co. of Sioux Falls (S. D.) 97 N. W. 3, 4.

The establishment by a railway company of a system of wires and posts over its right of way is not the imposition of an "additional servitude," within the meaning of that term, authorizing an abutting owner to claim additional compensation. Railroad companies may devote the right of way which they have acquired to any use indispensable to or which will facilitate the fulfillment of the objects of their corporate existence, whether these uses be by grading, constructing of telegraph lines, or other incidental uses requisite for the convenient, safe, and successful conducting of their business and regular running of their trains. City of Canton v. Canton Cotton Warehouse Co. (Miss.) 36 South. 266, 271, 65 L. R. A. 561.

ADEQUATE CONSIDERATION.

An adequate consideration is one which must not be so disproportionate as to shock our sense of that morality and fair dealing that should always characterize transactions between man and man. Eaton v. Patterson (Ala.) 2 Stew. & P. 9, 19.

The word "adequacy," as used in an instruction that the adequacy of the consideration was for the parties to consider at the time of making an agreement, and not for the court when it was sought to be enforced, evidently does not refer to the legal sufficiency of the consideration, but to the inducements which operated on the minds of the parties in making the contract. Rosseau v. Rouss, 86 N. Y. Supp. 497, 502, 91 App. Div. 230.

ADJACENT.

It is not essential that property, to be adjacent to a river, should be in actual contact therewith. A thing is adjacent to another when it lies near or close to it, although it is not in actual contact therewith. Yuba County v. Kate Hayes Min. Co., 74 Pac. 1049, 1050, 141 Cal. 360.

The word "adjacent" means contiguous, adjoining, lying close at hand, near. As used in Act March 3, 1875, c. 152, 18 Stat. 482 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1568], granting to certain railroad companies the right of way through the public lands to the extent of 100 feet on each side of the central line of the road, with the right to take materials for its construction from the public lands adjacent to the line of the road, it does not include lands which are 20 miles distant from the right of way, but it does include lands within 2 miles. United States v. St. Anthony R. Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 333, 335, 338, 192 U. S. 524, 48 L. Ed. 548.

Under a marine policy insuring a dredge, and providing that it was warranted confined to the use and navigation of the waters of New Haven Harbor and "adjacent inland waters," and declaring that any deviation beyond the limits shall avoid the policy, the use of the dredge in an inland water adjacent to Bridgeport Harbor, 17 miles from New Haven Harbor, was a deviation. Kirk v. Home Ins. Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 980, 981, 92 App. Div. 28.

ADJOURNED TERM.

The "adjourned term" mentioned in Rev. St. 1899, § 1605, which provides that special or adjourned sessions of any court may be held in pursuance of the proclamation of the sheriff, or in continuation of the regular term, when so ordered by the court in term time, the order being entered on its record, although it is a continuation of a regular term, is not the uninterrupted or unbroken session held in pursuance of an adjournment from day to day, but is a session held after lapse of a longer period, and is commonly called an "adjourned term." Rev. St. 1899, § 7033, providing that an election contest shall be determined at the first term of the circuit court held 15 days after the official counting of the votes and service of the notice of contest, unless the same should be continued by consent or good cause shown, is not limited to the next regular term of court, but authorized the service of notice of contest to be held at an adjourned term. Montgomery v. Dormer, 79 S. W. 913, 915, 181 Mo. 5.

ADMINISTRATION.

See "Matter of Administration."

ADMINISTRATOR.

Administrators are creatures of the statutes, and have no powers except those conferred therein. The only direct and specific power conferred on the administrator in connection with the repairs and improvements of an estate is that he is authorized to keep the buildings in tenantable repair, extraordinary casualties excepted, unless not directed to do so by an order of the court. Rice v. Conwill (Tex.) 80 S. W. 393, 394.

ADMINISTRATOR AD COLLIGENDUM.

An administrator ad colligendum is the mere agent or officer of the court to collect and preserve the goods of the deceased until some one is clothed with authority to administer them, and cannot complain that another is appointed administrator in chief. Flora v. Mennice, 12 Ala. 836, 837.

An administrator ad colligendum is not such a representative of the estate as to require claims to be presented to him in order to avoid the statute of nonclaim. Erwin v. Branch Bank at Mobile, 14 Ala. 307, 314.

ADMISSION.

What are called "admissions" in civil actions, in criminal law are called "confessions." Merriweather v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 82 S. W. 592, 598.

ADMITTED TO BAIL.

The words "not admitted to bail," as used in Rev. Codes 1899, § 8679, relating to release on habeas corpus, mean that the accused has not been discharged on bail, but is in custody under commitment because unable or unwilling to furnish the bail required. State v. Larson, 97 N. W. 537, 538, 12 N. D. 474.

ADOPTED.

The word "adopted," in a stipulation to the effect that the report of a referee shall be accepted and adopted, has the same meaning as "accepted," and the effect of the stipulation is merely to waive the right to question the authenticity of the report on the settlement of the bill of exceptions. Babcock v. Ormsby (S. D.) 100 N. W. 759.

ADULT.

"Full age in male or female is 21 years, which age is completed on the day preceding the anniversary of a person's birth, who till that time is an infant, and so styled in law." Under the express provisions of Code, § 3188, a male person remains a minor until the age of 21 years, but the common law is modified by the statute to the extent of declaring a female an adult at 18 years of age, and all persons such upon marriage. Banco De Sonora v. Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co. (Iowa) 100 N. W. 532, 535 (quoting Blackstone).

ADVANCE.

The advance of money does not imply a loan. A contract of employment as a salesman at a certain commission, the employer to advance the salesman a certain sum monthly, "said advances to be charged and deducted from the commissions computed at the end of the period of employment," does not create a personal liability on the part of the salesman to repay advances in excess of commissions earned. Schlesinger v. Burland, 85 N. Y. Supp. 350, 351, 42 Misc. Rep. 206.

The phrase in a memorandum of sale of beans, "he to have advance for two weeks," cannot, without extrinsic testimony, be construed to refer to the market price at the end of two weeks, but it either refers to the highest price during the two weeks, or requires extrinsic evidence to explain it, in which event its construction on conflicting testimony was properly submitted to the jury. Chase v. Ainsworth (Mich.) 97 N. W. 404.

ADVANCEMENT.

An advancement is an irrevocable gift by a parent to a child of the whole or part of what it is supposed the child will be entitled to upon the death of the parent, who afterwards dies intestate. In re Allen's Estate, 56 Atl. 928, 929, 207 Pa. 325 (citing Appeal of Eahleman, 74 Pa. [24 P. F. Smith] 42.)

An advancement is an irrevocable gift by a parent in his lifetime to his child, on account of such child's share of the estate after the parent is dead. Schweitzer v. Schweitzer (Ky.) 82 S. W. 625

"An advancement is that bestowment of property by one standing in loco parentis to another, in anticipation of the latter's share in the donor's estate. It may in one sense be a gift; but its treatment in law as an advancement depends on two facts—one, that the donor shall die intestate, totally or partially; the other, that the gift shall have been in fact with a view to a portion or settlement in life upon the donee." Owsley v. Owsley (Ky.) 77 S. W. 394, 396.

The word "advancement," in its limited statutory meaning, is applicable only to cases of intestacy, and to moneys advanced by a parent to a child in anticipation of such child's future share of the parent's estate. It is employed by courts of equity in a wider sense to denote money or property advanced as a satisfaction pro tanto—a general legacy given by a parent or other person standing in loco parentis to a child or grandchild. In re Cramer, 89 N. Y. Supp. 469, 470, 43 Misc. Rep. 494.

Comp. St. 1903, c. 23, § 34, declares that, in order that a gift or grant shall be deemed an advancement, it must be expressed in the gift or grant to be so made, charged in writing by the intestate as an advancement, or acknowledged in writing as such by the child or other descendant. This section by implication excludes parol evidence of an advancement. Boden v. Mier (Neb.) 98 N. W. 701, 704 (citing Pomeroy v. Pomeroy, 67 N. W. 430, 93 Wis. 262; Bulkeley v. Noble, 19 Mass. [2 Pick.] 337; Bullard v. Bullard, 22 Mass. [5 Pick.] 527; Barton v. Rice, 39 Mass. [22 Pick.] 508).

ADVERSE CLAIM.

A claim, by one who acquired possession of property of a bankrupt before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, that such property was delivered to him in part payment of a debt, and that he had no reasonable cause to believe that a preference was thereby intended, is clearly an adverse claim, which a referee has no jurisdiction to summarily determine on its merits, except by the claimant's consent. In re Adams (U. S.) 130 Fed. 788, 789 (citing In re Hartman [U. S.] 10 Am. Bankr. Rep. 387, 121 Fed. 940).

ADVERSE PARTY.

The term "adverse party," as used in Rev. St. 1887, § 4808, providing that the service of notice of appeal must be made on the adverse party or his attorney, means every party whose interest in the subject-matter would be affected by a modification or reversal of the judgment or order appealed from, irrespective of whether he is a plaintiff, defendant, or intervener. Titiman v. Alamance Min. Co. (Idaho) 74 Pac. 529.

"Adverse parties," within Laws 1899, p. 83, c. 62, providing for the service of notice of appeal on adverse parties, are all parties whose interests require that the order, judgment, or decree appealed from be sustained. It is immaterial whether such party appeared as one of the original parties to the action, or was brought in by order of the court. Stephens v. Stevens, 75 Pac. 619, 620, 27 Utah, 261.

The term "adverse party," as used in Rev. St. 1898, § 3049, relating to the service of notice of appeal to the Supreme Court, does not mean merely the opposite party on the record. A person may be an appellant or an adverse party, within the meaning of the statute, and his name not appear in the litigation resulting in the decision. If he has a substantial interest adverse to the decision, that is all that is required for an appellant, whether it be direct, or by privity created between himself and the person against whom the decision was rendered, by reason of succeeding to his rights after the decision or subsequent to the commencement of the action. Harrigan v. Gilchrist, 99 N. W. 909, 926, 121 Wis. 127 (citing Rogers v. Shove, 98 Wis. 271, 73 N. W. 989; Crowns v. Forest Land Co., 99 Wis. 103, 74 N. W. 546; Hiscock v. Phelps [N. Y.] 2 Lans. 106; Cotes v. Carroll [N. Y.] 28 How. Prac. 436; Barnes v. Stoughton [N. Y.] 6 Hun, 254; Pickersgill v. Read [N. Y.] 7 Hun, 636; Baylies, New Trials & Appeals [2d Ed.] 145).

The plaintiff serving an amended complaint after answer must be deemed an "adverse party," within Code Civ. Proc. § 798, providing that, if service on an adverse party is made through the post office, the time within which such adverse party is required to do an act is double the time specified. Bucklin v. Buffalo, A. & A. R. Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 114, 115, 41 Misc. Rep. 557.

ADVERSE POSSESSION.

See, also, "Substantial Inclosure."

"An adverse possession ought to be such as to challenge the right of all the world; but when an occupant evacuates the place, and suffers it to go to wreck, he hauls down his colors, and the challenge is withdrawn." Adverse possession "is to be made out by acts which are open, visible, notorious, and continuous, and does not depend upon the secret purpose and intention of the intruder that he will return at his convenience, sooner or later, and reoccupy the land." Continuous possession for five years, and after an abandonment for several years a possession for six months, followed by occupancy of a storehouse for several years, but less than seven, did not make out that continuous adverse possession sufficient to create title by prescription under color. Clark v. White, 48 S. E. 357, 358, 120 Ga. 957 (quoting and adopting definitions in Stephens v. Leach, 19 Pa. 262; Denham v. Holeman, 26 Ga. 183, 71 Am. Dec. 198).

Before possession lawfully taken by a co-tenant can become adverse to the parties jointly interested in the property, so as to set in motion the statute of limitations, there must be an actual ouster, and notice or knowledge of the hostile intention in pursuance of which the exclusive possession has been held. Beers v. Sharpe, 75 Pac. 717, 719, 44 Or. 386.

The use of the word "adverse," in an instruction that plaintiff or his vendors must have held land in controversy in actual adverse possession, to a well-defined boundary line, continuously, for 15 years prior to an alleged trespass, requires a finding that the land was held in hostile opposition by plaintiffs to the claim of defendants and all others. Vincent v. Willis (Ky.) 82 S. W. 583, 584.

The possession of the vendee under an executory contract for the purchase of land is not adverse to the vendor so long as the purchase money is not paid, or at least not before the vendee is entitled to demand a deed. Johnson v. Peterson, 97 N. W. 384, 385, 90 Minn. 503 (citing Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Miller, 115 Mo. 158, 21 S. W. 915).

To constitute the adverse possession described in Code Civ. Proc. § 47, providing that when it shall appear that an occupant entered into possession under claim of title, founding such claim on a written instrument as being a conveyance, and there has been a continuous occupation, the premises shall be deemed to have been held adversely, the essential requirement seems to be that the party shall enter under a claim of title exclusive of any other right, founding such claim upon a written instrument. A tax deed under which possession is taken is sufficient color of title, though invalid. Murphy v. Dafee (S. D.) 99 N. W. 86, 88.

Good faith is no element of adverse possession. Dawson v. Falls City Boat Club (Mich.) 99 N. W. 17, 18.

Prescription distinguished.

"Prescription" is the term usually applied to incorporeal hereditaments; "adverse possession" to lands. Hindley v. Metropolitan Elevated R. Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 561, 564, 42 Misc. Rep. 56.

ADVISE.

The word "advise," as used in a statute authorizing city councils of certain cities to appoint a city attorney whose duty it shall be to advise the board as to all legal matters, etc., means that such city attorney shall be the legal adviser of the council in all matters of litigation and legal proceedings; and in defining the duties which are required of him in his department the council may properly include attention to litigation as to which it is his duty to advise it. City of Ludlow v. Richie (Ky.) 78 S. W. 199, 200.

AFFAIR.

See "Municipal Affair."

AFFIDAVIT.

See "Appear by Affidavit"; "False Affidavit"; "Fraudulent Affidavit."

An affidavit is defined by Bouvier as a statement or declaration reduced to writing, and sworn or affirmed to before some officer who has authority to administer an oath. The signature of the affiant is not necessary, in the absence of a rule of court or statute requiring it. In re Shannahan-Wrightson Hardware Co. (Del.) 58 Atl. 1023.

AFFIRMATIVE WARRANTY.

"Warranties in insurance law are of two kinds—affirmative and promissory. Affirmative warranties consist of a representation in the policy of a fact. Promissory warranties are those that require that something shall be done or not done after the policy takes effect." Rosenthal Clothing & Dry Goods Co. v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. (W. Va.) 46 S. E. 1021.

AFFRAY.

An instruction that an affray is a mutual combat voluntarily engaged in by two or more persons in a public place, while technically accurate, might be construed as one in which both willingly took part, and was therefore misleading. Reynolds v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 82 S. W. 978, 979. See, also, Reynolds v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 82 S. W. 233.

AFORETHOUGHT.

See "Malice Aforethought."

AFTERTHOUGHT.

Afterthought means a predetermination to do the act, however sudden or recently formed in the mind the resolution to do it has been made. Hathaway v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 82 S. W. 400, 402.

AGAINST HER WILL.

As used in a statute defining rape to be the carnal knowledge of a female forcibly and against her will, the words "against her will" are synonymous with the words "without her consent." Gore v. State, 46 S. E. 671, 672, 119 Ga. 418, 10 Am. St. Rep. 182.

AGAINST LAW.

See "Decision against Law."

AGENT.

See "Duly Authorized Agent"; "Local Agent."

As owner, see "Owner."

The word "agent," as used in the statute of Missouri providing that foreign corporations doing business in the state shall file their articles of incorporation, establish an office or agency, and subject themselves in prescribed respects to the laws of the state, but exempting corporations entirely non-resident, soliciting business through drummers or traveling salesmen, and further providing that service shall be authorized to be made, in an action against a corporation having no office or agency, by serving an agent of the company, wherever found, does not include one merely soliciting orders for goods which are sent to the nonresident principal, a corporation, to be filled, the solicitor receiving a commission on such orders, and having no other relation to the corporation, and having no relation to the matter out of which an action against the corporation arose. Strain v. Chicago Portrait Co. (U. S.) 126 Fed. 831, 832.

One employed by a refining company to sell and distribute oil to customers, being paid by a commission on the amount of sales, is an agent or servant of the company, which is liable for acts of negligence in the conduct of the business on the part of the agent or others employed by him. Riggs v. Standard Oil Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 199, 201.

The word "agent," as used in a statute providing for service of process on telegraph and telephone companies, is not intended to be understood in any unusual, limited, or restricted sense, or otherwise than was justified in its ordinary signification. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Parker, 47 S. E. 194, 197, 119 Ga. 721.

While a bookkeeper may be, and often is, the agent of his employer, the word does not ex vi termini import that relation, and, in the absence of averment that it exists, the courts cannot by intendment enlarge the ordinary signification of the word so as to bring it within a class to which it may or may not belong. Code 1887, § 3286 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1730], provides that when, in assumpsit, an affidavit is filed with a declaration that the amount claimed is justly due, a plea in bar shall not be received unless verified, in the absence of which judgment shall be for plaintiff. An affidavit by plaintiff's bookkeeper, filed with the declaration, is insufficient to authorize judgment in favor of plaintiff, though the statute permits the filing of the affidavit by plaintiff or his agent. Merriman Co. v. Thomas & Co. (Va.) 48 S. E. 490, 492.

AGGRAVATE.

Increase synonymous, see "Increase."

AGGRIEVED.

As determining right to appeal, see "Aggrieved Party."

Where it appears that a corporation has no personality subject to taxes, it sufficiently appears that it was aggrieved, so as to entitle it to a cancellation of a tax. People v. Feitner, 87 N. Y. Supp. 304, 307, 92 App. Div. 518.

The passenger to whom a transfer is denied must necessarily be the "aggrieved party," in the language of Railroad Law, § 104 (Laws 1890, p. 1082, c. 565, as amended by Laws 1892, p. 1406, c. 676), providing that, for every refusal to comply with the act, the corporation so refusing shall forfeit $50 to the aggrieved party. Fox v. Interurban St. R. Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 64, 65, 42 Misc. Rep. 538.

AGGRIEVED PARTY.

A defendant is truly "aggrieved" only when by appropriate pleadings, or pleadings and proofs, he has become an active party to an issue or a controversy which is adjudged against him. New Jersey Building, Loan & Investment Co. v. Lord (N. J.) 58 Atl. 185, 187.

In legal acceptance a party is "aggrieved" by a judgment or decree when it operates on his rights of property, or bears directly upon his interest. Ruff v. Montgomery, 36 South. 67, 68, 83 Miss. 185 (citing 2 Cyc. p. 633).

Upon principle, as to any judgment or order of a court adverse to one in a suit or proceeding, who is the proper representative therein, of the interests of others prejudiced by the result, that one is a "party aggrieved," within the meaning of such term as used in appeal statutes. McKenney v. Minahan, 97 N. W. 489, 490, 119 Wis. 651.

Where the probate of a will is denied, the executor therein named is a "party aggrieved," and consequently possesses sufficient interest to enable him to appeal under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1294, 2568, authorizing appeals by any person aggrieved by the order appealed from. In re Rayner's Will, 87 N. Y. Supp. 23, 93 App. Div. 114.

If the court entered a judgment which deprived complainant of any of its property rights, then it must be a "party aggrieved," within Rev. St. 1887, § 4802, providing that any party aggrieved may appeal. It is not necessary for a person or corporation to be named as plaintiff or defendant or intervenor in the title to an action, or in the title to a judgment entered therein, in order to become a party to the action. Washington County Abstract Co. v. Stewart (Idaho) 74 Pac. 955, 956, 957.

One not an heir, but merely a legatee under an alleged will of decedent antedating another alleged will of decedent, which was admitted to probate in the county court without first having procured the allowance of the will under which he claims in the county court, which has sole jurisdiction of the probate of wills, is a "party aggrieved," within Rev. St. 1898, § 3788, authorizing appeals from the county court on the probate of wills only by persons aggrieved. In re Hunt's Will (Wis.) 100 N. W. 874, 875.

Where the wife of a minor under guardianship had obtained a divorce, with a decree for alimony, prior to the settlement of the guardian's account on the husband's becoming of age, but she had neither brought suit against the guardian, attached the ward's estate, nor levied an execution, she was not a party aggrieved, so as to be entitled to appeal from a probate decree settling the guardian's accounts, though she be regarded as a creditor of the ward. Leyland v. Leyland, 71 N. E. 794, 795, 186 Mass. 420.

Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 185, providing that any party aggrieved by the taxation of costs by the clerk may have the same retaxed, and section 4749, providing that the party commencing the action shall be known as the "plaintiff" and the opposite party as the "defendant," the witnesses in a criminal case have no right to appeal from an order disallowing their fees for attendance and mileage as certified by the clerk, they not being parties to the proceeding. State v. Fair, 76 Pac. 731, 784, 35 Wash. 127.

AGREE TO LET.

The words "agree to let" and similar phrases have been held to confer a leasehold, though a further writing or memorandum was called for in the document wherein those words were used. Ver Steeg v. Becker-Moore Paint Co. (Mo.) 80 S. W. 346, 351.

AGREEMENT TO MARRY.

"The agreement to marry partakes of the nature of a civil contract, as upon its violation the injured party may recover damages; but the contract or agreement to marry and the marriage relation itself are by no means one and the same. When the agreement to marry has been executed in a legal marriage, the relation thus formed becomes much more than a mere civil contract. The rights and duties incident to this relation are from a source much higher than a contract of which the parties are capable, and can never be restricted nor enlarged nor in any way controlled by any contract which the parties can make." Elkenbury v. Burns (Ind.) 70 N. E. 837, 838.

AID.

Any other aid, see "Any Other."

AIM.

The word "aim," as used in Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2073, which provides that it shall be unlawful for any person over the age of 10 years, with or without malice, purposely to point or aim any pistol or other firearm, either empty or loaded, towards any other person, is used in the disjunctive, and under such circumstances the statute may be violated by doing either or both of the forbidden acts. The accused may be charged (1) with having purposely pointed the pistol at and towards another, (2) with having purposely aimed the weapon at and towards another, and (3) with having purposely pointed and aimed the weapon at and towards another. Eaton v. State, 70 N. E. 814, 162 Ind. 554.

ALCOHOLIC COMPOUNDS.

Fresh leaves of aconite and belladonna, and fresh roots of bryonia, immersed in their natural condition in alcohol for preservation, are not "alcoholic compounds," as the term is used in paragraph 2, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, 30 Stat. 151 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1627]. Boericke & Runyon Co. v. United States (U. S.) 126 Fed. 1018.

ALIAS.

Sometimes a man is known by several different names, and it was formerly the custom, in drawing indictments, to charge him under all the names by which he was known; connecting them with the words "alias dictus," or with simply "alias." These words mean "otherwise called" or "otherwise." State v. Howard (Mont.) 77 Pac. 50, 51.

ALIEN.

Proceeding to expel or exclude alien as criminal proceeding, see "Criminal Proceeding."

Persons born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, the father at the time of their respective births not being a citizen of the United States, are born aliens. The status, as aliens, of children born in a foreign country of alien parents, is not changed by the naturalization of their father as a citizen of the United States by taking out his second papers while the children are detained in custody as immigrants at Ellis Island, and they remain subject to exclusion under the immigration laws for a dangerous contagious disease contracted before their embarkation; such children not being affected by Rev. St. § 2172 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1334], which provides that the minor children of persons duly naturalized, if dwelling in the United States, shall be considered as citizens thereof. United States v. William (U. S.) 132 Fed. 894, 895.

ALIEN IMMIGRANT.

A native of Porto Rico, who was an inhabitant of that island at the time of its cession to the United States by a treaty of April 11, 1899, 30 Stat. 1754, with Spain, is not, upon her arrival at the port of New York, an "alien immigrant," within the meaning of the act of Congress of March 3, 1891, c. 551, 26 Stat. 1084 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1294], providing for the detention and deportation of alien immigrants likely to become public charges. Gonzales v. Williams, 24 Sup. Ct. 177, 192 U. S. 1, 48 L. Ed. 317.

When defendant's ship was anchored off shore at a Mexican port, a number of native peddlers came on board to sell their wares. When one of them came on deck to go ashore, he found that the vessel had started, and proceeded some distance. Defendant refused his request that he be taken back, and landed, but promised to stop and leave him on the return trip, and thereupon put him at work, but without placing him on the crew list. On arriving at San Francisco an immigration officer notified defendant not to land the Mexican without permission, but the latter stated he did not wish to land, but wanted to be taken back home, and he was not confined. Just before the vessel sailed, however, he left it without the consent or knowledge of defendant or any of his officers, and had not returned when she left the port. Held, that such facts were not sufficient to warrant defendant's conviction for neglecting to detain an alien not entitled to land, as such Mexican was not an alien immigrant who left a foreign shore to come to the United States for the purpose of becoming a permanent resident here; all the acts and agreements affirmatively appearing to have been made in the utmost good faith, and not for the purpose of evading any law. Moffitt v. United States (U. S.) 128 Fed. 375, 379, 63 C. C. A. 117.

ALIENATION.

Alienation is the voluntary and complete transfer from one person to another, and if it be concerning the transfer of property it involves the complete and absolute exclusion, out of him who alienates, of any remaining interest, or particle of interest, in the thing transmitted. It involves the complete transfer of the property and possession of lands, tenements, or other things to another. Orrell v. Bay Mfg. Co., 36 South. 561, 563, 83 Miss. 800 (citing Stark v. Duvall, 7 Okl. 217, 54 Pac. 454).

The word "alienation" means the transfer of the property and possession of land, tenements, or other things from one person to another, and is particularly applied to absolute conveyances of real property. Where a testator directs that his trustees have and exercise all requisite power, including that of alienation, necessary or convenient for the management of the estate and the division and distribution thereof, the use of the word "alienation" clearly imports an intention on the part of the testator to confer on the trustees the power to alienate or transfer the real estate if it should be necessary for the proper management of the estate or for the division and distribution thereof in the manner contemplated by the will. Dickson v. New York Biscuit Co., 71 N. E. 1068, 1068, 211 Ill. 468.

ALIMONY.

"Alimony" is a technical word, theoretically restricted to personalty, and practically to money. It is payable out of the husband's estate, real as well as personal. But the word never covers the estate itself." This is the meaning of the word "alimony," as used in Comp. St. 1901, c. 25, § 22, providing that in case of a divorce the court may decree to the wife such part of the personal estate of the husband, and such alimony out of his estate, as it shall deem just and reasonable. Hence the district court, in a suit for divorce, has no jurisdiction to award real estate of the husband to the wife in fee as alimony. Cizek v. Cizek (Neb.) 99 N. W. 28, 30.

The word "alimony," in Pub. Acts 1899, p. 360, No. 330, amending Comp. Laws, § 10,891, by inserting a provision allowing imprisonment for nonpayment of alimony, includes allowance for the support and education of children. Brown v. Brown (Mich.) 97 N. W. 396, 397.

Alimony is "purely incidental to divorce proceedings, and is an allowance out of the divorced husband's estate, made to the divorced wife for her support and maintenance. In this state is has no existence as a separate and independent right. It must be adjudged, if at all, in the divorce proceedings, and cannot be the subject-matter of an independent suit." Rariden v. Rariden (Ind.) 70 N. E. 398.

ALL

The word "all," as an adjective of number, means the whole number of; every one of. Encyclopædic Dictionary. In considering whether the statute of Merton, in which the words "omnes viduæ" were used, applied to each of the five kinds of dower, Lord Coke observed, "Qui omne dicit nihil excludit"—who says all does exclude nothing. 2 Inst. 81. We would not be understood, however, as asserting that the word, as used in legislation, is always to be understood as an all inclusive one. As so used, it is a general term, which is to be understood as comprehending whatever is within the outmost circle of the meaning of the word, unless, after subjecting the statute to interpretation and construction, there is sufficient reason for holding that the term was not used in so broad a sense. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Lighthelser (Ind.) 71 N. E. 218, 222.

All contracts of insurance.

The words "all contracts of insurance," as used in Act Pa. May 1, 1876 (P. L. p. 66) § 48, declaring that the agent of any insurance company of any other state or government which does not comply with the laws of Pennsylvania shall be personally liable on all contracts of insurance made by or through him, directly or indirectly, for or on behalf of the company, applies only to contracts of insurance on property in Pennsylvania. Though the language is inclusive of all contracts, yet, as the liability it imposes is an extraordinary and penal one, it should not be held to embrace anything beyond what clearly appears to have been contemplated by the Legislature; and, for ascertainment of the legislative intent, attention is not to be confined to the words employed, but the familiar rule must be applied, "that a thing may be within the letter of the statute, and yet not within the statute, because not within its spirit, nor within the intention of its makers." Rothschild v. Adler-Weinberger S. S. Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 866, 867.

All costs herein expended.

The phrase "all costs herein expended," as used in a judgment reciting, "It is therefore considered and adjudged by the court that this cause be dismissed, and that defendant recover from the plaintiff all costs herein expended," meant "only such costs as were authorized by law, and could be properly taxed in favor of the defendant below." Casto v. Elgeman, 70 N. E. 807, 162 Ind. 506 (citing Wilson v. Jenkins, 147 Ind. 533, 46 N. E. 889; Mott v. State, 145 Ind. 353, 44 N. E. 548).

All damages.

The phrase "all damages," as used in a bond given to a sheriff to indemnify him against all damages sustained by a levy on personal property, is broad language, and must be construed to include every element of damages which may fairly be said to have been contemplated by the parties, and covers attorney's fees which the sheriff was compelled to pay in defending an action for conversion of the property levied on, after notice to the obligors to defend and their refusal to do so. Cousins v. Paxton & Gallagher Co., 98 N. W. 277, 278, 122 Iowa, 465.

All expenses.

Any and all necessary expenses, see "Any."

The term "all expenses," as used in an agreement by a real estate agent to take charge of certain property and pay all expenses, must be deemed to include the annual taxes, and such other expenses or payments as an agent in full charge of property of such a character for a term of years would reasonably be required to pay out of the income in the process of a good management. Seymour v. Warren, 71 N. E. 260, 261, 179 N. Y. 1.

All of which one may die possessed.

A gift of "all of which one may die possessed" carries only the net amount of the estate. Blakeslee v. Pardee, 56 Atl. 503, 505, 76 Conn. 263.

All levies.

The words "all levies," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67f, 30 Stat. 565 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3450], making void "all levies, judgments, attachments, or other liens, obtained through legal proceedings against a person who is insolvent, at any time within four months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against him in case he is adjudged a bankrupt," are used in their most comprehensive sense, covering any and all seizures of property of the bankrupt within the four-months period, under legal process looking to the enforcement of claims against the bankrupt which would be released by his final discharge, and cover a seizure of property on a writ of replevin. In re Hymes Buggy & Implement Co. (U. S.) 130 Fed. 977, 980.

All my property.

There is no difference between the phrases "all my property" and "all the property I possess," as used in a will devising such property. Thomas v. Blair, 85 South. 811, 813, 814, 111 La. 678.

All persons.

The term "all persons," in an act providing that a conveyance certified and recorded shall impart notice to all persons of the contents thereof, means all persons who acquired interests as subsequent purchasers or mortgagees, and it was not intended that the record should be notice to all the world, or even to purchasers or mortgagees, in relation to other matters. McCabe v. Grey, 20 Cal. 509, 516.

All sums due to employés.

The expression "all sums due to employés" means sums due at the time of the decretal order appointing the receivers, and which accrued before it. Dickinson v. Saunders (U. S.) 129 Fed. 16, 21, 63 C. C. A. 666.

All the rest, residue, and remainder.

Where a testator, after creating in his residuary estate a trust to raise and pay the widow a certain income for life in lieu of dower, and to raise a certain income for his son for life, directed the trustees to divide all the rest, residue, and remainder of his estate into two equal parts, the words "all the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate" were intended to cover the remainder of the property held in trust for the annuity of the widow. Thomas v. Thomas, 89 N. Y. Supp. 495, 497, 43 Misc. Rep. 541.

ALL OTHER.

The word "other," as used in Const. art. 8, § 4, providing that all other grants, gifts, and devises that have been or may hereafter be made to the state shall be applied to the support and maintenance of the common schools, means other than the grants, gifts, and devises specified in sections 2 and 3 of the article. McMurtry v. Engelhardt (Neb.) 98 N. W. 40, 42.

Webster defines an alley as a narrow passage, especially a walk or passage in a garden or park, bordered by rows of trees or bushes; a bordered way; a narrow passage or way in a city as distinct from a public street. Milliken v. Denny, 47 S. E. 132, 133, 135 N. C. 19.

ALLOT.

The term "allotted," as used in Sess. Laws 1903, p. 246, § 33, making it the duty of the state engineer to make an examination of the streams, beginning with those streams the waters of which have not been allotted, means decreed by the proper court. Boise City Irrigation & Land Co. v. Stewart (Idaho) 77 Pac. 25, 29.

ALLOTMENT.

The term "allotment," in the constitutional provision giving probate courts jurisdiction in all matters of the allotment of dower, applies to parties who claim in virtue of the title of the deceased, as the widow and heirs, and over whom the probate court may have jurisdiction. It signifies an apportionment of the interest of one or more parties entitled to a share of the estate. It does not affect strangers. Jiggits v. Bennett, 81 Miss. 610, 613.

ALTERATION.

See "Material Alteration."

AMBIGUITY.

See "Latent Ambiguity."

AMEND.

The power to amend must not be confounded with the power to create. The power of the court to amend a record presupposes an existing record, which is defective by reason of some clerical error or mistake, or the omission of some entry which should have been made during the progress of the case, or by the loss of some document originally filed thereunder. The difference between creating and amending a record is analogous to that between the construction and repair of a piece of personal property. A judgment of naturalization which has never been recorded, or, if recorded, the record of which has been lost, cannot be entered by a common-law court nunc pro tunc 33 years after its rendition, when no entry or memorandum appeared upon the record or files at the time the original judgment is supposed to have been rendered, especially where the declaration of intention was made before another court, in another state, and the territorial court which is alleged to have entered the judgment has itself been abolished and a state court substituted in its place. Gagnon v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 510, 511, 193 U. S. 451, 48 L. Ed. 745.

A constitutional provision providing that the Legislature shall not pass a special, private, or local law amending, confirming, or extending the charter of any private municipal corporation prohibits the Legislature from passing a special law repealing such charter. The word "amend," in legal phraseology, does not generally mean the same thing as "repeal," but it does not follow that amendments of a statute may not often be accomplished by repeals of some of its parts. Little v. State, 35 South. 134, 136, 137 Ala. 659.

AMENDMENT.

See "Additional Amendment."

The word "amendment" is clearly susceptible of a construction which would make it cover several propositions, all tending to effect and carry out one general object or purpose, and all connected with one subject, as well as of the construction that every proposition which effects a change in the Constitution or adds to or takes from it is an amendment. People v. Sours, 74 Pac. 167, 178, 31 Colo. 369 (citing State v. Timme, 54 Wis. 318, 11 N. W. 785).

AMENDMENT BY IMPLICATION.

"Amendment by implication" is merely a phrase in common use, because convenient, to indicate that rule of construction by which a later repugnant provision in a Constitution or statute modifies or abrogates an earlier one. People v. Sours, 74 Pac. 167, 176, 31 Colo. 369.

AMOUNT COLLECTED.

Laws 1896, p. 859, c. 908, § 187, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 297, c. 118, § 1, imposes an annual state tax for the privilege of carrying on insurance business by domestic insurance companies. The tax is imposed on the gross premiums collected. The "amount collected" is either the sum collected and retained, or else it includes something for the business not done or unrealized in the anticipation of business. While in a certain sense it may be said that payment of the premium in advance for one year involves insurance made for one year, notwithstanding the fact that according to its terms the policy is subsequently canceled, a majority of the court is of the opinion that this is inconsistent with the fair meaning of the words "business done," when looked back upon at the end of the year. The premium which represents business done is the amount which the company has the benefit of and furnishes an equivalent for. It is the money earned by the policy. When part of the premium is refunded, it is the same in effect as if it had never been paid. People v. Miller, 70 N. E. 10, 11, 177 N. Y. 515.

AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY.

Where the damages recovered in an action against a telegraph company for negligence in the transmission of a message, together with interest thereon, amount to $100, the case is appealable to the Court of Civil Appeals, the interest being a part of the amount in controversy. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Noland (Tex.) 77 S. W. 1031.

AMOUNT IN DISPUTE.

Where, under a statute providing that in case of death from negligent running of a train the railroad company shall forfeit and pay for every person so dying $5,000, which may be sued for, etc., and only $4,500 has been sued for and recovered, $4,500 is the "amount in dispute," as regards appellate jurisdiction, although a recovery might have been had for $5,000. Marsh v. Kansas City Ry. Co., 78 S. W. 284, 285, 104 Mo. App. 577.

ANARCHIST.

The conclusion of the immigrant inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, that an alien came within the provisions of the immigration act of March 3, 1903, for the exclusion and deportation of alien anarchists, cannot be said, as a matter of law, to be wholly unsupported by the evidence, even though such act be so construed as to include only advocates of the forcible overthrow of the federal government or of all governments, or of the assassination of officials, where there was evidence that such alien advocated, "as an anarchist," a universal strike, and proposed to lecture upon "the legal murder of 1887," and to address mass meetings on that subject, in association with a person who had been convicted of advocating revolution and murder. United States ex rel. Turner v. Williams, 24 Sup. Ct. 719, 723, 194 U. S. 279, 48 L. Ed. 979.

ANARCHY.

"Anarchy" is a term which has been used in recent years to describe a lawless and dangerous doctrine, and its advocates have been looked upon as persons dangerous to society, and some of its more outspoken and unbalanced disciples have become assassins. Von Gerichten v. Seitz, 87 N. Y. Supp. 968, 969, 94 App. Div. 130.

ANCESTOR.

An "ancestor" is defined as "one who has preceded another in a direct line of descent; a lineal descendant; a former possessor; the person last seised; a deceased person from whom another had inherited land." Bowen v. Hackney (N. C.) 48 S. E. 633, 635 (quoting Black's Dict.; 2 Bl. Comm. 201).

AND.

Where, in a will containing three separate clauses devising property to each of testator's three children, the first two clauses providing that, if the devisees should die without children or grandchildren living at their death, the property was devised to the devisee's brother and sister or their children or grandchildren, and the third clause making provision for testator's son, and declaring that, if he should die without children or grandchildren, his share should pass to his brother and sister and their children or grandchildren, if there should be any living, the word "and" in the devise to testator's son should be construed as having been used instead of the word "or," and, where the son died without children or grandchildren, his share passed to his brother and sister in fee, and not to them and their children and grandchildren as tenants in common. Davis v. Davis (Ky.) 81 S. W. 246, 247.

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 396, 30 Stat. 187 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1871], for "printing paper * * * suitable for books and newspapers," is not limited to such paper as is suitable for printing both books and newspapers; and paper used for printing covers of booklets, pamphlets, and the like, but not suitable for printing newspapers, is properly classified for duty under said provision. Hensel, Bruckmann & Lorbacher v. United States (U. S.) 126 Fed. 578, 577.

ANIMAL

Other animal, see "Other."

ANNUAL

The word "annual," as used in an antenuptial contract providing for the annual payment of a certain sum to the wife after the husband's death in lieu of dower, not only denotes the amount to be paid, but the time of payment. It means not only that the wife is to receive the specified sum for each year, but that the sum is to be paid to her each year. An agreement to pay a fixed sum annually for each year, in the absence of language modifying the ordinary meaning of these terms, cannot fairly be construed as a promise to pay such sum annually in advance, or at the commencement of each year. Mower v. Sanford, 57 Atl. 119, 120, 76 Conn. 504, 63 L. R. A. 625, 100 Am. St. Rep. 1008.

ANNUAL DAMAGES.

Gross damages equivalent, see "Gross Damages."

ANNUITY.

An annuity is a sum payable annually, unless the language of the instrument creating it may properly be construed as providing for a different time of payment. Mower v. Sanford, 57 Atl. 119, 120, 76 Conn. 504, 63 L. R. A. 625, 100 Am. St. Rep. 1008.

A gift of an income from a certain fund is not an "annuity," and interest does not begin thereon until one year from the death of the deceased. In re Brown's Estate, 77 Pac. 160, 162, 143 Cal. 450.

ANONYMOUS.

The word "anonymous" is defined in the Century Dictionary as "of unknown name; one whose name is withheld, as an anonymous author, or as an anonymous pamphlet; or without any name; wanting a name; without the real name of the author; nameless." A newspaper article signed "Smith," written by a person with such a surname, is not "anonymous," within a statute providing that the requirement of notice of intention to bring an action for libel published in a newspaper shall not apply to anonymous publications. Williams v. Smith, 46 S. E. 502, 503, 134 N. C. 249.

ANSWER.

Under Gen. St. 1894, § 5236, providing that the answer may contain new matter constituting a counterclaim, and section 5240, declaring that sham, irrelevant, and frivolous answers may be stricken out, an answer consisting of a counterclaim may be stricken out as sham and frivolous, since a counterclaim, although consisting of new matter, may constitute an answer. Monitor Drill Co. v. Moody (Minn.) 100 N. W. 1104.

ANY.

Any action.

The words "any action," as used in Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, c. 51, § 9, giving courts, in any action pending before them, power to compel the protection of books containing evidence pertaining to the issue, includes a suit at law as well as a bill in chancery, and the words exclude the idea that the evidence sought to be obtained can only be acquired by a bill of discovery. Swedish-American Tel. Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 70 N. E. 768, 773, 208 Ill. 562.

Any and all necessary expenses.

The phrase "any and all necessary expenses," as used in a will devising the body of the testator's estate to the executors in trust to collect the income, and, after deducting any and all necessary expenses, to divide the net income in equal shares among the persons named, is sufficient to include the payment of taxes charged upon the legacies under the collateral inheritance tax law, the New York state transfer tax, and the United States war tax, and such taxes are payable out of the gross income, and not out of the principal of the estate. In re Brown's Estate, 57 Atl. 360, 208 Pa. 161.

Any business.

The term "any business connected with said railway or incident thereto," as used in a conveyance by citizens of a town to a railroad, making a donation of a right of way through lands suitable for residences only, for the purpose of having railroad depots placed nearer the town and to enhance the value of their property, giving the right to the railroad to establish, on the land so conveyed, "any business connected with said railway or incident thereto," does not give the railroad the right to establish stockpens on the land so conveyed, to the damage of adjacent property. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. Mott (Tex.) 81 S. W. 285, 289.

Any change in grade.

The words "any change in the grade of such highway," in Revision 1902, § 2051, providing that when the owner of land adjoining a public highway shall sustain special damages to his property by reason of any change in the grade of such highway he shall be entitled to the amount of such special damages, imply an already existing grade, and the statute contemplates the existence of a worked highway completed and in actual use. Gorham v. City of New Haven, 58 Atl. 1, 2, 76 Conn. 700; Munson v. Same, Id.

Any defense.

An instruction, in a suit on a note, that if defendant sets up a failure of consideration he must establish it by a preponderance of the evidence, and that the burden of proving "any defense" is on defendant, followed by an instruction that by a preponderance of the evidence is meant the greater weight of the evidence, is not erroneous as leading the jury to believe that the word "any" refers to every other defense than those spoken of in the instruction. Ewen v. Wilbor, 70 N. E. 575, 578, 208 Ill. 492.

Any description.

The words "of any description," as used in Pub. Laws 1901, c. 240, regulating the packing of sardines for canning purposes, are of wide application, and prohibit all sardine canning within the time limits fixed by the statute. State v. Kaufman, 57 Atl. 886, 888, 98 Me. 546.

Any extent.

Appreciable extent distinguished, see "Appreciable Extent."

Any means or force.

The term "by any means or force," in Pen. Code, § 245, declaring that every person committing an assault with a deadly weapon, or by any means or force likely to produce great bodily injury, etc., is a general and comprehensive term, designated to embrace many and various means or forces which, aside from a deadly weapon or instrument, may be used in making an assault. People v. Perales, 75 Pac. 170, 171, 141 Cal. 581.

Any part of.

The words "any part of or projection," as used in a deed providing that no dwelling or other house or building, or any part thereof or projection therefrom, shall be built on the grantor's remaining land within a certain distance of the premises conveyed, "evidently refer to bay windows or porches or things of that nature." Clark v. Lee, 70 N. E. 47, 185 Mass. 223.

Any person.

The words "any person," as used in Code, § 210, allowing any person to sue in forma pauperis on making affidavit that he is unable to give security, are broad enough to include any litigant whatever, and an administrator may sue in forma pauperis. Christian v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. (N. C.) 48 S. E. 743.

Any place.

The words, "in any place," in Pen. Code, § 675, as amended by Laws 1891, p. 657, c. 327, providing that any person who shall, by any offensive or disorderly act or language, annoy or interfere with any person in any place, or with the passengers of any public stagecoach, railroad car, or other public conveyance, refers to a public place, and public stages, railroad cars, and other conveyances were doubtless specified to remove any question as to whether they were public places, and included in the words "in any place." People v. St. Clair, 86 N. Y. Supp. 77, 79, 90 App. Div. 239.

Any property.

In Rev. St. 1895, art. 2113, declaring that no sale of any property belonging to an estate shall be made by an executor or administrator without an order of the court authorizing the same, the term "any property" embraces promissory notes as well as all other kinds of property. Browne v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. (Tex.) 80 S. W. 593, 595.

[Appendix.]

Any road crossing.

The words "any road crossing," as used in Code, § 2072, providing that in moving a railroad train the engine whistle must be sounded at least 60 rods before any road crossing is reached, and after the sounding of the whistle the bell shall be rung continuously until the crossing is passed, do not include private crossings, but include only roads as defined by section 48, cl. 5, providing that the term "road," as used in the Code, means any public highway, unless otherwise specified; and it is not otherwise specified in section 2072. Nicholas v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Iowa) 100 N. W. 1115, 1116.

Any trial, hearing, proceeding, or investigation.

The phrase "trial, hearing, proceeding, or investigation," as used in a statute relating to the preservation of the purity of elections, which defines and punishes offenses against the elective franchise, and provides that a person offending against any provision thereof is a competent witness against another person so offending, and may be compelled to attend and testify upon any trial, hearing, proceeding, or investigation, as any other person, means some trial, hearing, proceeding, or investigation of a person other than the witness for the commission of such offense. Lindsay v. Allen (Tenn.) 82 S. W. 648, 649.

ANY OTHER.Any other aid.

Where the concealing of an offender is first mentioned, and then there is added the giving of such offender any other aid, the "other aid" is of a similar character as that particularly specified. State v. Jett (Kan.) 77 Pac. 546, 547 (citing State v. Doty, 57 Kan. 835, 48 Pac. 145).

Any other person.

The term "or any other person entitled," in Code Civ. Proc. § 1368, providing that, if any person entitled to administration is a minor, letters must be granted to his guardian, or any other person entitled to letters, is general in its designation of persons, and must either apply to persons in the same class as the minor, or to persons in inferior classes, who, as provided in section 1365, are entitled, in the absence of others having superior rights, to a grant of letters. In re Turner's Estate, 77 Pac. 144, 146, 143 Cal. 438; Turner v. Richardson, Id.

Any other structure.

A railroad is within the term "any other structure," as used in a statute providing that every person furnishing material of any kind to be used in the construction of any building, wharf, bridge, ditch, flume, tunnel, fence, machinery, or aqueduct, or any other structure or superstructure, shall have a lien upon the same for the materials furnished. Giant Powder Co. v. Oregon Pacific Ry. Co. (U. S.) 42 Fed. 470, 473, 8 L. R. A. 700; Ban v. Columbia Southern Ry. Co. (U. S.) 117 Fed. 21, 31, 54 C. C. A. 407.

Any other witness.

The use of the term "any other witness," as used in an instruction declaring that, if the jury are of the opinion that any witness has willfully sworn falsely as to anything material to the issue, then the jury are at liberty to disregard the entire testimony of such witness, except in so far as the jury may find it corroborated by the testimony of "any other witness," renders the instruction fatally defective, because the jury may disregard the entire evidence of a witness not corroborated by some credible witness. Hart v. Godkin (Wis.) 100 N. W. 1057, 1060 (citing F. Dohmen Co. v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 96 Wis. 38, 71 N. W. 69; Allen v. Murray, 87 Wis. 41, 57 N. W. 979; Mercer v. Wright, 3 Wis. 645; Patnode v. Westenhaver, 114 Wis. 460, 90 N. W. 467).

APARTMENT HOUSE.

The term "apartment or community house" is not synonymous with "tenement" in a covenant precluding the erection of any tenement, apartment, or community house. McClure v. Leaycraft, 90 N. Y. Supp. 233, 234.

APPAREL.

See "Wearing Apparel."

APPARENT.

The word "apparent," as used in an instruction in a personal injury action in connection with the word "reasonable," is not erroneous, for the word "apparent" means plain or evident, and is the fair equivalent of "certain." Harrison v. Ayrshire, 99 N. W. 132, 133, 123 Iowa, 528.

APPEAL

Proceeding on appeal as civil action or case, see "Civil Action—Case—Suit—etc."

A marked distinction exists between proceedings in error to obtain a reversal of a judgment or final order in a law action, and an appeal in a suit in equity, which latter brings up the case for trial de novo, and is accomplished solely by the filing in due time in the Supreme Court of a transcript of the record containing the judgment, decree, or final order appealed from. In case of an appeal in a suit in equity, the filing of a transcript operates ipso facto as a removal of the cause to the appellate court, and, in the event of death, proceedings for a revivor and substitution are authorized, as though the action had been pending in the appellate court since prior to the death of the party; but the right to review by proceedings in error are regulated by an altogether different method of procedure, which must be followed in order to obtain such revivor. Ritchey v. Seeley (Neb.) 97 N. W. 818, 819.

The word "appeal" designates generally any method provided by statute for removing a case from an inferior to a higher court for review, including the proceeding under the statute by petition in error. Caldwell v. State (Wyo.) 74 Pac. 496.

A notice that a party "has appealed" from a judgment is sufficient notice that he "appeals" from the judgment. The words "intends to appeal," "will appeal," or "give notice of their application to appeal" are equivalent to and have the same effect as the more direct phraseology of the statute—that is, each will effect an appeal. James v. James, 77 Pac. 1082, 35 Wash. 655 (citing Ranahan v. Gibbons, 23 Wash. 255, 62 Pac. 773; In re Murphy's Estate, 26 Wash. 222, 66 Pac. 424; Brown v. Calloway, 34 Wash. 175, 75 Pac. 630).

APPEAR.

See "If It Appears."

APPEAR BY AFFIDAVIT.

"Appear by affidavit" means that such legal evidence going to establish the fact must be given as would be received in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, and not conclusions, opinions, or hearsay. The affidavit must contain a statement of the facts and circumstances upon which the applicant bases his belief of the truth of what he wishes to establish. It must be so full that the officer to whom it is presented may find, upon the evidence contained in it, that the facts exist satisfactorily to his mind. Mackubin v. Smith, 5 Minn. 367, 370 (Gil. 296, 298).

APPEARANCE DE BENE ESSE.

"The appearance de bene esse is peculiar to the courts of this state, and has invariably prevailed, from a time to which the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. I have known the practice to prevail for more than forty years, and have seen such entries long before my time. It was borrowed from the filing a declaration de bene esse; that is, conditionally, until special bail be put in. A declaration de bene must be delivered and filed before the time for putting in bail has expired. If it be delivered after appearance, it is called 'delivering it in chief.' The reason of filing it conditionally is this: that it is no waiver of bail; but demanding a plea is, because it is admitting the defendant to be in court. This declaration stands, without more said, where the special bail is put in, and remains without exception. The declaration is generally indorsed thus: 'This declaration is filed conditionally, till special bail is entered,' or 'Common bail is filed,' as the case may be. All our proceedings are short notes—memoranda—afterwards to be filled up. The appearance de bene esse, if filled up at length, is an appearance conditionally, if the summons of scire facias be returned served. If it is, there is a return, with a full appearance; so much so that, on the writ thus returned, I would consider the party in court, appearing by his attorney, unless on or before the return he entered a retraxit of his appearance. The court would hold the attorney to it; there should be no shuffling." Blair v. Weaver (Pa.) 11 Serg. & R. 84.

APPELLEE.

By appellee is meant the party against whom the appeal is taken; that is to say, the party who has an interest adverse to setting aside the judgment. Slayton v. Horsey (Tex.) 78 S. W. 919, 920.

APPLIANCE.

Appliances include machinery, apparatus, and premises. The failure of an employer to furnish a domestic servant with a lodging room in such repair as not to endanger her health is a violation of his legal duty to furnish safe appliances. Collins v. Harrison, 56 Atl. 678, 25 R. I. 489, 64 L. R. A. 156.

A hoist was used for the purpose of elevating material to the second story of a building in course of erection. It was triangular in form, simple in design, and easily made. Its construction and operation on the roof was not immediately supervised by the foreman or master, but the material was selected and it was put together by the carpenters engaged upon the building. Such hoist was not an "appliance," within the rule that the master is obliged to use tools and appliances reasonably safe for the uses to which they are to be put. Gittens v. William Porten Co., 97 N. W. 378, 90 Minn. 512.

APPLICABLE.

Rules of practice, when controlling the form of process to be used on a pleading, are applicable to it. Farmers' Banking & Loan Co. v. Mauck (Neb.) 97 N. W. 835, 836

APPLICATION.

See "Original Application."

The meaning of the term "application," as employed in a question propounded to an applicant for insurance as to whether any application to insure his life had ever been made to any other company on which a policy had not issued, is not confined to a full and final completion of all the various parts into which the preliminary negotiations and examinations are divided by another company for its convenience. In the absence of an agreement, the completion, signing, and delivery of an application for insurance to the soliciting agent constitutes an application for insurance. An applicant for insurance answered the question as to whether any application to insure his life had ever been made to any other company, and refused, in the negative. Some five months previously he had signed two of the divisional parts of an application to another company, and had delivered them to the local agent and medical examiner, and had been partially examined by the latter. Subsequently he declined to complete the examination on the ground that he had been misinformed as to the character of the policy. The parts of the application signed were thereafter forwarded to the company, and the application was formally rejected, of which fact he was notified. The failure to disclose such facts in answer to the question avoided the policy issued to him, which policy provided that all the statements in the application should be deemed material, and that the policy should be void if any statement was not full and complete, or was untrue. Webb v. Security Mut. Life Ins. Co. (U. S.) 126 Fed. 635, 637, 61 C. C. A. 883.

APPOINTED BY HIM.

The words "appointed by him," in Baltimore City Charter, § 25, authorizing the mayor to remove at pleasure during the first six months of their respective terms all officers appointed by him, means appointed by the mayor; and the mayor can remove the officers whom he has authority to appoint, whether appointed by him or his predecessor. MacLellan v. Marine (Md.) 56 Atl. 359, 360.

APPRECIABLE.

"Appreciable" is defined as "capable of being estimated; perceptible; as an appreciable quantity." Chaffin v. Fries Mfg. & Power Co., 47 S. E. 226, 228, 135 N. C. 95.

APPRECIABLE EXTENT.

The words "appreciable extent," as used in an instruction, in an action for damages for maintaining a dam, that plaintiff is entitled to nominal damages if the dam caused water to be ponded on his land to any appreciable extent, without proof of substantial damages, cannot be held to be synonymous with the words "any extent," and hence the instruction was erroneous, as plaintiff is entitled to nominal damages if the water was ponded on his land to any extent. Chaffin v. Fries Mfg. & Power Co. (N. C.) 48 S. E. 770, 771.

APPREHEND.

"Apprehend" is defined as "to take or seize (a person) by legal process; to arrest; as to apprehend a criminal." "Arrest" is defined as "the taking or apprehending of a person by authority of law; legal restraint; custody." The words "apprehension" and "arrest," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 2474, providing that any two judges of the county court may offer, for the county, a reward for the apprehension and arrest of a person committing a felony, are synonyms, and a reward offered for the apprehension of a felon is within the authority of the judges of the county court. Cummings v. Clinton County, 79 S. W. 1127, 1129, 181 Mo. 162 (quoting Webster's Dict.).

A., knowing of a murder and of a reward for the apprehension, arrest, and conviction of the murderer, became suspicious that a certain party was guilty, took steps to locate him, and, having done so, telegraphed to a sheriff to arrest such party, which the sheriff did, without knowing of what such party was suspected, telegraphing the fact of the arrest to A., at his expense, receiving a fee for the arrest, and turning the suspected person over to A., who elicited a confession from him on which he was convicted. Held, that A. was the apprehender of the criminal, and entitled to the reward. Ralls County v. Stephens, 78 S. W. 291, 292, 104 Mo. App. 115.

APPROPRIATE REMEDY.

The words "appropriate remedy," in Greater New York Charter (Laws 1897, p. 188, c. 378, § 537), providing that, in the event of the removal of any member of the clerical or uniformed force of street cleaning, he shall have the right to sue out a writ of certiorari or other appropriate remedy for the purpose of reviewing the action of the commissioner or his deputy, means some remedy by which the proceedings taken by the commissioner can be brought before the court for review, and not by a proceeding independent of it, which commands the commissioner to do either one thing or the other. People v. Woodbury, 85 N. Y. Supp. 161, 163, 88 App. Div. 593.

APPROPRIATION.

Where a village charter authorizes the trustees to call a special tax meeting to vote on appropriations for special purposes, the word "appropriations" does not, on natural construction, well describe a proposed issue of bonds extending over a period of years. Village of Canandaigua v. Hayes, 85 N. Y. Supp. 488, 493, 90 App. Div. 836.

APPROPRIATION OF WATER.

To constitute a valid appropriation of water there must be an intent to apply it to some beneficial use, existing at the time or contemplated in the future; a diversion thereof from a natural stream; and an application of it within a reasonable time to some useful industry. Beers v. Sharpe, 75 Pac. 717, 720, 44 Or. 386.

APPROVE.

The word "approve," as used in an instruction in a prosecution for murder to the effect that it was the duty of the jury to find defendant guilty as charged, if they believed her present with the design to give assistance, if necessary, to the person killing deceased, or present with the design to encourage, incite, or approve of such killing of deceased, conveys the meaning of a deed already accomplished and one committed by another party, and one who tacitly approves of or consents to the killing of any person cannot under any rule of law be held to have aided or abetted in such killing, and such an instruction is erroneous. Harper v. State, 35 South. 572, 574, 83 Miss. 402.

APPURTENANCE.

In the absence of a reservation, growing and unmatured crops upon lands conveyed by warranty deed pass with the land as "appurtenances," which are defined by Sess. Laws 1897, p. 101, c. 8, § 41, and Id. p. 94, c. 8, § 10, as all improvements and every right, of whatever character, pertaining to the premises described. Marshall v. Homler, 74 Pac. 368, 370, 13 Okl. 264.

Where the owner of land, on selling a portion thereof on which there were springs, reserved the right of taking water from the springs, and conveying it to buildings on the remainder of the land, such right became an "appurtenance" to the remainder. Mason v. Thwing, 87 N. Y. Supp. 991, 995, 94 App. Div. 77.

APPURTENANT TO.

The phrases "connected with" and "appurtenant to" are not necessarily synonymous. A mortgage given by a railroad company limited the lien on after-acquired property to such property and to such rights, acquired by liens from other railroad companies, as should be connected with or appurtenant to the railroad of the mortgagor, specifically described in the mortgage. The lien of the mortgage embraces rights acquired by leases made after the date of the mortgage to the mortgagor by other railroad companies, owning railroads connected with the mortgagor's road and being operated by the mortgagor in connection with its own railroad and as a part of its railway system. These rights, if not appurtenant to, are, within the meaning of the language of the mortgage, "connected with," the mortgagor's railroad. Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. Atlantic Coast Electric Ry. Co. (U. S.) 132 Fed. 68, 70.

ARBITRATOR.

An arbitration is a judicial proceeding, and the arbitrators, being alike the agents of both parties, and not of one party alone, are bound to exercise a high degree of judicial impartiality, without the slightest regard to the manner in which the duty has devolved upon them. Produce Refrigerating Co. v. Norwich Union Fire Ins. Soc., 97 N. W. 875, 876, 91 Minn. 210.

While an arbitrator of loss by fire, appointed by a party in pursuance of an arbitration clause in a policy, is not the agent of the party selecting him, yet, where the proper act or conduct of such arbitrator prevents the selection of an umpire, the consequences of the failure of arbitration should be visited on the party who selected the arbitrator. Fowble v. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., 81 S. W. 485, 487, 106 Mo. App. 527.

ARID.

In an action to determine the right to use irrigating waters, the question as to the quantity of water which might be used depended upon whether or not the land for which the water was to be used was in an arid portion of the state, and in determining such question the trial court instructed the jury that "by 'arid portions of the state' is meant those portions of the state where rainfall is insufficient for agricultural purposes, and irrigation, therefore, necessary. Where the rainfall is sufficient for agricultural purposes, that portion is not within the arid region, even though irrigation might or would increase the productiveness of the soil there." Appellant contended that an arid portion of the state should have been defined as one "in which, by reason of insufficient rainfall, irrigation is necessary for successful farming for successive years." The appellate court, in passing on the correctness of the instruction of the trial court, said: "The question whether this was an 'arid portion of the state' was, of course, an important one in this case. If it was not an arid portion of the state, then the use of water for irri-tion was subordinate to the use for domestic purposes. In those portions of the state called 'arid,' by reason of the necessity for irrigation, the use is put upon an equal footing with such other necessary uses as water for stock, and domestic purposes. We realize the difficulty of framing an accurate definition. Irrigation might be necessary for some crops, and not for others. It might be necessary for one year, or a number of years, and not for other years. The jury cannot be instructed definitely with reference to all this. The prime question, however, seems to us to be whether the conditions are such that a jury can say that the use of water for irrigation is a necessity. We believe that this question was submitted about as clearly and accurately as possible in the charge given." Hall v. Carter (Tex.) 77 S. W. 19, 21.

ARISE—ARISING.

The use of the word "arises," in an instruction that if, from the testimony, there arises in the minds of the jurors a reasonable doubt as to defendant's guilt, they cannot find him guilty, was properly refused, since it implies that the reasonable doubt which will prevent a conviction is not that doubt that may come to a juror without careful weighing and considering of the evidence, and after full, fair, and free discussion with his fellows, but such reasonable doubt as may readily arise in his mind, be it only for a moment. Baldwin v. State (Fla.) 35 South. 220, 222.

The words "cause of action arising," as used in Rev. St. 1851, c. 2, § 38, providing that, when the court has jurisdiction of the parties it may exercise it in respect to any cause of action, wherever arising, except for the specific recovery of real property situated out of the territory or an injury thereto, and except as also provided by statute in relation to proceedings by foreign corporations, do not mean simply "cause of action accruing," but the word "arising" is also used in the sense of "originating"; that is, the court is given jurisdiction of any cause of action, wherever its subject-matter originated, except as therein stated. Powers Mercantile Co. v. Blethen, 97 N. W. 1056, 1058, 91 Minn. 339.

Arising under the Constitution or laws.

"When a suit does not really and substantially involve a dispute or controversy as to the effect or construction of the Constitution or laws of the United States, upon the determination of which the result depends, it is not a suit arising under the Constitution or laws. And it must appear on the record by a statement in legal and logical form, such as is required in good pleading, that the suit is one which does really and substantially involve a dispute or controversy as to a right which depends on the construction of the Constitution or some law or treaty of the United States, before jurisdiction can be maintained on this ground." The assertion, in a bill filed by a water company against a municipality and its common council, that the obligation of the municipality's rental contract with the company was impaired by an ordinance which, while denying the validity of the contract, allowed a claim for rentals, with a saving clause to prevent estoppel, is too clearly unfounded to present a case arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States. Defiance Water Co. v. City of Defiance, 24 Sup. Ct. 63, 66, 191 U. S. 184, 48 L. Ed. 140 (citing Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 178 U. S. 239, 20 Sup. Ct. 867, 44 L. Ed. 1052; Little York Gold Washing & Water Co. v. Keyes, 96 U. S. 199, 24 L. Ed. 656; Blackburn v. Portland Gold Min. Co., 175 U. S. 571, 20 Sup. Ct. 222, 44 L. Ed. 276; Shreveport v. Cole, 129 U. S. 36, 9 Sup. Ct. 210, 32 L. Ed. 589; New Orleans v. Benjamin, 153 U. S. 411, 424, 14 Sup. Ct. 905, 909, 38 L. Ed. 764, 769.

ARRAIGNED.

The word "arraigned" means practically the same thing as being personally present at the time; for it could not be true that defendant was in fact arraigned and pleaded to the indictment, if not personally present. State v. Hunter, 80 S. W. 955, 959, 181 Mo. 316.

ARRAIGNMENT.

In an "arraignment" three steps are necessary: The information must be read to the defendant, he must be given a copy thereof, and he must be asked whether he pleads guilty or not guilty to the information. State v. De Wolfe, 74 Pac. 1084, 1085, 29 Mont. 415.

ARREST.

Apprehension synonymous, see "Apprehend."

ARROWROOT IN ITS NATURAL STATE.

The term "arrowroot in its natural state" is the equivalent of the term "arrowroot in a state of nature," and that description would hardly fit an article which had been subjected to various processes by which it is converted into starch. The words "arrowroot in its natural state," as used in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 478, 30 Stat. 195 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1680], relate to the tubers or roots of the arrowroot plant, and do not include the article commercially known as "arrowroot," consisting of starch made from arrowroot tubers. Leaycraft & Co. v. United States (U. S.) 130 Fed. 108, 107.

ARSON.

"At common law arson is the malicious burning of another's house." Rev. St. § 6831, declaring that whoever maliciously burns or attempts to burn any dwelling house, kitchen, smokehouse, shop, office, barn, stable, storehouse, etc., shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a specified term, or fined, extends the offense of arson at common law, and also comprises it, and does not make it an offense to burn one's own building. Jones v. State, 70 N. E. 952, 70 Ohio St. 36.

ARTFUL CONCEALMENT.

"Artful concealment" is some unfair practice by which a party is intentionally deceived. Lake v. Gilchrist, 7 Ala. 955, 959.

AS IT MAY THEN BE.

Where testator devised all of his property to his wife, with a provision that, if his son survived her, he should have one-half of all the property devised to his mother "as it may then be," his interest was not confined to the personal estate. Bailey v. Pittsburgh, C., O. & St. L. Ry. Co., 57 Atl. 58, 59, 208 Pa. 45.

AS SHE THINKS PROPER.

A devise of testator's property to his wife, to will to his children "as she thinks proper," vests in the wife a discretion in the exercise of the power conferred, which includes the right of unequal distribution. Allder v. Jones (Md.) 56 Atl. 487.

AS SOON AS PRACTICABLE.

"It is well settled that 'immediately' means 'as soon as practicable,' and, conversely, it is proper to construe 'as soon as practicable' to mean 'immediately.'" The statute relating to a meeting of the state board of equalization and assessment of railroad property provides a day on which the railroad companies shall make returns. It provides a place where the meeting of the state board shall be held, and provides expressly that such meeting shall take place as soon as practicable after the returns are filed. The statute must be construed to furnish notice of the time and place of the meeting of the state board, and where the statute names the time and place personal notice is not necessary. Chicago, B. & Q. R. R. v. Richardson County (Neb.) 100 N. W. 950, 952.

ASCERTAINED MEMBERSHIP.

See "Certain Ascertained Membership."

ASSAIL.

Impeach equivalent, see "Impeach."

ASSAULT.

An assault is an attempt to do violence to the person of another, with the means at hand of carrying the intention into execution. State v. Dyer (Del.) 58 Atl. 947, 948.

"It is not always necessary, to constitute an assault, that the person whose conduct is in question should have the present capacity to inflict injury; for if, by threats or a menace of violence, which he attempts to execute, or by threats and a display of force, he causes another to reasonably apprehend imminent danger, and thereby forces him to do otherwise than he would have done, or to abandon any lawful purpose, he commits an assault. It is the apparent imminent danger that is threatened, rather than the present ability to inflict injury, which distinguishes violence menaced from assault." A mere threat or violence menaced, accompanied by insulting or abusive words, as distinguished from violence begun to be executed, is insufficient to constitute an assault. State v. Daniel (N. C.) 48 S. E. 544, 545.

"The pointing of a loaded revolver at another, if within range, is an assault; and the same is true if it is not loaded, if the person aimed at is not aware of the fact." Where one points a loaded pistol at another, although he has some reason to think it is not loaded, and he pulls the trigger, causing the pistol to be discharged, and the person assaulted is killed thereby, he is guilty of manslaughter. Ford v. State (Neb.) 98 N. W. 807, 808.

ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

A verdict of assault and battery may be based upon evidence showing personal violence under circumstances in aggravation or mitigation of the offense, relevant to the penalty, which need not be averred. One was indicted for felonious assault with intent to kill, being armed with a dangerous weapon. The jury rendered a verdict of guilty of "assault and battery with a dangerous weapon." The words in the verdict meant no more than assault and battery. State v. Henry, 57 Atl. 891, 893, 98 Me. 561.

Assault is included in the specific offense of assault and battery, and judgment may follow for the minor offense, though the verdict finds the defendant guilty of assault and battery; for the word "battery" may be rejected as surplusage. State v. Henry, 57 Atl. 891, 893, 98 Me. 561.

ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO COMMIT GREAT BODILY INJURY.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to commit great bodily injury, the form of the verdict prepared by the court read "assault with intent to commit great bodily injury," and the verdict, as actually returned, read "assault with intent to do great bodily injury." The form of the verdict was sufficient, as no one could possibly be misled by the variation in terms. State v. Leuhrman (Iowa) 99 N. W. 140, 142, 123 Iowa, 476.

ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO COMMIT RAPE.

"The crime of assault and battery is not an essential element of assault with intent to commit rape; for the latter offense may be committed without actual violence to or contact with the person assaulted, and upon trial for assault with intent to rape the accused can be convicted of assault and battery only where the indictment, in addition to the charge of assault, sets forth facts amounting to a battery." State v. Miller (Iowa) 100 N. W. 334, 335 (citing State v. Hutchinson, 95 Iowa, 568, 569, 64 N. W. 610).

ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO MURDER.

An "assault with intent to murder" is an assault with intent to commit a felony, and an indictment charging the commission of an assault with intent to commit the highest degree of unlawful homicide likewise includes the charge of an assault with intent to commit the same felony in all its degrees, as the degrees do not constitute separate and distinct offenses, but merely degrees of the same offense, or lesser offenses of the same nature, but necessarily included in the higher. Pyke v. State (Fla.) 36 South. 577, 578.

In order to constitute an assault to murder, it must be made with the specific intent to kill, as well as upon malice aforethought. Williams v. State (Tex.) 77 S. W. 447.

ASSESS.

In Const. art. 13, § 5, vesting in municipal corporations power to assess and collect taxes, the term "assess" includes the valuation of property, as well as the levying of the rate of taxation. State v. Eldredge, 76 Pac. 337, 340, 27 Utah, 477.

The word "assessed," as used in a franchise granted by a municipality to a company to construct and operate a waterworks system within the municipality, which provides that the municipality shall pay in municipal taxes which may be assessed against the company for the first ten years of the franchise, is used in the sense of a levy of taxes, rather than the mere determination to raise money by taxation—the proceedings requisite to charge property or the owners thereof with the payment of taxes, not the assessment of property for taxation. The term "assess taxes" is commonly used as synonymous with the levying of taxes, as descriptive of the steps in their entirety necessary to charge specific property with taxes, or the owner with the payment thereof. There is no such thing as the assessment of a tax in the mere sense of assessment of property for taxation. Town of Washburn v. Washburn Waterworks Co. (Wis.) 98 N. W. 539, 541 (citing Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Forest County, 95 Wis. 80, 70 N. W. 77).

While ordinarily the terms "assess" and "assessment" apply only to ad valorem taxation, when used in respect of tax laws, as used in an act providing that the clerk of the county court shall collect all privilege taxes, declaring that any property or properties included in the act shall be back-assessed or reassessed for the period provided by law, when the same have been omitted from or escaped taxation, or when the owner or his agent fails or refuses to list the property to the assessor, as required by law, and requiring the assessor to make and return to the clerk of the county court the name of each person engaged in any business liable to a privilege tax, the word "assess" means simply the listing of names of persons exercising privileges subject to taxation, and the clerk of the county court is entitled to back-assess or reassess privilege taxes that have escaped listing and collection. Fopplano v. Speed (Tenn.) 82 S. W. 222, 223.

The words "assessed" and "taxed," in Sess. Laws 1903, c. 73, § 29, were used interchangeably by the Legislature, and were intended to express the same meaning. State v. Fleming (Neb.) 97 N. W. 1063, 1070.

ASSESSED VALUE.

The term "assessed value," in a city charter, providing that no improvement shall be made when the estimated cost thereof shall exceed 50 per cent. of the assessed value of the property, refers to the value of the property as assessed for general taxation at the time next prior to that when the improvement is ordered. Ferry v. City of Tacoma, 76 Pac. 277, 279, 34 Wash. 652.

ASSESSMENT.

"Assessment in a general sense denotes the process of ascertaining and adjusting the shares respectively to be contributed by the several persons toward a common beneficial object according to the benefit received. Assessment, in taxation: The listing and valuation of property for the purpose of apportioning a tax upon it, either according to value alone or in proportion to benefit received. Also, determining the share of a tax to be paid by each of many persons, or apportioning the entire tax to be levied among the different taxable persons, establishing the proportion due from each." When a tax levying officer, levying a tax for the construction of a drainage ditch, knows the proportionate benefit to each tract and the amount of money necessary to be raised, and when he has determined the number of payments in which it shall be paid and the time of payment of the same, and has ordered his determination placed upon the tax list for collection by the proper officers, he has made an assessment. Morris v. Washington County (Neb.) 100 N. W. 144, 148 (quoting Black, Law Dict.).

ASSIGNEE.

The word "assignee," as used in Rev. St. § 4919 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3394], which provides that damages for the infringement of any patent may be recovered by action on the case in the name of the party interested, either as patentee, assignee, or grantee, is used in a limited sense, as meaning an assignee of patent rights, and does not cover a mere assignee of a claim for infringement. Webb v. Goldsmith (U. S.) 127 Fed. 572 (citing Waterman v. McKenzie, 138 U. S. 255, 11 Sup. Ct. 334, 34 L. Ed. 923; Moore v. Marsh, 74 U. S. [7 Wall.] 515, 19 L. Ed. 37; Gayler v. Wilder, 51 U. S. [10 How.] 477, 13 L. Ed. 504; Hayward v. Andrews [U. S.] 12 Fed. 786; 3 Robinson on Patents, § 937).

ASSIGNMENT.

See "Equitable Assignment."

To constitute a valid assignment, there must be a perfected transaction between the parties, intended to vest in the assignee a present right in the thing assigned. An agreement to pay a certain sum out of, or that one is entitled to receive the same from, a designated fund when received, does not operate as a legal or equitable assignment, since the assignor in either case retains control over the subject-matter. Donovan v. Middlebrook, 88 N. Y. Supp. 607, 608, 95 App. Div. 365.

An instrument which does not purport to convey any present interest in an existing patent, or one for which an application is pending, is not an "assignment," within Rev. St. U. S. § 4898 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3387]. National Cash Register Co. v. New Columbus Watch Co. (U. S.) 129 Fed. 114, 63 C. C. A. 616.

ASSIGNS.

The word "assigns," as used in Act Cong. June 16, 1880, c. 244, § 2, 21 Stat. 287 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 415], providing for the repayment of the purchase price to a person making an entry of public land, or to his heirs or assigns, in case of the cancellation of such entry for conflict, means one who derives from the original entryman by the voluntary act of the latter, and a mortgagee who has foreclosed his mortgage and purchased the mortgaged property at sheriff's sale under a decree of the court is an assign. United States v. Commonwealth Title Ins. & Trust Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 546, 547, 193 U. S. 651, 48 L. Ed. 830.

The word "assigns," as used in Rev. Codes 1899, § 3265, providing that every contract made by or on behalf of any corporation doing business in the state without first having complied with the law shall be wholly void on behalf of such corporation and its assigns, does not include the indorsee of negotiable paper, who takes the same before maturity, for value and without notice of defenses thereto. National Bank of Commerce v. Pick (N. D.) 99 N. W. 63, 65.

ASSUMPSIT.

"Assumpsit" is but another word for an undertaking or a promise. It does not lie except there be an express or implied promise. A claim for the conversion by plaintiff of corn in which defendant had a valid landlord's lien gives rise to an implied assumpsit in defendant's favor, irrespective of whether or not plaintiff sold the corn and received the proceeds. Crane v. Murray, 80 S. W. 280, 281, 106 Mo. App. 697.

A promise express or implied is the basis of every cause of action enforceable in "assumpsit"; and every promise to amount to a cause of action, must be supported by a valuable consideration. Ivy Coal & Coke Co. v. Long, 86 South. 722, 724, 189 Ala. 535.

ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

Consent to the risk, see "Consent."

"Assumption of risk" and "contributory negligence" are not synonymous. Parks v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 77 S. W. 70, 73, 178 Mo. 108.

Assumption of risk and contributory negligence are distinct and separate defenses. Assumption of risk rests in contract. It is not conditioned or limited to the existence of contributory negligence, and the latter is not an element or attribute of it. Assumption of risk is alike available, whether the risk assumed is great or small, whether the danger from it was imminent and certain or remote and improbable, and whether or not the servant was guilty of contributory negligence in assuming the risk or in exposing himself to the danger. St. Louis Cordage Co. v. Miller (U. S.) 126 Fed. 495, 499, 501, 61 C. C. A. 477, 63 L. R. A. 551.

A servant assumes the risk of a danger incident to his employment, but he never assumes the risk of his master's negligence. If the master furnishes unsafe implements, and the servant uses them, knowing them to be unsafe, a question of contributory negligence arises, but not of assumption of risk. Cole v. St. Louis Transit Co., 81 S. W. 1138, 1142, 183 Mo. 81.
